Chi Election Cues Wide-Open Status; Shuttered Stripperies Opening Up

Chicago, March 1.

Chicago's shuttered stripperies are opening up in the wake of Democratic primary election results. Four Near North side stripperies, all in the East Chicago Ave. police district, had closed as a result of close police surveillance brought on by a political feud between Mayor Martin Kennelly, seeking the Democratic mayoral nomination, and the local ward committeeman, Martin Connors, who was a partisan of the local Democratic machine that dumped Kennelly.

Word among the saloonkeepers here is that Richard Daley, the machine candidate, is a cinch to win the election after winning the primary last week, and that Chicago will soon again be a wide-open town. On the strength of this, four strip joints, the Mark Twain, Parisian, Liberty Inn and Talk of the Town are opening their doors again. Two opened last week and two more are skedded to swing the doors wide this week. These joints depend on entertainers mixing with customers and hustling drinks for a large part of their revenue. When the Mayor installed a new police captain in the district, Capt. James Hackett, existing laws against mixing were enforced, and the skin-joints were forced to fold. The strip ops feel things will now go back to normal with the machine candidate for mayor considered a sure bet.

J. P. McEvoy's Definitions

Globetrotter-writer J. P. McEvoy, on a recent Central America junket, was playing "definitions" and he and his Peggy came up with these two:

Explorer—a bum with an excuse.

Sarnoff Discloses RCA Approaches Whopping Billion

Radio Corp. of America revealed that 1954 was a record business year, bringing firm whopping $940,950,000 for sales of products and services, topping previous year's all-time high of $835,000,000 by 10% with the magic billion mark in sight for '55. Figure breaks down to earnings, before taxes, of $83,501,000; net profits, after taxes, of $40,525,000, equivalent to $2.66 per common share.

Corresponding net for 1953 was $72,437,000 before taxes and $35,022,000 after; earnings per share came to $2.27. RCA's 35th annual report released by Brig. Gen. David Sarnoff, board chairman, was mailed to 172,169 shareholders.

Report showed that RCA paid total of $81,815,000 in taxes during the year, or more than double the net profits.

Divvies for the year totaling $22,052,000 were declared, with $3,153,000 going to holders of preferred and $18,899,000 going to common, breaking down to $3.50 per share of preferred and $1.35 per share common.

Board also declared, on Dec. 3,

Those TV Salutes, Plugs A Bonanza for Authors; 'Mrs. A,' Hope, Allen, et al

The have-book-will-travel gag is no joke in the publishing business. The 4th and Madison Ave. book boys are foreed to the conclusion that maybe tv is the only real socko impetus for merchandising. There are evidences anew.

Of the 40,208 copies that "Gertrude Lawrence as Mrs. A," by her husband, Richard Stoddard Aldrich, sold to date, some 9,500 copies came in a rush, in the last four weeks, as result of the Ed Sullivan salute to the late actress. The book trade naturally was alerted by Simon & Schuster (selling agent for Greystone Press) in anticipation of the CBS-TVer two Sundays ago, Feb. 19. As result, it sold 1,060 copies week ending Feb. 4; 2,553, week ending Feb. 11; 3,902, by week ending Feb. 18 and 2,150 the ensuing week.

Bob Hope's plugging of his autobiog, "Have Tux, Will Travel," has resulted in 50,000 copies of the $1 edition and 25,000 copies of the $3.50 edition. He has had plugs and counterplugs on Groucho Marx, Jackie Gleason, Walter Winchell and his own shows, plus others.

Fred Allen did the same for his "Treadmill to Oblivion" and N. Y.

ULANO TURNS 46TH ST. INTO TYMPAN ALLEY

Macy's window will continue as the place to pay off bets but Henry Adler's Music Store window is the place to set a drumming record. Shop, located on West 46th St. (N.Y.) a few doors away from VARIETY, became a skinbeater's showcase Monday (28) when Sam Ulano moved into the window with his traps, snares, cymbals, sticks and brushes to kick off a "drum-athon" and try for a world's record in continuous stick action.

Stunt was the brainchild of Alan Abel, head of A-Bell Records and a would-be legit producer. Abel claimed that the record for sustained drumming was set a few years ago by Jerry Sandweiss, who

O'NEIL'S ROAD TO TV RICHES

With the major motion picture companies focusing more and more of their attention on television as a potential revenue source, the saga of General Teleradio's handling of the big Bank of America package of old features is assuming the status of an industry primer on how to sell for television. That "Million Dollar Movie" tag that GT slapped on the package is more truth than fiction, for despite industry pessimism, GT topper Tom O'Neil has already guided the package to a profit of nearly $750,000 on television sales on only the first run. Whereas the majors at first looked doubtfully on tele's status as a coinmaker, the GT success story may now be a portent of things to come.

Here, in a nutshell, is the O'Neil saga from a strictly dollars-and-cents evaluation in sizing up the future potentials:

On his initial 30-feature buy of "medium oldies" ("Arch of Triumph," "Body and Soul," etc.) under the General Teleradio banner, O'Neil acquired them (at $43,000 each) for an overall total of $1,250,000. These, in turn, have been sold thus far in 70 markets, ranging up to individual station buys of $6,500 per pic on WOR-TV (N. Y.); WGN-TV (Chi), KHJ-TV (L.A.), etc.

When the last (66-station) count was made, O'Neil had retrieved from his original $1,250,000 investment a total of $1,870,000. Today, the figure is approximately at the $2,000,000 mark. By the time the market spread is exhausted on the original batch of 30 (and this, mind you, only for the first time around), the figure could well hit the $3,000,000—giving O'Neil a profit of $1,750,000.

TV Yens Coward & Mary Martin

A lot of dickering, and from rival networks, is currently going on in an effort to team up Mary Martin and Noel Coward for a special one-shot tv show. NBC wants them as the stars of Coward's "Blithe Spirit" in a 90-minute spec presentation. On the other hand, CBS is making overtures in order to star them in a color revue.

Miss Martin will do "Peter Pan" on NBC-TV as a two-hour spec presentation next Monday (7), but beyond this engagement she is not bound in any way to the network and is free to negotiate wherever she chooses. However, over and above the efforts to secure her and Coward for "Blithe Spirit" NBC hopes that she'll agree to an annual Christmas production of "Peter."

Coward has yet to appear on tv in this country.

Screen Rights Now Major Factor In Picking Shows for Investment

By HOBE MORRISON

Rash of film sales of legit shows this season is bringing a drastic change in script-picking standards of Broadway investors. As one prolific backer expressed it last week, "I never used to bother about the screen potential of a play, but now it is becoming one of the basic elements in whether a show pays off."

The investor was shaking his head in particular over having passed up three of the season's payoff shows, two of which made a profit solely through the sale of film rights. "I turned down both 'Tender Trap' and 'Rainmaker,'" he revealed, "never even giving a thought to the possibility of picture deals. Both plays failed to pay off on the Broadway runs, but made it with a profit to spare, thanks to screen sales. I should have considered that angle."

The same backer also ducked a chance to invest in "Anastasia," and in that case he ruefully admits a double error. "I not only didn't consider the film potential of the play, but I didn't even like it for the stage," he confesses. "It seemed melodramatic and corny to me, and I didn't visualize how it would come to life in performance. I just didn't imagine that second

Bigamists & Autographs

Minneapolis, March 1.

Ray LaRavier, 60, who was written up in a Minneapolis Morning Tribune frontpage series of articles telling how he married 55 women and decamped with their money after the weddings, has been engaged as host at the local 620 Club nitery, where he also gives out autographs.

He's on parole from prison where he served a bigamy sentence. The parole officer has approved his present employment.

Josh Logan's Top Coin in His Field Since Comeback

Joshua Logan, who less than a year and a half ago was hospitalized with nervous exhaustion, has now reached a new creative and money-making peak as director, author and producer. His present income is not only believed to be the highest of his career, but must be among the top in his field of show biz.

"Fanny" alone, which Logan co-authored, staged and co-produced, and has been paying him about $3,000 a week royalties, will now start earning him an additional $6,000 a week profit from his 10% share as backer (with $55,000 invested) and 22½% slice as co-producer. The profit return is on the basis of the show's recouping of its cost last week.

Logan has just signed as director of Columbia's film edition of "Picnic," the William Inge drama which he staged as a Pulitzer and Critics Circle prize-winning Broad-

THEATRE VS. HOME VIDEO BID FOR FRISCO BOUT

Theatre tv and home tv interests have launched a scramble for the rights to the telecast of the upcoming championship fight between Rocky Marciano and England's challenger, Don Cockell. Bout, being promoted by the International Boxing Club, is scheduled for San Francisco during the week of May 16. Actual selection of a date and starting time for the fight has been held up pending a decision by the IBC "to go" theatres or into homes.

Naming of Frisco as the site for the fight has opened the populous New York and New England market. These zones have been blacked

Fleur, Anita Loos, Miller Set for Barn 'Biography' As Charity Production

All-star amateur cast is being recruited to present "Biography," the S. N. Behrman comedy, for a single week in strawhat next summer for charity. Already set for the revival are authoress-playwright Anita Loos, mag publisher Fleur Cowles and producer Gilbert Miller. Also being sought are novelist James Michener, publisher-columnist Bennett Cerf and Behrman himself.

Albert Selden and Morton Gottlieb, who are producing the show as a fund-raiser, perhaps for the American Shakespeare Festival Theatre & Academy, at Stratford, Conn. and possibly for the Actors' Studio, N. Y., are trying to line up a name director. They plan to present the show the week of July 4, at either the Westport (Conn.) Country Playhouse or some other top-ranking barn near New York.

Although all the prospective stars are actually amateur actors, Miss Loos was on the professional stage as a moppet and Miller was also a Broadway performer briefly early in his career, and made a walkon guest appearance as a waiter in a scene from "Oscar Wilde," in support of Robert Morley, in the 1949 "ANTA Album." Incidentally, he plans to return from his usual summer vacation in England just for the "Biography" date.

Show Business on the Bounding Main Pays Off for Caribbean Cruise Ships

By ABEL GREEN

A recent 13½-day cruise aboard the SS Nieuw Amsterdam revealed an advanced brand of seagoing showmanship which makes one wonder whether cruise director Robert James Smith, Capt. Cornelis Visser, Smith's cruise staff and all concerned couldn't give lessons to the life-of-the-party Miami and mountain resorts.

Showmanship on the bounding main is the answer to the pyramiding Caribbean winter port business, which has been developed by the Holland-American Line's passenger agent, Elliott Liman, into Mediterranean cruises and by the other international shippers into a worldwide industry.

Geared for the winter vacationer's comfort to the nth degree, the $100-per-day (average) for two in a good cabin obviously compares favorably with Florida resort rates, considering that de luxe meals (caviar 'n' everything) are includ-

Schwartz-Dietz Ditty For Actors' Studio Supper; $40,000 Fund Is Goal

Arthur Schwartz and Howard Dietz have written a new song, prepared especially for the occasion, at a supper party next Wednesday night (9) immediately following the premiere of "East of Eden" (WB) at the Astor Theatre, N.Y. The affair, for $50-a-ticket guests at the film opening, will be held at the roof of the Sheraton Astor Hotel.

Entertainment, besides the Schwartz-Dietz song number, will include Marilyn Monroe singing "Diamonds Are a Girl's Best Friend," which she did in the 20th-Fox film edition of "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," with Jule Styne, who composed the music, providing the piano accompaniment, and Anita Loos, who authored the original "Blondes" novel and coined the "Diamonds" phrase, introducing the act. Screen Writers Honor Bedridden Bob Riskin

Hollywood, March 1.

Robert Riskin, who has been bedridden for past three years, was signally honored Monday night (28) at the Moulin Rouge here when presented with the Laurel Award of the screen writers division of the new Writers Guild of America-West. Last year's Laurel Award winner, Dudley Nichols, made the presentation which hailed Riskin for his many contributions through the years to the literature of the screen.

Comedy award went to Billy Wilder, Samuel Taylor and Ernest Lehman for scripting Paramount's "Sabrina."

Frances Goodrich, Albert Hackett, Dorothy Kingsley copped best musical script award for their "Seven Brides for Seven Brothers" (Metro) and Budd Schulberg drew best drama nod for Columbia's "On the Waterfront."

Jimmy Durante emceed the off-the-record show produced by Don McGuire.

N.Y. Newsmen Fly In For Westbury's London Bow

London, March 1.

A plane load of New York newsmen arrived in London yesterday (Mon.) for today's launching of the Westbury, the first all-American hotel to be built in London. It is wholly owned by the Knott hotel group and cost over $3,000,000.

The press party includes Inez Robb (World Telegram & Sun and United Features), Chester L. Shaw (Newsweek), Danton Walker (News), Leonard Lyons (Post), William de Witt (Cue), Alven Dodd (INS), Margaret Tilley (Town & Country) and Fay Emerson (NBC). Hy Gardner will be coming from Paris and Robert Sage was due today (Tues.). John Crosby will not be arriving until Thursday (3).

Official ribbon-cutting ceremony will be performed by the American Ambassador to London, Winthrop Aldrich, and the President of the Board of Trade, Peter Thorneycroft.

The Westbury, which is the first hotel to be built in the West End of London for over 20 years, will not feature cabaret or dancing among its amenities.

Italy's Studios At Standstill

By ROBERT F. HAWKINS

Rome, March 1.

It now seems likely that the protectionist Italo film law, recently extended to June 30, will be extended to the end of the year as the Italian Chamber reconvenes here.

One of the reasons why the extension is likely is the fact that Italian producers have been holding back production while awaiting clarification of the legal problems involved. They feel that the original June 30 date places them in a difficult position and is also limiting coproduction possibilities. What with local production practically at a standstill, the extension is confidently expected.

The original six-month-only extension of the film law had been granted in view of the preparatory

Paree Goes Bluenose; The Comedie-Francaise Bans Shaw's 'Mrs. Warren'

Paris, March 1.

Paris is going Puritan. George Bernard Shaw's "Mrs. Warren's Profession" has been branded "immoral" by the Comedie-Francaise and its scheduled production has been dropped. It was to have been the C-F's third Shaw production, following successful offerings of "Pygmalion" and "Arms and the Man."

Taboo was put on the play by the C-F's reading committee. Perusers had originally given the play the greenlight, with the stipulation that certain cuts be made. It was later discovered that all the proper

Tax Puzzler On Penalty Damages Before Hi Court

Washington, March 1.

U. S. Supreme Court took under consideration yesterday (28) the question of whether the punitive damages won in an antitrust treble damage suit are taxable.

Two cases were appealed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue —the $375,000 treble damage verdict obtained by the William Goldman Theatres of Philadelphia from the major distributors; and settlement received by Glenshaw Glass Co. in its damage suit against the Hartford-Empire Co.

U. S. Solicitor General Simon Sobeloff, who argued for the Government, took the position that penalty payments were income and should be taxed as such.

Goldman, which claimed damages of $125,000 in its suit, included the $125,000 in its income but did not pay anything on the other

DISNEY OFFERS TV FEATURES TO BBC

London, March 1.

Roy Disney, president of Walt Disney productions, announced in London last week that he is offering to BBC-TV five full-length pix specially made for television. He explained that he was making his pitch towards the state web because he felt it would be at least two years before the commercial networks had the circulation. "We are interested in circulation," he added.

Of the five pix which Disney brought with him to London, two deal with "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," two with "The Lady and the Tramp," and the fifth with "The Vanishing Prairie."

At a later stage, said the Disney prez, they would explore the possibility of a regular tv show in London, but for the present they would be satisfied with occasional screenings.

Hayes-Healy Head Ike's White House Scribes Show

Washington, March 1.

Entertainment lineup for the annual dinner to be given Saturday night (5) to President Eisenhower by the White House Correspondents Assn. is topped by Peter Lind Hayes and Mary Healy.

Show also includes Duke Ellington, with Wendell Marshall and dancer Teddy Hale; composer Jimmy McHugh, with Darla Hood and Judy Collins; Tennessee Ernie Ford with Billy Liebert; Channing Pollock, the magician; dancers Chiquita & Johnson; Norman Leyden, conducting for Hayes and Miss Healy, Eddie Pierce orchestra, and the Navy Band under Comm. Charles Brendler.

Show was assembled by ASCAP, with Paul Cunningham in charge. He was aided by Harry Kalcheim of the William Morris Agency and by the local production staff of Loew's.

Thursday, March 3

N. Y. Philharmonic-Symphony—Carnegie Hall. Walter Gieseking, soloist. (Gieseking was originally barred from the U.S. because of his wartime connections with the Nazi regime).

Metropolitan Opera—Met Opera House. "Tristan und Isolde," with Josef Metternich, Set Svanholm, others. (Metternich, reportedly a party member, sang in Nazi Germany during the war. Svanholm, a Swede, sang in opera in Germany under the Third Reich).

Sen. Wiley Tells Knights of Columbus Most American Entertainment Is Okay

Kenosha, Wis., March 1.

Juvenile delinquency is a complex problem which cannot be charged to any single cause such as programs of violence on radio, television or motion pictures, Senator Alexander Wiley (R., Wis.) told the Kenosha Knights of Columbus Sunday night (27).

However, continued Wiley, ranking Republican on the Senate subcommittee on juvenile delinquency, parents can insist upon more wholesome programs by granting or withholding their patronage. The Senator was strongly opposed to Federal censorship.

"We know that, by and large," said Wiley, "American books, magazines, radio and television are sound.

"With relation to radio and television, I have urged a greater concentration on wholesome programs.

Hunt on for MCA Execs Lost on Plane Flight

Reno, March 1.

Larry Barnett, Music Corp. of America veepee, arrived here to supervise the search going on for Hal Howard, in charge of the Los Angeles band and act department, and Dave Silver, his assistant. Howard was piloting a single-engined plane which was lost in the mountainous area between Reno and Las Vegas. Rescue planes were battling snowstorms over the area in the search for the missing plane.

Howard, 43, took off from here for Vegas Friday (25) with Silver, who is 24. Neither has been heard from since.

Howard's trip recalls the death of Freddie Elswit, of the William Morris Agency, several years ago. Elswit and his wife were piloting plane flying from Los Angeles to Las Vegas and were lost when their single-engined Navion hit a mountain during a snowstorm. Elswit was a nephew of Abe Lastfogel, WM general manager.

Wives War Over Tom Mix Biog

Hollywood, March 1.

Mrs. Mabel Mix, widow of Tom Mix, is in showdown battle in L. A. Superior Court with Victoria Mix, ex-wife of late oater star, and latter's daughter, Thomasina Mix Andre, over the sale of his biography to films for $150,000.

Widow is seeking court approval of right to sell, while Victoria and Thomasina are holding out.

Mabel's lawyer said the Mix estate is now bankrupt, but by $100,000 sale would become solvent.

Jesuit's 60G Offer For One-Shot Lanza Closed-Circuit Stint

Holywood, March 1.

Charity wants to get into the closed-circuit tv biz via a $60,000 offer for Mario Lanza to appear on a one-shot concert which would be beamed to various cities.

Precedental pitch was made to MCA, Lanza's agent, by a Minnesota attorney repping the Jesuit order. He said the concert would be beamed to schools and auditoriums in other cities, with the coin made from such an event to go to the order's schools throughout the country.

Lanza is busy with nitery date and a Warner Bros. pic in the immediate future, and MCA hasn't reached any decision on the offer from the Jesuits.

HOPE HAMPTON SET FOR MORE DATES IN NEW ACT

Hope Hampton, who made her nitery debut several weeks ago at the Versailles, N. Y., will continue cafe dates with a new act being staged by Stephen Papich, dance director at 20th-Fox, and produced by her personal manager, William Taub.

Miss Hampton has been signed to open at the Hotel Ille de Capri, Miami Beach, March 9 for two weeks and will continue at the Patio, Palm Beach, March 24. The new turn will include a number of supporting performers.

$17,650,000 in Kickoff Pledges for UJA As Benny Sparks Drive

Miami Beach March 1.

Jack Benny helped raised $17,650,000 in pledges at the kickoff luncheon in the Saxony Hotel for the United Jewish Appeal's drive toward a $100,000,000 goal for 1955. The whopping sum topped every previous record for initial donations.

The luncheon climaxed a four-day visit here by Benny, his first since 1935 when the Roney Plaza hotel was the northernmost hotel on the Beach, at 23rd st. The semi-vacation began with a motor trip from New Orleans to this city, where he visited with toppers working the local cafes: Tony Martin at the Fontainebleau (whom he

'JET-PROPELLED COUCH' OPTIONED FOR FILMS

Baltimore, March 1.

Scripter Stanley Roberts has optioned "The Jet-Propelled Couch," one of five "psychoanalytical tales" from "The Fifty Minute Hour," by Robert Lindner, Baltimore psychoanalyst. Deals for the remaining four tales based on actual case histories are also being negotiated. Roberts, who worked for Stanley Kramer on "The Caine Mutiny" and "Death Of a Salesman," is rumored to have a George Gobel or Alec Guinness vehicle in mind.

"Rebel Without A Cause," an earlier full-length case history by Lindner, will be filmed by Warners this spring. Lindner also is set for a video appearance on "Omnibus" soon to discuss his newest book.

Lamour's Sarong Vidpix; Ed Sutherland to Direct

Dorothy Lamour has firmed a deal to hit the half-hour vidfilm ranks with a series to be lensed starting in mid-April in Bermuda. Coin for the venture is coming from financier Vilem Zwillinger, who was reported instrumental in the merger of Gross-Krasne's UPT with MCA-TV.

Expectations are to shoot 39 telepix at the Bermuda site, with directing being handled by Eddie Sutherland, who performed similar chores in at least one of Miss Lamour's feature pix for Paramount. Miss Lamour described the series as an anthology with a South Seas background in which she'll appear regularly. Five scripts have been completed so far. Apparently capitalizing on the reputation built up in theatrical pix, a tentative title, "Sarong Girl," has been chosen.

SMART ACTOR IS HIS OWN BOSS

5G Legal Costs Slapped on Fiske; Sued Hitchy on Publicity Handout

N. Y. Federal Court Judge William Bondy has written a footnote to the $750,000 plagiarism suit against Alfred Hitchcock which was dismissed last October after volumes of argument and testimony in an 11-day trial. The plaintiff was Irving Fiske, who claimed his plans to produce a modern-language version of "Hamlet" were thwarted by a publicity handout stating that Hitchcock had a similar project in mind.

Bondy over the past week-handed down an order directing Fiske to pay $5,000 to Hitchcock to help pay the latter's counsel costs. This came as the followup to Bondy's instruction to the Fed Court jury at the conclusion of the lengthy hearing: dismiss.

Whether Fiske actually shells out the 5G to Hitchcock is not important, in the opinion of show business legalities who've watched the case because of its precedental nature. They believe the new Bondy order is significant in that it will, or should, further discourage similar actions against promient theatrical "names."

Or, to put it the other way around, a verdict in Fiske's favor might have inspired a wave of suits based on similar allegations, one lawyer said.

Berlin Festival Pitch: You Can Deal & Wheel

Recognizing the importance of film festivals as a ground for negotiations between film producers and distribs, regulations of the Berlin International Film Festival next June provide for an "International Meeting Place" "to facilitate contacts and exchange of views among film festival participants.

The Berlin fest is skedded June 24 through July 5.

Another unusual feature of the event is that the public will be invited to attend screenings and vote on the pix it likes best. This, according to fest authorities, will both establish popular taste and serve to facilitate market analysis. The Berlin Senate will offer a special award to the most popular entry.

Ty Power Versus Himself On Broadway; Situation Reflects Current Market

Comparative scarcity of marquee names has led to a situation where, next month, there'll be two top pix—both starring Tyrone Power—competing against one another in the field. Films are Columbia's "The Long Gray Line" and 20th-Fox's "Untamed." At the same time Power is co-starring in a legit show, "The Dark Is Light Enough" with Katharine Cornell.

Neither distrib particularly likes this kind of squaring off, with 20th the more seriously concerned since "Untamed" is being rushed into release next month as a potentially strong b.o. contender in a quarter that shapes only mildly successful for the company. With neither "Prince of Players" nor "The Racers" doing the expected biz, 20th's first-quarter domestic revenue is lagging behind 1954. However, foreign income is higher than ever.

Columbia is spending heavy coin on plugging "Line" as is 20th on "Untamed." Both are CinemaScopers. However, "Line," having been in release longer, would appear to have a slight edge audience-wise on "Untamed." 20th is understood very eager to avoid any impression that it's riding on the coattails of the Col publicity.

KRAMER HEADS EAST

Next Picture Will Be VistaVisioned In Spain

Indie producer Stanley Kramer, now winding up "Not As A Stranger," is due in N. Y. from the Coast at the end of this month. He'll remain in Gotham around five weeks, then heads for two months of rubber-necking in Europe and returns to N. Y. for the "Stranger" opening.

Kramer's next is to be "Pride and the Passion," which he'll lens in Spain in the VistaVision process. Kramer will both produce and direct, as he did with "Stranger." He releases through United Artists.

Par's 'Command' May Preem New Du Pont Tint Stock

New Du Pont color positive has been developed to the point where Paramount has conducted tests with it for possible use on its "Strategic Air Command" wide-screener.

The Du Pont color stock is said to allow better definition and more brilliant lighting on the screen and, price-wise, is said to be competitive with Eastman color positive.

In confirming their interest in the Du Pont material last week, Par execs said it was their understanding that the color stock wasn't as yet in mass production. Du Pont doesn't have a color negative of its own, even though, from time to time, the outfit has been rumored to be at work on one.

Du Pont's competition, Eastman Kodak, also is due to bring out an improved color stock in the spring, involving a lesser number of emulsions. It's currently being tested.

500G Yearly Bond Sale In Hollywood Is Hope Of Israel's N. Lourie

Hollywood for the first time now appears actively interested in buying Israel development bonds, according to Norman Lourie, Israel film exec and hotel owner, who returned home Saturday (26).

Lourie, United Artists' Israeli distrib and partner with 20th-Fox in South African theatres, has been in the U.S. on a bond selling mission for the Israeli government. While on the Coast, he persuaded Jack L. Warner to take on the chairmanship of the motion picture industry division of the State of Israel Bond Organization. Aim is to sell bonds worth at least $500,000 each year in Hollywood.

Having had a huge b.o. success in Israel with "Limelight" (which flopped in the U.S.), UA is about to release "Modern Times" there, Lourie reported. He said Charlie Chaplin pix were popular in his country. European product is giving the Hollywood imports a run for their money in Israeli theatres, he said.

Lourie, who's been in the U.S. for the past three months selling Israel bonds, is also on the Israel government tourist board. His country expects more than 60,000 tourists this year, he observed, and the facilities for accommodating them are available. Lourie owns the Modern Dolphin House Hotel and Country Club at Shavei Zion on Sea near Haifa. Hostelry is now in its third season.

WILDE ON FORD: HE'S DOWNBEAT

Hollywood, March 1.

The jump into indie production for a film actor who has confidence in his own judgment and is willing to work hard is the soundest procedure for any ambitious performer to follow, according to Cornel Wilde, who last year formed Theodora Productions and jointly produced "The Big Combo," upcoming Allied Artists release, with Security Flims.

Wilde took sharp issue with Glenn Ford, who in an exclusive interview with VARIETY, recently voiced his opposition to actors as producers and actors working for indies on a participation basis.

"To rap the concept of independent production for a freelance actor because of occasional unprofitable ventures, as Mr. Ford has done, seems to me to be generalizing right out of existence the best thing that could happen to an actor," Wilde stated.

"In the main, if an actor has reasonably sound judgment and a knowledge of the industry, and if he is a fair business man or has competent advisers, he's a fool not to produce independently if he can secure possible deals on that basis."

One of the major advantages of

'Leagues' Payoff Sure Break-Even At $7,000,000

Walt Disney's biggest investment in a single picture — the hefty coin he poured into "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea"—looks set to eventually provide a fancy payoff. Thus the new film industry thinking about making money with "bigger and better" productions is justified, at least in this one instance.

(Actually, there haven't been many flops among the genuinely expensive films over the past year.

'LONE RANGER' ON SCREEN

Property Long Established On Radio and Comics

Hollywood, March 1.

After years of riding on radio, comic strips, and television, the Detroit-created syndicate property, "The Lone Ranger" is about to gallop thataway on the theatrical screen. Jack B. Wrather, who owns all rights, closed a deal with Jack L. Warner to shoot the feature on the Burbank lot.

Clayton Moore plays the title role on tv and Bill Beemer on radio, but it has not yet been decided who will star in the screen feature.

M-G May Distrib C'Scope Version Of 'Oklahoma'

Metro appears to have the inside track on snaring the release of the CinemaScope version of the Todd-AO "Oklahoma." The filmization of the Rodgers & Hammerstein stage hit, filmed both in the 65m Todd-AO process and C'Scope, has been completed and "sneaks" of the film have been shown both on the Coast and the N.Y. area in the C'Scope version.

Since no houses are equipped as yet for the Todd-AO showing, Magna Theatre Corp., distributor of the film, is apparently seeing audience reaction with the C'Scoper. Under the original plan, the Todd-AO version is to be roadshown in some 40 theatres throughout the country before being released in the C'Sope version. It's expected that the film will not be ready for general distribution for a year or more.

Metro's "insider" status is based on a number of factors: (1) The picture was filmed on the M-G lot which, in itself, is an unusual pro-

A number of 20th-Fox's competitors as well as some engineers expressed surprise last week over the company's apparent decision to settle on 55m film as a standard for such wide-gauge product as it may wish to roadshow. Other systems, such as Todd-AO, are geared to 70m film.

20th's own Grandeur system, on which the company's current work with wide-gauge film is based, ran on 70m film. It's acknowledged, however, that the wide film brings up certain projection problems, such as heat flutter at the aperture, etc.

There are indications at 20th that the decision to go to 55m film is by no means final and that tests with wider strips are continuing. This doesn't change the basic concept being increasingly accepted by the studios, i.e. that it pays to shoot on wide film and then reduce to narrow (standard) frame for an improvement in definition and clarity. This, of course, is the VistaVision idea. At the same time, for the very large screens, the double-frame projection method can be used.

According to Earl I. Sponable,

Post-Holiday Slows Biz; 'Girl' No. 1, 'Battle' Second, 'Line' Third, 'Darling' Fourth

Most key cities are experiencing the usual post-holiday slump currently, plus the start of Lent, and only the most potent grossers are faring as well as anticipated. The fact that the weather has moderated in many sections is a plus factor, with the mediocre quality of some newly launched product obviously a handicap.

"Country Girl" (Par), out for the first week to any extent, is taking over No. 1 spot nationally, according to reports from VARIETY correspondents in some 23 representative keys. It is great to terrific in a vast majority of cities, with the weakest engagement described as great. "Battle Cry" (WB), champ last week, is finishing a strong second.

"Long Gray Line" (Col), with a batch of stronger dates, is moving up to third. It was fourth last week. Fourth money is going to "Jupiter's Darling" (M-G), mainly by dint of numerous playdates since it is not as strong as expected in numerous spots.

"Bridges at Toko-ri" (Par), long in first place and last week fifth, again is holding in that place. "Cinerama" (Indie) is finishing sixth, it playing in only seven key cities. "Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) now is current in four keys. "Many Rivers To Cross" (M-G) is winding up seventh, being uneven this stanza.

"Far Country" (U) is capturing eighth spot, with eight playdates. "White Feather" (20th), displaying more stamina this session than previously, is taking ninth position. "Underwater!" (RKO) rounds out the Top 10 list.

"Racers" (20th), "Sign of Pagan" (U), "6 Bridges To Cross" (U) and "Bad Day at Black Rock" M-G) are the runner-up pix in that order.

"Hit the Deck", which opens at the N. Y. Music Hall this week, is good in Louisville currently. "Unchained" (WB), also new, ranges from fair to slow this round. "Capt. Lightfoot" (U) is okay in Chi and Seattle.

"Doctor in House" (Rep) continues smash in second week in N. Y. after coming near the Trans-Lux 52d St. house record opening stanza. "Three For Show" (Col) is slow opening frame in N. Y.

"Leagues Under Sea" (BV), which has about completed its playdates in the bigger keys covered by VARIETY, shows up fine in some four spots this session. "N. Y. Confidential" (WB) is solid on its second week at N. Y. Victoria.

"Americano" (RKO) shapes nice in Cleveland. "Heli's Outpost" (Rep) looms fancy in N. Y. "Abbott-Costello Meet Keystone Kops" (U), okay in Chi, is big in Louisville.

"Romeo and Juliet" (UA), hefty in Chi, looks good in N. Y., Frisco, Portland and Cleveland. "Tonight's the Night" (AA) is nice in Philly. "Black Tuesday" (UA), okay in Frisco, shapes hefty in Chi.

New York Distribution Circles Wonder Why 'White Christmas' Is Outpacing 'Show Business'

Enigmatic boxoffice performance of many pictures has been the subject of trade speculation over the years. Focal point of attention among various analysts and trend spotters currently is the comparison between "There's No Business Like Show Business," 20th-Fox's CinemaScope entry, and Paramount's "White Christmas," in the VistaVision process. How come "Christmas" is out ahead in the b.o. sweepstakes?

The two films sport important names and major production values, the "Show Business" leads being Ethel Merman, Donald O'Connor, Marilyn Monroe, Dan Dailey and Johnnie Ray. "Christmas" has Bing Crosby, Danny Kaye, Vera Ellen and Rosemary Clooney.

The press notices on "Christmas" were mixed for the most part; "Show Business" came out better in terms of critical size-ups. Prior to its opening, "Christmas" inspired considerable shrug-of-the-shoulders indifference among some important circuit heads. They were much higher on "Show Business" propects.

Disinterested observers—meaning they're not connected with either 20th or Par—say the campaigns for both pix were impressive. And they believe the technical widescreen processes alone wouldn't give one film the edge over the other.

So, up to this point, it would figure that "Christmas" would come in second. But this is not so, and it's baffling the experts.

In its recent anniversary edition VARIETY projected $12,000,000 as the domestic distribution gross for "Christmas." It was too early at that time to figure "Show Business."

Today, the $12,000,000 has been proven a good estimate for "Christmas." The film has held up strong in subsequent dates. "Show Business" appears headed for closer to $8,000,000.

Latter is great, of course. A total of $8,000,000 is wham money for any picture at any time. But, still, substantially short of "Christmas."

Supposed hepsters in the trade had shown marked preference for "Show Business" and many still argue it's a "better" picture. But "Christmas" has the public on its side.

Paul Raibourn, Par.s v.p. and economics topkick, when asked about the blockbuster money showing of "Christmas," had an explanation. "Christmas," he opined, like its song, "Count Your Blessings," expressed "fine human emotions." And there's a fancy payoff for this sort of thing.

Sensible Prize

Let television squander money on quiz show winners! 20th-Fox knows better than that.

Company is running a contest in connection with the forthcoming "Untamed." The prize: Winners will be invited to attend a private screening of a major Hollywood picture.

Par's '54 Profit 33% Over 1953

For Paramount, 1954 was a record year from the standpoint of both net earnings and gross business. Financial report issued by Barney Balaban, president, over the past week disclosed estimated net profit of $9,003,000 for the year, representing a jump of 33% over 1953 and the highest figure attained since the company went into operation independent of domestic theatres five years ago.

No estimates were given on total revenue, but it's indicated the gross climbed slightly over last year's $11,300,000, or similarly tops for the past five years.

Included in the net is $832,000 from an adjustment in investment in affiliated and subsidiary companies, according to the report. This was taken to mean the sale by Par of some of its stock in Famous Players Canadian Corp.

The year's profit, including the extra income, was equal to $4.10 per common share. Excluding the extra, it represented $3.72 per share.

Par's profit for 1953 (company operates on the calendar year) was $6,779,563, or $3.02 per share.

Also showing fancy improvement, Par's fourth quarter brought estimated earnings of $2,613,000, or $1.19 per share, compared with $1,783,000, or 80c per share, for the corresponding quarter of 1953.

Regular 50c Divvy

Paramount board at a N. Y. meeting Thursday (24) declared the regular dividend of 50c per share.

It's payable March 15 to holders of record on March 4.

Spanish Officials Give American Producers Full Cooperation, Sez Blumofe

Hollywood, March 1.

The Spanish government hopes and expects that Madrid will become one of the important seats of European film production, on the order of Rome and London, after completion of Robert Rossen's "Alexander the Great," now rolling in that city, Robert Blumofe, Coast veepee for United Artists, reported upon his return from eight weeks abroad.

"Reports to the contrary," he said, "the government there is doing everything in its power to attract American producers by cooperating in every way possible. After having spent several weeks in Spain, I feel sure, with the government opening up the country the way it is, that this very well may happen.

Production in Spain is cheaper than elsewhere in Europe, such as Italy, Blumofe stated, but added, "it is folly to go to Spain just because costs are down."

Hollywood, he pointed out, is UA's center of production and will continue to be. All films will be made here with the exception of those which would benefit measurably by foreign backgrounds and feeling. UA producers probably will make at least five pictures abroad during 1955, but this, he said, is due strictly to the need for these foreign settings and to give films greater authenticity.

Among UA releases which will be lensed in Europe are "Alexander," to be turned out on a lavish scale with the Spanish government probably supplying several thousand soldiers and additional camera work in Greece; Hecht-Lancaster's "Trapeze," filmed in France; Norman Krasna's "The Ambassador's Daughter," rolling in Paris next fall; and a picture not yet decided upon by Anatole Litvak, also in Paris. Ilya Lopert, who last year made "Summertime" in Italy for UA, also may undertake another in that country.

Technical standards in both Italy and Spain were found by Blumofe to be far below those of Hollywood. This is another reason for junketing to these countries by a Hollywood troupe only if the background would make for a much better picture.

"It's like a major ball league going to a minor league town," he explained. Equipment and manpower can't compete with Hollywood.

Ed Hyman Hits the Road

Edward L. Hyman, United Paramount Theatres v. p., leaves today (Wed.) on a month-long trip throughout the country for confabs with UPT affiliates.

Hyman expects to be on the Coast March 10 to o.o. the production situation.

New York Sound Track

Harold V. Cohen, Pittsburgh Post-Gazette vet, who recently won the Screen Directors Guild award for "most influential" motion picture criticism, has represented VARIETY for something like 28 years. He contends this makes him "the oldest correspondent" since the death of O. M. (Monte) Samuel, who served this paper in New Orleans from 1905 to 1945. Among colorful out-of-town reps, Monte Samuel was peerless. A prosperous building contractor in love with the theatre, he never cashed his VARIETY vouchers. Sime Silverman, the paper's founder, once doublecrossed him by sending an expensive present. So it may be that Hal Cohen is entitled to the mantle. We're vague at 154 W. 46th Street and have a suspicion Sidney B. Pfeiffer, a fairly distinguished barrister in Buffalo, and prominent in GOP and civic affairs there, may have repped VARIETY as long as Cohen has. And while Cohen and Pfeiffer fight it out, there's Les Rees in Minneapolis, who parallels Samuel and Pfeiffer in being personally well-to-do, no thanks to VARIETY. Rees, coincidentally, is father-in-law of author Max Shulman of Westport, Conn.

Kirk Douglas will be honored by the Albany Variety Club at a dinner-dance in the Sheraton-Ten Eyck Hotel March 21. He's a native of nearby Amsterdam and rather frequent visitor to Albany—three of his sisters live here and his mother is a guest at the Jewish Home for the Aged in Troy.

Mrs. I. N. Garber (Judith Beery) writes from Elgin, Ill., "My father, William Beery, and a committee of cousins are preparing to publish shortly a new history of the Beery family . . . (including) actors Wallace Beery, Noah Beery and Noah Jr."

Tom Walker, formerly Bank of America's film man in N.Y., on the mend at University Hospital after minor surgery . . . Grace Kelly's the darling of the pressagent fraternity. Paramount's Herb Steinberg says she graciously submits to heavy interview skeds, never is late for an appointment.

John Ericson returned to the Coast after a Gotham vacation . . . Marilyn Monroe to sing at the after-theatre supper show at the Sheraton Astor Roof following preem of "East of Eden" March 9.

Spanish "Oscar" winner Marisa De Leza signed by Robert Rossen to appear in the role of Eurydice in "Alexander the Great," currently locationing in Spain . . . Alfred E. Daff, Universal exec v.p., in from the Coast . . . M. Hamburger, Grand Prize Films prez, still negotiating with the German UFA for a negative on "Baron Muenchhausen," the US. rights of which were acquired by Hamburger and his associates from the Office of Alien Property in Washington. Pic is in Agfa color. Original negative was for a while held by the Russians but was later returned to the UFA as part of a deal. Latter is said to be some wary of delivering a negative on which it can't share in the profits. Canadian group, which does have "Muenchhausen" prints, has western hemisphere rights for the film.

Columbia is angling for the screen rights to George Orwell's "1984" . . . United Artists has "The Devil's Right Hand" on its upcoming sked. Can this be a sequel to "The Left Hand of God"?

Newsweek's March 7 issue has an extensive yarn on the film industry upbeat, with Dore Schary, Pier Angeli, Leslie Caron and Debbie Reynolds on the cover. Mag in the same issue lists its selections for the Academy Awards: "On the Waterfront," Marlon Brando, Grace Kelly and supporting players Edmond O'Brien and Eva Marie Saint.

METRO REVIVES 'JUMBO,' OLD BILLY ROSE SHOW

Metro has reactivated its "Jumbo" property, assigning it to producer Roger Edens. Company, owner of the screen rights, has had the musical on and off its active list over the years but now appears set to go ahead with it.

Tuner show was presented at the old Hippodrome, N. Y., by Billy Rose late in 1935 in a tie-up with a Texaco radio series. Music was by Richard Rodgers and Lorenz Hart. M-G is toying with the idea of a new title for the picturized version, having registered "Circus on Parade" and "Diavolo" as substitutes with the Motion Picture Assn. of America.

Harry Novak Due in N. Y.

Harry Novak, longtime Continental manager for Universal in Paris, is making a flying visit to New York March 8 on an independent film deal, among other propositions.

Since resigning from U, he has a number of indie film distribution deals. He may also act as a producer's European sales rep on a nonexclusive basis. Novak is a veteran of virtually all world markets —he was in South America and the Far East before anchoring in Paris as his general European and North Africa sales base.

HAVE PACKAGE, WILL TRAVEL

This journal's recent report about the gradual fadeout of one-man regimes at the Coast film studios goes beyond the question of "independent" producers and co-producing deals. What is happening in Hollywood is happening throughout show biz—namely, a trend, for good or ill, to "packaging." Today it has spread everywhere. In legit, big talent agencies are peddling stage plays with stars, director, scene designer packaged along with the basic manuscript. Packages bob up, too, in the concert field.

Packaging more or less was "invented" for radio but swelled to outsize proportions with television. Comics insisted upon their contract specifying a team of writers, stooges and directors. Then the big talent shops took it up on behalf of themselves, as well as their clients. Today everybody's in the packaging dodge.

That talent would demand a bigger slice of the take was inevitable and the confiscatory taxes of this cold war era added another motivation. Many a star can dream of "keeping money" only via a corporation setup. There may well be a lot of conning of actors, as per Glenn Ford's interview with VARIETY, (again last issue), and his distain for "I'll make you a millionaire" pitches from lawyers, CPA's and agents: still the package looms large as one way to salvage something out of big income, which is otherwise more illusion than reality.

It all seems a natural evolution since creative talents and hits can come from nowhere or Nashville, and usually do, as per the recording and music business. From left field, some hillbilly songsmith or some freak sound recording technique would put the veteran Lindy denzens to shame—and loss.

The trend whams Hollywood and Broadway concurrently. Virtually every major studio is now on a "neo-United Artists" setup, with or without co-financing. In truth, majors like Warners and Paramount owe their biggest concurrent successes to these indie setups, taking the burden off the one-man braintrusters, spreading the responsibility, encouraging a more variegated program, and creating competitive incentives which have done nothing but make the stockholders happier.

There are mutterings in show biz that the package system tends to give a few top talent agencies too much power. As regards the television networks control of their own time-and-talent packages there are even arguments that radio history is repeating itself—and it will be recalled that Uncle Sam stepped in against the old radio artists bureaus.

All this is as it may be. Meanwhile the package trend has its good points in that it consists of many packages, many promoters, many people on the make. That seems to be in harmony with American private initiative. And when was American show biz ever so prosperous in peacetime?

Jr. Robinson Produces

Hollywood, March 1.

Edward G. Robinson Jr. will enter the indie production ranks via Rexford Productions, which he has set up in association with Fred Shevin and Bob Reagan.

Project calls for three features during the next two years, with first to be "Dangerous Quest," by DeVallon Scott, in which he will star.

GLOBAL ROLE OF SALES CHIEFS

Sindlinger Test Hints Public Reacts 'Better' to Screen Ads Because of Video Conditioning

Study measuring the impact of theatre screen advertising on the basis of a five-city survey was released in N.Y. yesterday (Tues.) by Sindlinger & Co., business analyst org. In the works for 10 months, it had been conducted in behalf of the Assn. of Theatre Advertising Companies.

Sindlinger poll, based on 6,651 interviews, brought out that, during a full year, only 11.7% of the audience potential wouldn't be exposed to screen ads. It brought out further that, within a 13 week period, the average cumulative audience available for screen ad exposure represented 75.7% of the total annual potential of 88.3%.

It's been estimated that some 12,000 theatres in the U.S. are showing sponsored films of varying lengths, ranging from short spots up to full-reel subjects. The industry has been hit by the transfer of advertiser coin from the theatres to tv.

The Sindlinger survey came to the conclusion that not only do tv owners have a higher recall of theatre screen sponsors and products than non-tv owners, but "Television, with its commercials, has apparently enhanced the impact value of theatre screen advertising."

Cities picked for the test included Bonham, Texas; Belleville, Kansas; Bucyrus, Ohio; Waterville, Me., and Fayetteville, N. Carolina. Companies backing the study were Alexander Film Co., A. V. Cauger Service, Motion Picture Advertising Service, R. H. Ray Film Industries and United Film Service. Covered were circulation, knowledge and impact of the screen ads, tv ownership and types of theatres.

At a luncheon at which he revealed his findings, Sidlinger also used tape recorders to demonstrate his technique of "depth interviewing," used for qualitative evaluation.

Quadruple Features

Minneapolis, March 1.

Quadruple features hit this town at one of the leading loop houses, the RKO Pan, for one night, Friday, Feb. 25.

On that evening for the regular 85c admission patrons could see two new features, "Shield for Murder" and "The Golden Mystery," the theatre's regular bill and both firstruns here, plus a pair of reissues, "The Man From Planet X" and "Donovan's Brain."

Two latter were advertised as a midnight "science-fiction shock show" and it could be witnessed by those attending the regular twin bill at no additional cost.

Both of the "shock show" features played the same house on twin bills more than a year ago for their local firstruns.

Allied Defies IA, Advertises For Booth Operators

Minneapolis, March 1.

Throwing down gauntlet to AFL projectionist's union and, in effect, inviting a strike, North Central Allied committee, representing all of city's independent exhibitors in negotiations for new three-year contract, defied operators to walk out.

At same time large Allied newspaper ads appeared today (1) offering employment to projectionists. Independent exhibitors, presenting solid front behind committee headed by Ted Mann, circuit owner, indicated if strike occurs they'll attempt to keep theatres open with nonunion booth men.

Affected are two Loop firstruns and some 70 neighborhood theatres.

Although old contract expired last Nov. 30 and two sides have been unable to agree on terms for new three-year pact, operators have remained in booths despite vote several weeks ago to strike.

In taking present stand, independent's committee withdrew offer of seven cents per hour pay boost for each of new three-year contract's last two years. Union sought nine cents per hour for each of two final years and 30 minutes widescreen film preparatory time, same as United Paramount and RKO theatres here granted recently in new, separate contract.

"We're sick and tired of union's unreasonable, unfair demands and dictatorial attitude," announced Mann. "We're prepared to fight to bitter end. This situation has also been brought about by inefficiency and insufficiency of operators in many instances and is aimed, too, at union's closed door policy, refusing membership to qualified persons."

Blaustein-Taradash Set With Columbia for Four

Hollywood, March 1.

Producer Julian Blaustein and writer Daniel Taradash, organizers of the new indie company, Phoenix Corporation, closed a deal with Columbia to produce four pictures. Films will be made on the Columbia lot with Taradash writing and directing two of the stories and Blaustein producing the entire four.

Pair recently carried on negotiations to make two features under the Warner banner but the deal fell through.

PECK, HEPBURN TABBED WORLDWIDE FAVES

Hollywood, March 1.

World's favorite film actor and actress of 1954 were Gregory Peck and Audrey Hepburn, in the opinion of the Foreign Press Assn. of Hollywood. They were voted Henrietta Awards. At a joint meeting of the Foreign and the Hollywood Correspondents bodies, the latter group selected "On the Waterfront!" as the best film of last year.

Total of 30 awards were made, including Golden Globes for Marlon Brando and Grace Kelly as best actor and actress and Elia Kazan as director. "Waterfront!" was named best for black-and-white photography. Best color photography prize went to "Brigadoon."

Best performers in a musical film were Judy Garland and James Mason, with "Carmen Jones" picked as the year's best tunefilm. Selected as best supporting actor and actress were Edmond O'Brien and Jan Sterling. Runners up as the world's most popular film thesp were Pier Angeli, June Allyson, Doris Day, Alan Ladd and Brando 20th's "Broken Lance" was hailed as the picture that "best exemplified international understanding."

Two "Pioneer" awards were voted, one going to John Ford for his 35 years of high repute as a director, and the other to Dr. Herbert T. Kalmus for his 40 years of progress in the development of color photography. Jean Hersholt won the Cecil B. DeMille Award, and Dimitri Tiomkin the award for "creative musical contribution" to films.

Looking into the future, "Stars of Tomorrow" awards were presented to Kim Novak, Karen Sharpe, Shirley MacLaine, George Nader, Jeff Richards and Joe Adams.

UPPING WELTNER POINTS UP TREND

A. W. Schwalberg's bowout as domestic sales boss at Paramount in a sense reflects changing industry conditions, it was pointed out by some old hands in distribution this week.

Unlike the trade of a decade back, when the job was to sell pictures and at least partially placate irate exhibitors (there'll always be irate exhibitors), the sales topkick has a plenty rough multiple-sided assignment. Schwalberg, say insiders, asked to take his leave simply to escape the pressure.

As the industry shifted to its "new era," the major drummer's role expanded. Work under various legalistic restriction imposed by the antitrust decrees has continued, of course. New burdens piled up via the widescreen transformation. A key consideration in selling pix to theatres has become the theatres' equipment and how it can accommodate each company's varied-sized films.

The exhib claims of grievances have multiplied, meaning new volumes of correspondence and more time for person-to-person conciliatory talks.

Then there are the stresses on the money end. As the studios concentrate on the production of fewer pictures, distribution naturally is looked to recoup on the big investments. The "sell" must be hard for each picture; each picture has become a "major production."

George Weltner, 54-year-old head of Paramount's international department has been appointed Par's global sales-distribution chief, heading both the domestic and foreign markets.

A. W. Schwalberg resigned over the past week as domestic distri-

ALL METRO CARTOONS GOING CINEMASCOPE

Metro has decided to film all its cartoons in CinemaScope. Confabs relating to impiementing the studio's new policy were held on the Coast last week, with shorts subjects sales manager William B. Zoellner conferring with Fred Quimby, shorts department topper and producer of MGM Cartoons.

Metro's shift to C'Scope for the animated reelers is in keeping with the development at the other studios. While all companies have not announced an all-C'Scope policy as yet, most have been stepping up their animated releases in the C'Scope process. 20th-Fox's Terrytoons are now earmarked for C'Scope only.

February's Icy Blasts Offset By Hot Boxoffice Properties; 'Toko-ri' and 'Battle Cry' Lead

February's Top 12

1. "Bridges Toko-ri" (Par).
2. "Battle Cry" (WB).
3. "Leagues Under Sea" (BV).
4. "Country Girl" (Par).
5. "Bridges To Cross" (U).
6. "Vera Cruz" (UA).
7. "Sign of Pagan" (U).
8. "Cinerama" (Indie).
9. "Black Rock" (M-G).
10. "Underwater!" (RKO).
11. "Far Country" (U).
12. "Violent Men" (Col).

The national boxoffice had to bear the brunt of the coldest, wettest winter month in several years in February but because of several strong productions film business was able to make a creditable showing. The fact that the first four biggest pix in the keys covered by VARIETY came through with nearly $2,000,000 gross gives some idea of how trade held up in the face of severe weather.

February proved a transitory type of month in that some of the yearend b.o. favorites still were doing real business while a fresh batch of product was being launched in competition. The month's boxoffice champ was "Bridges at Toko-ri" (Par), which was preemed at the very outset last month. It held onto first place for the first three weeks only relinquishing the top spot in the final week of the month as "Battle Cry" (WB) pushed into No. 1 position the second week it was out in release to any extent.

"Battle Cry," with a second place another stanza, finished the month in second position. And it likely will be heard from plenty in the future because showing a marked ability to hold up strongly on extended-runs. It is the biggest boxoffice pic Warner Bros. has released in months.

"20,000 Leagues Under Sea," the Walt Disney production, which was second in January, captured third spot not only through some new, big playdates but also via sustained stamina on extended-runs.

"Country Girl," which looks like Paramount's new money champ and a stalwart teammate for "Toko-ri," finished fourth. Like "Battle Cry," it was out on extensive release only two weeks. It was not given the sweeping playdate treatment accorded the WB film. "Girl" undoubtedly will be heard from much in the future since each new launching has been smash.

Army Morale Overshadowing Exhib Gripes

Washington, March 1.

The Pentagon may balk at surrendering the advanced showing privilege for theatres on its military posts.

An exhibitor plan to eliminate such showings in certain areas where small town theatres have complained about the competition, was tentatively approved by Armed Services officials at a meeting with industry spokesmen on Feb. 16. Plan, submitted by a TOA delegation on behalf of all exhibitors, was then circulated in the Pentagon for comment by Army and Air Force toppers.

Now, it is reported that the morale problem which has caused a sharp decline of reenlistments by experienced technical personnel, will probably block acceptance. It is claimed that the drop in enlistments has resulted from discontinuance of "fringe benefits," such as lower prices in the PX stores (to which local merchants objected) Advanced showings of motion pictures at post theatres at low prices is another fringe benefit, and the military fears to add to its problem by eliminating the privilege.

It was estimated that exhibitors in about 75 towns would benefit by eliminating the advance theatre privileges in areas where it was requested. Indications were that more towns might be included later on.

The defense department has a meeting scheduled for this Thursday (3) with spokesmen for the exhibitors.

Taking Note of U. S. Deal in Italy, Belgian Labs Demand Tint Quota

Fulfilling the worst expectations of the American film companies, the Assn. of Belgian Film Laboratories last week echoed the demands of the Italian labs for the Hollywood tint biz.

The Belgian move came on the heels of a U.S. agreement to guarantee the Italo plants a certain share of the companies' color printing. The deal, first entered into by Warner Bros., broke a month-long deadlock and brought about release of a number of color prints that had been held up in Italian customs.

While there may be certain advantages for the American outfits to do their tint work in Italy, one of the big arguments against going for such a proposition has been the possibility of other European countries asking for similar concessions.

The Belgian labs' views were communicated to the Motion Picture Export Assn. in N.Y. via the Ministry of Industry & Economics. The Americans are currently doing 80% of their black-and-white printing for Belgian consumption in Belgium itself. The labs there want the same percentage applied to tint imports.

They said they wanted this to start the moment the American distribs began printing elsewhere in Europe, the reasoning being that the necessary dupe negative would then become available. It's the manufacture of the dupe negative, costing around 60c a foot on a color film ($6,000 per feature), that equates any savings that may result from printing in any given country.

Italo agreement represents something of a compromise since the Italians started out by asking that all U.S. tint pix be printed up locally. Ice was broken by Warner Bros. which had conducted two tests, with Ferraniacolor prints, the first unsatisfactory and the second of much better quality.

It was on the basis of that second try that WB reportedly undertook

SELZNICK PUTS HECHT ON SCREENPLAY PROWL

Now that he's signed to produce two pictures for Metro, David O. Selznick has Ben Hecht on the prowl for the first story property. Producer hasn't decided where to make the films; site could be the RKO Pathe studio in Culver City, on the M-G lot or, perhaps, abroad. Selznick, incidentally, insists he hasn't abandoned a picturization of "War and Peace," despite the fact that Paramount is at work on such a project in association with Ponti-DeLaurentiis.

Deal with M-G gives Selznick a 50% cut on profits plus a salary of $100,000 for each film. It had been reported earlier that his slice of the net would be 15%.

It's figured roughly that double the negative cost will be the breakeven point, meaning the profit on, say, a $1,000,000 film will not be computed until $2,000,000 is grossed. This takes into account the distribution fee, costs of prints and advertising, etc.

TRANS-LUX CONVERTING

Switching From Rear Projection For CinemaScope's Sake

Trans-Lux chain, which has been using rear-projection in its theatres, is converting to allow the installation of CinemaScope.

According to Richard Brandt, Trans-Lux topper, every one of the circuit's houses will switch from rear to front projection except one, the Trans-Lux 52nd St. The Trans-Lux situations are of the small, intimate variety, geared to long runs.

Brandt estimated that the conversion job is costing the circuit $30,000 per theatre. CinemaScope can't be shown with satisfactory quality via rear-projection.

Disney Out To 'Know' Exhibitors

Leo F. Samuels, head of Buena Vista, and other execs of the Walt Disney distribution subsidiary, are underway with a program of "Getting to Know You" with exhibitors around the country. They've been trekking to various territories for calls upon various theatreowners for the purpose of helping establish the company.

In past, Samuels and his exec colleagues have been once removed from exhibs in that Disney's pictures were distributed and sold by RKO. Now that BV has taken on the direct selling job, Samuels wants to be in closer touch with the customers.

Samuels, who has been away from N. Y. for the past couple of weeks, is now spending time in the northwest area. He'll return to Gotham March 18. Card Walker, exec v.p. of BV; Irving Ludwig, domestic sales topper; Charles Levy, ad-pub director in the east, and Jesse Chinich, assistant salesmanager, also have been engaging in the hinterlands hopping.

Yates to Stockholders: Television Fine Thing For Republic Profits

Herbert J. Yates, president of Republic, accentuates the positive values of tv for Rep in his annual report to stockholders issued over the past week.

He disclosed that arrangements expectedly "will be concluded in the near future" for the release of Gene Autry and Roy Rogers oaters to video, Rep having won the right to so dispose of the six in court bouts with the two stars.

The prez noted that Hollywood Television Service, tv distribution subsidiary, "has firmly established itself in this highly competitive field." And he adds that Studio City Television Productions, another subsid which produces telepix, has been turning out product "most favorably received by television stations."

Further, Rep's laboratories in N. Y. and Hollywood have had to expand over the past year to accommodate stepped up lab work for color motion pictures as well as telepix, said Yates.

On the financial end, Rep reported a nice upbeat in the past fiscal year, which ended Oct. 30. Net earnings climbed from $679,217 in 1953 to $804,201 in 1954. Gross revenue in the new year went to $37,962,359, compared with $37,265,034 for the previous year.

SEGAL'S CONTINENTAL EYES AUSTRALIA

Continental Enterprises, headed by Martin Segal, is negotiating with producer Joseph Kaufman to employ the latter's filmmaking facilities in Australia to produce a number of feature films Down Under. According to Segal, the deal with Kaufman should be concluded shortly.

Company topper said Continental was also exploring other opportunities "but none has reached the negotiative stage. Our future plans are longrange and our stockholders will be kept informed of developments."

Continental, primarily engaged in the amusement field, operates an amusement park in Washington, and a chain of theatres in the south.

Oboler's Mental Anguish Defense Is Belittled

Los Angeles, March 1.

Latest move in Arch Oboler's $1,178,484 suit against Brenco Films is a demurrer filed in Superior Court by the defendant. It will be heard March 4 by Judge Curtis A. Smith.

Oboler had claimed he had suffered a mental breakdown because of Brenco's "malicious prosecution" of a civil suit involving the 3-D film, "Bwana Devil." Demurrer contends that Oboler's complaint is "ambiguous and unintelligible in every respect."

Storm and Strife At Loew Meeting

Dissident Shareholders Attack Executive Salaries and Reserve for Pensions — Almost Constant Hubbub — Schenck Present by Request — Family Ties in Suppliers Criticized—But Management Defense Upheld

Loew's prexy Nicholas M. Schenck, whose perennial absence from stockholders meetings has frequently brought beefs from the shareholders, interrupted a Florida vacation Thursday (24) to attend this year's annual session. He promptly witnessed one of the stormiest meets in Loew's history as stockholders levelled a barrage of criticism at the management and indulged in personal attacks at directors and fellow stockholders. It was a hot-headed three and a half hour meeting, sparked by name-calling, indignation, and personal defenses against alleged vilification.

The attack on management was led by a small group, with five speakers, who frequently snarled at each other, dominating the meeting. However, the sentiment of the majority of the stockholders appeared divided, with bursts of applause for the attacks on management as well as for those defending the company. The tone of the meeting had no effect; management emerged with the largest proxy vote of confidence in the history of the company.

Entire slate of directors was reelected by an overwhelming majority. Kayoed by an equal majority was a resolution calling for assessment of the company's real estate.

Salaries Main Target

The beefs against the company, in general, included the high salaries paid the officers, the amount of coin going into the pension fund without employee contribution, the earning record as compared to Columbia's, the small amount of stock owned by many of the directors, a rehash of the settlements of the residual rights deals of Louis B. Mayer and J. Robert Rubin, and the family ties of Loew's officers with firms Loew's deals with.

Those issuing the squawks can be divided into two categories—(1) stockholders or representatives of large holdings presenting quiet, well-prepared attacks backed by statistics; and (2) individual shareholders taking impassioned hit-and-miss swats at the management.

Saul Rogers' Role

The documented charges were presented by Judge Louis Goldstein as trustee and general counsel of the Leon Lowenstein Foundation, holder of some 30,000 shares, and Saul E. Rogers, former industry attorney repping 10,000 shares. Both Judge Goldstein and Rogers held numerous confabs with Loew's toppers prior to the meeting and admitted that the management was helpful in offering information and statistics. Only attempt to change the directorate was made by Rogers who nominated Goldstein. Latter, however, declined, leaving the field for management.

Judge Goldstein said he was disturbed by the contents of the Loew's annual report and that his outfit was seriously taking under advisement whether to continue or to liquidate its Loew's holdings. He charged that the payments into the pension fund averaged $3,500,000 annually. He urged that the board give serious consideration to the reduction of salaries and contributions to the pension fund and that directors show more confidence in the company by purchasing more shares.

Rogers, loaded with statistics, pointed out: That for 10 years prior to 1953 the company's profit was $167,000,000 and that $35,000,000 had been paid into the pension fund with approximately 35% of the profits before taxes going into the pension fund.

Thau's $189,000

That about $48,000 a year was placed in the fund in individual cases, citing, for example, v.p. Ben Thau who received $189,000 in salary and profit sharing, with $44,000 extra being earmarked by the company for the pension fund.

That Dore Schary, Thau, and J. J. Cohn owned no stock in the company and that other officers and directors only had small holdings.

That the family of v.p. and treasurer Charles C. Moskowitz owned or was connected with such companies as Imperial Carpet & Furniture Co. and Sterling Poster & Display with which Loew's did $324,000 and $201,000 worth of business respectively in 1954.

That the family of Schenck has an interest in or is connected with People's Candy Co. and Donahue Coe, an advertising agency, both of which deal with Loew's Two of Schenck's nieces own 25% of People's and his nephew, Bertram Nayfack, is a veepee and director of D&C, according to Rogers.

Moskowitz, who presided, and other Loew's officers, including pub-ad veepee Howard Dietz and Loew's Theatres prexy Joseph R. Vogel, defended the dealings with these companies, pointing out that purchases were made on bids and that Loew's frequently received discounts. Dietz noted that the charge for advertising services were the same no matter what advertising agency was used. It was also noted that Loew's dealt with Donahue & Coe 10 years before Nayfack joined the agency.

Schenck's Contribution

Defending the pension fund, Moskowitz noted that Schenck and other officers altered their contracts in 1944 when the fund was established and that Schenck, for example, by changing his pact, actually contributed $500,000 to the fund.

Changes desired by the dissidents were the cutting of salaries, the introduction of other economies to bring the earnings to a better level, a further review of the settlements of Mayer and Rubin, and more outside representation on the board. In answering latter squawk, Moskowitz pointed to director G. Rowland Collins and William A. Parker.

The attackers devoted so much time to salaries, contracts, property values, and pensions that no one asked about the company's earning possibilities until the close of the meeting. Moskowitz said that the second quarter, beginning in November, would be less than that of a year ago. He said the product released during the period, specifically mentioning "Deep In My Heart," did not live up to expectations as compared to the films released a year ago. He said 60% of the company's earnings was from the picture firm and 40% from theatres.

A hassle developed over the valuation of the company's real estate, and a resolution calling for assessment, introduced by James Fuller, a constant thorn in management's side throughout the meeting, was overwhelmingly defeated. Fuller, a familiar harrasser at corporate meets, engaged in constant arguments with other stockholders and Loew's officers, and at one point, accused Rubin of "dishonesty" because of his contract arrangement. Rubin, noticeably upset, arose to make an impassioned defense of his pact, reciting its origin and the reasons for it. He sat down amidst a burst of applause.

Schenck's Poise

Despite the constant hassling, Schenck sat quietly on the sidelines. He was neither questioned nor did he volunteer information. In opening the meeting, he said he was no "speechmaker," and attended the meeting because "Mr. Lewis Gilbert requested that I come. So here I am." Gilbert and his brother, John, are stockholders in many corporations and are noted for their outspokeness in representing minority stockholeders views. They publish an annual minority stockholders report. Durthe meeting, both Gilberts engaged in heated exchanges with management reps and other stockholders. Schenck returned to Florida immediately after the meeting.

No Vidpix Questions

Noticeably absent from the stockholder questioning were queries relating to the company's vidpix plans, particularly since Warner Bros. and 20th-Fox are following Columbia in taking the plunge, and requests for information on Loew's participation deals with David O. Selznick and Desilu Productions.

More than 300 stockholders were present, the session being held in the upper lobby of Loew's State Theatre which was shuttered until 2:30 p.m. Approximately 4,250,000 shares were represented in person or by proxy, 82.3% being by proxy, described by Moskowitz as the largest proxy vote in the history of the company and an indication of stockholders' confidence in management. Board met following the meeting and reelected all officers of the company.

SUPERSCOPE INTO 10 FOX WEST COASTERS

Los Angeles, March 1.

Ten SuperScope variable anamorphic lenses have been installed in as many Fox West Coast theatres in this area, including the two Wilshire boulevard showcases, the Fox Wilshire and Fine Arts. These lenses are capable of handling any type of projection ratio, standard, wide-screen or anamorphic.

Fox Wilshire had focus trouble during the screening of "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," but that difficulty has been cleared since the installation of SuperScope.

DC's DST April 24

Washington, March 1.

The District of Columbia Board of Commissioners has selected April 24 as the date to commence daylight saving time here.

The "fast time" usually affects motion picture theatre attendance adversely.

Goldwyn's 'Dolls' May Go Metro

Samuel Goldwyn is huddling with Metro on the possible release of his forthcoming screen edition of "Guys and Dolls."

Producer hasn't decided as yet whether the musical will be lensed in CinemaScope or VistaVision, but the betting is on C'Scope. Film is still in the rehearsal stage and hasn't started shooting as yet.

Metro talks with Goldwyn are in line with the company's new slant on outside productions. It's said to have the inside track for the C'Scope of "Oklahoma" which will be roadshown via the Todd-AO process prior to going into general release in either C'Scope or a "stepped-down" version of Todd-AO.

TAX CUT REFLECTED IN COLLECTION FIGURES

Washington, March 1.

Uncle Sam's take at the boxoffice last November was $20,300,000, far under the $55,073,000 for the same month in 1953. However, this doesn't mean business was off. The discrepancy is due to reduction of the admissions tax and elimination of it at theatres for tickets costing 50c or less, plus a somewhat difference in the method of filing returns. For the first five months of the current fiscal year, the admissions tax take is only $58,965,000, compared with $135,887,000, for the same period a year earlier.

Congress failed to reduce the 20% bite on nitery tabs and, on the basis of the tax returns thus far, business is running ahead in the current fiscal year. For the first five months of this fiscal year, the total was $19,062,000 in taxes, compared with $17,493,000 for the same five months of the preceding fiscal year.

UA Sues Spiegel For 'Melba' Coin

United Artists is out to recover $495,005 in monies advanced to Sam Spiegel under a 1952 agreement for his production of "Melba," the film company revealed in a N. Y. Supreme Court suit filed over the past week. The action is somewhat unusual in that another distributor, Columbia, is involved as a co-defendant along with Spiegel, who produced "Melba;" Horizon American Pictures, which is the indie production unit, and attorney Irwin Margolie.

UA wants to enjoin any of the defendants from transferring any Spiegel assets until its "Melba" investment is recouped. Col is named because it is now releasing Spiegel's "On the Waterfront." UA asks that Col hold up on giving Spiegel his distribution money split on the picture.

Makelim's First Release, 'Peacemaker' Described As An Offbeat Westerner

First definite commitment on a story property to be fiimed under his 12-picture a year exhibitor guarantee plan has been made by Hal R. Makelim. Producer has acquired the film rights to Richard Poole's "The Peacemaker," published by Ballantine.

Described as an off-beat western, it will be scripted by either Jesse Lasky Jr. or Charles Bennett, according to Makelim. Will go into production later this year, and is slated to be one of the first of the 12 Makelim is offering under his plan. Makelim's original timetable for delivery of his first film has long past, and the late spring or early fall starts represents another postponement. Previous to the revelation of the story purchase, Makelim promised a January start for his first production. Producer claims 3,000 exhibitors have signed up for his plan.

MCA represented Poole in the story purchase and Gordon Youngman repped Makelim.

UPPED ADMISSIONS JIGGLE LABOR INDEX

Washington, March 1.

The occasional upped bit for motion picture theatre admissions, where a special attraction is offered, is heavy enough to weight the scales in the U. S. Department of Labor's consumer price index.

Special comment is made on this by the Labor Department in pointing out that the cost of living was the same for January as for last December. "Increased movie admission charges for special features in several cities," said the monthly bulletin, "brought up 'reading and recreation' costs."

Reels Tell Press Agents How to Plant Stuff

Four reps of the newsreel field are scheduled to address the monthly meeting of the Publicists Guild to be held tomorrow night (Thurs.) at the Hotel Warwick, N. Y. They'll speak on "Working with Newsreels."

Quartet includes Leonard Allen, TV news editor-NBC; Walter Engeis, manager of news and special events, WPIX; Dave Oliver, Pathe News, and Burt Reinhardt, assignment editor, Movietone News.

Paul Quinn to RKO

Paul J. Quinn, formerly with Donovan, Leisure, Newton & Irvine, has joined RKO Radio as attorney in charge of litigation. He succeeds Peter Pugliese, who resigned to join Bell Telephone of Pennsylvania.

Donovan office has served as special counsel for RKO for many years. During his 10-year association with this firm, Quinn did extensive legalistic work for the film company, mainly in anti-trust actions.

DIVERSIFICATION HITS SCRIPTS

Columbia's $7,000,000 British Lineup, More to Come, Stressed By Kastner

London, March 1.

Columbia is already committed to an investment of upwards of $7,000,000 on British production for the current year and remains in the market for additional properties. This was stated in London last week by Lacy W. Kastner, prez of Columbia International, who planes back to New York today (Tues.) after a quickie visit.

Two of Columbia's latest British releases, "A Prize of Gold" (made by Warwick) and "The End of the Affair" (produced by Coronado) are currently on view in the West End. Others in lineup include "The Prisoner" starring Alec Guinness and Jack Hawkins, with Peter G'enville as director; "Rebound," with Stewart Granger and Jean Simmons; "Cocklesheil Heroes," starring Jose Ferrer and Trevor Howard; "Safari" a Warwick production on which a location unit is now at work in Kenya; "The Island" starring Hawkins with Glenville directing; and "Port Afrique" another Coronado venture.

Also skedded but not yet cast are "The Wheel" (Otto Preminger) and "Zarak Kahn" and "Fire Down Below" (both Warwick).

This intensified British activity, said Kastner, is part of the company's policy of increasing production in foreign territories. Columbia is already committed to a schedule in France, Germany and other European centres, as well as a substantial output in Latin America. Their total foreign output would almost match their Hollywood program of 45 films.

Although the European market has expanded considerably in the past 10 years, Kastner emphasized that the United Kingdom was still the best foreign territory for Hollywood product. In prewar years, however, United Kingdom grosses outstripped the whole of the continent. Today, European earnings were three and a half times as large as the British gross.

Hayworth-Haymes Features for UA

Hollywood, March 1.

United Artists closed a deal to finance and release the first two pictures to be made by Crystal Bay Productions, a new indie unit formed by Rita Hayworth and Dick Haymes, and Miss Hayworth starring in both films.

Both pictures will be produced by Haymes, who may also co-star with his wife in one of them. Shooting starts after Miss Hayworth winds up her two-film commitment at Columbia.

PRAISE IS NEWS WHEN ALLIED TURNS KIND

Minneapolis, March 1.

Man bites dog again. It has been the custom of North Central Allied bulletins' "Our Own Reviewing Stand" section to devote itself entirely to caustic one-sentence raps of the few pictures which it selects for capsuled reviews.

Current bulletin, however, singles out a picture, "Go, Man, Go," for praise and advises its purchase:

"The motion picture made of the Harlem Globe Trotters by United Artists, called 'Go, Man, Go,' has been a very good attraction. Every exhibitor showing the picture has made a good profit on it. You can buy this picture flat and it is a good Friday-Saturday picture, particularly at the present moment when basketball is pretty much in the news. The Globe Trotters have been a terrific attraction all over the country. Since you are unable to get them to appear in person, you should take advantage of this opportunity.

"Buy it flat—buy it right—but buy it."

NOT GOOD HUMORED

Lew Ayres' Beef Against Cruising Ice Cream Trucks

Holiywood, March 1.

Good Humor ice cream trucks cruising near his home put Lew Ayres in a bad humor, according to his complaint to the L.A. Police Commission. He said the trucks played "Little Brown Jug," an "insult to the citizens of the community."

Ice cream company retorted that the tune was "The Strawberry Blonde," but agreed to change the route of the trucks so as not to offend the actor's sensitive ears—and also the melody to "The Good Humor Song," company's own.

NOVELS STILL TOP STAGE DRAMAS

Diversification was the key last year in Hollywood's high-and-low search for source material on feature pix.

Whereas a full 41 (13.5%) of the 303 films approved in 1954 by the Production Code came from such varied sources as comic strips, tv and radio shows, non-fiction, etc., the number of pix based on originals and plays dropped quite sharply, while novels just about held their own compared with prior years.

Breakdown shows that of the 303 foreign and domestic features that got the Code seal last year, 177 (58.4) were originals; 11 (3.7%) were plays; 61 (20.1%) novels; 1 (0.3%) a biog; 12 (4%) short stories, and 41 (13.5%) miscellaneous sources.

By comparison, in 1953, a total of 64.1% of the 354 features approved that year were originals; 19 (5.4%) were plays; 72 (20.3%) novels; 3 (0.9%) biogs; 17 (4.8%) short stories and only 16 (4.5) were based on miscellaneous material.

Drop in the number of 1954 originals would reflect the swing to the wide screen, with studios scouting the field for pre-sold material. Fewer plays turned into pix accented Hollywood's difficulties in finding legiters to fit its needs.

While percentages make the point, actual figures on 1954 source material are misleading due to the fewer number of films that received the seal that year. Where, last year, the Code okayed 303 features, the 1953 comparison figure was 354; 1952 was up to 368 and in 1950 the total was 429. Back in 1940, the Code seal was handed out to 523 new features, and in 1935 to 564.

Sources of Screen Material

Following is the breakdown of source material on the 303 feature pix approved by the Production Code in 1954, compared with figures (and significant percentages) in prior years:

Year	No. of Pix	Originals	Plays	Novels	Biogs	Short Stories	Misc.
1954	303	177 (58.4%)	11 (3.7%)	61 (20.1%)	1 (0.3%)	12 (4%)	41 (13.5%)
1953	354	227 (64.1%)	19 (5.4%)	72 (20.3%)	3 (0.9%)	17 (4.8%)	16 (4.5%)
1952	368	246 (66.9%)	17 (4.6%)	64 (17.4%)	——	21 (5.7%)	20 (5.4%)
1950	429	315 (73.4%)	18 (4.2%)	67 (15.6%)	3 (0.7%)	10 (2.4%)	16 (3.7%)
1940	523	323 (61.8%)	51 (9.8%)	109 (20.8%)	8 (1.5%)	21 (4%)	11 (2.1%)
1935	564	244 (47%)	41 (7.9%)	142 (27.4%)	3 (0.6%)	37 (7.1%)	52 (10%)

Music Scoring Too Often Rates As Afterthought

Hollywood, March 1.

Screen composers should be called in on pre-production conferences with screen writers, according to Adolph Deutsch, Screen Composers Assn. prexy. Deutsch, under contract to MGM, is also up for an Academy Award for his musical score of the studio's "Seven Brides for Seven Brothers."

"In most cases," he said, "aside from the musicals, the composer is called in at the completion of the picture for his scoring assignment. He's expected to score the film with the proper mood music necessitated by the scene involved.

"In most cases he does his job well, but at other times he may not interpret this story mood as the writer meant it to be and therefore may create an atmosphere not desired by the scripter."

Deutsch made it plain that he felt that pre-production talks would benefit both the composer and scripter because they could confab on various scenes and the way music would help establish a required tempo.

"It's the musical score, after all, from beginning to end that keeps your audience in the mood for the picture," Deutsch declared.

GOTTA OPEN BOOKS, GOLDWYN VERSUS FWC

Hollywood, March 1.

Samuel Goldwyn won a point in his $6,750,000 antitrust suit against Fox West Coast and the McNeil and Naify theatre chains when Federal Judge Michael J. Roche in San Francisco ordered FWC and National Theatres, Inc., to submit their books for inspection.

Court decided that FWC must produce all records, including corporate income tax documents, from 1937 to 1950. Ruling also ordered FWC to reveal its competitive bidding records and its profits on candy sales and real estate operation.

Allied Waits For Metro

Oklahoma City, March 1.

Convention of the Allied Theatre Owners of Oklahoma, originally set for Feb. 28-March 1, has been put off to March 28-31.

Idea is to have the meeting coincide with the Metro "workshop" clinic which is slated for the latter date.

Japanese 'Gate of Hell' Exceeds 'Queen' and 'Luther' 10-Week Grosses

"Gate of Hell," Japanese film produced by Masaichi Nagata and distributed by Edward Harrison, has proved such a commercial click in the U. S. that other importers are prowling further Nippon entries for the same market. Continental Films has picked up "Hiroshima" and Fine Arts Films has acquired "Musasi," both produced in Japan. Several others are being negotiated for, with the result that a flood of Jap pix, heretofore rare in the Yank market, is likely in the near future.

In past there was only one Japanese film that had any impact in the U. S. This was "Roshamon," which also was produced by Nagata, and was brought over a couple of years ago.

"Gate" has played only a few spots so far but the boxoffice has been strictly smash. Film has broken every record in the 17-year history of the Guild Theatre, N. Y. Gross for the first 10 weeks was $187,300. Previous big moneymakers at the same location were "Queen Is Crowned" with $134,838 and "Martin Luther" with $110,165, also for 10 weeks. Significantly, these two had English dialog, whereas "Gate" has superimposed titles.

"Gate" has been similarly potent at the Vagabond, L. A., with a gross of $46,400 in the first eight weeks. Recent opening at the Du Pont, Washington, brought the same kind of b.o. performance. Pic is to open shortly in Chicago, San Francisco, Seattle, Denver, Cleveland, Detroit, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore and probably Miami and Dallas.

Harrison is collecting 50% of the gross as rental for the film but this scales downward as the gross falls off. He has a one-man sales force, namely Ed Svigals, formerly sales manager for Times Film.

An aside to the "Gate" showing is exhib reaction. On the basis of the deals made so far, it appears that theatremen are receptive to a picture if it has b.o. potential; they're not particularly concerned about its origin.

SID ROGELL TO NEW YORK

Due In For Video Policy Talks With Skouras

Sid Rogell, head of 20th-Fox's new tv subsidiary, TCF Television Productions, Inc., arrives in N. Y. today (Wed.) for huddles with 20th prez Spyros P. Skouras and other h.o. brass on the future of the video outfit.

Discussions are expected to revolve around staff requirements as well as production and sales policies of the org.

20th recently decided to convert its Western Ave. lot for tv production. Studio is headed up by Harold Lewis, former manager of Pathe studios and head of the RKO location department on the Coast.

Polaroid Rallying Support for U's 3-D 'Creature'

The Polaroid Corp., with a long-range stake in stereoscopic pictures, is keeping a watchful eye on Universal's new excursion into 3-D films. Film company, feeling there's still a market for the deepies if properly presented, will shortly release "Revenge of the Creature." The Polaroid outfit, which manufactures the 3-D viewers, is making every effort to see that exhibitors do not face difficulties in presenting the new 3-D offering.

Under a new service established by the specs company, exhibitors are being assured that there'll be no risk of running out of glasses or getting left with an over-supply. According to J. H. Mulhall, in charge of viewer sales for the company, the exhibitor "doesn't have to call the turn in advance. He Cinerama: Oh, For the Right Story!

Meanwhile First Travel Release Set for Paris, Milan and Rome

Cinerama continues its expansion abroad, with three European openings scheduled for the spring. The widescreen medium, starting with the first picture, "This Is Cinerama," will be unveiled in Paris, Milan and Rome during April and May. New openings will give Robin International, which holds the foreign exhibition rights to the process, a total of six permanent installations, with Cinerama already on display in London and Tokyo and Osaka in Japan. (It has also been seen in Damascus, Syria and in Thailand via the auspices of the U. S. Information Service in conjunction with international fairs in those countries.)

With "Cinerama Holiday," second picture in the medium, successfully launched in five U. S. cities, and "Seven Wonders of the World" currently in production, Stanley Warner, holder of the production and exhibition rights, is desperately in search of a story property that will be suitable for the medium. Most of the SW toppers are convinced that public attention for the travelog type of pictures that has been offered can't extend beyond "Wonders."

SW is again holding talks with Warner Bros. on a possible co-production deal in the Cinerama process. Two companies had an agreement to do a Lewis & Clark story-line feature, but dropped the project when rival producers were well advanced in their plans to make a L&C film. SW veep Nat Lapkin accompanied WB sales chief Ben Kalmenson to the Coast last week to resume talks with studio officials on plans for a Cinerama feature.

Video 'Crockett' To Hit Screens

Reversing the usual procedure, Walt Disney is preparing his three "Davy Crockett" pictures for theatrical exhibition in the wake of their exposure on his ABC-TV show. But there are some new angles

Producer is fashioning the pix for widescreen presentation which, he feels, will provide values which were lost on the home tv screens. Also, the material was in black and white on tv but will be in color (prints by Technicolor) for theatres.

"Crockett" on video was in three 48-minute segments for a total of 144 minutes. In theatrical form, the footage will measure 95 minutes, this including some material not seen on tv. Release of the film is set for June 1, with the premiere likely to be in either Texas or Tennessee.

Disney spent close to $500,000 in filming "Crockett," which would be extraordinarily high if the three pix were for tv exclusively.

Pacific Title's Expansion

Hollywood, March 1.

Pacific Title & Art Studio is launching an expansion program which will make it, according to general manager Larry Glickman, one of the largest and most modern in the country.

Blueprints call for enlargement of the present building from 10,200 to 25,000 square feet of floor space. Among the improvements will be a new second story containing two projection rooms, one for 35m and one for 16m.

If one proceeds on the assumption that CinemaScope "bigness," coupled with unusual backgrounds, still works its spell on the audience, "Untamed," with all of these elements, shapes up as a healthy b.o. contender. It's a romance-laden action western with fiery Zulus supplanting the Redmen, and Boers taking the place of the western pioneers.

Unfortunately, despite some truly grandiose and eye-filling scenery and battle action staged with sock effect in the early part of the film, this Bert E. Friedlob-William A. Bacher production just isn't a very good picture. It's overlong (there are at least three different potential endings); it's more intimate scenes lack conviction, and the scripting at times borders on the amateurish, quite an accomplishment considering that it took three men—Talbot Jennings, Frank Fenton and Michael Blankfort—to whip together the screenplay.

This may easily go down as one of the greatest see-saw romances in screen history, with Tyrone Power and Susan Hayward as the alternately eager and reluctant couple. Lack of good judgment in not editing out unnecessary sequences makes the film drag in many spots and appear repetitious. Also, there are some bits that are acted in a manner to invite hilarity when none was intended. These could easily be trimmed without the slightest harm being done to the production. On the contrary, it'd be improved.

Based on the Helga Moray novel, "Untamed" in many parts is an ideal CinemaScope action vehicle and director Henry King, who spent several months in South Africa to get his backgrounds, has come up with some gusty footage. The rugged scenery, with the Boer wagons strung out in a vast, slow-moving line; the Zulu attack, with moments of real horror and great tension; the moment the Boers reach their goal—all these give the picture an occasional exciting quality and should provide the meaty action that fans savor.

Story, in the main, is concerned with the great Boer trek, when they fought and died to establish the Dutch Free State. Woven into this is the personal and turbulent love story about one of the Dutch leaders and an Irish girl who loved him on two continents. Power meets Miss Hayward in Ireland. Later she marries and induces her husband to go to South Africa to start a new life. He is killed and the romancing between Power and Miss Hayward continues to the point where she bears him a child (of which he knows nothing, having gone off to fight). In the end, in one of the most poorly acted sequences of the picture, Miss Hayward reveals to Power the origin of the child, and he slips a ring on her finger.

Miss Hayward struggles somewhat grimly with a part that would defy any actress. However, she's easy on the eye, wears some attractive period dresses and is emotional when the occasion demands. There are some scenes, such as the one when she has to sow a field and another when she gets a lengthy back massage from Power, that are obviously beyond her capacity. Also, the script's demands, that she blaze with anger one minute and melt amorously in the next, are tough on any actress when this temperamental turnabout continues through the entire film.

Power is properly rugged and in parts curiously wooden in a routine role. Like the rest, he's hindered by some of the incredible lines he's asked to speak. Richard Egan as Miss Hayward's suitor who eventually turns bully and outlaw carries a good punch and cuts a promising new screen figure. Agnes Moorehead as Miss Hayward's nurse is barely in the picture. Rita Moreno puts a lot of fire into the role of the passionate waif, Egan's girl.

Best and most exciting scenes in the picture are the ones shot in South Africa, with thousands of dancing and shouting Zulus, drummed into a frenzy, attacking the Boer wagon train. Leo Tover's lensing is done with the big CinemaScope screen in mind. Director King also threw in some extras, such as a big dust storm which topples a huge tree which in turn pins down a man whose leg has to be amputated in a somewhat gruesome scene complete with agonized yelling, etc., and a whip-duel between Power and Egan.

"Untamed" is said to have cost $3,750,000, a rather considerable investment, not all of which shows up on the screen. This isn't exactly a critics' picture, but the African adventure tag plus exploitation values should contribute to a lively b.o. showing. De Luxe tints come out just fine. Hift.

Blackboard Jungle

Controversial blockbuster dealing with underpaid teachers versus juvenile hoodlums. Pro and con factors promise explosive exploitation b.o.

Juvenile hoodlums get a stark working over in "Blackboard Jungle," a controversial blockbuster that should ride to an explosive exploitation boxoffice before the pro and con ashes have time to settle. Its ticket-selling potential lies in the fact that the viewer will feel, and intensely, the melodramatic content, no matter whether in agreement with what is said, or how it is said. This feeling, properly stimulated by ballyhoo, can pay off at the b.o.

Director - scripter Richard Brooks, working from novel by Evan Hunter, has fashioned an angry picture that flares out in moral and physical rage at mental slovenliness, be it juvenile, mature, or in the pattern of society acceptance of things as they are because no one troubles to devise a better way.

No particular plea is made for racial tolerance. It's baldly stated and left up to the individual to accept or reject. The same treatment is accorded the school system and the shabbily-paid teachers, both those dedicated and those unable to face a more competitive world.

Other social problems are covered, too, once-over-lightly. The main issue is the juvenile bum who terrorizes schoolrooms and teachers.

To say all this, the plot introduces Glenn Ford, young Navy veteran, taking his first teaching job. His classroom is in a big city trade school, and the pupils are a cross-section of all races. As in life, a very few are strong, the rest follow-the-leader sheep, and Ford's job is to sort out the leaders, win them over, if possible, so that learning, not defiance of authority, will take its rightful place again.

These are no mischievous youths Ford deals with, but hoodlums, some of whom are already well along the road to crime. The strong among the evil element, here represented by Vic Morrow, is already beyond any reform. The good, represented by Sidney Poitier, has had no stimulus to awaken his leadership abilities because he is a Negro. Ford, Morrow and Poitier are so real in their performances under the probing direction by Brooks that the picture alternatingly has the viewer pleading, indignant and frightened before the conclusion is brought about with a hackle-raising classroom fight in which Ford and Poitier find themselves when the teacher subdues a knife-wielding Morrow.

The story uses the shocker technique of profanity, racial slur, attempted rape and similar socially unacceptable motivations for emphasis but these all belong with such a gutty topic. Also, it uses much that is obvious in character and situation, but this, because it is familiar, only lends emphasis to the dramatic points. It seems certain that controversy will develop over two teachers, beaten down from a day in class, getting drunk in a corner saloon and then falling prey to a cruel beating by their hoodlum students; over the sexual and spiritual lonesomeness of Margaret Hayes, a frightened teacher in the school and the forthright way in which her problem is stated; over the fact a teacher witnesses a crime by some of his pupils and fails to report it, and, less possibly, over the frank approach to marital relations between Ford and his pregnant wife, Anne Francis. However, all of this can be boxoffice fuel.

Pandro S. Berman's production supervision backs the Brooks approach to the picture without reservation, resulting in a film with a melodramatic impact that hits hard at a contemporary problem. The casting, too, is exceptionally good. Miss Francis is fine and believeable as the wife. Louis Calhern reads all of the forlorn bitterness of a life-beaten man into his cynical teacher character, and Miss Hayes is simply great as the sexpot teacher. John Hoyt, school principal; Richard Kiley, Emile Meyer, and hoods Dan Terranova, Rafeal Campos, Paul Mazursky and others wallop over their parts.

On the technical side, the picture has a fine lineup of talents, including Russell Harlan's stark photography, the realistic settings, the editing and the musical adaptation. Used to pinpoint drama are three recordings, with "Rock Around the Clock," played by Bill Haley and His Comets theming the jazz beat that expresses the subject. Others heard are "Invention For Guitar and Trumpet," played by Stan Kenton and his orchestra, and "The Jazz Me Blues," played by Bix Beiderbecke and His Gang. Brog.

Man Without a Star
(COLOR—SONG)

Good western drama, highlighting action with sex and humor; profitable possibilities.

Hollywood, March 1.

Universal release of Aaron Rosenberg production. Stars Kirk Douglas, Jeanne Crain, Claire Trevor; co-stars William Campbell; features Richard Boone, Mara Corday, Jay C. Flippen, Myrna Hansen. (Aspect ratio: 2-1)

Humor and sex highlight the action in "Man Without a Star," a good western feature with profitable boxoffice prospects. Kirk Douglas, in the title role, takes easily to the saddle as a tumbleweed cowpoke who has a way with a sixgun or the ladies, helping to carry off the seemingly authentic range flavor that is one of the better aspects of the presentation. This air is furthered by the story treatment and some outstanding color photography or the outdoor settings. These factors all add up to open air drama that should rate a ready reception in the regular market.

Two femmes, Jeanne Crain and Claire Trevor, hold down the distaff star spots in the Aaron Rosenberg production, and William Campbell scores in a co-star slot as the young greenhorn who learns his cowboying from Douglas and about the wrong kind of women from Miss Crain. The latter is technically skilled in her delineation of a ruthless owner of a big ranch, not above using sex in her determination to keep the range unfenced, but is not quite believable as a sexpot. Miss Trevor is back in a character she does well, playing what is, by implication, the town madam with a heart of gold, and with a soft spot in it for the wandering Douglas.

Title of the picture, ably scripted by Borden Chase and D. D. Beauchamp from a novel by Dee Linford, comes from the thought that everyone has a star to keep them steadfast and those without a purpose are doomed to wander forever. Such a man is Douglas, a saddle tramp who hates fences and who is kept moving further west as more and more range is crossed by barbed wire.

Douglas and Campbell, a range novice who has attached himself to the colorful saddle tramp, find work on the big spread operated by Miss Crain, a gal who decides Douglas is just the man to ramrod her ranch and handle house duties at night, provided he will continue to fight the small ranchers who want to save grass for winter feeding by fencing. The plot is basic western in this setup of open versus fenced land, but writing variations keep it fresh and the action high as things move towards the climax when Douglas switches sides, helps the small ranchers and then rides off in search of new, unfenced land.

King Vidor's vigorous direction of the action and the sweeping staging of the big outdoor scenes is a top asset to the entertainment values. The humor has a crude, masculine flavor just right for the raw west and the characters peopling it. A laugh gag good for considerable footage is the cowpoke speculation over the installation and use of an inside bathroom at Miss Crain's big ranch. Along with the bold humor are fights, stampedes and chases just as bold with action, and Russell Metty's camera work shows them off importantly.

Abetting the good work of the four principals is Richard Boone, a badman from Texas who moves in on the Crain spread when Douglas switches allegiance; Jay C. Flippen, the honest foreman replaced by Douglas; Myrna Hansen, daughter of small rancher Eddy Waller who ropes young Campbell; Mara Corday, one of Miss Trevor's girls; Sheb Wooley, Roy Barcroft, Bill Phillips and others.

Douglas takes banjo in hand to plink and sing "And the Moon Grew Brighter and Brighter" by Jimmy Kennedy and Lou Singer during a saloon sequence. Behind the main title, Frankie Laine's voice is heard singing the title tune, cleffed by Arnold Hughes Frederick Herbert. It's a range ballad of the "Mule Train"-"Wild Goose"-etc., school. Brog.

The End of the Affair
(BRITISH)

Deborah Kerr and Van Johnson in Graham Greene drama with strong religious overtones; valuable star appeal but questionable b.o. hopes.

London, March 1.

Columbia release of David E. Rose production. Stars Deborah Kerr, Van Johnson, John Mills; features Stephen Murray, Nora Swinburne, Charles Goldner, Peter Cushing. Directed by Edward Dmytryk. Screenplay, Lenore Coffee from novel by Graham Greene; camera, Wilkie Cooper; editor, Alan Osbiston; music, Benjamin Frankel. At Empire Theatre, London, Feb. 23, '55. Running time, 107 MINS.

Sarah Miles	Deborah Kerr
Maurice Bendrix	Van Johnson
Ibert Parkis	John Mills
Henry Miles	Peter Cushing
Father Crompton	Stephen Murray
Mrs. Bertram	Nora Swinburne
Savage	Charles Goldner
Smythe	Michael Goodliffe
Miss Palmer	Joyce Carey
Dr. Collingwood	Frederick Leister
Landlady	Elsie Wagstaff
Lancelot Parkis	Christopher Warbey

Graham Greene's obsession for religious themes, which has dominated most of his recent plays and novels, almost gets out of hand in this filmization of his novel. And what might have been a poignant romantic drama develops into a bewildering discussion of faith versus reason. Not a particularly promising subject from a boxoffice point of view, "The End of the Affair" will need cautious selling. The marquee values of the stars will, of course, be a big help, especially in the U.S.

There is nothing subtle about the author's introduction of the religioso aspect or in the way his own strong views are allowed to grip the subject. He strikes boldly and with obvious conviction; his characters are engulfed by his belief and echo the views he so sincerely holds. That hardly makes for scintillating dialog, but does contribute to the very static nature of this over-wordy British film.

To go along with Greene, it is necessary to accept that Deborah Kerr's prayer was answered when Van Johnson, with whom she had been having an illicit love affair, was struck in a wartime air raid. She believes him to be dead but on her bended knees promises to give him up if he can be brought back to life. Actually, he returns in a few minutes, but the oath having been taken she is determined to walk out of his life and the rest of the film is a battle between her conscience and her love. Van Johnson becomes little more than an anguished onlooker.

Sitting on the sidelines most of the time is Peter Cushing as Miss Kerr's husband, a civil servant who is bewildered by his wife's mysterious coming and goings, but cannot quite bring himself to hire an inquiry agent. So Van Johnson does it for him and the scenes in which John Mills does the trailing are among the best in the picture. But their inquiry leads them to the home of a Hyde Park soap-box agnostic, whose visiting cards are distributed to the audience he harangues.

With the emphasis on the religious debate, the film takes on a static appearance and there is hardly any action throughout the footage. Instead, there's an overabundance of closeups and two shots, when barely a bright line of dialog or a smile from one of the principal characters brightens the scene.

Despite this gloomy backcloth, Miss Kerr radiates warmth and beauty. Van Johnson's performance, on the other hand, is kept to a single key, inducing an air of monotony. Only Mills, best served by the script, is able to emerge as a believeable character. Cushing's study of the husband is also kept to one plane, but there are neat contrasting cameos by Stephen Murray, as the priest who preaches faith, and by Michael Goodliffe, as the agnostic who advocates reason.

Edward Dmytryk's direction is clearly restricted by the demands of the script. Wilkie Cooper's lensing attains a high quality and Benjamin Frankel's score is effectively unobtrusive. Other technical credits are okay, but the pic could be helped by additional scissoring. Myro.

Stranger on Horseback
(COLOR)

Okay Joel McCrea western for the general outdoor action market.

Hollywood, March 1.

United Artists release of Robert Goldstein production. Stars Joel McCrea; co-stars Miroslava; features Kevin McCarthy, John McIntire, Emile Meyer, Nancy Gates, John Carradine. Directed by Jacques Tourneur. Screenplay, Herb Meadow, Don Martin; story by Louis L'Amour; camera (Ansco Color by Pathe), Ray Rennahan; editor, William Murphy; music, Paul Dunlap. Previewed Feb. 23, '55. Running time, 65 MINS.

Josiah Bannerman	John McIntire
Caroline Webb	Nancy Gates
Colonel Streeter	John Carradine
Sheriff Nat Bell	Emile Meyer

Paula Morison	Jaclynne Greene

Joel McCrea brings law and order to the range in "Stranger On Horseback" and the stalwart, unflinching manner with which he tackles the chore makes for good viewing for the outdoor action fan. In that market this western should fare okay.

United Artists is releasing the outdoor actioner, location-lensed in Mexico by Robert Goldstein for Leonard Goldstein Productions, and a number of factors combine to make it acceptable filmfare for the intended market. McCrea always brings an air of credibility to his western characterizations, and his work here goes a long way towards shaping the film for general acceptance. Other performances, some flamboyant, also assist the entertainment aims, as does Jacques Tourneur's good direction of the Louis L'Amour story, scripted by Herb Meadow and Don Martin.

McCrea portrays a circuit judge, who comes to a small western town in the course of making his rounds. There he finds the town and surrounding area under the feudal thumb of an oldline family headed by John McIntire. Despite wholehearted opposition and obstacles, McCrea fingers McIntire's spoiled son, Kevin McCarthy, for murder, smokes out the necessary frightened witnesses and defies the whole clan by seeing that justice is done. In doing so he even wins the grudging respect of the old cattle baron, gains the love of the latter's strong-willed niece, Miroslava, and awakens sheriff Emile Meyer to a new sense of duty.

The Mexican locations provide the story action with attractive settings, and the lensing in Ansco Color by Ray Rennahan does them justice. Trouping is generally good. McCarthy plays his role with the proper arrogance and Miroslava is good as the fiery heroine who turns against family to aid the judge. McIntire shows up excellently as the head of the feudal domain and John Carradine sparks a colorful part as attorney for the clan. Nancy Gates is an eye and acting pleaser as a witness to murder. Meyer and the others provide complete support.

Technical credits lineup first-rate on the production. Brog.

Big House, U.S.A.

Fair melodrama entertainment with familiar names and medium prospects for general program market.

Hollywood, Feb. 26.

United Artists release of Bel-Air (Aubrey Schenck) production. Stars Broderick Crawford, Ralph Meeker, Reed Hadley, William Talman, Lon Chaney, Charles Bronson; features Randy Farr, Roy Roberts, Willis B. Bouchey, Peter Votrian. Directed by Howard W. Koch. Written by John C. Higgins; camera, Gordon Avil; editor, John F. Schreyer; music, Paul Dunlap. Previewed Feb. 24, '53. Running time, 82 MINS.

The case history of a crime, from execution through to punishment, makes up the melodrama in "Big House, U.S.A." and provides a fair amount of entertainment. Film shapes to medium prospects in the general program market, where its familiar cast names should help the bookings.

A pseudo-documentary style of storytelling is used in the Bel-Air production, produced by Aubrey Schenck for United Artists release and directed by Howard W. Koch. The technique, with quite a bit of narration, slows proceedings so there seem to be rather long stretches between the good action-melodrama scenes. The script by John C. Higginss is inclined to ramble but, in general, deals with the kidnaping of a small boy camper in Royal Gorge Park, Colorado, the kid's accidental death, the payment of ransom and the follow-through by the law as it goes about bringing the criminal to justice.

Several frustrations are encountered along the way by the FBI in the person of Reed Hadley. He has the right man, Ralph Meeker, but can only send him away for extortion since the kidnaper plotted his crime well to make it look like he only used a kid's disappearance to tap a rich father's wallet. Heavies Broderick Crawford, William Talman, Lon Chaney and Charles Bronson get into the picture when Meeker is assigned to their cell block at Cascabel Island Prison. Here yarn goes off on another angle having to do with the scheme of Crawford and his henchmen to escape, taking Meeker with them to lead the way to the buried $200,000 ransom. Windup finds the law waiting the treasure-seekers and the baddies pay with their lives for their crimes.

Plenty of violence is featured throughout in some rather chilling scenes, but fits the tough characters with which the story deals. Performanees are in keeping, with Meeker doing a good job of a cold-blooded crook nicknamed "The Iceman." Crawford, Talman, Chaney and Bronson also are okay heavies, while Hadley, Roy Roberts and others on the side of law prove capable. Randy Farr, as Meeker's femme acecomplice, and Peter Votrian, the youthful victim, are acceptable.

Picture has a scenic advantage in being lensed by Gordon Avil in the Royal Gorge country. Cascabel Island Prison also is used as an action site. Editing, background score and other contributions are standard. Brog.

(Aspect ratio: 1.65-1)

A double-barrelled load of tough violence is fired at the western fan in "Wyoming Renegades" and it will find its target in the outdoor action market, where this type of feature usually proves okay program filmfare.

Phil Carey, ex-badman going straight; Gene Evans, leader of a gang of outlaw killers, and Martha Hyer, the girl who believes in Carey, hold down the featured spots in the Wallace MacDonald production and perform competently under Fred F. Sears' fast, rugged direction.

David Lang screen story is a generally good, albeit mostly familiar, framework against which to play the hard action. Main plot nub deals with Carey's efforts to shake off the prison stigma and make a new life, but when Evans' baddies hold up the town bank, Carey's again suspect and seemingly rejoins the outlaw band but only to clear his name.

Plot finale has a seldom-used twist to make it possible for Carey and Miss Hyer to find happiness. Neither the hero, the sheriff, nor any other mere man can bring this about; the deed falling to the town femmes, by now sick of masculine fumbling in dealing out gun justice. With the townsmen away on a ruse, the gals lay an ambush for Evans and his cutthroats, shooting down most and jailing the others when another raid on the bank is tried.

William Bishop, Aaron Spelling, George Keymas and others in Evans' motley outlaw crew enact their characters capably. So do Douglas Kennedy, undercover Pinkerton man; Roy Roberts, the sheriff; Don Beddoe and others on the side of law and order. Lester White's photography, and other technical work is good.

The score, conducted by Mischa Bakaleinikoff, is used here much more effectively than in most westerns, or dramas. The music never tries to compete with the action, but proves a strong support by staying behind the scenes. This intelligent treatment particularly heightens suspense in several sequences. Brog.

Shakespeare ..... Steve Rowland
(Aspect ratio: 1.33-1)

This low-budget western depends too much on limning a man's philosophy and not enough on action to give it much chance in the action market, where it will hit less discriminating situations only. An attempt at mood seldom stacks up for western fans, who like their heroes on the positive side. Film should also be cut a good 10 to 15 minutes.

Yarn is based on a man just elected sheriff against his wishes, who doesn't believe in the killing the job requires. When three gunmen show up to kill him, ostensibly hired by his defeated political opponent, he hides out, refusing to meet them until the old sheriff he succeeded shames him by taking his gun and going after the trio.

Earle Lyon, who also produced, is colorless in the role, and balance of east doesn't stand much chance with their roles. Edgar Buehanan tries valiantly as the retired peace-officer, as do Marie Windsor as the sheriff's beloved, Lon Chaney his defeated opponent, Richard Bartlett (also the director) the killer and Barton MacLane a blacksmith. Bartlett manages to insert some degree of fast play in a climaxing gunfight, but effect is nixed by adding an inconsequential sequence to clean up story line. Whit.

Wages of Fear (Le Salaire de la Peur)

"Wages of Fear," a Vera Film-Fono Roma production directed by H. G. Clouzot, was reviewed in the April 29, 1953, issue of VARIETY. Version was the one shown at the Cannes film festival and running 155 mins. It's since been trimmed to 106 mins. French language version has now opened at the Paris Theatre, N. Y. International Affiliates is distributing in USA.

Reviewer Mosk opined: "Not for general runs in its unrelenting portrait of men in crisis, this unusual offering could do for U. S. arty houses on theme and treatment. Trimming is needed. Lensing and editing are of top order . . . with a mounting tension and suspense brought to a breaking point."

(U. S. version of "Wages of Fear," which is 24 mins. shorter than the one shown in Europe and Britain, suffers from a slow first half but mounts into a top thriller in the second. If there ever were any anti-U. S. angles in the pic, they aren't there now. Film's ending accentuates the general downbeat note. Hift).

La Paura (Fear) (ITALO-GERMAN)

Rome, Feb. 22.

Minerva Film release of an Aniene-Ariston Film production. Stars Ingrid Bergman, Mathias Wiemna; features Renate Mannhart, Kurt Krueger, Elise Aulinger, Edith Schultze-Westrum, Steffie Struck, Annelore Wied. Directed by Roberto Rossellini. Screenplay, Sergio Amidei, Franz Treuberg; from novel by Stephan Zweig; camera, Carlo Carlini; music, Renzo Rossellini; editor, Yolanda Benvenuti, Walter Boos. Previewed in Rome. Running time, 83 MINS.

Irene Wagner ..... Ingrid Bergman
Albert Wagner ..... Mathias Wieman
Johanna Schultze ..... Renate Mannhart
Heinrich Stolz ..... Kurt Krueger

Shot in Germany by a two-country partnership, latest product of the Bergman-Rossellini tandem shapes as the best they've done together in some time, showing care in continuity and scripting unusual to the directors well-known weakness for improvised shooting. The Bergman name is still a potent sales item, which if properly pitched can help this item pay its way. Theme chosen, however, more than anything else, will keep earnings in the moderate class.

Story, based on the Stephen Zweig tome, pictures the fear introduced into the life of Irene Wagner (Ingrid Bergman), wife of a well-to-do professor, (Mathias Wieman) by a blackmailing ex-girlfriend of her young lover. Irene is driven into a fear psychosis, and threatens suicide. She is detained by her husband, and pic winds with new understanding and mutual pardon.

Script is fairly well knit and makes for some suspense but fails importantly in backdropping character. Thus, the reasons for Irene's illicit relationship remain unexplained. Acting is competent throughout, with Ingrid Bergman giving an indecisive part a good reading. Mathias Wieman impresses as her husband. Renate Mannhart is properly coarse as the blackmailer while the lover is merely sketched in by Kurt Krueger. Carlo Carlini has done an able lensing job. Renzo Rossellini's musical seore adds considerably to pic's development and mood. Editing is well done. Hawk.

Ludwig II (GERMAN-COLOR)

Frankfurt, Feb. 22.

Schorcht Film release of Aura production. Stars O. W. Fischer and Ruth Leuwerik. Directed by Helmut Kautner. Screenplay, Georg Hurdalek and Peter Berneis after a story by Kadidja Wedekind; camera, Agfacolor, Douglas Slocombe; music by Vienna Symphony Orchestra under Herbert von Karajan. At Turm Palast, Frankfurt. Running time, 114 MINS.

Ludwig II ..... O. W. Fischer
Kaiserin Elisabeth ..... Ruth Leuwerik
Princess Sophie ..... Marianne Koch
Richard Wagner ..... Paul Bildt
Bismarck ..... Friedrich Domin
Count Holnstein ..... Rolf Kutschera
Dr. Gudden ..... Robert Meny
Prinz Otto ..... Klaus Kinski

It is notably difficult for a nation to accept the idea that their ruler is mad, and even more difficult to adequately pörtray the growing madness of a king and the resultant crises for a country. But in this tragic film about Ludwig II, the results are not only admirable, but also exceptional. Although parts of the story are left to conjecture where the truth will probably never be known, and some of Ludwig's eccentricities eliminated, the film is mainly factual and a powerful one.

O. W. Fischer, who portrays Ludwig, is an extremely handsome man whose usual light roles have made him a matinee idol in Germany. Here he has broken away from this type role with an outstanding portrayal of the king. Ludwig is shown from his youth as a lover of the arts and patron of Richard Wagner, through his ill-fated love of Elizabeth, the wife of Franz Joseph, in his struggles with Bismarck, to his final dissolution in an insane asylum and his dramatic death.

Excellent performances, too, are contributed by Ruth Leuwerik as Kaiserin Elisabeth and Marianne Koch as her younger sister. Klaus Kinski, as Ludwig's younger brother, provides a fine study. Paul Bildt portrays Wagner, and the pic is given added interest by the playing of the Vienna Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Herbert von Karajon.

Scenes of the Bavarian countryside, and the filming at the actual castle of the mad king contribute to the film's anthenticity and local audience identification. Minor flaw is that the technicians are apparently not accustomed to Technicolor, and the makeup was somewhat inexpertly applied. The film reception here tabbed this as one of the best pix made in Germany since the war. It may do well in U.S. art houses. Haze.

Metro's Makeready

Metro is the latest to come up with a special product trailer of things to come from the lot. Unveiled for the trade-press Monday (21), the 18-minute short in CinemaScope, but available for all kinds of screens, is interestingly presented and loaded with production values.

Opens with a tribute by George Murphy, M-G's good-will ambassador, to the theatres and their place in the community. Individual stars of upcoming Metro films are employed to introduce scenes from pictures in which they will appear. A unique aspect of the reel is a backstage visit to the Metro lot for an actual behind-the-scenes view of the booming activity at the studio as well as glimpses of scenes being shot. Unusual: an author of a book which will be filmed is presented. William Gibson, who wrote "The Cobweb," currently before the cameras, speaks about the story and introduces the stars.

It's obvious that careful thought was given to preparation of the "selling" reel. Scenes from 10 pictures are flashed and mentions of six others are made.

The short is being offered gratis to all theatres which play Metro product. Holl.

Variety Stars (RUSSIAN)

Artkino release of Mosfilm production. Directed by Vera Stroyeva. Features Y. Timoshenko, E. Berezin, L. Mirov, M. Novitsky, Leonid Utyosov, M. Mironova, A. Menaker, Klavdia Shulzhenko, Rinna Zelyonaya, T. Savva. Screenplay, Pomeshchikov, V. Tipot; camera, L. Nokolayev, . Gindin; music, I. Dunayevsky, A. Tsfasman. At Stanley, N.Y., starting Feb. 19, '55. Running time, 85 MINS.

(In Russian; English titles)

Soviet film producers try their luck with lightweight musieal fare in this pic with rather lukewarm results. Supposed to be a backstage glimpse of the Russo Variety Hall stage, it is hard to believe that Russian vaudeville is this dull and haphazard. Vera Stroyeva, who did the commendable "Grand Concert" for the Russians, directed and helped in the production of this. Pic is poor credit to her.

Initial premise in the rather sketchy story has a comedy twosome trying out for a regular job in one of the big government-run halls. It appears that the pair have won in the competition, the board of judges howls at their comedy antics (the two are actually rather funny), but nothing happens. The two are convineed they have lost out, and at about this juncture somebody apparently lost the script. Because the story meanders all over the lot—first have the two lads as emsees, then the unknown "finds" on the new bill and finally presenting a new act at the town hall.

This is all pretty confusing and seldom amusing. The scripters trot out a portly, homely songstress whose sole redeeming feature is that she can warble. Then there is a more attractive femme who is firstrate whistler, but she's not in the vaude show as herein edited. There is a topflight ballet troupe but work is marred by whirling soarfs and faulty photography. Production boasts some good acrobats and a couple of good singers but neither group would encounter much success on the American stage.

Entire vaude troupe lines up and eomes forward to take a bow at the finale of the performance — far from original. Miss Stroyeva learned the hard way in this film that it takes more than just a few available acts to make a screen musical jell. The camera work for the most part is up to the high Russian standard but the music is routine, and the screenplay is just one of those things. Wear.

Un Fil a la Patte (A Fly In The Ointment) (FRENCH)

Paris, Feb. 22.

Gaumont release of Cite Films-Gaumont production. Stars Noel-Noel, Suzy Delair. Directed by Guy Lefranc. Screenplay, Noel-Noel from farce by Georges Feydeau; camera, Pierre Petit, editor, Robert Isnardon. At Paris, Paris. Running time, 85 MINS.

Bois D'Enghien ..... Noel-Noel
Lucette ..... Suzy Delair
Marcelline ..... Genevieve Kervine
Bourin ..... Bourvil
Chenevielle ..... Henri Guisol
Baroness ..... Gabrielle Dorziat

Turn-of-century farce has been filmed with a wider scope than given the usual confines of the stage. However, the clockwork mechanism and pacing of the Georges Feydeau opus loses its impact on the screen, and the characters are too personalized and broad to make for the proper comic overtones. Played in tongue-in-cheek style, this lacks laughs and emerges as not especially suited for the U.S. market.

Fly in the ointment here is a fancy, high-living music hall singer who is the present mistress of a playboy, latter now being ready to marry into a good family. But ultimately the singer weds a rich admirer, and the playboy is forgiven.

This farce falters and the dwells on the characters so long it robs them of their true farcical attitudes. However, it is amusing in spots Director Guy Lefranc has gotten some neat period angles into this, but has missed out on movement. Noel-Noel is too supercilious. Suzy Delair has guile and bounce but lacks the necessary bombast. Remainder of the cast is uneven except for Bourvil, who provides a sock characterization of the crafty lawyer, who is a songwriter on the side. Lensing and editing are good, and production dress glossy. Mosk.

Canaris (GERMAN)

Berlin, Feb. 22.

Europa release of Fama productions. Stars O. E. Hlasse, Adrian Hoven, Barbara Ruetting. Directed by Alfred Weidenmann. Screenplay, Herbert Reinecker after a manuscript by Erich Ebermayer; camera, Franz Weihmayr; music, Siegfried Franz. At Gloria Palast, Berlin. Running time, 113 MINS.

Admiral Canaris ..... O. E. Hasse
Hauptmann Althoff ..... Adrian Hoven
Irene von Hasbeck ..... Barbara Ruetting
Obergruppenfuehrer Heydrich ..... Martin Held
Oberst Holl ..... Wolfgang Preiss
Fernandez ..... Peter Masbacher
Herr von Hasbeck ..... Arthur Schroeder
Baron Trenti ..... Charles Regnier
Beckmann ..... Franz Essel
Oberst Degenhard ..... Herbert Wilk
French Captain ..... Claus Miedel
Fraeulein Winter ..... Alice Treff
Frau Lueditke ..... Ilse Fuerstenberg
Gestapo Official ..... Oskar Lindner
Major Ullmann ..... Friedrich Steig
Hauptmann Behrens ..... Otto Braml

This is a remarkably well done German semi-documentary pic centering around the controversial figure of Admiral Canaris who was in charge of Germany's defenses during the Hitler era. Both technically and artistically, pic is considerably beyond the German post-war average and rates high in acting and direction. Being a sure moneymaker here, "Canaris" also appears to have the ingredients for the foreign market.

Screenplay, ably written by Herbert Reinecker from a slick manuscript by Erich Ebermayer, has to do with Admiral Canaris, boss of the German counter-intelligence corps until 1944. It effectively retells some of his most important activities under the Hitler banner. It shows how he was in touch with anti-Hitler groups, but hesitated to participate in their underground activities. Knowing what was going to happen to Germany and yet feeling unable to change the unholy situation, he got into deep inner conflicts and more and more showed an open dislike for the regime he served.

He lost his job in 1944 and after the attempt to overthrow Hitler failed, he was put in a concentration camp.

Pic's general appeal is helped greatly by the Canaris portrayed by outstanding actor O. E. Hasse. This stage actor, who strangely enough established his film career via American pix ("Decision Before Dawn" and "I Confess,") should find more favor with Teutonic producers after this one. Another topflight performance is turned in by Martin Held, as Heydrich, the SS chieftain who mistrust and opposed Canaris. Most others give good performances but are considerably overshadowed by Hasse and Held. Not very convincing, however, are Adrian Hoven and Barbara Ruetting.

Full praise should go to Alfred Weidenmann who directed this. Still not so widely known among local directors, Weidenmann establishes himself via this film.

"Canaris" may be regarded as one of the best and most important German efforts since the war's end. Hans.

BING CROSBY · GRACE KELLY · WILLIAM HOLDEN

in A PERLBERG-SEATON Production

THE COUNTRY GIRL

Produced by WILLIAM PERLBERG • Written for the Screen and Directed by GEORGE SEATON

From the play by Clifford Odets • A Paramount Picture

Longruns Bolster L.A.; 'Rivers' Fast $22,000, 'Young' Light 11G, 'Line' Hep 25G, 'Battle' Big 26G, 'Girl' 10G, 10th

Los Angeles, March 1.

Continued strength displayed by several extended-run bills is helping keep firstrun grosses on a good level here currently. Although newcomers are inclined to be spotty, a good $22,000 is shaping for "Many Rivers To Cross" in two theatres. "French Touch" is snappy $5,000 in small Fine Arts, but "They Were So Young" is only light $11,000 in three situations.

"Lone Gray Line" is seeking a nice $25,000 in second frame, two spots but most other second-weekers are slow. "Battle Cry" still is loud $26,000 in fourth stanza, two houses. "Bridges at Toko-ri" looks sharp $12,000 in sixth session.

"Country Girl" shapes hearty $10,000 in 10th week. "Leagues Under Sea" looms fine $11,000 in 10th stanza.

Estimates for This Week

Russell Sturdy 10G Cheers K. C.

Kansas City, March 1.

Advent of Lent undoubtedly is having a negative effect on the boxoffice here albeit there is some good biz in town. "Underwater!" first strong pix at the Missouri in weeks is big. Jane Russell pic will hold. "Racers" shapes good in four Fox Midwest houses while "Many Rivers To Cross" is nifty at the Roxy. "Battle Cry" in third week at the Paramount continues terrific. Weather has returned to normal seasonal pattern.

Estimates for This Week

Glen (Dickinson) (750; 85-$1)—"One Summer Happiness" (Indie) (2d wk). Fancy $2,500. Holds again. Last week, $3,000, biggest house ever had under art-film policy.

Kimo (Dickinson) (504; 85-$1)—"Little Kidnappers" (UA) (2d wk). Modest $1,500. May stay. Last week, $2,000.

Midland (Loew's) (3,500; 60-80)—"Bad Day at Black Rock" (M-G) and "Crest of Wave" (M-G) (2d wk). Dim $6,500. Last week, $9,500.

Missouri (RKO) (2,650; 65-90)—"Underwater!" (RKO) and "Utopia" (Indie). Big $10,000, best at this house in weeks, and holds. Last week, "10 Wanted Men" (Col) and "Pirates of Tripoli" (Col), $4,000 in 6 days.

Orpheum, Uptown, Fairway, Granada (Fox Midwest) (1,913; 2,043; 700; 1,217; 75-$1)—"The Racers" (20th). Good $15,000, as circuit switches Orpheum instead of Tower into its 4-way coupling. Last week, Orpheum only "Far Country" (U) (3d wk), $4,500.

Paramount (United Par) (1,900; 75-$1)—"Battle Cry" (WB) (3d wk). Fat $10,000. Holds again. Last week, $14,000.

Roxy (Durwood) (879; 70-90)—"Many Rivers To Cross" (M-G). Pleasant $7,000. Holds. Last week, "Green Fire" (M-G) (3d wk) $3,500.

Tower (Fox Midwest) (2,100; 65-85)—"6 Bridges To Cross" (U) (2d wk) as house singled out of the usual 4-theatre hook-up to go it alone on holdover. Okay $4,500. Last week, coupled with Uptown, Fairway and Granada, "6 Bridges" hit big $17,000.

'Feather' Happy $12,000, Seattle; 'Lightfoot' 8G

Seattle, March 1.

"White Feather" is making the Coliseum happy this session with a great total. "Capt. Lightfoot" is rated okay at Music Hall. "Bridges at Toko-ri" continues big in second frame at the Fifth Avenue. "Battle Cry" looms tall in third Paramount round.

Estimates for This Week

Blue Mouse (Hamrick) (800; 75-$1)—"They Were So Young" (Indie) and "Sleeping Tiger" (Indie). Oke $4,000 in 8 days. Last week, "6 Bridges" (U) (3d wk-6 days), $2,400.

Coliseum (Evergreen) (1,829; $1-$1.25)—"White Feather" (20th) and "Target Earth" (UA). Great $12,000. Last week, "Racers" (20th) and "Bowery To Bagdad" (AA) (2d wk), $7,600.

Fifth Avenue (Evergreen) (2,500; $1-$1.25)—"Bridges at Toko-ri" (Par). (2d wk). Big $11,000. Last week, $17,400.

Music Box (Hamrick) (850; 90-$1.25)—"Illicit Interlude" (Indie). Fair $3,500. Last week, "Sabaka" (UA) and "Song of Land" (UA), $3,000 at top.

Music Hall (Hamrick) (2,300; 90-$1.25)—"Captain Lightfoot" (U) and "Hell's Outpost" (Rep). Okay $8,000 or near. Last week, "Jupiter's Darling" (M-G) and "Crest of Wave" (M-G), $8,800 in 8 days.

Orpheum (Hamrick) (2,700; 75-$1)—"Far Country" (U) and "West of Zanzibar" (U) (2d wk-4 days). Oke $5,000. Last week, $13,200.

Paramount (Evergreen) (3,039; $1-$1.25)—"Battle Cry" (WB) (3d wk). Tall $8,000. Last week, $10,500.

'Girl' Mighty 19G, Port.; 'Bridges' 9G

Portland, Ore., March 1.

"Country Girl" on its Northwest preem at the Paramount is heading for a smash session, and holdover. "6 Bridges To Cross" at the Broadway and "Jupiter's Daughter" at Liberty are running neck and neck, both being nice. "White Feather" looks okay in second Orpheum stanza.

Estimates for This Week

Broadway (Parker) (1,890; 65-90)—"6 Bridges To Cross" (U) and "A & C Meet Keystone Kops" (U). Fast $9,000. Last week, "Underwater!" (RKO) and "Passion" (RKO) (2d wk), $6,600.

Guild (Indie) (400; $1.25)—"Romeo and Juliet" (UA) (2d wk). Nifty $3,500. Last week, $5,100.

Fox (Evergreen) (1,536; $1-$1.25)—"Battle Cry" (WB) (3d wk). Stout $8,500. Last week, $11,600.

Liberty (Hamrick) (1,875; 90-$1.25)—"Jupiter's Darling" (M-G) and "Bob Mathias Story" (AA). Good $9,000. Last week, "Bad Day Black Rock" (M-G) and "Fast and Furious" (Indie), $9,700.

Orpheum (Evergreen) (1,600; $1-$1.25)—"White Feather" (20th) and "Laughing Anne" (Rep) (2d wk). Okay $5,000. Last week, $8,200.

Paramount (Port-Par) (3,400; 90-$1.25)—"Country Girl" (Par). Big exploitation drive helping to torrid $19,000. Last week, "Bridges at Toko-ri" (Par) (3d wk), $7,500 after two previous smash heats.

Detroit, March 1.

The three bright spots this week are "Battle Cry" in second sock week at the Madison, "Cinerama Holiday" which is rolling in third round at the Music Hall and "Underwater!" shaping smooth at the Palms. Others are average or below. "Unchained" is slow. However, "Bridges at Toko-ri" is okay for fourth round.

Estimates for This Week

Fox (Fox-Detroit) (5,000; $1-$1.25)—"White Feather" (20th) and "Crest of Wave" (M-G) (2d wk). Down to $16,000. Last week, $21,000.

Michigan (United Detroit) (4,000; 95-$1.25)—"Bridges at Toko-ri" (Par) (4th wk). Oke $12,000 in 5 days. Last week, $16,000.

'Pagan' Balto Ace, Hotsy $11,000, 2d

Baltimore, March 1.

The large number of holdovers adds up to mild grosses here this round. "Long John Silver" is fairish at the Century. Second round of "Sign of Pagan" looks brisk at the Hipp. Third round of "Underwater!" is pleasing at Keith's. Fourth week of "Battle Cry" continues potent at the Stanley. "Far Country" is still okay at the Mayfair for third session.

'Darling' Oke at $9,500, Cincy; 'Shield' Good 8G, 'Toko-ri' Socko 12G, 2d

Cincinnati, March 1.

Better-than-par trade is building this frame after expected shrinkage from the Washington Birthday and weather break boost last week. "Jupiter's Darling," leading new bill, is only okay for eight-day stretch at the Palace. "Black Shield" is bowing pleasingly at the Grand. Whopper second stanzas loom for "Battle Cry" and "Bridges at Toko-ri." "Cinerama" continues in great stride in its 37th week.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (3,100; 75-$1.25)—"Battle Cry" (WB) (2d wk). Solid $17,000 in wake of $23,000 first round.

Capitol (Ohio Cinema Corp.) (1,376; $1.20-$2.65)—"Cinerama" (Indie) (37th wk). Maintaining great stride at $18,000 after last week's $21,000 bulge from holiday session's two extra showings for juves.

Grand (RKO) (1,400; 75-90)—"Black Shield" (U) and "Tanganyika" (U). All right $8,000 or near. Last week, "Far Country" (U), $8,500.

Keith's (Shor) (1,500; 75-$1.25)—"Bridges at Toko-ri" (Par) (2d wk). Still plenty sock at $12,000 after $19,800 bow.

Palace (RKO) (2,600; 75-84)—"Jupiter's Darling" (M-G). Okay $9,500 in 8 days. Last week, "Black Knight" (Col), $8,500 in 6 days.

'Darling' Dandy $12,000, Denver; 'Country' Sock 14G, 'Battle' 15G, H.O.s

Denver, March 1.

Biz is good at all firstruns here currently with three pix holding over. "Women's Prison" is good at the Denver while "Jupiter's Darling" looms fairly nice at Orpheum. "Battle Cry" looms smash in third frame at the Centre, and stays a fourth. "Far Country" shapes great in second week at Paramount. "Jupiter" gets a second stanza.

Estimates for This Week

Centre (Fox) (1,247; 60-$1)—"Battle Cry" (WB) (3d wk). Big $15,000. Stays on. Last week, $20,000.

'BATTLE' BANGUP 20G, ST. LOO; 'HOLIDAY' 26G

St. Louis, March 1.

After a terrific opening stanza, "Battle Cry" is repeating in its initial holdover week at the huge Fox. It is holding so big that only the great upbeat by "Cinerama Holiday" is topping it for laurels currently. The second Cinerama production is climbing to a giant total at the Ambassador, and bids to repeat the biz of "This Is Cinerama" at this house. "Bad Day at Black Rock" looms good in second Loew's round. "The Racers" looms neat at the St. Louis.

Estimates for This Week

Ambassador (Indie) (1,400; $1.20-$2.40)—"Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) (2d wk). Swell $26,000 after $22,000 6-day opener.

Cold Bops Mpls. But 'Toko-ri' Great 20G; 'Country' 9G, 'Girl' Wow 8½G

Minneapolis, March 1.

Boxoffice here still has the brutal weather to contend with. But there still are pix powerful enough to overcome the handicap of low temperatures which have dropped as low as 52 degrees below zero in this area. Then there are near-blizzards, and streets and walks so ice-glazed that driving and walking are hazardous. Currently, newcomer "Bridges at Toko-ri" is huge at the State. "Far Country" is rated good at the Orpheum. It's the third socko round for "Battle Cry" at Radio City. Second week of "Country Girl" still is smash at the World after record opener.

Estimates for This Week

Century (S-W) (1,140; $1.75-$2.65)—"Cinerama" (Indie) (46th wk. Hefty $14,000. Last week, $15,500.

The customary post-holiday slump has caught up with Broadway film business in the current session, and only the most potent pictures are weathering the downbeat. Aside from the usual weekly change at the Palace, the lone newcomer is "Three For Show" at the Roxy. This musical is disappointing at $34,000, and stays only two weeks.

"Hell's Outpost" with vaude shapes fast $22,000 at the Palace. "Jupiter's Daughter" with stageshow is going only two weeks at the Music Hall, dipping to a routine $104,000 or near in final stanza ending today. "Hit the Deck" replaces tomorrow (Thurs.).

Among the recent newcomers, both "N. Y. Confidential" and "Battle Cry" continue big. Latter held with a lofty $53,000 for fourth week at the Paramount. "Confidential" still looms sturdy with $18,000 likely for initial holdover round ending tomorrow (Thurs.) at the Victoria.

"Long Gray Line" also is displaying stamina, with a big $40,000 likely for third stanza at the Capitol. "Holiday For Henrietta" pushed to nearly $8,000, great, for fifth week at the Fine Arts, and is staying on.

"Cinerama Holiday" climbed to a mighty $62,100 in second full session at the Warner. It was helped by two extra shows and the holiday as was "Gate of Hell," still smash $13,500 for 11th week at the Guild.

"Sign of Pagan" looks to wind its third stanza with a nice $12,000 at the State. "Timberjack" follows on Saturday (5). "Doctor in House" continues to show amazing strength with $15,000 in prospect for second round at the Trans-Lux 52d Street.

"Underwater!" held at trim $14,000 in third frame concluded yesterday (Tues.) at the Mayfair. "Country Girl" still is socko with $32,000 or better probable for 11th session finishing up today at the Criterion. "Leagues Under Sea" looks around $20,000 in current (10th) week at the Astor. It is being supplanted by "East of Eden" which opens with a special preem March 9.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (City Inv.) (1,300; 75-$1.75) —"Leagues Under Sea" (BV) (10th wk). Current round ending today (Wed.) looks like fine $20,000 after $31,500 last week. Stays another week, with "East of Eden" (WB) coming in with special preem, March 9.

Little Carnegie (L. Carnegie) (550; $1.25-$2.20)—"Aida" (IFE) (16th wk). Present stanza ending today (Wed.) likely will hit okay $4,800 after $5,500 for 15th week.

Baronet (Reade) (430; 90-$1.55) —"Game of Love" (Indie) (12th wk). The 11th week ended yesterday (Tues.) was nice $4,600 after $4,900 for 10th round. Stays on with "Trouble in Glen" (Rep) due in next but date not set.

Capitol (Loew's) (4,820; 85-$2.20) —"Long Gray Line" (Col) (3d wk). Looks to hold in very strong style at big $40,000 or near in current week ending today (Wed.). Second week soared above hopes to $62,000 with both Monday (21) and Washington's Birthday holiday soaring way over expectancy. Stays on, probably until April anyway.

Criterion (Moss) (1,700; 75-$2.20) —"Country Girl" (Par) (11th wk). Current round winding today (Wed.) looks lusty $32,500 after terrific $45,500, over hopes, for 10th week. Holding especially strong in view of having opened in several Long Island spots already. Stays for another month or thereabouts.

Fine Arts (Davis) (468; 90-$1.80) —"Holiday For Henrietta" (Ardee) (6th wk). The fifth stanza ended Sunday (27) pushed to a great $7,900 after $7,200 for fourth. Stays until near end of month.

Globe (Brandt) (1,500; 70-$1.50) —"Far Country" (U) (3d wk). Current week ending Friday (4) looks to hold at mild $7,000 after $11,800 in second.

Guild (Guild) (450; $1-$1.75) — "Gate of Hell" (Indie) (12th wk). The 11th session concluded Monday (28) was smash $13,500, after $13,800 in 10th week.

Mayfair (Brandt) (1,736; 79-$1.80) —"Underwater!" (RKO) (4th wk). Third frame ended yesterday (Tues.) held with nice $14,000 after $22,000 for second, less than expected.

Normandie (Trans-Lux) (592; $1.15-$1.65)—"Camille" (M-G) (5th wk). Fourth stanza ended Monday (28) was sockeroo $13,500 (took in Feb. 22 holiday) after $14,800 for third week. Stays indef.

Palace (RKO) (1,700; 50-$1.60)—"Hell's Outpost" (Rep) and vaudeville. Week ending tomorrow (Thurs.) is heading for fast $22,000. In ahead, "Cry Vengeance" (AA) and vaude, $27,500, over hopes.

Paramount (ABC-Par) (3,664; 85-$1.75)—"Battle Cry" (WB) (5th wk). Fourth session ended last night (Tues.) was big $53,000 after third week climbed to $66,000.

Paris (Pathe Cinema) (568; 90-$1.80) — "Wages of Fear" (Indie) (3d wk). First holdover round concluded last night (Tues.) was good $11,500 or near after $12,500 in first week.

Radio City Music Hall (Rockefellers) (6,200; 95-$2.75 — "Jupiter's Darling" (M-G) and stageshow (2d-final wk). Off to barely okay $104,000 this stanza ending today (Wed.). "Hit the Deck" (M-G) and new stageshow open tomorrow (Thurs.). Opening week of "Darling" was $152,000, a bit below hopes, and being aided, of course, by the holiday.

Rivoli (UAT) (2,092; 85-$2) — "Bad Day at Black Rock" (M-G) (5th wk). Fourth week ended Monday (28) was okay $13,000 after $15,000 for third session, way over expectancy.

Roxy (Nat'l. Th.) (5,717; 65-$2.40) —"Three For Show" (Col). Appears headed for slow $34,000 in first session winding today (Wed.), and holds only two weeks. In ahead, "White Feather" (20th), $30,000, and below hopes for single 8-day week. "Untamed" (20th) comes in next.

State (Loew's) (3,450; 78-$1.75) — "Sign of Pagan" (U) (3d-final wk). Third round finishing next Friday (4) is heading for okay $12,000 or close after $19,000 in second week. "Timberjack" (Rep) opens Saturday (5).

Sutton (R&B) (561; $1-$1.80) — "Romeo and Juliet" (UA) (11th wk). The 10th round ended yesterday (Tues.) was good $6,400 after $8,200 for ninth week.

Trans-Lux 52nd St. (T-L) (540; $1-$1.50) — "Doctor in House" (Rep) (2d wk). First holdover stanza ending today (Wed.) looks like great $15,000, one of biggest second weeks ever at house. First week was $17,300, for one of bigger opening weeks here.

Victoria (City Inv.) (1,060; 50-$1.75)—"N.Y. Confidential" (WB) (2d wk). First holdover round ending tomorrow (Thurs.) likely will hold with rousing $18,000. First week was $33,000, not quite up to hopes, but smash for this small-seater. Stays on.

Warner (Cinerama Prod.) (1,600; $1.20-$3.30)—"Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) (4th wk). Third week concluded Saturday (26) pushed to mighty $62,100 in 19 performances, very close to house record with this many shows. Previous session of 17 shows was $57,900, just missing the house high. Now selling tickets into June and July.

'A&C'-'Mountain' Lively 9G, L'ville; 'Racers' Fast 14G, 'Deck' Dandy 11G

Louisville, March 1.

Friday-Saturday (25-26) promotion of Shoppers' Bargain Days, plus springlike weather, is bringing plenty of shoppers into the downtown area. They had a spending spree at the stores, and first-runs came in for a generous share of biz. "Yellow Mountain" coupled with "A & C Keystone Kops" at the Kentucky is very lively, as is "Racers" at the Rialto. "Hit The Deck" looks good at the State.

Estimates for This Week

Kentucky (Switow) (1,000; 50-75) —"Yellow Mountain" (Par) and "Abbott & Costello Keystone Kops" (U). Looks strong $9,000 for kickoff stanza, and h.o. is likely. Last week, "Bridges at Toko-ri" (Par) (3d wk), $7,000.

Mary Anderson (People's) (1,000; 75-$1)—"Battle Cry" (WB) (3d wk). Oke $4,500. Last week, $7,000.

Rialto (Fourth Avenue) (3,000; 50-75)—"The Racers" (20th). Big weekend influx of shoppers helped here, current sesh to bumper $14,000 or near. Last week, "Underwater!" (RKO), $12,000.

State (United Artists) (3,000; 50-75)—"Hit The Deck" (M-G) and "White Orchid" (Col). Good $11,000. Last week, "Jupiter's Darling" (M-G) and "Pirates of Tripoli" (UA), $8,500.

'Wages of Fear' Editing Debated; 'Nothing Vital Deleted': McCarthy

Sharp newspaper criticism levelled against the cutting of the French picture "Wages of Fear" last week revived some old arguments among the indie distribs.

There was a considerable area of agreement that publicity given the trimming of the pic stood to hurt it at the b.o. "There's nothing worse than telling people that they aren't seeing the full, original version of anything," was one vet distributor's comment. (Pic started slow at the b.o. but is building steadily.)

At the same time, there's no question that most foreign imports undergo a certain amount of scissoring, either due to censor demands or to tighten them up, before they reach the U. S. theatres. In many cases, exhibs themseives have done the editing. However, that's rarely publicized.

Issue came up some time back when "Diary of a Country Priest" got a poor notice in the N. Y. Times. Producer wrote the paper that it was due to the arbitrary scissoring done on his work in N. Y.

Case of "Wages of Fear," which on the whole got very good notices, is different in that some unusual aspects are involved. Pic is handled in the U.S. by International Affiliates, headed up by John G. McCarthy. Latter is also the U.S. rep of George Lourau, the film's producer. It's been a top grosser in Europe and is current at the Paris Theatre, N.Y.

The N.Y. Times' Bosley Crowther, in his review, and again in his Sunday roundup, deplored the cutting of "Wages" which, he thought, had left "lapses of bewildering proportions in the dramatic continuity."

Extent to which "Wages" has been cut depends on which versions one compares. When shown at the Cannes fest, it ran 155 minutes. It was later cut to 130 mins. for France, the same edition running very successfully in Britain. In the U.S., it was trimmed another 24 mins., with Customs accounting for 10 mins. and McCarthy for the remaining 14 mins.

McCarthy and Lourau had some tough decisions to make before they let "Wages" open in N.Y. For one, it ran long. For another, the film directed by H. G. Clouzot, had been attacked as "anti-American" in press reports from the Cannes film festival of 1953 when it won the Grand Prize.

Obviously, every attempt was made to edit out any footage that might be construed as offending an American audience. Furthermore, explained McCarthy last last week, "we felt that the first part was too slow. We wanted to speed up the prelude to the action which occurs primarily in the second half of the picture. Gene Milford, an outstanding craftsman, did our editing. We feel we have not left out any important element to the story at all."

Countering press criticism, McCarthy said "Wages" had been trimmed only after the most careful consideration and with the full knowledge and consent of both Lourau and Clouzot. "It's strictly a case of the makers deciding what's best for the film in the U.S. market," he stated, expressing his surprise at critical comments from people who hadn't seen the original version.

While most of the indies take the view that what Lourau and McCarthy do with their pic is their own business, one or two of the distribs last week felt that the cutting procedure on "Wages of Fear" did harm to the French industry as a whole.

Uphold Lewd Film Rap

St. Louis, March 1.

The fine of $500 slapped on Meredith Weston, a native, for showing indecent and lewd films in connection with lewd dancing by femmes at a stag party in St. Louis County in Nov., 1952, was upheld last week by the St. Louis Court of Appeals to which Weston appealed.

Weston contended that the evidence introduced by the state in a trial at Hillsboro, Mo., was insufficient although he did not testify. Four witnesses testified that Weston was in c. during the party which was held in a hall above a tavern in Jefferson County.

PRESBYTERIAN CLERIC CONDEMNS CENSORSHIP

Ottawa, March 1.

A prominent clergyman, Rev. Colin F. Miller of Knox Presbyterian Church in the Canadian capital, condemned the trend towards censorship of literature and the arts in a talk to Knox Men's Club here (12). "Just as in the past," he said, "any form of censorship will be futile and vicious; and the so-called Puritan attitude toward art and literature will instill a suspicious outlook toward all the arts." He stressed that this was his personal opinion.

Censorship in Russia, said Miller, has produced "well-known adverse effects" and this could easily be repeated in other countries. He added that parents, relatives and others in charge of youngsters should teach them the advantages to be gained from the theatre and other arts, "especially literature."

Canadian Repertory Theatre here, using a Roman Catholic church hall as its theatre, has had well over a dozen plays, including Noel Coward's "Private Lives" and Somerset Maugham's "The Circle," banned by church authorities, who o.o. every script before production, and others, like Jan de Hartog's "Fourposter," have had to be cut to get by.

Town in Binford's County Revolts Against Censor Re Col's 'Bamboo Prison'

Covington, Tenn., March 1.

This little hamlet, 40 miles from Memphis, has finally revolted against censor Lloyd Binford.

After viewing Columbia's "Bamboo Prison," which Binford nixed for Memphis, Covington's Mayor declared that the film could play there "regardless of what Memphis is doing." He added that he and the town brass could see no reason for banning "Prison."

Both Memphis and Covington fall into Binford's domain—Shelby County. In the past, Covington has usually bowed to the dictum of Binford's banning brigade.

While there have been protests in Memphis, too, over the "Bamboo Prison" banning, the Civil Liberties Union has offered aid to Col should the film company decide to take the case to court.

SCHINES ALL-OUT FOR 'MA AND PA KETTLE'

Schine chain in five eastern states will run a circuit-wide prerelease of a "Ma and Pa Kettle" film for the fourth consecutive year.

Pic is "Ma and Pa Kettle At Waikiki," a Universal release which opens at the Schine houses March 6. As on the three past occasions, U is backing the film with a potent promotional campaign. Latter includes some new wrinkles, such as the availability of wood rose corsages flown in from Hawaii for local merchants to award as prizes to their customers in connection with local promotions.

Marjorie Main and Percy Kilbride, stars of U's highly profitable "Ma and Pa Kettle" series, will be seen in a special trailer, thanking Schine patrons for their previous support.

Kreisler's Latin Swing

B. B. Kreisler, head of International Film Associates left N. Y. Friday (25) on a four-week swing of all South American capitals to set distribution outlets for a couple of IFA releases.

Films are the Italian "High Time" and the French "Paris Affair." IFA owns the rights for all of S.A. Kreisler also intends to work out distribution deals for "Garden of Eden," an American entry, in Argentina and Brazil.

Tony Martin's Own Private Preview of 'Hit the Deck'

Miami Beach, March 1.

Although the film hasn't been booked in this area as yet, Florida State Theatres made the Beach theatre here available for an early Sunday ayem invitational preview of "Hit the Deck" with Tony Martin featured on the musical, hosting a turnout of show biz people and visiting toppers.

Mack Miller, Martin's press agent, set up the promotion over the weekend, with a print of the film flown in from New York for the occasion. With radio interviewer-disk-jockey Bea Kalmus at the lobby microphone and local tv cameraman on hand, following plenty of space in the area's newspapers the late (2:30 a.m.) affair took on the aura of a fulibiown premiere.

Traub, Maryland Censor, Loses Post; Puts Blame On Overseas Producers

Baltimore, March 1.

Sydney R. Traub, chairman of Maryland's Board of Motion Picture Censors, was ousted from his post last week by newly reelected Governor Theodore Roosevelt McKeldin. His successor will be C. Morton Goldstein, a Baltimore attorney.

During the six years Traub has been censorship chairman, the board's decisions have involved disputes between the board and film distributors. Consistently, the courts have sided with distribs and have forced Traub and his board to license disputed films. Recently, Traub fought to maintain newsreel censorship in the state but was outvoted by the Maryland House of Delegates who voted to exempt newsreels from the board's jurisdiction.

At a Womens' Bar Assn. banquet over the weekend, Traub discussed his ouster quite outspokenly. He stated that he had "incurred the displeasure of certain fly-by-night motion picture operators." He further told the lady barristers that "foreign films are our greatest source of worry" and that "some companies have made a laughing stock of the Production Code to which they were signatories, notably RKO." He pointed out that Maryland licenses were cheaper than elsewhere in the country and stressed the revenue value inherent in censorship legislation.

In Goldstein's acceptance of the post, he pledged to "do his best to carry out film censorship laws intelligently."

British 'X' Rating (Adults Only) Enemy of Boxoffice Blockbusters; Hope for New Censor System

London, March 1.

The British Film Producers Assn. is sounding its membership prior to making representations to the British Board of Censors in an effort to modify present practice. As matters stand the threat that given subject-matter would draw an "X" (adults only) certificate acts to stop dead the production of such a story. Financing becomes difficult or impossible on the reasoning that the feature classified "X" automaticaiiy loses its family audience.

British exhibitors point out that such American boxoffice blockbusters as "On the Waterfront" and "From Here to Eternity" would never be made if the "X" system operated in Hollywood.

Producers here would welcome a revised system under which the adults only classification would be a positive stimulant to mature subjects. Alternately they'd like to see the establishment of an appeals court where censor decisions could be challenged and litigated.

LEGION DEBATES TAG FOR 2D CINERAMA

National Legion of Decency is holding up on its classification of "Cinerama Holiday." But there's nothing serious involved. Legion has under consideration either a Class A-1 or Class A-2 rating. First is a complete okay and the other is "morally unobjectionable for adults."

Of the films classified this past week, one is particularly offensive, according to Legion standards. This is "Mademoiselle Gobette," French import distributed by Italian Films Export, which received a "C" (condemned) label.

Iowa Amendment Puts Films Under Obscenity Statute, Opens Issue

Des Moines, March 1.

Motion pictures specifically would be brought under Iowa law regarding obscenity and indecency under a bill introduced in the Iowa house by its 26-member committee on safety and law enforcement. The committee proposed the amendment to strengthen the law against the showing of immoral pictures. Some courts have held that moving pictures are not included in the law that defines immoral plays, exhibitions and entertainments. Iowa law makes it a misdemeanor to show "any obscene, indecent, immoral or impure drama, play, exhibition, show or entertainment which would tend to corruption of the morals of youth or others . . .

The proposed amendment specifically would insert the words "moving picture" after the present word "show." Penalty for an immoral or indecent show is a fine of not more than $1,000 or not more than a year in the county jail, or both fine and jail sentence.

Bank Hands Out Pleas For Censorship But Stops When Exhibs Complain

Columbus, March 1.

Word reached the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio office here that petitions asking for film censorship were being handed to depositors of the Women's Federal Savings & Loan Assn. in Cleveland. Robert A. Wile, ITO executive secretary, put in a call to the firm and they stopped the practice.

He apparently also made a convert, because the attorney for the loan association asked for details on the evils of censorship as he had changed his mind on the subject.

SELZNICK REISSUES PRIMED FOR MARKET

Selznick Releasing Organization, which launched a re-release program with "Duel in the Sun," is readying three other David O. Selznick pictures for reissue playing. Working through states righters, as it did with "Duel," the Selznick org is sending out again "Tom Sawyer," "Spiral Staircase" and "Spellbound."

"Sawyer," first released in 1938, will hit the market about June 15. Figuring that there's a whole new generation around that has never seen the picture, the company will give the filmization of the Mark Twain classic a new picture sendoff. The advertising-exploitation setup, complete with tieups with toy manufacturers, is geared for new picture handling.

"Spiral Staircase" and "Spellbound" are being prepared as a package deal for dual situations. In single feature spots, the pictures will be offered separately. Pair will be reissued following the "Sawyer" release.

Meanwhile, "Duel" will be hitting its stride in the drive-in market. When the cold weather set in, the picture was withdrawn temporarily, but will be pitched again as soon as the ozoners open for spring business. "Duel" is expected to hit $2,500,000 in its re-release engagement. It has already garnered hefty returns from conventional theatres.

Another package planned by the Selznick outfit is "Notorious" paired with "The Farmer's Daughter." Subsequentiy, the company plans to go through the entire Selznick vault, with "I'll Be Seeing You" and "Since You Went Away" expected to follow. On the future re-release slate are such films as "Intermezzo," "Rebecca," "The Paradine Case," "Tidal Wave," and "The Third Man."

"Spiral Staircase" and "Farmer's Daughter" were originally RKO pictures produced by Dore Schary. Selznick acquired this pix a year ago, resulting from a prior deal involving the loan outs of Joseph Cotten and Dorothy McGuire. In turn, RKO received the rights to Selznick's "Mr. Blandings Builds His Dreamhouse."

Ohio Censor Explains Workings

Blames 'Foreigners' Taste in Stories—Morality and Delinquency Hazards Cited as Justification

Columbus, March 1.

A curtain was partially raised on the workings of the film censors' minds in Ohio when a report covering 12 years of film scissoring was released last week by R. M. Eyman, state director of education and chief censor. Eyman used the report to back up a contention that censorship isn't the "big bad wolf" some people think it is.

From Jan. 1, 1943, to Jan. 1, 1955, the report showed the state division of film censorship had rejected 68 films. In that time, Eyman said, the division reviewed 20,517 films, of which 1,616 were approved after eliminations had been made.

Of course, no film reviewing has taken place in the state since Dec. 1, 1954, when courts knocked out the Ohio law by calling it unconstitutional. New attempts are being made in the current Legislature to rewrite the film censorship law.

The report gave an explanation for each of the 68 films that were rejected. He said most of the films were banned because they tended to incite crime or contained scenes of obscenity.

Eyman cited the steady increase in foreign films as presenting additional censorship problems. In the last fiscal year, 36% of films received came from foreign countries.

The report showed that films concerning the use of marijuana and habit-forming drugs had been banned because of the alarming increase in juvenile delinquency. Eyman said some cases of delinquency were directly attributable to ideas received from motion pictures.

Some films rejected by the division and later approved after court reversals include:

"Devil in the Flesh" (English version), "Kiss Tomorrow Goodbye," "Mom and Dad," "My Life" (formerly "Ecstasy"), "The Moon Is Blue," "The Outlaw," "We Want a Child," "The Miracle" and "M."

"M" was rejected four times because it presented the actions and emotions of a child killer, emphasizing complete perversion without serving a valid educational purpose.

"Devil in the Flesh" was rejected in 1952 because it portrayed a French concept of extramarital living which did not conform to the accepted moral standards of American life. "Its exhibition would present to youth a distorted and wholly unacceptable notion of the sacredness of marital vows and family life," the division reported.

"Kiss Tomorrow Goodbye" was banned for nearly four years because "It creates disrespect and lack of confidence in law enforcement agents." The division said the film was a sadistic presentation of brutality with little consideration of human values.

"The Moon Is Blue" was barred in 1953 because "It is harmful for general exhibition, not so much because of the scenes of the picture, but particularly because of the dialogue which reflects on accepted standards of morality and decency in living."

$81,000,000 Gross for Brit. Cinemas In 3d Quarter; Net, Attendance Soar

London, March 1.

A substantial jump in the total number of paid admissions during the third quarter last year, with a corresponding rise in gross boxoffice receipts, is reported in a new government survey, the results of which were published in the Board of Trade journal last Saturday (26).

Attendance totaled 337,000,000 and takings soared to over $81,000,000. The attendance was 3.2% above the corresponding quarter of 1953 and was the highest recorded since the first quarter of 1952. Last summer's bad weather, notes the Board of Trade, thus had its compensations for the film industry, particularly when coupled with the full effect of the reduced admission tax. The net and the exhibitor's share of receipts were all higher than any previously recorded since the statistical survey began in 1950.

The gross represented a rise of 5% over the corresponding quarter of 1953 and 5.4% ahead of the second quarter last year. The increase was due largely to the higher volume of admissions, but partly also to a few increases in seat prices in certain houses.

Of the $81,000,000 paid at the boxoffice, the admission tax sliced off 31.1%, compared with 34% before the reduced rates. Net receipts were better than $53,000,000, representing a rise of 9.5% over the previous quarter; payment for film hire rose 8.6%; and the exhibitors' share amounted to over $35,000,00 or more than 10% ahead of the previous quarter.

The survey, covering the period from June 27 to Sept. 25, embraced 4,513 picture theatres with a total capacity of 4,150,440. The detailed breakdown showed the smallest type theatre, hitherto showing the greatest proportional decline in attendance, increased their admittances by 11.1%.

New Irish Censor Unit, System of Rating Films Seen Threat to 2d-Runs

Dublin, Feb. 22.

With the Irish Dept. of Justice censorship through film censor Martin Brennan already one of the toughest in Europe, and drawing frequent squawks from distributors and exhibitors here, a new blue pencil outfit has made its appearance. The National Film Institute has introduced a rating system which it is broadsiding to exhibs and others. Original project was based on the Legion of Decency system but ratings so far issued provide only two categories —"Suitable for All Groups" and "Suitable for Adults."

Official censorship provides only one rating. Distribs fear that new Film Institute ratings, while not backed by government, will affect business in provincial centres. It will not harm Dublin firstruns since lists will only be issued monthly after the Institute reviewers have seen the pictures here.

Squawk coincides with issuance by the Justice Dept. Censor's report for 1954 which shows that he rejected 33 films and cut 211 others out of 1,525 submitted. Of the feature films submitted 320 were of U. S. origin and 137 British. The Appeals Board passed (with cuts) six films which the censor had nixed. Among the latest to be nixed by Brennan is "Phffft" (Col).

Wembley Stadium Boss Brit. Showman of Year

London, March 1.

At its luncheon next Tuesday (8), the London Variety Club is to fete top show biz personalities. Sir Arthur Elvin, operator of the Wembly Stadium, has been named showman of the year, while Jack Hawkins is accoladed as the star of 1954. Diane Cilento gets the nod as the most promising actress of last year and Donald Sinden as the actor who made most progress.

Last year the London tent picked Jack Hylton as top showman. In 1952, the acting honor went to Jean Carson who has since achieved fame on Ed Sullivan's "Toast of Town" tv program in the U. S.

Variety Benefit For 'Star' London Preem

London, March 1.

Using all the technique of a big scale Hollywood premiere, the London bow of "A Star Is Born" at the Warner next Thursday (3) will be staged with full coverage by BBC-TV, radio and newsreels. Only Scotland Yard has intervened to prevent a full-scale replica by prohibiting a proposed broadcast of arrival of celebrities.

Preem is being staged by the Variety Club of Great Britain as benefit for the Actors' Orphanage. About 60 topflight British artists already have agreed to attend. They will be received by Sir Laurence Olivier, Arthur S. Abeles, Jr., WB chief topper in London, and James Carreras, Chief Barker of the local tent.

Henry Caldwell, producer of the BBC-TV "Limelight" program, will attend with five of Britain's most promising actresses. In addition, broadcast interviews with celebrities will be featured on BBC's Light Program and a 15-minute feature of the preem.

Mex Film Gross Tops 1953 Mark

The eight-cent peso added up to the biggest total gross of all time for the 125 cinemas operating here last year. They took in 131,363,624 pesos at rates of one to the ceilinged admission price of four pesos. That boiled down to $10,561,783, which was much below the $14,040,675 gross total for 1952. Nevertheless, the 1954 take was $600,000 more than that of 1953.

Pesos must be cited along with dollars. The peso was devaluated to eight cents last April from 11.6c that had obtained since 1948. The ceilinged admission prices began in December, 1952. Up to then, the top admission price was five pesos (58c). The ceiling was forced down to four pesos (46c). But in these eight-cent peso times, the ceiling is 32c.

All in all, 1954 was a fairly good year for the cinema here, the city amusements supervision department stressed, because the overall percentage increase last year was 7% over the previous 12-month period.

The department still stands pat against any upswing in admission prices. And many exhibitors continue their fight of more than two years for at least restoration of the rates that obtained up to 1952. Though admission then was 20%-35% more than today.

W. GERMANY SETS UP 2 NEW CENSOR BOARDS

Frankfurt, Feb. 22.

The Bonn government has set up two new film censorship boards, probably because of the increased pressure put upon them via the inadequacy and often unfair judgments of the former Board. Approval by the censorship board of a picture as valuable for the German public means the film is eligible for a 3% reduction of amusement tax in the nine German states. The press has been harsh in criticizing the former board for its seemingly erratic judgments, in rejecting "On the Waterfront" (Col), which finally came through with an okay on second showing, and in turning down "Romeo and Juliet" (Rank). The board on the other hand gave the "valuable" tag to several recent German detective stories and light love yarns.

Of the two new boards established at Bonn, the first is a 10-member permanent one of judges. The second is an appeal board. A film which has been judged unworthy by the first group can reapply and try for a change with the second board. Only complaint so far lodged against the two groups is that they are composed of politicians and business men, rather than experts with motion picture backgrounds.

Eckstine Opens Return British Tour in April

Glasgow, Feb. 22.

Billy Eckstine is now pacted to top vaude at the Empire Theatre here April 25. He was a success on his bow at same vaudery last summer.

He tees off at the De Montfort Hall, Leicester, Eng., and will open at Finsbury Park Empire, London, April 18. Following his Glasgow week, the singer is set to play vaude weeks at Newcastle, Liverpool, Birmingham, Coventry, Manchester, Bristol and Chiswick. Tour, negotiated by Fosters Agency, will take him right through until mid-June.

Pix Biz, Legiters Ask Tax Relief Of British Govt.

London, Feb. 22.

The show biz campaign for admission tax relief moved a further stage forward when separate deputations from motion pictures and legit submitted their respective claims to the Treasury. The film industry is seeking a concession worth $17,000,000 a year while the legit theatre is urging total tax exemption at an annual cost of $7,000,000 a year.

The film biz claim was put to Reginald Maudling, Economic Secretary to the Treasury, last Wednesday (16), by a deputation representative of the four trade associations. Their claim is based on a document prepared by the exhibitors, which provides for 84% of the relief to be directed towards lower priced seats.

The case for the legiters was argued yesterday (Mon.) before Henry Brooke, M.D., financial secretary to the Treasury, by a delegation representing both management and unions.

A memorandum submitted by that deputation showed that, of 45 provincial and suburban theatres for 1953, 29 operated at a loss and only 16 made a profit.

Despite a gross of about $156,000 for the nine months' London run of "The Manor of Northstead," producer Peter Saunders wound up with a loss of around $3,000. He blamed this entirely on the incidence of admission tax, which collected $23,662 from his b.o. take. With an initial investment of over $10,000, Saunders claimed he needed 60% capacity at every performance to make the weekly operating nut of $3,300.

In a public beef last week, the producer claimed that for him to have made a profit of $22,000 he would have paid over $28,000 in admission tax and then the Chancellor would have stepped in and taken $14,000 of his cut by way of income tax. He claims the theatrical industry has a genuine grievance in that it is taxed on losses as well as on profits.

Arguing that admission levy on the live theatre is both illogical and unjust, the London manager points out that while it only yields $7,000,000 a year, it is causing theatres all over the country to close down. And if they are all shuttered, the Chancellor would get no tax anyway.

The tax, Saunders recalls, was introduced as an emergency measure during World War I. "It has served its purpose and should be abolished at the next budget," he asserts.

U.S. Permits Marines To Play in German Pic

Frankfurt, Feb. 22.

Because of a recent edict by Col. Myles Brewster of Wiesbaden, Germany, forbidding GI's under his command to appear in German films without specific approval of the U. S. Government, the German firm of Maskott Films has obtained the consent of the U. S. War Department for a U. S. Marine unit to appear in the new film, "Befehl Zur Feindschaft" (Command to the Enemy).

Pic is unusual in that it is a coproduction between Germany and Portugal, with the company of Tobis-Portugaise of Lisbon working for the first time with Maskott Films in Munich. Picture will be shot there.

Arg. Producers Rush Pix to 1st-Runs Despite Heat; Prep Them for Nabes

Buenos Aires, Feb. 22.

Outwardly undaunted by the manifest failure of their two entries at the Punta del Este Film Festival, Argentine film producers rushed out a batch of releases to three major showcases here last week, including "Mercade de Abasto" (AAA), a festival entry; Sono Film's "The Corzican Brothers" and AAA's "Pajaros de Cristal." Since this time of year is a dull one because of summer weather, their strategy apparently is to grab the cream of the neighborhood trade when vacationers return eager for screen entertainment in March.

At Punta del Este, "Mercado de Abasto" and "Lo que le Paso a Reynoso" (Torres-Rios) aroused vocal audience reaction over such mediocre presentations in an international contest.

Renewed effort is being made to get producers to confine their efforts to stories indigenous to the country, and to restrict the number of pix and make quality productions. In 1954, local studios churned up 43 features and three co-productions, compared to 39 in 1953. Twenty-seven of last year's crop are still awaiting release. However, would-be producers keep starting up, and even more productions loom for 1955.

Much still hinges on finance, and since the Industrial Credit Bank has restricted loans, many producers may not last long. Guaranteed Pictures is an exception. Dave Cabouli of this distributor-production combo has arranged to lease EFA studios' buildings for three years for his own film company. He would make eight to 10 pix a year, mostly scripted by Abel Santa Cruz or adapted from successful legit plays tried out by this prolific writer. The first is, "Mama's Husbands," with Spain's Ana Mariscal teamed with Juan Carlos Thorry. Guaranteed's first pic with the Spanish screen-actress, "En Carne Viva" (In the Flesh), is due for release shortly.

Artistas Argentinos Asociados had to abandon plans to make a historical opus, "Camila O'Gorman." This was to be based on the romance of a heroine in Argentine history who eloped with a priest in the 19th Century. The plan had to be shelved due to the government's quarrel with the Roman Catholic church which made the priestly romance inopportune. In its place Luis Cesar Amadori is to make "Love Never Dies."

New Setup for Naming Royal Command Film

London, March 1.

A new formula for picking the Royal Command film each year has been agreed within the industry and will be put in to operation for this year's gala in November. This is a sequel to the rumpus over last year's selection of "Beau Brummell" (M-G) which was roundly panned and was generally regarded as an unsuitable subject for the occasion.

The Cinematograph Trade Benevolent Fund, which coins about $80,000 from this annual event, has now set up a new selection panel which will comprise the presidents of the four trade associations with an independent chairman. Latter post has been accepted by Lord Radcliffe, a wartime Director-General of the Ministry of Information. The president and one member of the critics' circle are also being invited to serve.

Films Still Top B.O. Draw in Arg.

Buenos Aires, Feb. 22.

Residents of Buenos Aires spend around $100,000 daily on entertainment, and their favorite form of amusement is still the motion picture.

This is revealed in 1954 statistics just released, showing that in the first 11 months of 1954 a total of $35,000,000 was spent on entertainment comprising screen, legit, horseracing, soccer football and boxing. Attendance at film theatres increased from 61,380,200 in 1953 to over 63,000,000 in 1954 while legit theatre attendance rose from 4,189,500 in 1953 to 4,700,000 last year.

The figures on attendance at the racetracks are not revealed for 1954, possibly because there has been a slump since the government expropriated their operation from the Jockey Club.

Attendance at football (soccer) matches was down from 2,196,300 in 1953 to under 2,100,000 last year. Televising of the matches may have something to do with this drop although experts can't believe that the 30,000 to 40,000 tv sets in use can account for this difference. On the other hand, boxing increased from 555,200 patrons in 1953 to 650,000 in 1954.

Some idea of spending in eateries, niteries, etc., may be gleaned from the fact that the Assn. of Hotels, Restaurant, Cafes & Confectioners has 1,100 associates in the various grades, representing a capital of around $100,000,000.

J. ARTHUR RANK BUYS NORTH IRISH CHAIN

Belfast, Feb. 22.

J. Arthur Rank Organization, which already controls a circuit in the Irish Republic through Odeon (Ireland) Ltd., has purchased 10 cinemas controlled by Irish Theatres Ltd. in northern Ireland. Purchase price was not revealed. Five are in Belfast and the others in country towns. The takeover also includes a Belfast neighborhood house under construction and another provincial house planned for Larne.

A new company, Odeon (Northern Ireland) Ltd. has been formed to operate the circuit with George Lodge, managing director of the Royal Cinema, Royal Hippodrome and Grand Opera House here, as prexy.

London Legit Bits

London, March 1.

Foster has also closed deal with James P. Sherwood to star Jack Hulbert and Cicely Courtneidge (Mrs. Hulbert) in straight play by film scripter Bill Lipscomb, titled "Wildest One's Dream."

Leftist Pix Groups Cry About Film Biz Crisis, Old Bromide for Paris

Paris, Feb. 22.

The Leftist film syndicate here, the Federation Du Spectacle, called a press conference this week to sound the old bromide about a film crisis gripping the Gallic industry. This is the first raising of a threatening note in this area for some years now. The FDS placed the most emphasis on actual production figures, and recommended a serles of reforms to alleviate present conditions.

The main point was that only about 53 entirely French films were made this year as opposed to the needed 100. Of course, coproduction accounted for the other pix. But some feel that this does not replace a solid-cored completely French film. The FDC proposed four points to help stabilize Gallic pic production.

Setting up a special series of tax rebates applying to the complete process of film production, plus special dispensations for houses showing completely French shows, was one proposal. The second called for modifying the Film Aid Law with greater help to production. (Leftists claim that exploitation is getting too much of the nut.)

Third point made was the complete overhauling of technical aspects of the industry, with labs and studios getting a facelifting and modernization. Color widescreen and modern production equipment would be the main aspects of this program. Fourth point stressed was the elimination of any censorship except that imposed by the laws of society. It also was suggested that improvement in distribution and exportation of pix, with a call for reciprocity on the foreign markets should be asked.

Hamid Buys Out SW Atlantic City; Plans More Boardwalk Vaude; Wants Legit Break-ins as of Yore

Atlantic City, March 1

Stanley Warner as motion picture theatreowners and operators made their exit from the resort as of Saturday (26) when the George A. Hamid & Son interests acquired control of their four houses and adjacent properties in a deal involving nearly $4,000,000. It was one of the largest for amusement property ever negotiated here.

Through the deal Hamid, operator of the resort's Steel Pier, gets the 4,200 seat Boardwalk Warner, one of the biggest motion picture houses, the Stanley and Virginia Theatres, all on the Boardwalk, plus the Colonial, one of the top motion picture places on Atlantic Ave., resort main stem. In the deal are six Boardwalk stores in the area known as the Stanley block, and five properties adjoining the Colonial.

Purchased outright were the Warner and Colonial Theatres and the Atlantic Ave. stores. Exchanged were the lease-hold control rights of the Stanley Theatre and the Boardwalk stores, which are owned by the estate of George and James Bew, and the Virginia Theatre, owned by the Friedberg Bros. interests.

Seating capacities of the four theatres total 8,361, which represents 40% of the motion picture capacity in Atlantic City. Hamid also controls the Hollywood, the Shore and the Astor, all located on Atlantic ave.

Hamid declared that no definite plans have as yet been made, but that the matter of utilizing the Warner for other than motion pictures had been a subject for discussions. During season name acts, which could not stand the five to seven a day gaff necessary for the Steel Pier's vaudeville house, would be booked. He mentioned Liberace as an attraction which could not be successfully booked into the Pier, but would be a fine one for the big Warner, where he would be called on for one of two shows daily.

Hamid also said that another determined effort would be made to bring back to Atlantic City the New York show openings which would keep the house open all through the year. He said that he and his associates have and are probing other possibilities of the big walk theatre, which, he believes, will be a better managed house locally than heretofore when it was run from the Philadelphia Warner office.

As to the other houses, George A. Hamid Jr. said that the acquisition of these will afford a greater flexibility and mobility to the local entertainment field, and will facilitate the operation of all the enterprises to the maximum of their potential.

No change in the set-up of the theatres as they are now operated is contemplated by the new management. All are now open on a seven-day schedule, operating on a continuous show schedule.

Seating capacities of the four theatres are: Warner, 4,200; Stanley, 1,826; Virginia, 957, and Colonial, 1,391.

George Hamid Sr. came here in the mid '30's when he acquired control of the old Million Dollar Pier. He moved uptown to the Steel Pier some years later.

UN Showing One-Reelers; 3,000-4,000 Take Guided Tour Daily at $1 Per Head

United Nations, March 1.

Film Distribution Unit of the United Nations is now showing two onereelers of its work every hour on the half-hour. This policy was worked out by Tom Baird to correct an omission—films about the UN which were exhibited world round, in some 26 language soundtracks, had no exposure in the headquarter building of the organization.

About 3,000-4,000 persons take the guided tour at $1 per head each day—providing the United Nations with around $1,500,000 of annual revenue. Onereelers will be free to any one, but included in the guided tour, too.

RKO Managerial Shifts Follow Howard Visit

Cincinnati, March 1.

Managerial changes at RKO Theatres followed a divisional conference here last week at which William Howard, vice president and general manager of the parent organization, presided. Cities represented besides Cincy were Cleveland, Columbus and Dayton and Grand Rapids, Mich.

Transfers were: Ed McGlone, manager of Palace, Cincinnati, for the past four years, to Columbus as successor to C. Harry Schreiber, city manager there for 18 years, who resigned to enter private business; and these in Cincy—Elwood Jones from manager of the Grand to replace McGlone at the Palace, and Robert Rehme, from assistant manager, Palace, to succeed Jones as manager at the Grand.

Howard was accompanied here from N.Y.C. by Tom Crehan, his assistant, and Harry Mandel, national advertising and publicity director.

Repeal Unlikely, Tax Pessimism Out of Albany

Albany, March 1.

The Bird Commission—officially known as the Temporary State Commission on Fiscal Affairs of State Government—in its final report to the Governor and the Legislature last week, took a stand for retention of the permissive taxes, including the five percent admission levy, which the Legislature first authorized for larger cities and all counties in 1947. Later the privilege was extended to every city.

"The Commission has not undertaken a qualitative appraisal of all these taxes," read one paragraph in the multi-paged, two-volume report, "but believes that as a group they serve a useful purpose and should be retained. They add flexibility and some choice of alternatives between the local revenue systems. Even in communities where little use has been made of them, there is considerable opinion that their continued availability is valuable."

The Commission, in its detailed analysis of the fiscal problems facing New York City, pointed out that "A recently adopted admission tax of 5% is estimated by city officials to yield $16,700,000 in 1954-55."

The report recommended, among other things, that New York's power to levy a sales tax-of 3%—be made permanent.

'Game of Love' Causes Jitters Among Censors

Various kinds of censors last week continued to flirt with the French film, "The Game of Love."

In Pennsylvania, the censor board backed down from its prior position and allowed the William Shelton-Times Films release to pass with a few minor deletions, thus forestalling legal action.

In Cleveland, Shelton yanked the pic from a booking at the Lower Mall, Cleveland artie, when the local papers refused to carry ads mentioning the pic. Ohio at the moment has no state censor.

While the Pennsylvania censor's action eliminates what might have shaped up into another test of the legality of state censorship, banning of the pic in Maryland already has seen Times Films challenging the Maryland board and the legality of its operations.

"Game," winner of the 1954 Grand Prix du Cinema Francais, passed the N.Y. censor virtually without a change. However, it has drawn a "C" (Condemned) rating from the Catholic Legion of Decency.

LeBret on Coast Setting Yank Stars for Cannes

Favre LeBret, chairman of the Cannes Film Festival, left for Hollywood Monday (28) for 10 days and upon his return huddles with the MPAA's Eric Johnston in Washington. Ralph D. Hetzel in New York and the Motion Picture Assn. of America echelon on the Coast are helping the alignment of Hollywood personalities.

This year's festival runs a bit later, from April 20-May 10, and has some 3,000 exhibitors, producers and distributors from 34 countries represented. A committee of 11, six from abroad, will assist the five French members (playwright Marcel Pagnol, chairman; Georges Auric, Marcel Achard, Rene Clouzet and one French film critic and one film producer) in the selections. Anatole Litvak is the American member of the board of judges, and others are British, Italian, Spanish, Russian and Japanese.

Ozoners Chirping With the Robins

Booking activity for the upcoming drive-in season, still over a month away, has started with the ozoners confident they're going to ride the crest of the b.o. wave this summer.

Drive-in ops say they're having no trouble latching on to product. That's particularly true in situations that don't demand firstrun films. They've got a hefty accumulation of winter releases to play off.

There are now around 4,100 or more drive-ins operating throughout the country, with new ones still going up. Number of ozoners bidding for first-run product has been rising steadily and, if the situation continues status quo re production availability, the summer months are expected to bring some lively competition for the top pix.

Number of outdoorers that have installed CinemaScope has risen sharply over the winter months until there are now some 1,650 equipped. At 20th-Fox, which dropped some drive-in coin last year partly due its original insistence on stereophonic sound, sales execs are confident that the company's share of ozoners revenue will hit record levels this year. Rental top in the past has been around $8,000,000. It's expected to come closer to $12,000,000 in 1955.

One one the reasons for the upbeat mood of the ozoners is their feeling that, as each year passes, the drive-ins are becoming increasingly accepted as a family type of entertainment, allowing parents and their brood to escape the hot living room for a unique "evening out." Distribs estimate that they're now getting between 15% and 20% of their overall revenue from the open-airers.

U. S. SENATE APPLAUDS ONLOOKING SUZAN BALL

Washington, March 1.

Tribute was paid to actress Suzan Ball by the U.S. Senate last week, as she sat in the visitors' gallery of the Senate chamber, watching a session with her husband, Richard Long, during their honeymoon. Senator Herbert Lehman (D., N.Y.) called attention to the fact that Miss Ball was present and was a native of Buffalo.

"In her years," Lehman told his colleagues, "she has experienced triumph, despair and faith; she should stand as an example of high courage and constancy of purpose to people young and old, throughout the length of this land. She is of the stamina that has made this country great."

Tracing her professional career, Senator Lehman then swung into her grave illness: "Then without warning, the world seemed to fall apart about her. She was stricken with the crippling affliction that threatened . . . to strike down her very life. But a great heart in a great woman . . . persevered through pain and suffering that would have ended the hopes of a less stalwart person."

At the end Miss Ball got a big ovation from the Senators while she stood up in the gallery.

Growth of Drive-Ins Charted

Here's a nine-year record of the number of theatres in active operation in the U.S., including those which close seasonally, as provided by Sindlinger & Co., market research outfit, which did the census-taking for the Council of Motion Picture Organizations:

End of Year	4-Wall Theatres	Drive-In Theatres	Total
1946	18,719	300	19,019
1947	18,059	548	18,607
1948	17,575	820	18,395
1949	17,367	1,203	18,570
1950	16,904	2,202	19,106
1951	16,150	2,830	18,980
1952	15,347	3,276	18,623
1953	14,174	3,791	17,965
1954	15,039	4,062	19,101

Chaplin Out of UA After 35 Years; Now Execs Own 67%, Pickford 33%

Charles Chaplin has unloaded his 4,000-share stock interest in United Artists, presumed to be his last equity in a U. S. enterprise. The quodam baggy-pants comedian, a partner in UA since it was founded 35 years ago, is now out of the UA picture entirely.

Ownership of the film distributing and financing company had been divided on the basis of 25% held by Chaplin, 25% by Mary Pickford and the balance of 50% by the UA management group headed by president Arthur B. Krim and board chairman Robert S. Benjamin.

Since it was the company that bought out Chaplin, as distinguished from Miss Pickford or management, the ownership is now Miss Pickford, 33⅓% and management 66⅔%. Stock partners along with Krim and Benjamin are Matty Fox, Arnold Picker and Max Youngstein. They share 8,000 shares of the outstanding stock, and Miss Pickford holds the now remaining 4,000 shares.

Chaplin, who now resides in Switzerland, recently placed his UA stock in the name of his wife, Oona O'Neil. He was repped in the UA deal by N. Y. attorney Charles Schwartz.

Burglary Charge Earns Theatreman $500 Fine

Rutland, Vt., March 1.

Edward Dowling, 25, former manager of the Paramount Theatre here, has been fined $500 after pleading guilty in Municipal Court to a daytime break into the Wilson Sports Equipment Store last June 8. He was also given a two to three-year suspended term and was ordered to make restitution.

Police said they recovered about $650 worth of cameras and photographic equipment when they apprehended Dowling and two juveniles.

The court, which was informed that Dowling would continue employment with New England Theatres, Inc., in Massachusetts, ordered the defendant to consult a psychiatrist.

Theatre Census, Per Sindlinger, Totals 19,101

The number of active film theatres in the U. S. increased by 1,136 between the end of 1953 and Jan. 1, 1955, bringing the new total to 19,101. The figures are the product of a census job done by Sindlinger & Co., market analysts, for the Council of Motion Picture Organizations.

The new total comprises 15,039 four-wall houses and 4,062 drive-ins. "Active" theatres include those which close down seasonally and drive-ins which operate two to five months a year.

The low point in number of operating houses was hit last March, at a period just prior to the Congress-given admission tax relief. 6,280 situations were closed then.

Sindlinger outfit claims that a continuous check is maintained so that the statistics are up to date. As a theatre's status change is reported by either COMPO or Sindlinger sources, the change is verified with the theatre, it's said.

Last September, when Sindlinger provided COMPO with earlier census figures, there were 1,288 spots whose status was unverified and reports on whether they were open or closed were in conflict. The unverified list has been cut to 453 in the new census, says Sindlinger.

Pueblo Plots 2% Tax

Pueblo, Colo., March 1.

The city council has instructed its city manager to draw up an ordinance that would tack a two per cent tax on all amusements.

This type of municipal bite has been strongly fought elsewhere in country, and repealed in some 25 Ohio towns, under exhibitor pressure.

Paul Swater to Buffalo

Paul Swater has been assigned managing director of the Teck Theatre in Buffalo which opens on March 16 as a Cinerama house. Initial picture in the medium, "This Is Cinerama," will be shown.

Swater has been acting as managing director of Cinerama's Melba Theatre in Dallas. He'll be succeeded by William Lewis, who has been in charge of group sales in the Dallas region.

Home-Toll Advocates Take Heart as Court Slaps FCC; See Latter Not So Big

Opponents of toll-tv took considerable heart, last week, from the ruling of the Federal Court of Appeals in Washington, setting aside the Federal Communications Commission's arbitrary limitation on tv station ownership.

Their reasoning was that, if the Commission was vulnerable on so basic a policy, it very likely was vulnerable, too, on any positive decision in re-subscription-tv. There is a wide area of agreement that, should the FCC vote in favor of authorizing fee-tv, legal action would follow.

As for the coinbox-tv interests, they saw the Court's ruling in a different light. If finally upheld, they figured it'd make their operations considerably easier and eliminate complicated licensing arrangements. Under present FCC rules, no one is allowed to own and operate more than five VHF and two UHF stations at one time.

DISTRIB'S FRENCH FILMS

Loew's International Has 'Nitouche' and 'Heartbreak Ridge'

Two French pictures, acquired by Loew's International, are being prepared for Metro distribution outside the United States.

"Mlle. Nitouche," described as a comic opera in color starring Fernandel and Pier Angeli, will be released throughout Latin America and the Middle East. Set for Latin American release is "Heartbreak Ridge" (Crevecoeur), story of a French battalion of the United Nations forces in Korea and filmed on the battlefield.

Since Metro is not geared for foreign film distribution in the U.S., it has been seeking an indie distrib to handle "Ridge" in the domestic market. Film has been shown to a number of indie distribs, but no deal has been set as yet.

Leo Jones Tries, Fails to Shift Ohio's ITOA's Anti-Censor Stand

By DEAN A. MEYERS

Columbus, March 1.

One-man floor fight to disassociate Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio from the battle against film censorship and declare it neutral got nowhere at business session of annual ITO convention here Monday (28).

Leo Jones, Upper Sandusky exhibitor, maintained organization's militant anti-censorship policy was making enemies of certain groups, especially the clergy. Jones, speaking on a resolution putting ITO "on record as being unalterably opposed to this pernicious and unconstitutional proposal," declared this a distributor problem, not an exhibitor's. Jones stirred up a lively discussion but failed to gather any support for his cause and resolution carried with only his vote in dissent.

President Horace Adams, of Cleveland, vigorously scored prices, policies, toll-tv and the film shortage during the only business session of the convention. He charges "70-30-10 is a gimmick for giving you a picture at the bargain rate of 50%." Adams appealed for support of the fund campaign to fight toll-tv by thundering "We must pay this bill. We must prepare a war chest. We must fight this menace." He claimed the film shortage was "intentional" in order to drive up prices and that film companies should formulate national price policies and let their branch managers know about them.

The only other resolution passed, and that unanimously, was a pledge to support the fight against home-pay-see television.

Officers re-elected were Adams, president; F. W. Huss Jr., Cincinnati, first vice president; Charles Sugarman, Columbus, treasurer; Robert A. Wile, secretary. Peter M. Wellman, Girard, was named to the new post of second vice president.

Directors elected are: Park Beldon, Akron; Louis F. Eick, Martins Ferry; Marshall Fine, Cleveland; Marvin Frankel, Elyria; Henry Greenberger, Cleveland; J. Real Neth, Columbus; C. F. Pfister, Troy; Hos L. Russel, Miliersburg; Martin G. Smith, Toledo; Roy E. Weiis, Dayton; Louis Wiethe, Cincinnati; Chris Velas, Beliaire and Walter Burget, Van Wert.

Exhibs in many instances are so misusing stereophonic sound as to defeat the purpose for which it was bought, Meriin Lewis, exec secretary of TESMA (Theatre Equipment & Supply Manufacturers' Assn.) told an Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio convention here yesterday (Mon.).

"There seems to be an almost universal idea that sound must be louder or audiences will not be aware of the fact that the theatre they are in has installed stereophonic sound," Lewis observed. "It should be louder, perhaps than with normal optical sound, but, anything at all that causes audiences to be distracted in any way from concentration on the screen's action as a story unfolds . . . . is misusing the equipment that cost them (the exhibs) a considerable amount of money to install."

Lewis maintained that another factor militating against exhibs getting the full value out of their stereo eqnuipment was that they have "insisted upon buying equipment of a capacity not sufficient for their individual theatres, simply because it costs less than equipment of sufficient capacity." The result, he found, was that projectionists had to turn up the fader to its greatest capacity, with consequent sound distortions.

Discussing screens and lenses, Lewis said a recent survey had found that lens manufacturers would not offer any further reduction in prices. "Those that have been made were because the manufacturers had written off 'tooling costs'," he said. "Prices are now at a level that permits no further reduction, the manufacturers agree, without courting bankruptcy."

Lewis detailed the various wide-screen systems, talking particularly about the new projectors coming out for VistaVision film projection and running through horizontally. He stressed that these projectors, which provide optical sound comparable in quality to magnetic reproduction, would have to be installed in addition to the machines already in the booth.

Among dispiays set up for exhibitors was one by Ohio Beii Telephone showing three devices especially useful in theatres: a hands-free telephone for cashiers, a simple record-playing device to announce the name and time of features automatically to anyone who calls in, and a device to record any messages from the caller to the theatre manager.

During Monday's session, Jake Batts, projectionist from Raleigh, N. C., made a plea for support of the Will Rogers Memorial Hospital at Saranac Lake, N. Y.

Monday night delegates and their wives watched a sneak preview at Loew's Ohio of "The Blackboard Jungle."

With the exception of the luncheon and banquet, the entire Tuesday daytime closed sessions were devoted to M-G-M's Ticket Selling Workshop with M. L. Simons presiding. Participants included Emery Austin, Metro expioitation director; Jack Bruno, city manager for the Cooper Foundation Theatres in Pueblo, Coio.; Ivan Anderson, Liberty Theatre, North Wilkesboro, N. C.; Conrad Brady, publicity director for the Interstate Theatre at Houston; J. W. Gaylard, manager of the Troy Drive-In, Troy, Ohio.; Nate Milder, sales director of WHIZ-TV, Zanesville, O., and Jack Lake, advertising manager of the Lancaster (O.) Eagle-Gazette.

In their annual and effective public relations gesture toward the Ohio General Assembly, the theatre owners had state legislators as guests at a luncheon at the Deshler-Hilton.

Meeting at the same time in the hotel was the Columbus Motion Picture Council which had State Sen. Charles A. Mosher (R., Oberlin), originator of anti-censorship laws, and Mrs. Max Williams, newly-elected president of the Federation of Motion Picture Councils, as speakers. Attendance of legislators, by the way, was nearly 100%. Lt. Gov. John Brown had as his guests Gene Autry and Gail Davis (who plays "Annie Oakley") who had visited that morning in Greenville, O., Annie Oakley's birthplace.

The annual banquet was held in the Deshler-Hilton ballroom. Prof. Edward Wright, head of Denison University's theatre department, presented his impersonations and Jack Shea, "The Mad Auctioneer," spoke.

Lt. Gov. Brown presented Awards of Merit from the Governor's Traffic Safety Committee to Horace Adams, Toledo. ITO president, and to Burt Robbins, assistant to the president of National Screen Service in recognition of the cooperation given by theatre owners in showing special traffic safety films as a public service.

to assure the Italians that it would do a certain percentage of its color work in Italy. Other companies then agreed also to do a "representative" part of their tint work locally. Extent to which each will be forced to go will depend on individual discussions in Rome Griffith Johnson, MPEA v.p., is still huddling with Italo authorities on details.

Arrangements, in the eyes of some company execs, avoid the undesirable "force" label. MPEA last year agreed to undertake tint printing in Italy provided the quality of the work was satisfactory and prices were competitive.

One of the companies not affected by the agreement to print in Italy is Republic, which has been doing it for some time anyway. Technicolor prints are still exempt and will continue to be imported in Italy freely. It's questioned whether, even if Techni isn't being used, the Italian labs could handle reduction printing such as necessitated in VistaVision.

Spokesmen for the N.Y. labs last week said foreign printing arrangements made by the American companies didn't hurt them since few of the foreign market prints originated in N.Y. Labs that will take it on the chin will be the ones in Britain, it's pointed out.

Popcorn Convention

Concessions and vending insofar as theatremen are concerned will be kicked around next Tues. (8) at the annual spring eastern seaboard regional meeting of the International Popcorn Assn. One-day program to be held at the Park Sheraton Hotel, N. Y., lists some 15 speakers. General chairman of the event is Lee Koken of RKO Theatres.

First to address the conclave will be Sam Rubin of the ABC Vending Corp. He'll discuss "New Ways to Merchandise and Increase Ice Cream Sales." Saul Lerner, owner of L. I. Family Drive-In Theatres, will cover "Cafeteria Operation and Its Advantages." Among other topics on the agenda will be Intermissions and Playgrounds as an Aid to Snack Bars."

Sam Spade Caper Comes to Climax

Washington, March 1.

Columbia Broadcasting System, author Dashiell Hammett, Regis Radio Corp., and Wildroot Hairtonic Co. and other defendants urged the U. S. Supreme Court yesterday (28) to throw out a petition of Warner Bros. and Alfred Knopf Inc., for an appeal in the "Sam Spade" case. (Authors Guild has long been interested in case.)

Warners and Knopf contend that Warners' purchase of Hammett's "Maltese Falcon" gave it full rights to the character of the detective, Sam Spade. Hammett subsequently sold the character of Spade and one or two others who had appeared in "Maltese Falcon" (and other books) to radio. The series on Spade, produced by Regis, broadcast over CBS.

Brief of CBS, Regis, Hammett, etc., asserts: "Warner obtained only a limited grant through its contract of June 23, 1930. Its rights are confined to the "writings" which are expressly defined as ". . . that certain story, . . . entitled 'Maltese Falcon,' written by said Dashiell Hammett.

"Since neither character nor sequel rights were mentioned, the whole copyright problem in the case consisted of construing the contract . . .to determine whether it included these unspecified character and sequel rights. The most that could be said to keep the question open for Warner was that the contract was ambiguous and required construction.

"Since Warner prepared this contract and was responsible for the ambiguity, and since doubts in such situations are to be resolved in favor of the author, the trial court construed this contract in favor of the defendants.

"It should be noted that this is not the usual action by an author to stop or obtain redress for the theft of his copyright product. It is an effort by a grantee of limited rights in the copyrighted work to stop the author and his licensee from using the ungranted portions."

Mike Yahr's New Post

M. J. (Mike) Yahr has been named to the newly-created post of manager, RCA Theatre and Sound Products, according to J. F. O'Brien, manager, Theatre and Industriai Equipment Marketing, Engineering Products Division, RCA.

Yahr will coordinate all planning, promotion, and saies activities for equipment which RCA markets through distributors. These include theatre equipment and accessories, visual and sound equipment, closed-circuit systems, and community tv equipment. Yahr joined RCA in 1929 as a theatre equipment fieid engineer.

Hot Corn!

Des Moines, March 1.

Popcorn has been praised for saving the languishing cinema of the hinterland and condemned for the crunching sound which nervous systems of older patrons cannot abide.

A new hazard developed at the DesMoines Theatre when popcorn failing into ventilator ducts under the seats became inflammable from all that drippy butter. House had to be emptied while the firemen coped with the popcorn blaze.

ed; the shipboard floorshows and vaude-revues are cuffo; Heineken (Dutch) beer is 10c a schooner; cocktails and highbalis are 25-35c; vintage wines at $3-and-under; vintage French champagne $4-$5, so the price is right in aimost every direction.

The show biz impact is apparent from the start. This not only includes the Nat Abramson-booked vauderies but in everything that cruise director Smith and his aides (Herbert Sandresky, Bob Smith Jr., the tennis pro; Dick Mason, golf; Joe Dunleavy, another golf pro and physical instructor) do. Morty Reid heads the Yank band and there is aiso a Dutch ensemble which chirps Hoilandische, French, German and Tin Pan Alley —including some weird Rotterdam overtones to such pure Americana hiibiily paeans like "This Oid House."

The 'High Seas' Time

Sylvia Barry, a vet fave of the Bounding Main circuit, makes with the pops and mingles with the passengers like a Mixmaster as the love-'em-all-kid—and the passengers apparently reciprocate. Paul Benson and his wife do their "laugh auctioneer" nonsense and wham 'em to the degree that the mature crowd, many with fraternal, church, temple and civic responsibilities, booked him to no less than 28 ciubdates as result of his two shows. Lenore Arnoid is a prima with an authoritative voice, slated for the new Leonard Siliman show, and her vis-a-vis bailads to barytone Victor Clarke ("Paint Your Wagon," soloist with N. Y. Philharmonic) made like a nautical Jeanette MacDonald-Nelson Eddy combo. Miss Arnoid was the lead in the national company of "Oklahoma."

A sock entry was Lou Saxon, professional emcee, who split it up, working only two of the three shows. This cruise had a two-part neo-convention overtone; there was a contingent from the National Retail Package Goods Assn. (liquor retailers) and another group composed of incentive award winners under General Electric auspices, meaning that their two-week winter vacations were cuffoed by GE, all expenses paid. (As result, the Holland-American Line, with full cognizance of its solidly prescheduled passenger list, booked an augmented show, resulting in two modified and different casts on separate nights.)

Pierre Andre is a competent flamenco dancer, Nicky & Francine (Zarra), longtime aboard the Neuw Amsterdam, when not making with the Arthur Murray ballroom classes bit, are also competent performers, doubling into the show with Latin terps. Vic Spaddy's impressions of the Hit Parade and disk personalities bespeak of strong professional promise; as does the youthfully xylophoning Frank Kenney (Dorsey Bros. band alumnus) whom emcee Saxon mentored as an apparent protege.

The customer-is-always-right principle sees some strange happenings when a group of 700 assorted people are thrown into such intimate proximity and it is a credit to the cruise staff, Capt. Visser and chief officer J. G. Van De Vivjer, chief pursuer A. Bruis, chief steward H. J. Antonisse, purser E. J. W. M. Tumelaire, chief engineer B. Muider and ship's Dr. J. J. A. Van Driem—all get and deserve program credit, as they spread themseives among the passengers, dining with relative VIP table companions regularly — for the manner in which they mix seamanship with socializing. They win friends and influence gaiety in a way that makes Hoboken to the West Indies and back a fun toute ensemble. Just to make sure, Mrs. C. C. J. Peters, a charming Dutchwoman with a fine command of Engiish, takes care of the stags and the does—the lonesome femmes frequently outnumber the unattached maies—with introductory get-togethers for the "unattached," and the follow-through continues throughout.

As part of the seamanship-showmanship the "farewell nights," on the fadeout of the captain's dinner, sees Capt. Visser doubling as emcee for a farewell speech; a lot interiocking of the arms for the Auid Lang Syne bit, and a rousing Rotarian-style builderupper for next winter's cruise business.

On the straight showmanship, Nat Abramson, who does the buik of this Nautical Circuit booking, dominantiy on the Cunarders, the French, Italian, Canadian Pacific and Home lines, when he is not heading the WOR (N.Y.) Artists Bureau, thinks that the American guilds and unions threaten cutting off a good segment of dates for Yank talents. The lines make no bones about the fact that they could book native acts, sign them on as part of the "crew" in their native European ports, and not be complicated by AGVA and AFM regulations. It's largely in deference to the American clientele that the Yank-style talent and bands are booked.

Were it not for the fact that the Nieu Amsterdam is berthed in Hoboken, N.J., and doesn't come under Local 802 (N.Y.) jurisdiction, it would be complicated on that phase, as already have certain ships which dock on the New York side of the Hudson River.

February Grossers

landed fifth position, with nearly $500,000 gross from keys covered by VARIETY. The robbery meiler wound up second one session and was in the top 10 list most of the mouth. "Vera Cruz" (UA), which was third in January, finished a close sixth.

"Sign of Pagan," another from Universal, was a strong seventh-place winner. "Cinerama" (Indie) wound up eighth, the same as in January. It was held back from going higher by the fact that "Cinerama Holiday" (Indie), second pic in this process, was launched in four keys during the month. "Bad Day at Biack Rock" (M-G), which never did measure up to the crix appraisai boxoffice-wise, was ninth.

"Underwater!" (RKO wound up in 10th place while "Far Country" (U) was 11th. Latter was just getting under way on its playdates as the month ended. "Violent Men" (Col) rounded out the Top 12 list.

"The Racers" (20th), "Green Fire" (M-G), "So This Is Paris" (U) and "Americano" (RKO) were the runner-up fiims in that order.

Besides "Country Girl," "Far Country," "Battle Cry" and "Leagues Under Sea," which promise to figure prominently in gross totals in forthcoming weeks, there were several other promising pix launched late in the month. "Long Gray Line" (Col) opened big in several keys.

"Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) started out like it might do a money repeat of the original Cinerama production. "Jupiter's Daring" (M-G) was spotty on first four engagements. "White Feather" (20th) ranged from fine to fair in most spots, but was 11th one week. "N. Y. Confidential" (WB) was great opening week in N. Y. "Capt. Lightfoot" (U) was rated lusty on initial playdate in Chi.

"Carmen Jones" (20th), with some additional bookings, copped 11th place one week. "Many Rivers To Cross" (M-G) never managed to top an eight-spot weekiy rating. "Sliver Chalice" (WB) also was eighth one session.

thony Quinn in the starring role, is due in the U. S. soon. It covers approximately the same ground as Universal's "Sign of the Pagan." Also planned by the Italians is a pic on Van Gogh, the painter. Metro has that subject on its sked. There's also a "Carmen" coming from Rome.

The project that's been getting most of the publicity, of course, is "War and Peace," which Paramount is making with Ponte-di Laurentiis. Mike Todd and David O. Selznick also are in the running on that one.

Gobel's First Picture

Hollywood, March 1.

Television comedian George Gobel has inked a one-picture deal with Paramount, to star in remake of "Lady Eve," 1940 musical made with Henry Fonda, Barbara Stanwyck, and Charles Coburn in leads.

Universal All-Out for Players' Trips Into Hinterland Towns

Going on the assumption that features can best be sold by the personalities appearing in them, Universal is continuing to maintain an elaborate public appearance sked for stars and featured players in its films.

Company is 100% sold on the idea, both as a boon for its releases and for its growing stable of young thesps. U execs feel that the local appearances of its stars not only help the exhibs in properly launching the pix but are also of value in popularizing up-and-coming names.

Personality hoopla on U pix goes on practically around the clock now. Since the turn of the year, U had 12 personalities visiting 75 cities and towns, plugging five of its releases. Jeannie Johnston toured 17 cities on "Sign of the Pagan"; Rita Gam went to four keys on the same film; Mara Corday, featured in "So This Is Paris," did p.r.s in many spots; Tony Curtis and George Nader helped plug "Six Bridges to Cross" and so did Claudia Hall, featured in the pic.

In many cases, U will route a couple of stars to the world preem, then shoot them out for the territorial bows. Rock Hudson and Barbara Rush attended the Chicago bow of "Captain Lightfoot," and Suzan Ball, accompanied by hubby Richard Long, is currently helping to plug "Chief Crazy Horse" in N. Y., Chicago, Boston and Buffalo.

Latest player skedded to go on tour with his U pic is Kirk Douglas who's making himself available for p.r.s on "Man Without a Star." He'll tour seven cities starting March 14. Pic preems in Philadelphia March 15.

According to U ad-pub execs, the company's policy of letting its players go out into the sticks and lend an added touch of glamor to the local preems is paying handsome divvies. U is in a little better position than most other companies in that it has an unusually extensive list of contract players. In its films it's using talent signed up for its studio drama school, and these new faces are getting an invaluable buildup via local tv appearances, press interviews, etc.

"We started using personalities with exploitation pictures," Phil Gerard, U pub exec, commented last week. "Now we know that every film, whether it's an exploitation picture or not, has exploitation values in it. There just isn't any picture that's too good to be sold. Just take 'Man Without a Star.' It's an adult western. But that doesn't mean we can't or won't use showmanship methods in putting it across."

RYDER URGES EASE-UP ON EQUIPMENT COSTS

Hollywood, March 1.

Warning against new projection processes that are too costly for theatre installation was issued by Loren Ryder, chief of Paramount's research and sound department, at a meeting of more than 400 members of the Society of Motion Picture and Television Engineers on the Par lot during a demonstration of new developments in VistaVision.

"If the technical men of Hollywood continue to make it more expensive for film houses to use the different systems now in existence and those coming up," Ryder said, "they can make it as bad as anything that has happened to the industry in a long time."

Only solution to the various aspects, he added, is for the industry technicians is to get together in "honest criticism" of each others' thinking. "Let us compare our work in the laboratories and not at the expense of the theatres and the studios."

5th Anni Grauman Tribute

Hollywood, March 1.

A musical tribute to the late Sid Grauman, longtime operator of Grauman's Chinese Theatre here and a well-known picture industry figure, will be held March 5, the fifth anni of the showman's death, at Joe Chastek's Vagabond House.

Bistro's organist, Pomping Villa, will play many of Grauman's fave tunes. Chastek, a close friend of Grauman's, has invited show biz figures to the tribute.

Allied Artists Rolls 3

Hollywood, March 1.

March and April will be busy months at Allied Artists with six features slated to roll under general supervision of executive producer Walter Mirisch.

Trio starting in March consists of "The Body Snatchers," "Women's Reformatory" and the Bowery Boys comedy, "Doing Time." April program calls for "Hold Back the Night," "Massacre at Dragoon Wells" and an untitled screenplay to be produced by Ace Herman.

Cannes Festival Back to Old Pick 'Em Tricks

Question of who should do the picking of entries at international film festivals is still bothering American execs who prefer to have the final say-so.

Problem, temporarily licked following the 1953 Venice fest, crops up again in connection with the Cannes event which runs April 26. Features nominated by the Motion Picture Export Assn. for the competition include Paramount's "Country Girl" and the Hecht-Lancaster production "Marty," a United Artists release.

For this year's festival, the Cannes authorities limited official U. S. entries to two. However, they have the right to "invite" an additional two features to the fest. This is seen as a step back and in the direction of the situation that caused a serious rift at the 1953 Venice affair, when the Americans declared they'd pull out of future Venice races unless the rules were changed to give them complete control of entries.

In 1953, the Venice committee rejected the majority of the official American nominations and proceeded to pick their own features. There were charges that the films tapped by the Italians weren't the ones the American companies thought the most advisable for the occasion. Rules were later changed to conform with the U. S. point-of-view.

With "Marty" an indie production, the situation at Cannes will be somewhat unique in that only a single picture from a major studio will be in the running. It's not known which other two features the Cannes officials will wish to invite. It's pointed out, however, that the MPEA nominations are by no means an all-industry choice. At the same time, they're expected to be acceptable to the Cannes organizing committee.

Favre LeBret, chairman of the Cannes festival committee, was in N. Y. last week and Coasted Monday (28) to line up Hollywood celebs for Cannes.

ANTI-COMBINE SUIT REACHES HIGH COURT

Washington, March 1.

U.S. Supreme Court has before it currently a new type of alleged motion picture monopoly situation—the buying combine for independent neighborhood houses.

The G. & P. Amusement Co., of Cleveland, operator of the Moreland Theatre, asked the high court to hear an appeal in its treble damage suit against the Regent Theatre; Cooperative Theatres of Ohio Inc., buying for 141 theatres in 1949; four distributors, 20th-Fox, Loew's, Warners and Universal, and others.

Moreland Theatre claims it lost money and was compelled to close its doors because of the competition from the Regent across the street, a unit in the buying combine. Moreland alleges that Cooperative Theatres, largest buying power in the Cleveland area, pressured the distributors to sell only to its member houses in competitive situations, by virtue of its control of many closed situations.

G & P. Amusement lost in the Cleveland trial court and in the U.S. 6th Circuit Court of Appeals.

NYC's Abe Stark Sees Toll-TV in New Role: Abetting Juve Crime

Abe Stark, president of the N. Y. City Council, this week discovered a negative aspect of subscription-television which even the arch foes of pay-as-you-see hadn't thought of so far. If it were to authorize toll-tv, the Federal Communications Commission actually would be guilty of encouraging juvenile delinquency, according to Stark.

Council prez termed coinbox tv "contrary to the interests of the general public and a violation of the concept of free access to radio and television programs" and he yesterday (Tues.) introed in the City Council a resolution asking the FCC to withhold pay-as-you-see approval.

• Stark was the first to comment publicly in response to the FCC invite to interested parties to give their views on the pros-and-cons of toll-tv. He said that, if toll-tv were authorized, many low income families would have "little more than mediocre shows and third-rate movies available to them without charge."

The City Council topper commented that "at a time when our nation and our city are confronted with a tremendous problem of juvenile delinquency and we are trying to strengthen the ties which bind children to their homes, this threat to free commercial television can do irreparable harm. Children are often better critics than their parents. They will not stay home and watch mediocre programs once they are prevented from viewing better shows because of high subscription rates."

Toll-TV spokesmen said Monday they couldn't understand Stark's strong views or some of the points he was making. They pointed out that pay-as-you-see had always been billed as a "supplementary" service and that, in their opinion, no one could be expected to pay for shows now being transmitted free.

Engineers

20th research topper, any 55m standard — if finally determined upon — would include six magnetic soundtracks, so that the current CinemaScope ratio would not be materially changed. Sponable acknowledged that he and his associates at one time had worked on a system that would have allowed combining an optical with magnetic tracks on the same strip of film. Scheme had been given up, he said, when it became obvious this had to involve a change in the C'Scope aspect ratio.

With 20th determined to shoot wide-gauge and then reduce, some of its top productions — with "The King and I" as a starter — will be roadshown, thus making C'Scope competitive with Todd-AO, VistaVision, etc. in the big houses. It's felt in some circles that the roadshow proposition may well tie in with the realization that George Skouras' United Artists Theatres will be equipping several spots for Todd-AO and that availability of wide-gauge product may be of mutual advantage once the first Todd-AO production, "Oklahoma," has run its course.

Special Todd-AO projectors, being manufactured in Holland, are said to be adjustable to all film sizes and certainly will be able to take six magnetic tracks. However, they run the film vertically. Special VistaVision projectors coming out run the film horizontally but aren't adjustable to any other form of presentation. This then would require the big houses to have at least two different types of projectors in their booths.

Meanwhile, it's understood that 20th is mulling roadshowing "Daddy Long Legs," its forthcoming CinemaScope musical starring Fred Astaire and Leslie Caron. One of the advantages of roadshowing, apart from the automatically increased higher admissions, is that the distrib doesn't have to follow the standard release pattern. Under the arbitration agreement as currently drafted, each company is allowed two roadshow attractions a year.

Picture Grosses

000 following $31,000 initial frame.

Loew's (Loew's) (3,172; 60-85)—"Bad Day at Black Rock" (M-G) and "Operation Manhunt" (UA) (2d wk). Good $10,500 following $17,000 opening stand.

Orpheum (Loew's) (1,400; 60-85)—"Beau Brummell" (M-G) and "Drive Across Crooked Road." (Col). Nice $8,000. Last week, "Athena" (M-G) and "Crest of Wave" (M-G) (2d wk), $8,500.

Pageant (St. L. Amus.) (1,000; 82)—"Beauties of Night" (Indie). Nice $3,000. Last week, "Heart of Matter" (Indie), $2,000.

Richmond (St. L. Amus.) (400; 82)—"Beauties of Night" (Indie). Hep $2,500. Last week "Heart of the Matter" (Indie), $3,000.

St. Louis (St. Louis Amus.) (4,000; 75)—"Racers" (20th). Neat $13,000 or over. Last week, "Violent Men" (Col), $10,000.

Shady Oak (St. L. Amus.) (800; 82)—"Leonard Di Vinci" (Indie). Fine $3,500. Last week "Bread, Love, Dreams" (IFE) (4th wk), $3,000.

'Racers' Okay $14,000, D.C.; 'Girl' Big 14½G, 4th

Washington, March 1.

There's a general letdown at firstruns after last week's Washington Birthday boom. Nevertheless, trade is steady for a non-holiday stanza with an almost solid hold-over situation. Newcomer standout is "Gate of Hell" at the Dupont, and out-grossing its two predecessors in the Japanese import category. "The Racers" looks okay at Palace. Both "Long Gray Line," in 3d session at RKO Keith's, and "Country Girl," in 4th round at Trans-Lux, show steady strength.

Estimates for This Week

Ambassador (SW) (1,490; 90-$1.25)—"Battle Cry" (4th wk). Fine $5,000. Stays on. Last week, $7,500.

Capitol (Loew's) (3,434; 70-95)—"Far Country" (U) (2d-final wk). So-so $9,000 after $15,000 last week.

Columbia (Loew's) (1,174; 70-95)—"Many Rivers to Cross" (M-G) (2d wk). Smart $8,500 after $12,000 opener. Stays.

Dupont (Lopert) (372; 65-$1)—"Gate of Hell" (Indie). Sock $7,000. Stays. Last week. "Romeo and Juliet" (UA) (9th wk), $2,500 in final 4 days.

Keith's (RKO) (1,939; 90-$1.25)—"Long Gray Line" (Col) (3d wk). Still sizzling at $23,000 after $25,000 last week. Stays on.

Metropolitan (SW) (1,200; 90-$1.25)—"Battle Cry" (WB) (4th wk). Solid $10,500. Continues on. Last week, $13,600.

Palace (Loew's) (2,370; 70-95)—"The Racers" (20th). Okay $14,000. Last week, "Bad Day Black Rock" (M-G) (2d wk), $11,000.

Playhouse (Lopert) (435; 70-$1)—"Aida" (IFE) (2d wk). Surprisingly solid $6,500 after slow start. Last week, above hopes at $7,500.

Trans-Lux (T-L) (600; 70-$1)—"Country Girl" (Par) (4th wk). Great $14,500 after $17,000 last week.

Warner (SW) (1,300; $1.20-$2.40)—"Cinerama" (Indie) (68th wk). Fancy $14,000 after $17,000 last week, biggest since Christmas week. It beat last year's Washington Birthday take. Stays.

CLEVELAND

Good $3,500. Last week, "Three Forbidden Stories" (Indie), $2,500.

Ohio (Loew's) (1,200; 60-90) —"Timberjack" (Rep). Fair $5,000. Last week, "Bridges At Toki-ri" (Par) (m.o.), $7,000 on fourth week downtown.

Palace (RKO) (3,287; 60-90) —"Americano" (RKO). Nice $13,000. Last week, "Far Country" (U), $10,500.

State (Loew's) (3,500; 60-$1) —"Jupiter's Darling" (M-G). Good $15,000. Last week, "Bad Day Black Rock" (M-G), $12,000.

Stillman (Loew's) (2,700; 60-90)—"Country Girl" (Par) (3d wk). Great $18,000. Last week, $21,000.

National Sues Wolfberg

Los Angeles, March 1.

National-Simplex-Bludworth, Inc., a division of National Theatre Supply, filed suit in Superior Court against John Wolfberg and five John Does, demanding payment of $6,297.

Plaintiff wants payment for theatre equipment allegedly delivered to the Imperial theatre, formerly operated by Wolfberg.

Boston, March 1.

Despite the fact that most firstruns are holding over, biz here continues to perk. "Battle Cry," which smashed opening day records at the Met on Feb. 22, continues very big with "Long Gray Line," in second week at the Orpheum and State, ditto. "Country Girl," which broke all marks during the first two weeks at the Astor, continues socko in the third frame. "20,000 Leagues" in third week at the Memorial is also very good. Lone newcomer, "Unchained," at Paramount and Fenway, is only mild.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (B&Q) (1,500; 75-$1.25)—"Country Girl" (Par) (3d wk). Smash $28,000 following $34,000 in second week, very near first week's gross.

Beacon Hill (Beacon Hill) (800; 75-$1.25)—"Romeo and Juliet" (UA) (10th wk). Oke $3,000. Last week, $3,500.

Boston (Cinerama Productions) (1,354; $1.20-$2.85)—"Cinerama" (Indie) (61st wk). Good $17,000. Last week, with three extra performances, socko $34,000.

Exeter (Indie) (1,300; 60-$1)—"The Detective" (Col) (3d wk). Excellent $11,500 following $14,000 in second.

Fenway (NET) (1,373; 50-90)—"Unchained" (WB) and "Cry Vengeance" (AA). Only fair at $4,000. Last week, "Long John Silver" (DCA) and "Silent Raiders" (Lip), $7,000.

Memorial (RKO) (3,000; 75-$1.25)—"Leagues Under Sea" (BV) (3d wk). Nice $30,000 following $38,000 in second.

Metropolitan (NET) (4,367; 75-$1.25)—"Battle Cry" (WB) (2d wk). Big $35,000 after $51,000 in first stanza.

Orpheum (Loew's) (3,000; 75-$1.25)—"Long Gray Line" (Col) (2d wk). Fine $23,000. Last week, $37,000.

Paramount (NET) (1,700; 50-90)—"Unchained" (WB) and "Cry Vengeance" (AA). Sluggish $10,000. Last week, "Long John Silver" (DCA) and "Silent Raiders" (Lip), $18,300.

State (Loew's) (3,500; 75-$1.25)—"Long Gray Line" (Col) (2d wk). Slick $14,000 following $20,000 in first.

'FEATHER' FANCY 13G, BUFF.; 'DARLING' 15G

Buffalo, March 1.

Big surprise of week here is the lively biz being done by "White Feather" at the Century. "Jupiter's Daughter" shapes fine at the Buffalo. Probably best showing is being turned in by "Country Girl," which still is smash in third Paramount session. "Battle Cry" also is very potent, especially for a fourth round at the Center.

Estimates for This Week

Buffalo (Loew's) (3,000; 60-85)—"Jupiter's Darling" (M-G) and "White Orchid" (UA). Fine $15,000 or over. Last week, "Bad Day Black Rock" (M-G) and "Operation Manhunt" (UA), $14,000.

Paramount (Par) (3,000; 65-$1)—"Country Girl" (Par) (3d wk). Sturdy $12,000. Last week, $20,000.

Center (Par) (2,000; 65-$1)—"Battle Cry" (WB) (4th wk). Husky $15,000. Last week, $19,000.

Lafayette (Basil) (3,000; 50-80)—"10 Wanted Men" (Col) and "Pirates of Tripoli" Col). Potent $12,000. Last week, "Far Country" (U) and "Both Sides of Law" (U), ditto.

Century (Buhawk) (3,000; 60-85)—"White Feather" (20th) and "Black 13" (Indie). Lively $13,000. Last week, "Underwater!" (RKO) (2d wk), $7,000.

INDIANAPOLIS

$7,000. Last week, "Underwater!" (RKO), $11,000.

Loew's (Loew's) (2,427; 50-80)—"Bad Day Black Rock" (M-G) and "Pirates Tripoli" (Col). Slow $7,500. Last week, "Jupiter's Darling" (M-G) and "Crossed Swords" (UA), $9,500.

Lyric (C-D) (1,500; 50-70)—"Unchained" (WB) and "Carolina Cannonball" (Rep). Fair $5,000, with All-Star Jamboree onstage replacing second feature Sunday only at $1.25. Last week, "Abbott-Costello Meet Keystone Kops" (U) and "Man on Run" (Indie), nice $6,000, same setup.

Wall St. Spotty as Pix Shares Fail To Push Ahead; Divvy News Static

By MIKE WEAR

Battered by adverse factors in many quarters, including further declines by the London market, Wall Street weathered the storm rather well last week, but not without casualties. Declining prices in several groups, finally taking in quite a few blue-chip shares, got in a few licks on the Amusement Group. Net result was that 16 stocks wound up with minus signs, two were unchanged and five sported gains in this group.

Film issues suffered the most, with favorable to sharply improved earnings having no bullish results marketwise. Paramount Pictures showed an almost sensational improvement in earnings but the regular 50c dividend declaration apparently was not to the liking of traders. Consequently, after a brief run-up, the shares straightened out and wound up with a loss of 50c on the week. Shareholders apparently felt that the directors would have been justified in boosting the divvy on the 1954 net profit results.

The usual 25c quarterly divvy by Loew's also was not especially heartening to stockholders. Some felt that it was time to give the shareholders a break, especially if this bell-wether of the film companies was to keep step with what other industrial companies currently are doing for holders of common stock.

Failure of General Precision Equipment to raise its dividend (few in the know, however, expected any increase) resulted in the shares tumbling around three points. Directors declared the usual 60c quarterly dividend. However, the report of net profit amounting to $6.49 per common share, a little over what had been anticipated, brought a rally, with GPE stock winding up with only a one point loss on the week. Company showed $5.09 a share in 1953.

Radio Corp. of America reported record gross income but wound up with only $2.66 per common share against $2.27 in 1953. RCA shares held near the year's high last Friday, but showed a 50c loss for the week. Stock pays $1 per year plus generally an extra divvy. Shares closed at 44¼, which would indicate that shareholders have faith in future prospects of the company.

Technicolor ran up quickly to 16¼ (the old peak) last Friday, apparently in anticipation of a favorable report. Shares finished at 16, for an advance of five-eighths on the week, but it was one of the few gains in the Amusement Group. Company currently pays $1 per share annually, and has been paying 10c extra at the yearend.

National Theatres was the strongest of cinema stocks, finishing at 10, unchanged on the week. ABC-Paramount Theatres held near the year's high to finish down fractionally at 26¾. EMI was very active and firmed up to conclude the week at 4⅝.

20th-Fox rose on considerable volume last Friday, and ended the week at 28¾, fractionally up on the 5-day trading period. Columbia Pix was down one point to 35. DuMont A shares, on the American Stock Exchange, which recently hit 17, wound the week at 16⅜. Recent purchases of this stock apparently have been predicated on excellent earnings and possibility of a dividend.

Jewish Fund Leaders

Hollywood, March 1.

Jack Karp, industry chairman of the United Jewish Welfare Fund, appointed 22 film names to function as leaders in the 1955 campaign.

Appointees include Max Firestein and Sid Solow, Allied Industries; Bert Allenberg and Sam Jaffe, Artists Representatives; Charles Goldring, Business Managers; Jules White, Columbia; Abe Meyer and Victor Blau, Music; Steve Broidy and Robert F. Blumofe, Independent Producers; Robert V. Newman, Goldwyn Studs; J. J. Cohn, Metro; Eugene Zukor, Sam Briskin and Sam Frey, Paramount; Ben Bender, RKO; Hy J. Glick, Republic; Sid Rogell and Fred S. Meyer, 20th-Fox; Morris W. Weiner, UI; Jack M. Warner, Warners, and Sherrill Corwin, Theatres and Exchanges.

Republic Returns Rank Dope Smuggle Feature; Unable to Secure Seal

Because it has been unable to clear it for a Production Code seal, Republic has returned to J. Arthur Rank one of the five pix it bought from the Rank Org for U. S. distribution. Film involved is "Forbidden Cargo." Its theme is dope smuggling, one of the Code taboos.

"Forbidden Cargo" was part of the Rank package sold to Republic for $150,000 and including as the piece de resistance "Doctor In the House," a Technicolor comedy. Rep is now trying to pick a substitute.

Jack London Stories Set For Theatres and Video

Hollywood, March 1.

Thomas D. Mercola, Beverly Hills attorney, formed Jack London Productions Inc., with eastern bankrolling, and acquired screen and television rights to some 300 subjects written by the late author.

Two London novels, Mercola reported, are due for early filming, one in Hollywood and one in England. In addition, tv subjects will start shortly on the West Coast.

BREAKFAST SHOW

About 40 Customers Take Juice, Java and Sinker Diet

Chicago, March 1.

The Grand Theatre here served breakfast to its patrons last week in conjunction with the opening of a twin-bill, "Abbott and Costello Meet The Keystone Kops" and "Ricochet Romance." Doors opened at seven a.m. opening day, and customers were regaled with an eye-opener of orange juice, sinkers and coffee for the first hour.

About 40 breakfasts were given away.

Another Delay For Arbitration

Snags in finalizing an industry arbitration system, more serious than admitted, will delay once more the proposed industry roundtable conference. It will be postponed far beyond the three weeks promised by 20th-Fox assistant general sales manager William C. Gehring two weeks ago at the Allied States Assn. drive-in convention.

No one connected with arbitration or the roundtable session will venture a guess on (1) when and if arbitration will ever come about and (2) the date of the industry meeting. Distribution quarters had previously proposed that the all-industry session be delayed until arbitration is completed.

It's no secret that the exhibitors' purpose in convening with sales managers and company prexies is to discuss one subject—the present film rentals being asked by the film companies. There is still considerable doubt, however, that the distribs will consent to take up the subject in a body. It may be discussed in broad terms. However, when it comes down to specifics, it's felt the film companies will say that the prices charged for pictures is matter that has to be taken up with each company individually.

Meanwhile, Theatre Owners of America, which has beefed about film rentals but not as forcefully as Allied, is reported ready to take the same strong attitude as the rival exhibitor organization. TOA, similar to Allied, is said to want assurance that the film rentals will be discussed in a realistic manner.

Allied Dues—Let Bookers Collect 'Em

Exhibs Told Better Biz Means (1) Hard Work (2) No Short Cuts (3) Clean Films (4) Neat Houses

By FRED TEW

Detroit, March 1.

Michigan Allied members are enthusiastic over a plan designed to increase membership from 40 to 75% of all theatres in Michigan and make payment of dues "painless."

The plan, adopted at Allied's convention last week at the Hotel Statler, makes five booking organizations, which service 75% of the State's theatres, dues collectors for Allied.

Dues, formerly based on 10c a seat a year per theatre, will be changed to a flat rate still to be determined. It is expected rate of $2 weekly for first runs; $1.50 for second runs, $1 subsequent and 50 cents for others will be affirmed shortly. Bookers simply will add dues to weekly bills.

The importance of the bookers was underscored when they were put on the newly-formed executive committee which was empowered to act when the 15-member board of directors cannot meet. Executive committee members are Sam Barrett, Carl Buermele, William Clarke, and Alden Smith, Detroit, and Clive Waxman, Grand Rapids, and John Vlochas, Flat Rock.

The new president is Smith who succeeds Vlochas.

Four hundred delegates, largest ever to attend an Allied meeting in Michigan, informally registered vigorous disapproval of toll-tv after viewing Zenith's Phonevision film.

First day of the two-day convention was devoted entirely to Metro's Ticket Selling Workshop with the following exhibs: L. J. Williams, of Union, Mo.; Lou Brown, of New Haven; David Cheatham, of Pulaski, Tenn., and Joseph Jarvis, of Riverside, R. I., explaining how they had increased biz. All of them stressed that it takes hard work; that there are no short cuts and that selling wholesome, family entertainment in clean, quiet theatres with sharp ads are the ingredients needed for success.

There were no banquet speakers this year.

Besides Smith, other officers named were Pearce Parkhurst, Lansing, and John Vlochas, Flat Rock, vice presidents; William Wetsman, Detroit, treasurer, and William Clarke, Detroit, secretary. Ernest Conlon was re-elected executive secretary.

Directors, who were named at large this year instead of by Congressional districts, are Irving Belinski, B. J. Kilbride, Adolph Goldberg, Milton London and William Wetsman, all of Detroit, and Emmett Roche, Hart; Ed Johnson, Bay City; F. R. Forman, Oxford; Mrs. Delores Cassidy, Midland; Walter Fisher, Grand Rapids; William Rice, Flint; R. J. Oakman, Saginaw; Robert Tuttle, Adrian; Elton Samuels, Pontiac, and Richard Spangle, Utica.

$90,000 for Cedars

Hollywood, March 1.

Motion picture division of the Cedars of Lebanon Hospital's expansion fund campaign raised $90,000 in the first week of the drive, according to Dore Schary. Goal is $125,000.

Helming the drive are Schary, William Goetz and Sam Briskin.

Theatre's College Tie

Burlington, Vt., March 1.

Flynn Theatre here came up with a neat community public relations gesture when it showed a 20-minute color film written and produced by students of nearby St. Michael's College.

Film, titled "Life of St. Michael's," traces the typical life of a student from the day he arrives on the campus through all the activities until he graduates.

Sunday Matinees Okayed By Vermont Senate 17-10

Montpelier, Vt., March 1.

Sunday film matinee bill's approval by the State Senate was reaffirmed by a 17-10 roll call vote, which showed virtually the same sentiment among the solons as was expressed in an earlier action on the measure in the upper chamber.

The bill, sponsored by Senator Barry of Chittenden County, still faced action by the House of Representatives.

FILM STARS' 'LOVE THAT TV'

TV On an O'Neill Kick

The J. Walter Thompson production factotums appear to be on a Eugene O'Neill kick. As a quickie followup to their "Kraft Theatre" presentation of "The Emperor Jones" on NBC-TV last week, they're readying two more O'Neill plays for showcasing on ABC-TV in the next week. Set for tomorrow (Thurs.) on "Pond's Theatre" is "Anna Christie," with Constance Ford, Everett Sloane and James Daly. Next Thursday (10), "Star Tonight," another JWT-produced drama, will do an O'Neill one-actor, "Ile."

Coincidental with the propensity for O'Neill is a casting kick for Everett Sloane. Actor started the kick with the original and repeat versions of "Patterns," on the "Kraft" stanza. He was featured in "Jones," and now moves into a starring role on "Anna Christie." Agency spokesman, referring to the O'Neill displays, said that it was just coincidence that the agency was doing so many at this time, but added, "it might mean that television is growing up."

Hey, Reub!

Guild Prexy In Tirade On Industry Abuses, Calls For a United Front

The cudgels for an all-industry association of telefilm producers and distributors were taken up once again last week, this time by Guild Films prexy Reub Kaufman, who warned that problems facing the industry were of such concern that the day of the lone woif operator is over. Kaufman broached the topic at a luncheon of the National Television Film Council during which he ripped into such practices as pricecutting, overlong library deals and overproduction and flatly stated that "it's about time producers and distributors should unite on basic principles of standards and operations."

While emphasizing the need for a trade association, Kaufman didn't limit his talk to the distribution and production phases of the business alone. He told agencies that they're the first to ask for quality product but they're also "the first to beat down prices." He admonished them on their propensity toward the "safe bet" and their fear of recommending anything new, but said they are the ones always clamoring for something "different" or daring.

Stations also came in for some caustic comment, though Kaufman said he noted some improvement in their attitudes, particularly in reference to the Vitapix Corp., with which he's got a working agreement and which, he noted, is now up to 60 members and has 60 more applications pending. Very existence of stations in the future, he said, depends on film, but the stations must take a "more intelligent attitude" and help their film sources produce better shows. Stations should "stop beating down prices," Kaufman said, "because they will gain nothing by beating a producer into bankruptcy."

Producers and Destributors

But the producers and distributors came in for the lion's share of Kaufman's verbal onslaught. "Unless the organizations and the people constituting the flims-for-teievision industry come to the full

Adams' Rib

Thoughts of the change in name of an ad agency, ad libbed aloud by Joey Adams while toastmastering a National Television Film Council luncheon last week and introing NTFC's new president, John J. Schneider of Biow-Beirn-Toigo:

"Biow-Beirn-Toigo? Sounds like a comedy version of the Ritz Bros. It used to be so simple, just Biow. I just got through learning what BBD&O means, and now those two guys had to come along and mess up the works."

CBS Radio Hit By Client Exits; Ford, Hallmark Bow Out

CBS has had a couple of radio sponsor defections disembracing two name "Eddies" with Edward Arnold and Edward R. Murrow involved in the loss of billings. Hallmark Cards will drop "Hall of Fame" at the end of March. Arnold went into the 6:30 p.m. Sunday slot as the host upon the death of longtimer Lionel Barrymore. There's talk that the greeting card outfit will resume in the fall, but it's not determined whether "Fame" will figure in its plans.

Hallmark has been repped with dramatic stanzas on the web since 1946—with Reader's Digest yarns for a couple of seasons, "Hallmark Playhouse" from '49 to '53 and from then to its current "Fame." If the bankroller comes back to the slot, it will have to be with a strong show since it precedes the Jack Benny fixture at 7 o'clock.

Murrow was hit by Ford's exit of its three-a-week sponsorship on 121 stations in Central, Mountain and Pacific zones since last February. Some of the slack is being taken up via Oldsmobile, which is picking up about 40 outlets on the Coast. Amoco continues with Murrow's 7:45 p.m. newscast cross-the-board on 85 stations in the east.

Replacement For Stu Erwin Sought

Liggett & Myers is reportedly on the hunt for a replacement for the Stu Erwin show, which the cigaret firm is considering axing. Erwin segment was Liggett & Myers' first program entry for its L&M filters, but the show hasn't been coming up with the ratings expected, in view of the fact that it's got "Disneyland" as a leadin on ABC-TV. While "Disneyland" pulled over a 50 Nielsen on its last outing, the Erwin show has yet to hit a 20.

Ciggie firm is holding onto the time, of course, but has given Cunningham & Walsh, its agency, the word to scout out a new property. Erwin segment consists of new programs filmed by Roland Reed, but it's been using reruns already this year. Show's 26-week cycle is up in mid-April.

Frank Mullin's Bonanza

Hollywood, March 1.

Frank Mullin, former NBC exec veepee and now a management consultant, struck paydirt when he grubstaked a couple of prospectors several weeks ago.

He received a flash yesterday (Mon.) of their strikes in Montana and Wyoming and immediately hopped a plane to gander his newfound wealth.

PROMOTION THAT MONEY CAN'T BUY

By GEORGE ROSEN

This is the "era of awakening" in terms of film companies and film stars' acceptance of television. It's a strange turnabout from only a year ago when the major studios ruled the video spectrum off-limits and wanted no part of it. Today the tv networks don't have to ask twice—and it doesn't particularly matter how much you pay the stars.

It's strictly a give-and-take proposition. On NBC-TV's part, it goes after the bigtime Hollywood star to glamorize its major specs. From a standpoint of audience pull half the battle is won. Whatever the critical appraisal of the recent "Producers Showcase" presentation of "The Women," the Shelley Winters billing pre-guaranteed the Nielsen payoff. From the standpoint of the pic studios and the stars, the 15,000,000 tv home exposure—not to mention the virtual certainty of tinted cover spreads in the national mags (as, for example, last week's Life mag job on Miss Winters taking her tv bubble bath) is reward in spades.

And That's For Sure!

On the basis of the on-the-air and off-the-air exploitation campaign now under way and the 7:30 to 9:30 p. m. slotting designed to attract both kids and adults, NBC estimates that a minimum of 40,000,000 people (and possibly 50,000,000) will witness Mary Martin's tv performance of "Peter Pan" next Monday night (7).

Carrying it a step further, the network, matching legit vs. network "attendance," is aware that to equal the tv audience pull would mean playing the Winter Garden, N. Y., seven days a week until the end of the century.

An Exploitation Must

Columbia Pictures makes no bones of the fact that Judy Holliday and the studio never had it so good when it comes to a national buildup since the Col star pledged allegiance to the Max Liebman specs on NBC-TV. Far from considering it harmful to Miss Holliday's b.o. potential as a film star, the studio today recognizes tv as an exploitation must.

Paramount considers the coast-to-coast reaction accorded Jeanmaire on her recent tv spec exposure as worth its weight in gold as a buildup for the French star's upcoming starrer with Bing Crosby. And so on down the line.

A year ago Greer Garson, in tune with the pre-'55 thinking, wanted no part of tv. Now she's rarin' to go for NBC as star of "Reunion In Vienna" which will be done as a "Producers Showcase" spec on April 4, satisfied that the approximate 35,000,000 audience and the subsidiary exploitationplusses can't be duplicated to-

THE GLEASON NETWORK

Now Pitching Up Additional 60-Min. Late Sat. Show

Jackie Gleason is pitching a Saturday night full hour show at CBS-TV that would ride under his production banner next fall. Slotting aimed at is 10 to 11, which would give "the richest man in tv" a hold on 120 minutes in the Saturday shenanigans—embracing the 8 o'clock Dorsey Bros. stanza and Gleason's segue to his own "Honeymooners" vidpix skein for Buick.

Comic is doing a kinnie on a variety show called "Mardi Gras" which would feature a "Ziegfeld"-type line of showgirls as one of the prime components and there'll be a permanent set carrying out the fete motif. Gleason is in the midst of bidding for a flock of writers.

Cott Joins Fineshriber in Exiting NBC Radio; Denny-Shea Combo To Fore in Major Exec Realignment

That Tape Talk

There's been some stepped-up talk over the past week, in the wake of the NBC Radio top level reshuffle, on the projected plan to convert the AM network into a tape operation in which the web would function much in the manner of an AP-UP wire service.

A top NBC exec said this week: "There are many bugs in it yet. We're still studying it. It may go on—and again it may not. But there's nothing imminent."

NBC Radio's troubles, both airwise and in the behind-the-scenes administrative jockeying, hit a crescendo over the weekend when Ted Cott, veepee in charge of operations, turned in his resignation; effective as of yesterday (Tues.), following by a week the exiting of NBC Radio's No. 1 in command, William H. Fineshriber Jr.

Departure of Cott didn't come as too much of a surprise to those close to the scene of operation. It was no secret that Cott wasn't particularly happy with his radio assignment and was anxious to move into tv and had asked for a "target" date in which he could make the switch. NBC had offered him the presidency of Kagran, Inc., the merchandising adjunct which the web had recently acquired from Lehman Bros., but Cott rejected it as being too alien to broadcasting. Since nothing else was offered him he turned in his resignation, agreeing to a settlement of his lucrative contract, which still had two years to go.

Cott has no immediate plans but says he's considering several things.

Resignation of Cott came as exec veepee Robert W. Sarnoff was planting his feet into the radio setup in taking over the Fineshriber administrative heim, pro tem. As disclosed in last week's VARIETY, however, owned & operated chieftain Charles R. Denny is assuming command of the radio network (a berth he previously occupied before moving into the o & o sphere of operation).

Immediate conjecture centered on two fronts: (1) That the radio network and the o & o division would wind up as an amalgamation which would permit Denny to function as top kick in both areas; (2) that Hamilton Shea, boss man of WRCA (AM-TV), the New York flagships, would be second in command to Denny in both network radio and o & o division (in view of their present close relationship).

However, the administrative side loomed as only one part of the trouble spots, for some affiliate reaction was already beginning to manifest itself on the Denny proposal for a 48-hour continuous weekend program (along the lines of the current "Weekend" Sunday show). Program is slated for early introduction as the initial step in "Operation Redesign" as outlined to the affiliates via closed-circuit by

'Best of B'way' Not Good Enuf? Sale Shingle Out

"Best of Broadway," the one-a-month series of 60-minute tinted dramas on CBS-TV, is reported up for sale for the final round of two or three-this season. Series is sponsored by Westinghouse (which also bankrolls the network's "Studio One" on Monday nights) but it's understood the client is checking out in a couple of months.

"Broadway" series, representing revivals of top legit properties condensed to hour form, has had some tough sledding in overall terms of critical and general audience reaction.

Fate of the network's one-a-month "Shower of Stars," coupled with three-out-of-four Climax" tinted baby-specs, sponsored by Chrysler, is also in question beyond the client's season commitment.

Doeskin Would Rather Put Coin Into Radio; Exits Robt. Q for Peale

Interesting facet of Doeskin Tissues' buy of Dr. Norman Vincent Peale's cross-the-boarder on NBC is that the sponsor dropped a tv show to give the nod to radio. Doeskin formerly was repped on Robert Q. Lewis' CBS-TV show.

Clergyman Peale's program was only three weeks old when Doeskin put in wholehog for the 10:05 to 10:15 slot that's back-to-back with Mary Margaret McBride's SRO capsule. Sponsorship will be launched next month on the full network.

MACK LOOMS AS NBC NEW MATINEE IDOL

It looks like Ted Mack will get the nod, based on network reception to the audition he cut over the weekend, as the tv web's new "matinee idol" in taking the 3 to 3:30 slot cross-the-board in a realignment of programming.

Show is tabbed "Ted Mack's Matinee" and will incorporate a variety of features. Final decision is expected this week.

'Big Time' 21; 'Toast' 35

Max Liebman's NBC-TV "Big Time" spectacular on Sunday (27) got the Trendex nod over "Private Secretary" on CBS, 25 to 21.5 at 7:30, but starting at 8 o'clock got a drubbing from Ed Sullivan's "Toast of the Town." Latter's scores by the half-hours read 31 and 39, to a flat 20 for the Milton Berle-Martha Raye-Ray Bolger starrer. Spec's score for the 90 minutes was 22.3, while Columbia was racking up 30.5.

In the 8 to 9 competition, "Big Time" drew a 21 to Sullivan's 35.

Jeanne Carson's NBC-TV Contract

Jeanne Carson becomes the first British star to be signed to a term NBC contract. Comedienne, introduced to American tv audiences on her brace of Max Liebman-produced tv spectaculars, has been pacted to an exclusive by the network starting in the fall.

Network is still mulling the idea whether to star her in own show. But she's definiteiy set for a round-robin of appearances on various shows, inciuding specs. Her previous tv appearances were in "Best Foot Forward" and in a revue co-starring Jimmy Durante and Jack Buchanan.

DuM-Chi Shuttering

Chicago, March 1.

DuMont closes the doors today (Tues.) of its midwest saies office, Gordon Milis, who has been helming the Chi operation the past two years, is negotiating a new association.

Web's shorthanded homeoffice will service the midwest front on a commuting basis

'Big Story' Film & Live Pattern, In Sixth Year, Still Unique in TV

By BOB CHANDLER

"Big Story," the Bernard Prockter live-and-film package on NBC-TV for Pall Mall and Simoniz, goes into its sixth year on television this year but continues to occupy a unique niche in the television business. It still represents the only network show which employs specially shot footage on a regular weekly basis, and Prockter remains the only indie packager who maintains a permanent film unit to shoot that footage.

Use of the film clips, which run as low as 5% of the program to an occasional high of 50% and average out to about 25% of the actual half-hour airtime, necessitates an unusual production-casting operation. Scripts are ready for a particular show some two to three months in advance of air date, and casting of the principal and sometimes subsidiary characters takes place at that early date. Then a film team, complete with Prockter's own Mitchell camera and station wagon, go on location with the stars to the actual city in which the story takes place and shoots the exteriors. Two months la r, the same actors return to start live rehearsals.

Prockter estimates he's shot some 750,000 feet of film in every major city in the U. S. What he's going to do with all that footage? He doesn't know for sure. He's gotten requests for its use as stock footage, but has turned them down, explaining that the income isn't worth the trouble. He's used some of it occasionally on the same and other shows when it fits. Major use he foresees is when and if "Big Story" goes entirely to film. He can then shoot interiors using the same cast around the already-shot location footage, effecting some important savings in production cost.

"Big Story," which Prockter sold to American Tobacco in 1949 (it was the second dramatic show sold on tv), was originally intended as a filmed show. But the sponsor didn't particularly like the idea of a $20,000 a week budget that film necessitated when at the time a live half-hour would cost less than half that. Prockter objected on the grounds that dramatically, the show would be hindered by a live performance; it's a semi-documentary, and therefore needs realistic settings and the scope and room that film can give. When the sponsor still insisted on live, Prockter decided to shoot his exteriors on film and integrate them with live interiors. Sponsor still didn't go for the idea, so Prockter agreed to take a loss on the show to insure the film exteriors. This was okay by the bankroller, so Prockter lost $1,000 a week on the show for two years, until the price was readjusted.

As of the moment, Prockter's

Both Clients Exit Rooney TV Show

Chicago, March 1.

Green Giant cannery, which along with Pillsbury next month is dropping the Saturday night Mickey Rooney vidpix on NBC-TV, is negotiating for a daytime exposure via a quarter-hour Friday segment of Garry Moore's CBS-TV morning show. Moore apparently is a favorite salesman with the Leo Burnett ad shop which handles the Green Giant biz.

When and if the cannery climbs aboard, it'll bring to five the number of Burnett clients repped on the daytimer. Others are Kellogg, Toni, Converted Rice and Comstock Canning.

TeleP Pacts Storer

In the wake of its recent pacting of NBC-TV to a contract for full use of the TelePrompter device, the company this week finalized a pact bringing the Storer Broadcasting chain into the TeleP picture.

Storer stations getting access to prompter are in Cleveland, Portland (Ore.), Detroit, Toldeo, Atlanta, Birmingham and Miami.

Allen's Lens-Lease

Brotherhood Week has been extended. Steve Allen, doing his NBC-TV "Tonight" show as a Baltimore originator Monday (28), required three extra cameras not available from WBAL.

He borrowed them from WMAR, the CBS affiliate.

Bob Hope's 75G Bid From Texaco To Sub O'Connor

Hollywood, March 1.

If Myron Kirk, veepee of the Kudner agency, can swing Bob Hope over to Texaco in alternation with Jimmy Durante on NBC-TV next season, he will terminate contract with Donald O'Connor. Oiler was reported not too happy with the bantam comic's shows or ratings and feels he's trying to do too much on his own show in addition to his picture work.

If Hope insists on taking it easy next season, as he has told friends, and bypasses Kirk's offer, the plan is to go along with Durante on three-a-month with a spectacular taking the fourth turn. O'Connor's deal calls for around $50,000 for filmed package with Durante slightly under that figure for live alternate weeks. Understood Kirk is offering Hope $75,000 for half-hour, but it's said to be more a matter of how hard he wants to work than price with Hope.

Whitfield's 'Toast' Reprise

London, March 1.

British singer David Whitfield flies to the U. S. in April to televise on Ed Sullivan's "Toast of the Town." He will appear on Easter Sunday and again on the April 17 program.

Sullivan is also paging British comedian-singer Max Bygraves for the same two shows. Last December Whitfield scored on the Sullivan show, hence the quick rebooking.

500 Attend 1st 6 Clinics Of BMI; L.A. on Tap Today

Some 500 have attended the first six program clinics of BMI's 1955 series of which 37 are skedded for the U.S. Held in the last week were sessions in Seattle, Little Rock, Portland (Ore.), Jackson (Miss.), San Francisco and Birmingham. Clinics will be held today (Wed.) at the Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, and the Dinkler-Plaza, Atlanta, with George Rosen, radio-tv editor of VARIETY, a guest luncheon speaker in L.A. plus Tucson.

State broadcaster association prexies have been in attendance where such orgs are set up and in each case a BMI field rep is chairman in his territory. Glenn Dolberg, v.p. over station relations, is spieling at eastern and southern clinics, while Russell Sanjek, director of projects, is batting on the western swing for BMI prexy Carl Haverlin, with latter expected to pick up some remaining clinics later on.

Philco's Checkout On 'B'fast Club'

Chicago, March 1.

Philco is ending its logtime identity with Don McNeill's "Breakfast Club" on ABC Radio. Bankroller, holding down the last quarter-hour three days weekly, bows off the morning show on March 23.

It was Philco's cancellation on the tv version a few months back, incidentally, that spelled the deathknell of the simulcast and restored it to radio-only status. After Philco cancelled, the web couldn't sell the tv side and subsequently knocked off the televersion. No danger on the radio side, however, since it's still well sold.

Web News Chiefs Off To Scout Convention Sites

News chiefs of the three major networks leave tomorrow (Thurs.) for Chicago and San Francisco, where they'll survey facilities on a preliminary basis for coverage of next year's political conventions. Trio, each of whom will bring along an engineer, are Sig Mickelson for CBS, Davidson Taylor for NBC and Tom Velotta for ABC.

While emphasis will be on tele coverage problems, they'll also arrange for AM coverage. Each is chief of news and public affairs for his respective web.

Ex-Heavyweight Champs Step Into TV Fray on Right to Use Old Film

Former heavyweight champions Jack Dempsey and Jack Sharkey, along with onetime top contender Luis Angel Firpo, have entered the Chesebrough Mfg. case, in which former boxer Al Ettore is suing the company for violation of privacy via the showings of films of his fight on television ,as amici curiae (friends of the court) in support of Ettore. Additionally, Sharkey has filed a separate suit against Chesebrough and NBC in New York federal court.

Ettore case, now in appeal from a lower court decision in favor of Chesebrough, involves a number of questions relating to whether a performance is a property right; whether a professional dedicates his performance to the public and waives his rights to it; whether an event that was once news retains its character so that it can be telecast as news 13 years later on a commercial program. Sharkey, Dempsey and Firpo, in their brief submitted by three law firms, O'Brien, Driscoll & Raftery; Fennelly, Eagan, Nagee & Lage; and Wolf, Block, Shorr and Solis-Cohen, take the position that a performance is a property right, that an old performance is not news for telecasting on a commercial program, and that the performer does not waive his property rights to a performance by virtue of the performance itself.

Brief points out that the NBC-TVcast of the fight films, "Greatest Fights of the Century," immediately followed the live Gillette fights on the network. "Certainly the written consent of these fighters would be required for such a telecast. . . . For a commercial concern such as Chesebrough, a complete stranger to the original event, to recreate that historic fight (Dempsey-Firpo) by the use of film to advertise Vaseline Hair Tonic, without the consent of the professionals involved and without compensation to them is unbelievable, and to have that use condoned by the Court on the ground that such a use is in the public interest, outrages any sense of justice or law no matter how calloused."

Discussing the question of whether the old fight films are news and therefore in the public interest, the brief makes the point that "this television format was not one designed for dissemination of news. It was purely and simply an advertising program with a film inserted to attract attention to the advertising. This film was a condensation version of a fight with narration added by the sponsor, cut, edited and accented by the sponsor for its own purposes."

Underhill to U.S. Steel

Charles M. Underhill has joined the tv staff of U. S. Steel's public relations department serving on production end of company's ABC-TV "Steel Hour." He succeeds John Rust, who's quit to go out on his own as a producer.

Underhill is former v.p. of ABC.

N.Y. Giants Score On Play-by-Play 'Piracy' Repeats

Upheld this week in N. Y. Supreme Court was an action brought by the N. Y. Giants baseball team against lifting play-by-play coverage of official broadcasts for unauthorized repeats. Defendant Martin Fass was blocked from picking game coverage from the air in order to teletype reports to other stations for immediate rebroadcast.

Supreme Court Justice Edgar J. Nathan ruled that "since the defendant's use is simultaneous with plaintiff's broadcast, it is not necessary to decide any question of possible subsequent abandonment by lapse of time." This means that the entire issue of pirating ballcasts for rebroadcast after a short time (perhaps only seconds) has elapsed has been left legally open.

Nathan ordered that Fass turn over nearly $1,500 made on the teletype service from Giant games. Fass had been teletyping to radio stations in Texas, California, Washington, Wyoming and other states since '51.

It was also determined that the Giants did not "abandon" or lose property rights by allowing broadcast descriptions.

ROLAND KAY TO FRISCO

CBS Radio spot sales has made a couple of personnel switches. Roland Kay becomes SS manager in San Francisco, succeeding Jack Donahue.

Latter transfers to account exec in the Chicago office.

Britain's Comm'l TV Junketeers

By ART WOODSTONE

Not quite knowing what they've got hold of, a handful of Englishmen involved in Britain's commercial video operation made a seven-day junket to the U. S. to discover the nature of the beast. Shortly after the five men arrived in N. Y. last week they called a press conference at which they hoped to take as much as they gave. As representatives of the new Independent Television Authority, they managed to convey the present confusion among their class in dealing with commercial video.

There was softly phrased disagreement among them over how to explain the feelings of all Englishmen concerning a hitherto absent national factor—a second television source which, unlike the British Broadcasting System, takes on commercials, which incidentally once ITA gets moving full blast next fall.

A newspaper publisher who also has a financial interest in commercial television started the ball rolling: "The (British) public is a little against commercial television at the moment." From across the room, a British ad agency man said quietly: "I wouldn't subscribe to that at the moment." Another Englishman opined: "No, they are anxiously awaiting it."

Fear the 'Hard Sell'

After implying that the BBC has taken opportunities to propagandize against advent of the commercial intruder, one said: "Some of the public don't want too much competition to BBC." Someone described British televiewers as being "more conservative" than those here in the U. S.; he said they are in constant fear that ITA will bring with it "American plugs," hard sell and the like. Then, after they all agreed that ITA will not allow a strong commercial pitch over the air, they gave a clue that Englishmen, after all, are very practical men. As a concession, it would seem, to wary British viewers (one said upon being asked just how the British will avoid duplicating America's copywriters) that "at the beginning commercials will be very low pressure," sort of a "shopping guide."

Skepticism about how long (in the face of warnings from a dissatisfied bankroller) the video barometer would continue to read "low pressure" was evident in other parts of the meeting too. The observations of the Britishers before American reporters was casual and direct, lacking in Madison Ave.'s "language of diplomacy." (Someone asided: "Give them time.")

Cat Out of the Bag

One of the junketeers, a tv producer ("impresario"), practically gave the show away. All along ITA and its exponents have maintained that the bankrollers will not control the nature of programming. He, however, acknowledged, for all intents and purposes, that it would be difficult for ITA to avoid even subtle manipulations by advertisers over stanza content for any length of time. All the unrequited bankroller need do, was the general idea, is take his coin away.

The newspaper publisher placed an objection here. "Television is rather like a newspaper; it is not controlled by an advertiser who will eventually pay for it." Parliament, it was disclosed at the session, has doubts about this.

A picture was painted of the British advertiser, who is in a dither because he (and we, it was said on behalf of the ITA) don't yet know the costs to be applied to programming or whether there'll be ratings or even airtimes for the four producers franchised by ITA in England.

The one thing everyone seemed certain of was that BBC "got their breeze up about this." It was pointed out that fear of competition from ITA "got them spending money like they never spent it before" to sign up competitive talent.

Two other points that have been resolved as well were that commercial tv starts on closed-circuit April 26 and on regular channels next September, doing eight hours a day.

The ITA (under Parliamentary scrutiny) assigned four "contractors" as video producers. There's the Associated Newspapers & Rediffusion covering London and area; the Kemsley Group with Maurice Winnick beaming to Manchester; Granada Theatres (Sidney Bernstein Interests, it was explained) for Manchester, and Norman Collins, a former BBC braintruster, handling the reins of a national tv newsservice (inter-area exposure). It was said that ITA claimed to have picked these four producers above all other applicants because they applied first. Incidentally, each producer had to guarantee ITA a minimum of £3,000,000 in the kitty. The producers will transact all biz with advertisers and it is they who will suffer financially if commercial television flops.

Grayson's 'Candid' Formula on Pix

Vet radio-tv producer-director Mitchell Grayson has branched off into business for himself as a producer of industrial films under the Mitchell Grayson Productions banner. Grayson's using the "personalized" approach and specializing in sales training, promotion and public relations films. Idea is to shoot on location with a "candid" camera, filming each salesman at work and then compiling the footage into a documentary for showings to the entire sales force of a company. Second phase is the filming of a couple of days in the business life of a top exec.

Also, Grayson's providing a "candid microphone" service which employs a hidden tape machine to record the salesman's actual on-the-spot pitch, with the tape being used later to show what the salesman did right or wrong and how the mistakes can be overcome.

WINERY COIN FOR WOR-TV

Petri Winery bought the whole of WOR-TV's (N. Y.) Friday exposure on the "Badge 714" reruns, with the bankroller also firming for five one-minute spots weekly in the station's "Fortune Theatre," Italo feature pix exposure.

Deal is for 13 weeks firm.

BALM FOR BESTSELLER BLUES

Curtis TV Mag's Quick Floperoo

Suspension of TV Program Week mag ends, perhaps permanently, the Curtis-vs.-Annenberg struggle for control of the video program listing publication field. Curtis Circulation, the Curtis Publishing subsid controlling Program Week, folded the mag after its eighth issue.

TV Program Week, for which Curtis is understood to have planned putting up $1,000,000, first appeared at the climax of what tradesters saw as a tiff for control of newsstand franchise. Annenberg's TV Guide mag was grabbing up best placement on the stands, forcing slicks like Curtis' Saturday Evening Post into background positions.

The fold came as a surprise to even the mag's staffers, many of whom didn't know of the maneuver until they were given walking papers the very afternoon (24) of the announcement. The suddenness of the decision was obvious to observers because Program Week, of which only eight weekly issues had appeared, was already into production on its 11th book.

In the six days since the Thursday suspension notice, industryites have indulged in wide speculation as to its cause. All Curtis would comment was contained in a release which said that "due to unexpected complications" production costs have "exceeded original estimates so that expansion is not presently feasible." Curtis, incidentally, spent approximately a half year in planning the program-guide-and-fan magazine before the first edition, at which time the company felt it had ample funds laid aside.

It's said that entry of other books into competition in two of Program Week's five markets constituted these "unexpected complications." Suggested was the fact that perhaps the four-week old Hearst supplement—an extensive and slick-papered tv Sabbath section—might have cut heavily into the N. Y. potential for TV Program Week. To boot, it was generally learned at the same time the mag was suspended that the Boston Post was starting its own slick-in-color Sunday video supplement. With competition from these "for free" tv program editions in such key markets, it's figured Curtis had to do some hasty decision making. There is also the possibility Curtis anticipated further newspaper video editions.

At its eighth issue, Program Week was in N. Y., Boston, Baltimore, Washington and Philadelphia, last being the hometown of both Curtis and Annenberg.

Viewer Now More Discriminating; Good Indie Producers Will Last

Hollywood, March 1.

Indie vidpic producers won't be squeezed out of the telepicture by major studios entering tv anymore than indie pix producers were, it's asserted by William Dozier, director of CBS-TV network programming in Hollywood, and production head at RKO before he entered tv in 1951. The entry of majors into the tv pic has been accented this year with Warner Bros. and 20th-Fox joining Columbia and Republic, already in the field.

CBS parcels many of its telefilmed shows to indie producers and Dozier said as far as he's concerned the indie with the good product will always remain in tv, "just as Sam Goldwyn has done consistently well throughout the years in pictures, as an indie." He added mediocrity is on the way out in tv, and that the indie with in-

30G Ain't Cheese

Kraft will have to sell a lot of salad dressing and Philadelphia Cream Cheese to make up for one extra-added expenditure on last week's "Emperor Jones" tinter given on its "TV Theatre."

It was the first time that a sponsor has paid for the color additive, NBC heretofore absorbing the tint costs. Kraft's bill was $30,000.

Writers Guild Sets Demands In Network Dickers

In the mid-March negotiations to take place between Writers Guild of America and the networks, agencies, sponsors, et al., the union intends using the National Television Committee plan of two years ago as the basis for demands. The only exception from the NTC plan will be a pitch for higher minimums.

WGA's video arm will demand 100% of the minimum payments to scribblers for first and second reruns of a show; 75% for third reruns, and 50% for each subsequent exposure. The new proposals also prescribe anti-blacklist provisions.

NTC demands a brace of years back was for a minimum of $525 for a half-hour show and $950 for an hour. Other NTC figures, on a pact which, incidentally was never inked due to Television Writers of America entering the picture, were: $300 for 15-minute show; cross-the-boarder sponsored quarter hours, $600 and $425 sustaining. When a scribe was hired on an under-13 week non-cancellable pact, the minimum was subject to a 10% discount.

The anti-blacklist proposals in the WGA setup would forbid discrimination due to sex, race, creed ("political criteria"), color or national origin.

WMGM Drops FM; UN Offered WABF

Frequency modulation (FM) has been the object of a little attention in N. Y. this month. First, Loew's WMGM has given up the ghost on its FM operation after 12 years, the last few of which have been spent in only duplicating six to eight hours a day of the AM counterpart's programming. Second, it was uncovered that Ira Hirschman has offered his FMer WABF gratis to the United Nations. According to the UN, latter deal is still being considered.

WMGM, which has turned in its license to the FCC, originally set out to sell WMGM-FM, giving themselves "a substantial period" in which to do so. There were understood to be two prospective clients, one of which was in merchandising for chainstores. One of them lost interest in WMGM-FM when he discovered Hirschman's station might be up for sale. Whether negotiations between this prospective buyer and Hirschman ever got under way or, if they did, whether the UN offer was negated, could not be learned since both principals were out of town.

NOVELISTS, MAN YOUR VIDEO GUNS

By LEONARD TRAUBE

More and more novelists—big, little and middle-sized—will be turning to television from here in, said one novelist-turned-telewriter last week. Why? This is why: with sale of fiction down, some say as much as 50%, the book authors had better cross over to tv to turn over a dollar. Even some of the bestsellers aren't buying much groceries after taxes and agent fees are deducted.

Maybe Ben Hecht, William Saroyan and Robert E. Sherwood didn't quite make it for the home-screens, but that doesn't mean a couple of hundred "no name" novelists and legit playwrights won't be able to cut a figure on the tv ice. Television won't make millionaires, but it's a good living.

Take one writer who works strictly for the medium, or did until his "Marty" got him a job for a workover of that into a film (soon to be released). That's Paddy Chayefsky. True, his reputation in the medium is based on only seven hours of work—seven scripts—and if you missed them you missed a whole career of a man with the No. 1 reputation in television. But millions of others have seen all of them (on the Philco - Goodyear NBC Sunday series) and the customers make the payoff. These are the new Shakespeares, with a bigger audience in one night than Shakespeare can grab off in years, but maybe not counting the film versions of the "A" product like "Julius Caesar" and "Hamlet."

'Thoughts While Strolling'

These are paraphrasings interpreted freely from the free wheeling "thoughts while strolling" of Gore Vidal, one of the younger (30) bookwriters plunging deeply into tv. His first stance for tele was made only a year ago with "Dark Possession" on "Studio One" after putting together seven books. As to the latter, his closest breakthroughs were "The City and the Pillar," "Williwaw" and "The Judgment of Paris." His publisher is Dutton, but most of the money was made from the reprints (Signet Books). Latest novel is "Messiah."

Like S. S. Van Dine (Willard Huntington Wright) and a flock of other authors before him, his potboilers are written under a pseudonym, in his case Edgar Box

No Chi Gangsterdom Series, So Jake Guzik's Got No Beef Coming

Chicago, March 1.

The book was closed last week on WBKB's stillborn expose of Chi's gangsterdom when attorneys for Jake (Greasy Thumb) Guzik dropped his motion for an injunction against the projected series which was to have been a video biography of six of the city's frontline hoodlums.

Guzik's legal moves against the project, including a complaint to the Federal Communications Commission on the grounds the station was planning a defamatory telecast of his background, coincidentally came the same week WBKB and the Chicago Crime Commission decided to drop the joint venture. Station and the commission, whose files on Windy City criminal activities were to have been used, were unable to get together on the series' format.

Miner-Lumet Series On Civil Rights Looms As Fund For Republic Entry

A half-hour series to be produced by Tony Miner, with Sidney Lumet as the director, looms as the initial entry of the Fund for the Republic in its ambitious plans to enter the tv programming field, it's been learned. Series, being packaged by the Ted Ashley office, will deal with the overall problems of civil liberties, freedom of thought and the need to combat racial and religious prejudice. As such it looms as one of the major new program items of the spring season. The Fund, an adjunct of the Ford Foundation, will either sponsor the show itself or find bankrollers.

Reginald Rose will be editor of the series, to be known as "The Challenge," and he will write the series with Rod Serling. NBC-TV has initial option on slotting of the show.

Television, in fact, shapes as the prize public opinion molder in the plans of the $15,000,000-endowed independent organization, with the first concrete steps announced recently—the awarding of $29,000 in a script competition in the half-hour documentary and hour drama categories.

Fund for the Republic is also experimenting in the field of television humor as a means of promoting civil rights via an Al Capp quarter-hour film series; is disseminating newsreel clips to stations on an experimental basis on the Coast; and is continuing with its blacklist study.

Robert M. Hutchins, president of the Fund, said he and his staff have spent the past nine months studying every phase of television. Major project underway is the undertaking of the projected half-hour "Challenge" show. Sponsorwise, the Fund is ready to pay the production costs and might even undertake to pay time charges, provided a sponsor couldn't be found. This would not be the Capp show, which would be aired separately, possibly on a syndicated

Five-Petalled Rose

Pointing up the new recognition being accorded tv writers today is the pact just negotiated by CBS-TV for the scripting services of Reginald Rose. Latter has been signed to a five-play deal for the network at a figure reported second only to that pacted by Robert E. Sherwood with NBC-TV (from which the latter has since bowed out). Unlike Sherwood, however, Rose attained distinction as a tv writer ("Twelve Angry Men," "Incident at Carson's Corner," "Almanac of Liberty," etc.). Deal was negotiated via Ashley-Steiner office.

With Rose coming up for Amti-Defamation League citation May 1 for his "Almanac" show, CBS-TV is reslotting the show on a Sunday afternoon in May to commemorate the kudos.

Toscy Tribute On NBC Radio Hits Some Snags

To commemorate the 88th birthday of Arturo Toscanini, which falls on March 25, NBC Radio is planning a three-hour tribute on its Sunday evening "biographical" series the latter part of March. However, a number of obstacles have been cropping up during the past week which present some serious stumbling blocks and may reduce it to more or less of a marathon "record playing" session.

First off, something tantamount to a "sitdown strike" has been registered on behalf of the ex-NBC Symphony Orchestra (now the symphony of the Air) as result of a bid to have only a token representation of the orchestra appear live on the show. Don Gillis, manager of the symphony of the Air, has decreed that unless the entire orchestra is hired to participate in the tribute none will be allowed to put in an appearance. Since that would obviously hike the cost of the program to the kind of astronomical figures belonging to another era in radio, it's out of the question.

Secondly, efforts to recruit the services of NBC musical director Samuel Chotzinoff, a close friend of Toscy's, as one of the show's participants, have proven fruitless, with Chotzinoff, for reasons of his own, preferring to pass it up. Similarly, it's reported that others approached have also declined the invitation.

As of this week NBC was still planning on going ahead with the show. If it does go on, Howard Taubman, of the N. Y. Times, and biographer of Toscanini, is scheduled to appear.

NBC's 'Donovan' Gets A Client—From CBS Films

NBC Film Division this week landed its first sale on its new syndicated western, "Steve Donovan, Western Marshal," and for good measure, stole the client away from CBS Television Film Sales. Bankroller is Langendorf United Bakeries, which is dropping the CBS "Range Rider" series in 13 western markets to pick up "Donovan." New series starts the week of April 4 in Langendorf time slots on stations in California, Oregon and Washington.

Agency for Langendorf is Biow-Beirn-Toigo's San Francisco office.

Nat Wolff Wants N.Y.-L.A. Setup

Nat Wolff, rado-tv factotum at Young & Rubicam, has notified Sig Larmon, Y & R prexy, that he wants to resign as head of the department, effective next Jan. 1.

However, Wolff doesn't want to leave the agency, where he enjoys an enviable status of having hit the jackpot on tv billings, properties and stars brought into the Y & R stable. Wolff has told Larmon that he wants to be relieved of the mounting pressures and would prefer returning to the Coast to reestablish his stake in the creative field among writers, producers, directors, etc.

Wolff's proposition to Larmon is this: Six months in the east, six months on the Coast. He hasn't got an answer yet.

Borge on Ice to Top 'Toast' Salute to St. Pat

Danish comic Victor Borge will be a topliner on the St. Patrick's Day edition of the Ed Sullivan show which will emanate from Chicago Stadium, Chicago, March 13. Other features on that layout will be a sequence from "Ice Capades" which will be occupying the building at that time, and the Irish Festival Singers.

Borge had been turning down dates for Sullivan on the ground that he didn't have enough new material. However, Sullivan insisted that Borge, being a Dane, must be proficient on ice-skates and therefore he could add some antics to his usual material to freshen up his act. Borge knows how to skate and he'll do a whole new bit on ice.

KRAFT MUSIC HALL
With Rudy Vallee; Gwen Verdon, Julie Andrews, Eddie Condon, Steve Allen, guests; Charles Stark, announcer
Producer-director: Paul Lammers
Writer: Gordon Cotler
60 Mins., Sun., 8 p.m.
KRAFT FOODS
CBS, from New York
(J. Walter Thompson)

The uniting of two of radio's most famous names, Rudy Vallee and "The Kraft Music Hall," via an hour-long disk-and-conversation segment in what was radio's prime hour, Sunday at 8, serves to point up the changes that television hath wrought. A pleasant and listenable show, the new (inherited from Edgar Bergen) "Music Hall" nonetheless is only a shade of what it might have been say seven years ago.

In this vein, it's also noteworthy that Vallee, though cast in the modern-day role of a disk jockey, hasn't caught up yet with today's radio in terms of concept and delivery. He was somewhat stiff and formal on the preem (which could be attributed to nervousness) but also his delivery was in the old styie, as if speechmaking at a banquet, with each sentence carefuliy weighed and calculated. This simply means that Vallee is under the somewhat mistaken impression that he's talking to a family audience gathered in the living room. This simpiy isn't so anymore; it's an intimate and individualized audience he's reaching, and his careful delivery completely lacked that element of intimacy that's so important these days in keeping an audience. The boys at J. Walter Thompson should have tipped him off.

Otherwise, it's a pleasing session, especiaiiy since the premiere guests were good. There was Steve Allen and jazzman Eddie Condon, both good with the ad glibs; the infectious Gwen Verdon and the somewhat shyer "Boy Friend" star, Julie Andrews. Aside from the conversational aspects of the show, which originates from the "Rudy Vaiiee Suite" in the Park Sheraton Hotel in N.Y., Vaiiee's choice in records is interesting and enjoyable. And as a topper, there was a iittle live music, Vallee on sax and Allen on piano, a session which evoked the invitation from Condon to Vallee: "Come down to the club (Condon's Village jazz spot) some night; we'ii check the saxaphone for you."

Once Vallee becomes a little more relaxed and informal, the show ought to be tops in its class. Judging from the first segment, producer-director Paul Lammers has started things moving in the right direction. Aii it takes now is a little shove. Chan.

SPORTS TICKER
With Bud Palmer; Alan Williams, announcer
Producer: Bob Lipman
15 Mins., Sun., 6:15 p.m.
PHILIP GORDON CO.
WMCA, N. Y.

Philip Gordon, sponsoring N. Y. stock brokerage, has added another show to the rash of weekend radio sports roundups. However, "Sports Ticker" is being departmentalized into four district units, was a little sharper than its Sabbath brethren.

After a couple of seconds of simulated tickertape, gabber Bud Palmer broke into a soft, siow delivery to review the week in sports. That's one department; he dispatched it last week (20) in quick, efficient form. He segued into athietic events clearly earmarked as Sunday's. Then after one of the three perhaps overiong commerciais about uranium stocks being soid on speculation, he previewed upcoming sports events and also guessed at the winners. (Here he could have quaiified some of his choices more). Then he closed in an interview with National Basketball Assn. press agent, Haskeli Cohen. Better it should have been a manager or player; though Cohen was straight from the shoulder, press agents are usuaiiy just pressagents. This was also the first sports show heard that closed with a rapid roundup of Sunday's straight news, a neat fiiiip, but since it followed the last commercial, it's not certain whether it was paid for by the brokerage. Art.

WTOP's Redskins Coin

Washington, March 1.

WTOP-CJS has copped the contract for origination of next season's Washington Redskins pro football games radio-tv broadcasts. Sponsored by Amoco, coverage is expected to go beyond the 49 radio and 15 tv stations which picked up sportcasts of games last season.

In previous years, D. C. origination point was WMAL-ABC.

MUSIC TENT
With Dirk Fredericks, host; Joyce Krause, Barbara Buchanan, Clarence Day Jr., Elaine Spalding; Otto Harbach, Vincent Lopez, Robert K. Adams, judges; Glenn Osser orch; Doug Browning, announcer
Produces: Robert K. Adams
Director: Clark Andrews
Writer: Bernard Dougall
25 Mins., Thurs., 9:30 p.m.
Sustaining
ABC, from New York

If "Music Tent" is typical of what ABC Radio is putting on the air these nights, then the web has surely left radio in the hands of the amateurs. Not only amateur taient, but amateur producers. "Music Tent" purports to be a contest among professional talent, with winners siated for a summer theatre contract. But the talent hardly seemed of professional calibre on the premiere show, and the program itseif was so gimmicked-up and chock full of hokum and merchandise plugs that the entire effort was strictiy on the amateur ievel. If this is the best ABC can offer, it ought to shut down at night and leave radio to the disk jockeys.

Aside from the contest in the studio, there's an audience write-in casting contest, all of which takes a while to explain on the air. This, combined with the list of prizes (in merchandise, each with a fuliscale product plug) given each contestant, comprised about half the air time. The other half had Joyce Krause, Barbara Buchanan, Clarence Day Jr. and Elaine Spalding singing in not too pro a fashion. The winner, as selected by judges Otto Harbach, Vincent Lopez and Robert K. Adams (latter operator of the Fiint, Mich., Music Tent and awarder of the season's contract), was Day. Adams, incidentaiiy, also produces the show.

Dirk Fredericks' hosting sounded affected and the Bernard Dougall script was stiited and hokey. Doug Browning, as the announcer, had the embarrassing job of awarding to the contestants such gifts as a set of sponges and a pair of shoes. Glenn Osser orch did a yeomanlike job of backing up the contestants, and at least one of them needed it badly. Chan.

JOURNEY FROM YESTERDAY
With David Wayne, Aline MacMahon, Joe De Santis
Producer: Lynne Rhodes
Director: Harry Frazee
Writer: Miss Rhodes
30 Mins.; Sun. (27), 6 p.m.
NBC, from N. Y.

The Amaigamated Clothing Workers of America commemorated its 40th anni last Sunday (27) with a half-hour dramatization over NBC. Tagged "Journey from Yesterday," program traced the history of the union from the sweatshop era to present day. Organization's progress was reported as observed by an immigrant couple. Although the airer wasn't a dramatic standout, the advancement of the union and the benefits derived from it were clearly conveyed.

Aline MacMahon and Joe De Santis were okay as the immigrant coupie, whiie David Wayne, in the guise of their son, did a good job of narration. Program was carried by NBC as a public service. Jess.

THE CAPITOL REPORT
With Edward W. Bates, others
15 Mins.; Mon., 7 p.m.
Sustaining
WGY, Schenectady

New program, recorded at the Capitol in Albany, features quizzes of legislators and State officials by a panei of which Edward W. Bates, a newsman for 50 years, is moderator. David McConneii, iegislative correspondent for the N. Y. Herald Tribune, and Arvis Chalmers, holder of the same position with the Albany Knickerbocker News, teamed with Bates in questioning the second guest, Assembly Minority Leader Eugene J. Bannigan, of Brooklyn. Assembly Speaker Oswald D. Heck, of Schenectady, teed off the series.

It is a moderateiy listenable program for those interested in the Legislature, the State government and politics. Published, sharpened and tightened, with clearer identification of paneiists, show's punch would be stronger. The inevitable comparison will be made with "Meet the Press" (radio version of which is heard on WGY), but that seems neither fair nor realistic. The deep-voiced McConneli and the lighter-toned Bates put several pointed, pertinent queries to the articuiate Bannigan. So did Chalmers, who did not aiways sound dead center on the mike. Bates moderated a somewhat similar though longer program via WOKO, Aibany, for several years. Jaco.

THE WHISTLER
With Bill Forman, others
Producer: Joel Malone
Director: Gordon T. Hughes
25 Mins., Thurs., 8 p.m.
CBS, from N. Y.

CBS Radio created in recent weeks an atmosphere of builishness in its precincts through a hotshot saies department. Ever-forward and upward attitude is admirabie in an age when web aural is getting its hardest raps, but when programming doesn't display the same ebuiiience aii might be for nought. CBS programming brought back an oidie of the airwaves last Thursday (24) as a replacement for "Suspense" which was shifted into Tuesday to eat up part of the new "Stop the Music" vacancy. "The Whistler" was whistiing in the dark during its preem.

Half-hour of histrionics was standard fare once upon a frequency. There wasn't a single new twist in the moments of menace and plot triple dealing. It was complicated and, after so many years of "view-too," seemed overacted in aii cases. However, perhaps CBS is banking chiefly on the show's track record for commercial success; it's been in and out since '42.

Story on opera last Thursday was about a brace of biackmailers. Distaff side blackmaiis the blackmailer. She ends up dead, naturaliy, and it evolves into a convoiuting whodunit. Biil Forman's titie role has the same ironic tones remembered from before. Art.

GREAT MOMENTS FROM OPERA
With Ben Grauer, Mrs. William Randolph Hearst, Delia Regal, Guiseppe Campora, Robert Merrill
Producer: Lee Jones
30 Mins., Sun. (27), 6:30 p.m.
WRCA, N. Y. (transcribed)

The value of a pitch depends on the manner of presentation. The come-on for this 30-minute one-shot Sunday (27) was for Mrs. Wiiliam Randolph Hearst's Metop benefit for The Free Milk Fund For Babies and it was handied with taste. In fact Mrs. Hearst's chit-chat with emcee Ben Grauer was short and to the point (just a brief rundown of the org's aim) and she let the longhair guesters do the rest of the work.

There was a solid lineup of Met stars to compiete the half hour. Soprano Deli Rigal sang an aria from "Tosca" and a lullaby by Geni Sadero; Guiseppe Campora, tenor, aiso was on a "Tosca" kick, while baritone Robert Merriil switched over to the "Barber of Seville." Merrill switched over even farther, at the close of the show for a rousing workover of Tin Pan Aiiey's "I Beiieve." It's doubtful if even Rudoiph Bing objected to the inclusion of this pop item.

Dr. Roy Shield's orch backing was standout. Gros.

NOTHING BUT THE BEST
With Jack Huston, Willie Peterson
Producer: Peterson
Director-writer: Huston
15 Mins.; Mon. thru Fri., 6:30 p.m.
Sustaining
WCCO, Minneapolis

This quiet and enjoyable little interlude of music and gab actuaiiy represents a new twist here to disk jockeying. Skillfully handied by two WCCO staffers and affording agreeable substance for the lobar extremities, it has attained deserved popuiarity, as reflected by its expansion from two to five nights a week in response to public demand.

Coming at a time of the day when the average family is occupied by dining and the household head usuaiiy desires relaxation and when there's less of a tv iure away from the radio, it's appropriately in a soft and soothing mood. The result is easy and pieasant listening calculated to win an audience.

A theme ties the recordings together. Interiarded with the platter spinning are Peterson's listenable keyboard ticklings, usuaiiy as backgrounds for and suppiements to the recorded numbers and to the agreeable and not excessive chatter of Huston. In neat prose and soothing tones the latter briefiy introduces and explains the seiections and philosophizes gently and lightly.

Weii-developed theme of particular show caught was "color" and as songs inspired by it there was presented "Black Sapphire," "Golden Earrings" and "Deep Purpie" on wax and Peterson's live solo, "Biue Room." They were strung together by the patter of Huston whose voice and diction are easy to listen to and who propels a friendiy personaiity. Rees.

FEAR BRITISH TELEPIX QUOTA

'TV Campaigning Too Expensive'

Washington, March 1.

A panel of Congresswomen expressed differing views here last week as to whether Congress should be televised but were in agreement on one thing: campaigning via tv is too expensive.

Discussing the role of the broadcast media in politics before the D. C. Chapter of the American Women in Radio and TV, Rep. Martha Griffiths (D-Mich.) said she wasn't worried about members of Congress putting on a show because of the presence of tv cameras. The voters back home, she said, would "become so embarrassed if their Congressmen hammed it up" that that they'd take care of them at election time.

Delegate Betty Farrington (R) of Hawaii also felt that "exposing" the proceedings of Congress would be a good thing but Rep. Edith Green (D-Ore.) was against it. Some of the recent televised hearings, she said, have been "a disgrace." The public isn't ready for it, she added. As to use of the media for electioneering, Rep. Marguerite Church (R-Ill.) said she can't afford to buy either radio or tv time in her city of Chicago. However, the Congresswoman appears on a Sunday radio panel show when she goes home. She can accomplish more, she said, by "creeping up on them than by a frontal attack." She finds it more effective than buying time.

Rep. Leonor K. Sullivan (D-Mo.) said she would go on tv to support certain issues "when I can get the program free."

Delegate Farrington said the price of tv is "prohibitive." Anyway, she said, she'll wait until she is "better trained" in use of the media before using it in campaigns.

FCC Comr. Frieda Hennock, a guest of the panel, thought it "amazing" that nothing has been done about the cost of tv. The requirement of candidates to pay for time, she said, is a "vicious habit" on the part of broadcasters. She added that she has received "anonymous complaints" that some broadcasters are evading the law requiring that regular card rates apply to political time.

'Long Time No Help'

U. of Houston's Educ'l TV'er a One-Sided 400G 'Baby'

Houston, March 1.

The new board of education learned here that a $400,000 tiger the school district has been holding by the tail for two years is now getting crotchety.

That is the approximate investment of the U. of Houston in educational tv outlet KUHT-TV, in one way or another, without a penny's worth of help from its copartner and joint license holder, the Houston Public Schools.

The deal has been a sour one from the university's point of view, since the very beginning.

It teamed up with the school district to apply for an additional standing on the understanding that the partners would share construction costs, estimated at $200,000 for the schools.

A movement against spending "big" school tax money on tv gained headway. After the joint license had been granted, the school board reneged on the construction costs.

The school went ahead and built the station anyway with university funds. It offered the school board a straight "time" deal, optioning

Concert Tours For Taylor Dancers

The June Taylor Dancers from Jackie Gleason's CBS tv show have been set for a concert tour this fall by Jack Adams & Co. Troupe of 16 dancers, to be headlined, will be supported by Jay Marshall, as emcee; three or four variety acts, including a comedy turn, solo blues singer and accompanying group, and orch conducted by Sammy Spear, for an overall unit of 50 to 55 persons. Spear batoned for the Gleason show's stage appearance at the Paramount, N.Y., last fall.

Taylor group will do the novelty routines from the Gleason tv'er, such as the "Banjo" number. Adams has booked the troupe mainly into large halls and arenas, where it can scale to $15,000, but has included colleges with large auditoriums as well. Troupe will be playing on a $5,000 guarantee plus percentage.

Troupe will do a fall tour of two months, starting Oct. 3 in Troy, N.Y., playing the east and midwest through November. Beginning in January, it will do a second tour, beginning in the South and working west to the Coast.

Peterson Quits Bates On Coast; Holiner In

H. Austin Peterson has quit his partnership in charge of the Coast office of Ted Bates but will act as a consultant to the ad agency. Mann Holiner, former legit actor-writer and long linked with radio-tv productions, will succeed Peterson as manager of the Hollywood branch at month's end.

Peterson has been with Bates for 10 years.

Ask Dismissal Of Lamb Charges, License Renewal

Washington, March 1.

Attorneys for broadcaster-publisher Edward Lamb today (Tues.) formally requested FCC examiner Herbert Sharfman to dismiss proceedings and recommend that Lamb's broadcast license status be cleared.

The attorneys, J. Howard McGrath and Russell Brown, filed a motion declaring that the Commission failed to offer "substantial evidence" that Lamb in any way misrepresented himself when he told the agency he had never been affiliated with Communist organizations. No evidence has been presented, their motion asserted, to disprove Lamb's statements.

Motion, directed to that issue in proceedings which concerns commie charges, requests that the examiner immediately issue an initial decision recommending renewal of the license for Lamb's tv station WICU in Erie, Pa.

Lamb's attorneys also filed a petition to drop other issues in the proceedings. These deal with charges by Lamb that FCC lawyers told witnesses or prospective witnesses they were out to "get" Lamb and that they offered or caused to be offered bribes for false testimony.

It's expected that Commission counsel Joseph Kittner and Edward Brown will oppose the motion.

YANK DISTRIBS ON TIGHTROPE

Fears of a television film quota in Great Britain against imported programs are rising here and in the United Kingdom. Reports from a number of film distribs who've explored the potential of the British market and from Britain itself indicate that as commercial television swings into being there, the anticipated flood of American telepix may bring about local resentment to the point where a quota might be set up.

Demands for a quota were made when the Television Act was going through Parliament. While the Government refused to incorporate a quota in the original act, it gave assurances that as soon as there were signs of a foreign program invasion, it would set up a quota pronto. Current feeling for a quota is confined to Equity, which fears that packaged shows from th U. S. would produce immediate layoffs among its members. Assistant general secretary of British Equity Gerald Croasdell, for example, declared in Glasgow last week that the American programs, featuring stars familiar to the English public, would be grabbed at by commercial firms anxious to tee off in the virgin territory of British sponsored tv and to screen attractions as a counterblast to established BBC programs.

Concern of Equity doesn't extend—yet—to the British program packagers, but as production of telepix increases, the packagers may become a force in favor of a quota. That group is on the increase, as a matter of fact. Harry Alan Towers, for example, made his bow into telepix production last month with "The Scarlet Pimpernel" as a property for American and British tele, after years at the top of the heap of radio packagers. If the flow of American product in any way harms their chances for local exposure of their shows, they'll also be up in arms for a quota.

For the American distribs, the situation is one of delicacy. At the moment, it's not so much a matter of profit as it is a question of getting in on the ground floor. Revenues from Britain aren't expected to be so great as to have any effect on the monetary success of a series for many years to come. But each and every American telepix distributor wants in now, as a means of establishing contacts and doing business in Britain in anticipation of the time when the British playoff of American telepix does have a marked financial effect. While most Yank distribs are trying to place their shows on BBC and the commercial network, it's more for the purpose of setting up contacts than for the coin involved. No distrib, however aware of British fears, wants to stop talking to the British; he's afraid he might be left out in the cold later on.

Nor has the possibility of a quota

DuM 'Chance of Lifetime' In Miami Origination

DuMont is adding itself to the ranks of the get-out-of-town video advocates by a one-night stand in Miami for "Chance of a Lifetime." The half-hour makes it a "night under the palms" this Friday (4) on a live emanation.

The Miami talent showcasing is under the bankrollership of the Lentheric half of the Lentheric-Bromo Seltzer alternacy, and it all began as a joke. Emcee of the stanza, Dennis James, is vacationing down there and flipped off casually a 'why don't you come down here too?" Lentheric, evidently anxious for James to make his usual "parfum" pitch, took him seriously. Now packager Bob Jennings is flying whole staff southward along with last week's talent winner. Rest of cast is to be Miami-nurtured product.

Show will come from the San Souci Hotel and the pitch is the town's 40th anni as a resort.

Big 10, Pacific Coast Loops Hold The Line on Upped Regional Grid

Chicago, March 1.

College football has reached a crucial impasse with regard to video. The National Collegiate Athletic Assn.'s '55 tv grid plans, which were to be publicly unveiled Thursday (3), are apparently up in the air due to opposition spearheaded once more by the Big 10 Conference, allied with the Pacific Coast loop. Possibility looms that the tv committee, which hammered out new proposals in a series of meets in what is believed an attempt to satisfy to some degree the demands for more regional telecasts, may have to start over again.

It's understood that the NCAA-TV committee members are voting by wire today (Tues.) to hold up submission of the original plan for a referendum vote by the full org membership tomorrow as originally set. Indications are the committee will have to meet again in an attempt to work out further compromises with dissident Conferences. Failure of such key leagues as the Big 10 and PCC to approve the video package would make it unworkable.

According to leaks here, plan calls for seven nationally televised games, and regional telecasts on five dates, with the schools in making their own sponsorship deals. (This same report has been circulating in N. Y., where the NCAA-TV committee meets began less than a month ago.) Teams would be permitted only one appearance. The Big 10 has been holding out for complete regional jurisdiction and is arguing that single game appearances in the regional package as proposed by the NCAA-TV brains may run afoul of restraint of trade laws.

Caesar's Forum

Sid Caesar has been sounding off to intimates why the three-weeks-out-of-four tv. appearances under the NBC-TV schedule in which he's preempted once a month for a spectacular are far from satisfactory, at least as far as his own Monday 8 to 9 show is concerned.

Caesar's chief gripe is that the week following the spec invariably brings his low rating for the month. It takes him two more weeks to restore the rating back to a comfortable figure and just when he's got it back it again he's preempted for another spec.

That's why he's told the network he wants to go every week next season.

Philco-Goodyear TV Playhouse Sets New Writer Stable

At least three new-to-tv writers are coming up for early exposure on the Philco-Goodyear "TV Playhouse" series. The "new blood" is a must for the production team of Gordon Duff and Robert Alan Aurthur, who've brought in a couple of dozen shows since the ankling of head producer Fred Coe from the NBC Sunday night fixture. Some of the top names in the writing stable remain, but there's an acute need for new by-line credits, particularly in view of the show's upped competition from the CBS-General Electric show in the first half-hour (at 9 o'clock).

Producer Duff and associate reiner Aurthur — latter is also script editor and, of course, a top vidramatist himself — said that "Playhouse," while still dedicated to qualitative, "make 'em think" attractions by its mainline corps —sometimes referred to as "The Unhappiness Boys" because of the weighty sociological matter— cannot luxuriate "like some of the others" in high budgets. Of the full-hour dramatics, "Playhouse" is among the least expensive. There are no stars of big stripe, so the marquee values seldom enter the equation. The star is the "Playhouse" itself and the play is really

Exit of '1 Minute, Please' Accents DuM Problem On Station Clearance

Departure of "One Minute, Please" from DuMont recently points up the difficulty of the station clearance problem at the tele network. Urged forward by favorable reviews and hopes for at least a regional deal, the network held onto the unsponsored show for 33 weeks at an average cost of $1,400 per outing. Yet a final realization that insufficient major market stations were available to prospective clients on DuMont reportedly forced the net to give up the paneler.

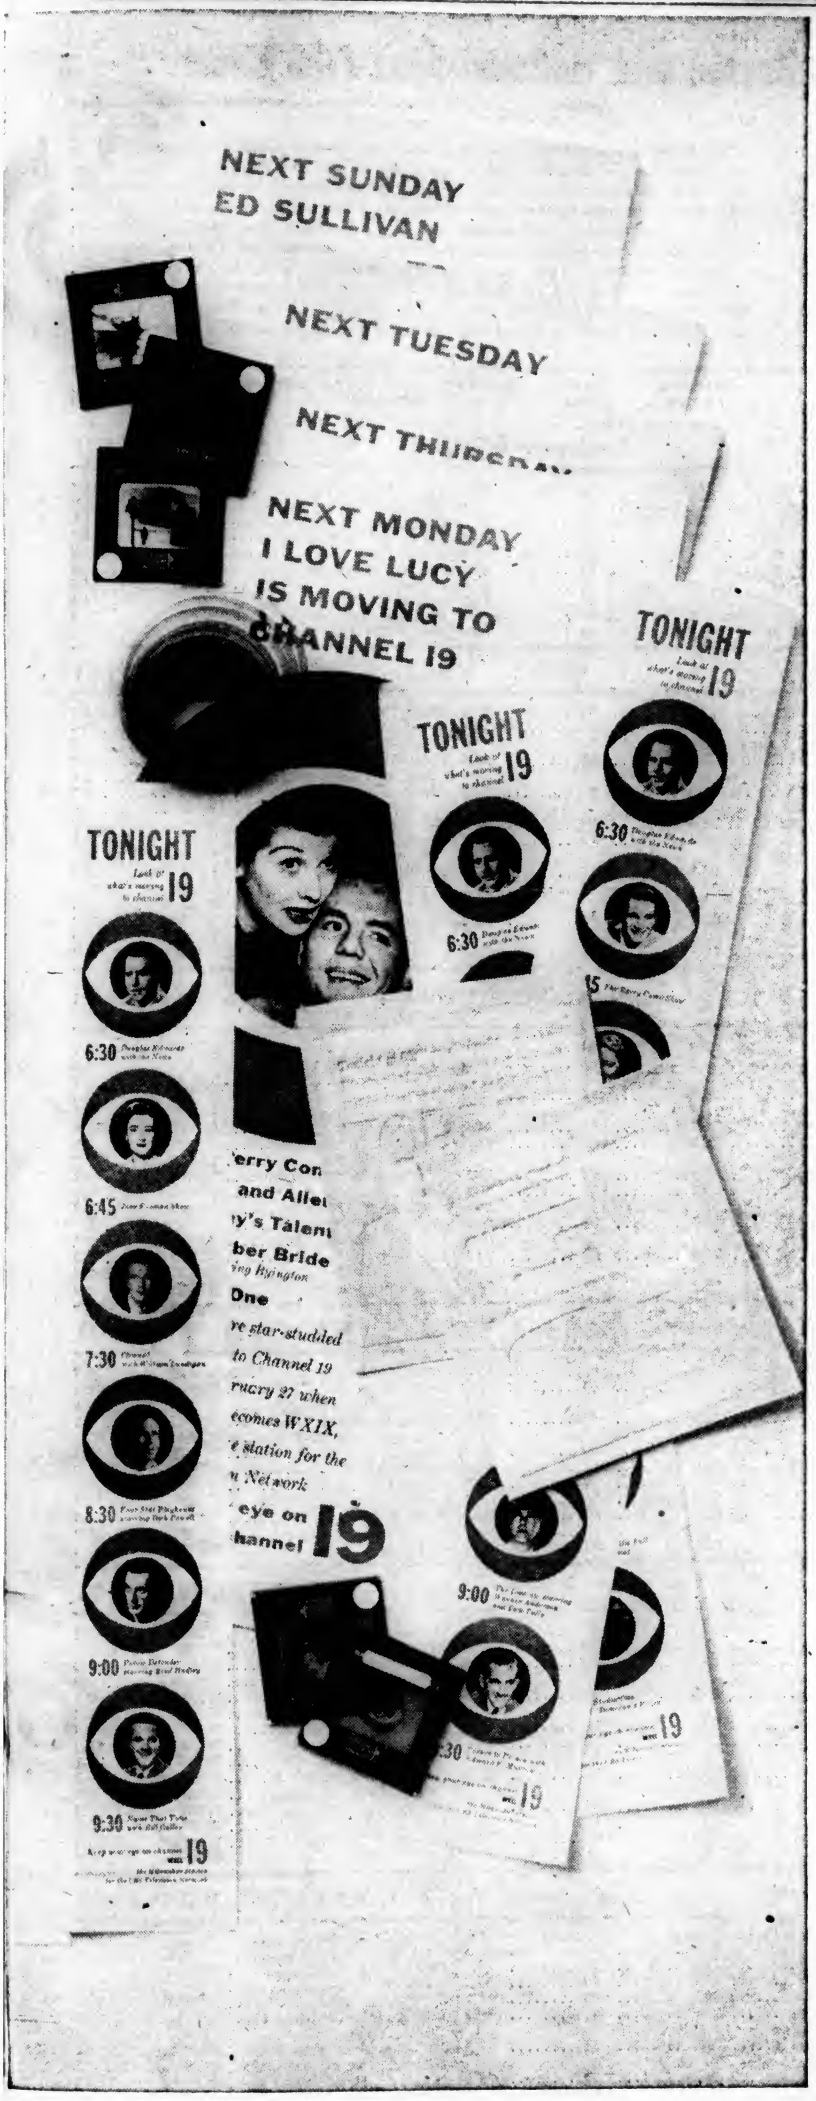
The moment DuMont let go, MCA hopped onto the package, which was originally on BBC radio and was brought over here by producer Harry S. Goodman. Where DuMont was concerned, Goodman couldn't cancel a five-year pact, but DuMont could. He said he "had to make a deal" with the net in order to completely dissolve the pact.

Dick Rubin at MCA is repping the panel show, which is understood to be carrying at least 50% of its cast and crew with it if sold.

Grogan to WNEW As Program Chief

Jack Grogan gets the nod as program topper of radio indie WNEW, N. Y., two weeks after Bill Kaland ankled due to policy conflict with chieftain Richard Buckley. The outlet maintains bringing in Grogan doesn't represent any cut in coin from that forked out to Kaland (who was probably the highest priced programmer among the country's audio independents). As a matter of fact, it's said that Grogan will probably be in for one of Buckley's profit-sharing deals.

Grogan was at WNEW for five years as production manager prior to '51, when he went to WNBC and WNBT for two years. He leaves a three-month-old post at N. W. Ayer to take the WNEW job. In addition to the fact that Grogan is an ex-WNEWite, Buckley seems to be strengthening the status of the former Bernis Judis-Ira Herbert "old line." He has named 20-year vet John Jaeger a veepee, serving as administrative aide to Buckley. Also Mel Stack's coin command was broadened when he got advanced from comptroller to station treasurer.



In a completely unrelated move, longtime salesman Bennett Korn quits the station to become exec veepee of Remington Records.

'STORK CLUB' SHIFTS TO SUN. TV SLOT

"Stork Club," which ABC-TV had intended to drop after March 5, gets a new lease on life at the network, shifting on March 13 to the Sunday 9:15-10 p.m. period in an expanded format. Web, which had the 45 minutes to fill via the cancellations of "Horizons" by Ciba Pharmaceutical and "Pantomime Quiz" by Revlon, decided to bring back "Stork" rather than fill in with either two shows or a new 45-minute. Following Walter Winchell, new spot gives the Sherman Billingsley stanza a natural segue.

Your campaign in Milwaukee

Last Sunday WXIX—Channel 19—became the Milwaukee station for the CBS Television Network and enabled Milwaukee viewers for the first time to see the network's complete line-up of the most popular stars and shows in television on WXIX.

Last week WXIX embarked on one of the biggest advertising campaigns ever launched behind a new station: a major newspaper campaign spread over a four-week period, together with an imposing outdoor campaign covering 64 billboards throughout the entire Milwaukee area.

The real backbone of this comprehensive campaign consists of a continuing barrage of both day and night on-the-air promotion announcements by the network's stars.

The whole purpose of this effort, of course, is to build audiences for your campaign in the important Milwaukee market. To get the most out of this market and the most popular program schedule in all television, get in touch with CBS Owned WXIX or CBS Television Spot Sales.

VARIETY - ARB City-By-City Syndicated and National Spot Film Chart

VARIETY'S weekly chart of city-by-city ratings of syndicated and national spot film covers 40 to 60 cities reported by American Research Bureau on a monthly basis. Cities will be rotated each week, with the 10 top-rated film shows listed in each case, and their competition shown opposite. All ratings are furnished by ARB, based on the latest reports.

This VARIETY chart represents a gathering of all pertinent information about film in each market, which can be used by distributors, agencies, stations and clients as an aid in determining the effectiveness of a filmed show in the specific market. Attention should be paid to time — day and time factors, since sets-in-use and audience composition vary according to time slot, i.e., a Saturday afternoon children's show, with a low rating, may have a large share and an audience composed largely of children, with corresponding results for the sponsor aiming at the children's market. Abbreviations and symbols are as follows: (Adv.), adventure; (Ch), children's; (Co), comedy; (Dr), drama; (Doc), documentary; (Mus), musical; (Myst), mystery; (Q), quiz; (Sp), sports; (W), western; (Wom), women's. Numbered symbols next to station call letters represent the station's channel; all channels above 13 are UHF. Those ad agencies listed as distributors rep the national spot sponsor for whom the film is aired.

The Plotkin Thickens

At perhaps no other time in broadcasting history, not even in the hassle over compatible color of the pros and cons of the tv station freeze, has the FCC found itself in the middle of so many diverse attacks, some of them even contradicting the others. In the past two weeks, these are some of the developments that have made the FCC initials sound more like Fractures, Concussions and Contusions than the Federal Communications Commission:

1. Last week's U. S. Court of Appeals decision in Washington invalidating the five-station limit on ownership by one company or individual.

2. The Congressional investigation (with the Plotkin and Jones reports) on monopoly in radio-tv, with the FCC being painted the heavy, more so than the networks or the powerhouse multi-station owners. FCC is betwixt-and-between on this one, what with Congress hollering monopoly and the courts simultaneously wiping out a rule by which the FCC sought to curtail monopoly.

3. The Lamb hearings, with the two recanting witnesses both pinning the blame for their earlier testimony, which they now claim to be false, on the FCC. Officials of the Commission, they said, urged them to give the false testimony. Latter of the testimony is now under Grand Jury observation, but whoever is telling the truth, the FCC still comes out with a black eye.

4. Confirmation of George C. McConnaughey as chairman of the Commission is still up in the air, with Democrats in the Senate giving McConnaughey a rough going over last week, with the FCC handling of the Lamb case (McConnaughey's been acting as chairman since late fall pending Senate confirmation) one of the salient points of the Demo attack.

Stating the Case for Film

No More Live Packages in Prockter Stable; Cites Celluloid's Many Advantages

Trend from live to film, with its residual advantages as well as a greater sales flexibility, was underlined last week by Bernard Prockter, who disclosed that all of his future packages would be done on film. Reason for the switch, as Prockter put it, is that when and if a network run is cancelled, he can still recoup on his productions "instead of seeing them go up in smoke," and the pre-sale flexibility film provides by virtue of being able to sell it nationally or put it into syndication.

As of the moment, only one Prockter show is still live, "Big Story." "Treasury Men in Action" converted to film last year while continuing as a network show, "Man Behind the Badge" switched to film following its network cancellation and went into syndication vi the MCA-TV route. Latest Prockter entry is on film: it's "TV Reader's Digest," in which he owns a half share with producer Chester Erskine. And in the works for this year are six new packages, all of them on film.

Discussing the residual factor, Prockter pointed out that were Chevrolet, for example, to cancel on "T-Men," he could put the 39 films already completed into syndication and recoup there, or even continue in production for syndication of new programs as well as the old 39. Or if, Prockter pointed out, "Big Story" had b en on film from the beginning, even if he only got $1,000 per picture in the rerun market, he'd wind up with about $250,000 on the basis of five years of production.

Pre-sale flexibility is another factor in the trend to film. A new package, if a national sale doesn't come along, can be placed into syndication under the right distribution deal. Prockter's well aware of the pitfalls of syndication (he operated his own distribution firm for a period, selling it out later), but he's also aware of its advantages. At the moment he's got both "Badge" and "Playhouse 15" in syndication, and is happy about the results. "It's all a matter of keeping production costs down when you're in syndication," Prockter said, and he feels he's accomplished this on "Badge" and can do so with his new ones.

Naturally, a national or network sale of a show is preferable to syndication, and most packagers will hold out for a national deal on a new show as long as they can. But the fact that it's on film provides some reassurance that they can always make a syndication deal, either as a bail-out measure or as a profitable venture when the right deal for financing or guarantees comes along. In other words, film in the pre-sale stage enables the packager to have two avenues of approach or sales outlets for his property rather than one as in live.

Clyde McCoy Show

Denver, March 1.

Clyde McCoy, famed horn man and father of the "Sugar Blues" record that sold more than 3,000,000, who recently retired from show business to live here, will host the Saturday night movies over KBTV.

On the air at 10 p.m., McCoy will tell of experiences in the show world, and will use name guesters when he can snare them. Program will be labeled "Sugar Blues Theatre."

Chi's WBBM-TV 4G 'Town' Spree In Late Nite Bid

Chicago, March 1.

WBBM-TV isn't sparing the horses in its drive to become a major factor in the weeknight 10 to 11 block, probably the most highly competitive period in the local tele run-for-the-money. CBS station is pouring in close to $4,000 a week into its "In Town Tonight" musical strip in the 10:15 slot in the push to build it up as the anchor display for the entire hour, which includes two news shows and Irv Kupcinet's interview session.

For the past three months, "Town" has been using name guests along with regulars Jim Conway, Len Dresslar and Pat Scot, and is really shooting the works this week. Jerry Colonna is appearing nightly with added attractions each evening. Eddie Fontaine guested last night (Mon.); Johnny Maddox is in tonight (Tues.); Dorothy Collins appears tomorrow (Wed.), the Three Chuckles and Billy Vaughn close out the week.

Coin expenditure for talent and production is astronomical by local standards, especially considering the crossboarder is presently sustaining three nights out of the five. But the ratings have been inching up with the hope the entire 60 minutes will benefit from the

Schwimmer Exits WM To Join Ashley-Steiner

Alden Schwimmer has exited the Wiillam Morris Agency to join the Ashley-Steiner office to handle writers, producers and directors. That's par for the course, since both Ted Ashley and Ira Steiner are also "graduates" of the WM setup.

Schwimmer appointment is in line with Ashley-Steiner bid to upgrade activity among writers, producers, directors, with a similar Coast appointment on tap.

LEGISLATION TO CURB MULTIPLE TV STATION OWNERSHIP LOOMS

By JACK LEVY

Washington, March 1.

Legislation seems to be in the cards to curb multiple ownership of tv stations. That is the consensus of reactions to the earth-shaking decision of the U. S. Court of Appeals last week upholding the Storer Broadcasting Co.'s attack on the power of the FCC to set a limit on the number of broadcast licenses which can be held by one interest.

The court's ruling, coming at a time when the Congressional climate is strongly anti-monopoly, may have tremendous repercussions. One legislative source said it "opens up a Pandora box which will affect every network and every multiple owner in the country."

What happens now could depend on whether the FCC is willing to take a stand on the monopoly question. The Court of Appeals decision definitely puts the agency on a spot. Not only must it decide whether to take the case to the Supreme Court but also whether to ask Congress to reinforce its authority. For there is no certainty that the Supreme Court will consent to review the lower court's ruling, let alone reverse it. Lawyers are divided on this. Some feel that review will not be granted because the three judges who ruled on the Storer case not only were unanimous but also issued a reasonable, if not persuasive, opinion. Others feel certain the high tribunal would accept review and reverse the lower court.

Should the FCC rush to Congress for help, there's no telling what the legislators might do. In the current atmosphere, it would not be at all surprising if measures are offered to reduce the ownership celling to five, four, or even three stations. The recent report prepared by Harry Plotkin for the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, it's pointed out, recommended that the Commission consider holding networks to three owned and operated tv stations.

There's also the possibility, regardless of what FCC does, that an influential Senator may introduce a bill on multiple ownership and at the same time "request" that the FCC withhold action on applications by multiple broadcasters until his measure has been acted on. If such a bill were offered now it would be "alive" until the present Congress expires in 1956. In the meantime, his "request" would serve, in effect, as a directive to the Commission. There's precedence in Congress for such action.

'More Than Bargained For'

One observation frequently heard here since the decision is that Storer, in winning his case before the Court of Appeals, "may have gotten more than he bargained for." The ruling, one source remarked, has "turned the heat" on multiple owners. As the only broadcaster with the full complement of seven tv stations, Storer could be more affected by legislation than any other.

On the other hand, if the decision is not reversed, Storer may be able to get a sixth VHF station. The Court ruling requires the Commission to give Storer a hearing on his application for channel 10 in Miami (rejection of which prompted the court test). Although Storer has since acquired an ultra high station in Miami under the "five plus two" relaxation, it appears that the Commission will be required to reopen the hearings on the channel 10 contest although the record was closed last August and an Examiner's decision is due soon.

Under the Court's decision, Storer may apply for a VHF station in Miami and still hold on to his ultra high outlet in the same city. However, under the Commission's duopoly rule which apparently is not affected by the decision, Storer would have to dispose of his UHF if he obtained a VHF station.

The possibility of a "surge" of purchases by networks or other multiple station holders as a result of the court's decision is discounted here. Fear of legislation or Commission denial after hearings, it's believed, will discourage big operators from acquisitions un-

N.Y. Daily News In Radio-TV Upgrading Via Space Expansion

Starting yesterday (Tues.) the N. Y. Daily News upped its cross-the-board (Monday-Friday) radio-tv coverage substantially, with a full column being added plus more art. No changes expected in the weekend editions, however. Under the new plan, editor Ben Gross will limit himself to show-catching plus comments on personalities and trends. Will do his regular interview for the Sunday side and pitch in on fast-breaking news stories. Sid Shalit, assistant ed, will ride herd on daily newsgathering and feature items, and with his aides will fill the additional space with news stories, chatter, a box on the best "tv movies" of the day, advance program blurbs and name talent thumbnails.

Separation of appraisal and news follows the trend on some large metropolitan dailies. A few months ago the N. Y. Times' Jack Gould, while continuing as the critic (triweekly plus Sunday), was divorced from the editing chore, with that going to J. P. Shanley, who also writes a Sunday feature. Val Adams is the news byliner.

Les Atlass Fights 128G U. S. Tax Rap

Washington, March 1.

Petition filed in United States tax court here last week by H. Leslie Atlass, CBS's Chicago veepee, disclosed the Internal Revenue Service is seeking $128,284 in additional taxes from the Columbia executive. Atlass is challenging the government's claim that he took unallowable tax deductions during the years 1946 through 1949.

Revenue service has nixed Atlass's deductions during the four years for alleged losses of $121,423 in the operation of his Sunny Ridge farm. Also nixed was $84,633 in entertainment expenses for the period, including $42,959 for the operation of his yacht for business purposes.

WABC's 'Entertainment' Gets Some Free Rides From Rival Networks

"Entertainment," the two and one-half-hour local daytimer on WABC-TV, the ABC-TV flagship in New York, pulled off some free plugs from CBS-TV and NBC-TV shows last week. Both the show and the station and network were plugged on the CBS-TV "Robert Q. Lewis" segment and Steve Allen's NBC-TV "Tonight" last Thursday (24). Program bowed Monday (28).

Plugs came about via the exploitation campaign for the show plotted out of the station's publicity and promotion departments. Six models dressed in medieval page costumes and bearing trumpets with "Entertainment" banbanners on them were sent around town. All of 'em hit 50 key agencies, delivering brochures on the show. Then they fanned out, hitting tele shows of other networks. One gal got her picture taken in front of the Johnny Vietor Theatre by NBC's "Today" cameras. Gal assigned to the Lewis show did better, getting interviewed by Robt. Q. and pilling up a generous portion of plugs. Girl assigned to the Allen show did as well, via one of those audience interviews that are Allen's specialty.

WATV'S HI-V COIN

WATV, Newark, has found a new "specialized market." HI-V frozen foods has inked for a twice monthly Thursday night telecast with a strictly for-Irishmen flavor.

Show, done with the assistance of Seton Hall U.'s Institute of Irish Culture, preems on March 10.

Balto's Musical Chairs

Baltimore, March 1.

In a week marked by personnel changes as time reps and talents traded jobs, Baltimore showed a game of musical chairs among the radio and tv stations in the area. Chuck Thompson, veteran WITH sportscaster, left that station to go with WCBM on Al Stevens show with assignment of calling Oriole Ball games on AM this summer. Joel Chaseman, public service director and sportscaster of WAAM-TV will take over Thompson's old stand.

Dick Rudolph, sales manager of indie WITH becomes sales manager of WCBM and Bill Pirie trades jobs with him to leave WCBM for WITH. From WFBR, Dick Kelland leaves field to go into private industry; ditto Al O'Brien of station WBAL. Further changes are still in rumor stage.

McConnaughey On the Griddle But OK Looms

Washington, March 1.

Senate Interstate Commerce Committee is expected to recommend confirmation of the President's appointment of George C. McConnaughey as chairman of the FCC next week. McConnaughey has been serving as chairman under a recess appointment since October. He was nominated to fill out the unexpired term of former Comr. George E. Sterling, which ends June 30, 1957.

Whether there will be opposition to confirmation by the Senate itself is not known but such a possibility was indicated by the attitude of Sen. Estes Kefauver (D.-Tenn.) in questioning McConnaughey at a hearing last week before the Committee. Kefauver is not a member of the Committee.

Kefauver made it clear he was not satisfied with the way the FCC has been handling the Lamb case, and he seemed to hold McConnaughey, who was not a member of the Commission when the proceeding started, responsible. His hostile questioning of McConnaughey prompted Sen. John W. Bricker (R.-O.) to suggest that Kefauver was laying groundwork to "disqualify" McConnaughey.

But Kefauver's main attack on McConnaughey was made in a series of questions concerning his eligibility for the FCC post in view of his former legal work for a Bell system telephone company in rate cases before the Ohio Public Utilities Commission.

"Do you think it would be good public policy to have a congregation of NBC and CBS attorneys running the FCC? Kefauver asked.

"No, I don't think that," McConnaughey replied. He explained that he also has represented the public as chairman of the Ohio PUC.

Committee Chairman Warren Magnusen (D.-Wash.), Sen. A. S. Monroney (D.-Okla.) and Sen. John O. Pastore (D.-R.I.) took McConnaughey over the coals in question-

WPIX MAY EXPAND ON 'LITTLE RASCALS'

WPIX, N.Y. tele station, is mulling an extension of its half-hour cross-the-board exposure of Interstate's "Little Rascals" into the full 5 to 6 p.m. strip, giving the batch of 10 and 20-minute shorts roughly 10 showings each a year. Through use of these old Hal Roach "Our Gang" productions, the N. Y. News-owned station achieved ratings at least four points higher than it ever got with former afternoon leaders, "Ramar of the Jungle" and Liberace.

The 5:30 to 6 stanza, called "Clubhouse Gang," averaged in its second week via ARB about a 10.4.

AUTO SHOW
Producer: Chet Cooper
Directors: Ed Moore, Lew Klein
150 Mins., Sun. 2 p.m.
WFIL-TV, Philadelphia

The third annual tv auto show sponsored by the Philadelphia Inquirer and WFIL-TV paraded its 1955 models in alphabetical order and added the glamor cars and foreign models for a finale. The concentration on grills and upholstery, the unvarying descriptive phrasing (long low lines, visibility, etc.) coupled with a dearth of price listings made for a sameness that began with Buick and woundup with Willys.

Lensers had little regard for live talent, with hardly a performer coming on whole. Vic Dexter, for instance, was transformed into a one-armed juggler. Unusual bit was the Chevrolet commercial in which the car had a speaking part "I am an engine, I eat miles, etc." Roger Price droodled for Chrysler. Miss America (Lee Ann Meriwether) and Ginger Steen (International College Queen) should have stayed home and studied Betty Furness.

John Cameron Swayze explained work that goes into his news program. Bob Elliot and Ray Goulding (Bob and Ray) suffered from weak material. Seasoned announcers and newscasters came through best — Tom Reddy, High Reilly, John Facenda and others, who worked straight. Talent is not the strong point of Auto Show telecast, which is essentially a means of getting a display of the 1955 models into the livingroom. All cars showed film clips of road performances and slides and films were colorcast for first time. Live portions of show, however, were in black and white.

HI-CLUB
With Ed Allen
Producers: Allen, Kay Andrews
Director: Russ Hunt
30 Mins.; Sat., 12 Noon
PURE MILK ASSN.
WBKB, Chicago
(Western)

Like the tiny tots with a raft of tv beamings in their direction, the teenagers are now getting the big video woo on the local front. Newest addition to the high school servings is this neatly packaged half-hour hosted by Ed Allen. Although borrowing from the deejay format of its predecessors, "Hi-Club" has a bit more substance than a straight musical layout, with its career guidance segments, fads and fashions palaver and other devices catching some of the fiavor of the teenage world.

For example, portion of session viewed (26) was an interview with a prof from the Illinois Institute of Technology on job opportunities in the engineering field. Although Allen hurried the quiz along too fast, it provided a lot of info. Another department that could be developed further is the kids' reports on the latest fads and sartorial gimmicks at their respective schools. While he presses a bit too much, Allen works nicely with the youngsters in the various participation devices such as the "Mystery Face" bit.

Affair won't register any big ratings but it's a compatible vehicle for the Pure Milk Assn.'s blurbs along "good health" lines. Dave.

A SALUTE TO ENGINEERS
With Bob Ryan, George Grim, others
Producer-writer: John A. Young Director: James Nelson
30 Mins.: Sun (20), 3 p.m.
Minneapolis Honeywell Co.
KSTP-TV, Minneapolis & St. Paul

Via gab and film this locally produced unusual documentary National Engineers' Week tv offering paid tribute to the nation's engineers for their laboratory accomplishments. Explaining and showing strikingly what this work means in increased living comforts, improved national defense and general progress, the program emerged as a glowing salute to the engineering profession from Minneapolis Honeywell, one of the world's largest manufacturers of heat regulators, air conditioning, plane and other precision instruments and defense gadgets.

Interviewing a company executive, George Grim, an ace KSTP staffer, paved the way for Honeywell's own produced film which takes viewers through the company's laboratories and reveals the work being done there. Origin of various precision instruments, their development stages and their use receive effective film treatment.

The accompanying narrative and commentary by John A. Young, who wrote and produced the film, make for clarity and elucidation. Incidentally, among the devices on which Honeywell engineers now are toiling is one which permit automatic air flights. Rees.

JACK EIGEN SHOW
Producer: Eigen
Director: Bud Lotzer
90 Mins.; Mon., 12 Midnight
Participating
WGN-TV, Chicago

After hacking out a niche of sorts at the helm of the latenight radio interview via WMAQ from the Chez Paree lounge the past three and a half years, Jack Eigen is getting a weekly tele exposure of the same format on WGN-TV. It's the AM'er with sight added and as such should draw from the gabber's aural crossboarder following.

Despite the cramped layout in the Chez's side room, the tv showcasing comes off okay with Eigen working from his usual podium, surrounded by guests sitting at the tables. Nitery atmosphere is for real, complete with tinkling glasses. Like with the radio show, Eigen's routine is undeviating. He opens with his "Broadway-Hollywood-Chicago" gossip "column," reads a bit of his mail, airs a couple of "gripes in the night" and chins with the nightowl celebs he's able to round up. Between times there's a brace of records; a sprinkling of phone calls.

Bulk of the 90 minutes is given over to the interview sessions which under Eigen's canny, if not always genteel probings, ramble all over the lot and provide the affair with its "what'll they say next" excitements. On this go Eigen had trouble getting any fuses lighted during the first portion of the show before singer Sylvia Simms brightened things up with her "Awright, so I'm chubby" patter and Jack Carter spun off some throwaway gags during the table hopping. Earlier Toni Gilman and Pat Vance's byplay on the femme's career vs. homemaker role was hardly the stuff to keep people awake after midnight and the host's quickie visit with Richard du Bois, the "Mr. America" of the Mae West entourage, couldn't be classified as sparkling.

A couple of the sponsors work their own spiels and add nothing to the evening's enjoyment.
Dave.

ROMPER ROOM
With Gloria Flood
Producer: Bert Claster
Director: Roger Shope
60 Mins., Mon.-thru-Fri., 11 a.m.
Participating
WABC-TV, N. Y.

Packager Bert Claster has given plenty of room to romp for his "Romper Room," having sold the show in about 15 teiemarkets at one time or another since starting it two years ago in Baltimore on WBAL-TV. Stanza, which targets juves in the four to six year age range and is running concurrently in other markets, is part of WABC-TV topper Ted Oberfeider's daytime shuffle. The preem (28) hour shaped up mostly as a do-it-yourself for kids, with occasional moral fillips cleverly included by pert ex-schoolteacher femcee Gloria Flood.

This tot tv'er was based in a simulated kindergarten which housed a half dozen preschoolites who observed and played along with Miss Flood. She employed that snail's pace verbalizing which "Ding Dong" Frances Horwich telepopularized among the younger set. However, the 26-year old WABC-TV employee slipped off base a bit in going too rapidly (even counting repeats) in her handicraft expeditions for the tiny ones to grasp fully. Of note was that she implemented her work with tools the mother will normally have around the house, (e.g. pots, boxes, etc.) thus keeping to a minimum, at least for the launcher, the number of items that might be a boon to the merchandiser and a rap on ma's pocketbook.

To fill the hour—and provide a not unweicome but not especially educational twist—a Felix the Cat cartoon was exposed. These pix are when getting right down to it, pretty inane, but their animation keeps kids occupied.

Miss Flood is a bright, obviously well-trained and pleasant gal. She pitched some bubble bath for tots as if it were the most essential item on the family shopping list. Saccharine heights were achieved here. Art.

Inside Stuff—Radio-TV

It'll be a case of an "unsung hero" when the tv teeoff of a new American opera, "The Mighty Casey," is presented by "Omnibus" next Sunday (6) on CBS. Danny Scholl, in the title role of an opera based on Ernest L. Thayer's classic "Casey At the Bat" poem (made famous by the late De Wolf Hopper as an afterpiece in his legiters), will do the part in pantomime. E. G. Marshall is cast as the watchman.

Composer is William Schuman, prexy of Juilliard School of Music, with libretto by Jeremy Gury, v.p., of Benton & Bowles ad agency. The work got a showcasing in Hartford a coupie of years ago. Conducting will be Samuci Krachmalnik, music director of Menotti's "Saint of Bleecker Street" on Broadway.

Television Programs of America exec v.p. Mickey Sillerman has gone and turned actor—via a 20-minute sales film on TPA's "Captain Gallant of the Foreign Legion," which bowed a couple of weeks ago on NBC-TV for H. J. Heinz Co. Film is being used to seli the show to stations outside the Heinz lineup as a syndicated property. Sillerman is featured in the production, making the sales pitch, lining up the publicity and merchandising aids and then introing clips of star Buster Crabbe and his son, Cuffy, who's featured in the series. Pic was produced by QED Productions, with TPA's ad consultant, Pete Zanphir, as exec producer and writer. It was preemed last week in a press showing in New York, and within the next week, TPA will have some 50 prints in the hands of its salesmen. Angie on the film is, if you're in the film business, why not use film to sell?

There's a "Race of the Roses" on between Hazel Bishop and Congress. The cosmetic outfit is springing its "Rose Red" lipstick in the spring as a million-smackers tv-plus campaign boosting it as the new glamor shade. Meanwhile, a couple of legislators are pitching the red rose as the official national flower.

House of Hazel launching the drive on its fifth anni.

Honorary one-day bat boys for the forepart of the baseball season will be scouted by WRCA (radio and tv) by arrangement with the N. Y. Giants and Brooklyn Dodgers. The baliclubs and the NBC owned & operated have worked out a letter competition based on "Why I want to be a bat boy" gimmick for kids between 8 and 14. There'll be field ceremonies and prizes.

Julia Meade is doing a Sullivan. Although she's the femme plugpretty of Lincoln-Mercury product on Ed Sullivan's "Toast of Town" on CBS-TV, her upcoming Florida safari will be on behalf of cosmetician Richard Hudnut, the rotator with Lucky Strike on NBC-TV's "Hit Parade." She'll hit Tampa, St. Petersburg and Lakeland March 9-11, coupled with Vaughn Monroe, who'll be shouting about RCA wares on local tv shows, in stores and other appearances. Arrangements for the parallel trek were made by Kenyon & Eckhardt, agency for both sponsors (also reps Lincoln-Mercury).

Miss Meade may go out for the automaker later on.

Job placement service is stretching into radio-television. Walter A. Lowen, a specialist in the general vocational field for some 30 years, has formed a department devoted to pitching creative personnel at AM-TV organizations. Heading the unit as placement manager is Joan Sinclaire, who's produced "Leave It to the Girls," "Battie Page of the Air" and the Lisa Ferraday show, among others. Outfit will cater to writers, producers-directors, announcers and program and station managers.

Lowen authored "How and When to Change Your Job Successfully."

Tele Follow-Up Comment

Though Eugene O'Neill's "The Emperor Jones" is one of his most widely played dramas (on the coilege circuit and in other amateur circles), it's paradoxically a difficult one to stage. "Kraft Theatre" must have discovered that in the course of their production on NBC-TV last Wednesday (23). A good try, and in spots quite powerfui, but it didn't come off with continuity and impact.

For one thing, it's very nearly a monolog — a great radio drama, but tough for tv. For another, it's got the ghost scenes as Jones sees his past whirl by during his frightening night in the forest, and though one might think that if television can do anything well it can put across technically perfect phantoms, somehow the ghost did not come off with authority and as an integral part of the drama. And finaliy, Ossie Davis, though at times powerful and moving as Jones, couldn't overcome what at times amounted to incoherence in the scripting and staging.

Producer-director Fielder Cook, who scored so strongly with "Patterns" a couple of weeks back, has to take the rap on this one. In the scripting and staging, the transition from the self-assured nobody-can-beat-me seif-styled emperor of a Caribbean isle to a frightened, half-crazed runaway came too quickly. Result was that the rest of the hour had to be devoted to showing Davis in his varying phases of hysteria, something that would tax anyone's acting ability and any viewer's perserverance. It was practicaliy a one-man show, but Everett Sloane was okay in the key supporting role. Rex Ingram showed authority in his outing and the Curtis James dance troupe was topflight. Scenic design was terrific, ditto the lighting and camerawork. Show was done in color, and the black-and-white, seen at this end, was highly compatible.

Actually, though Cook and the J. Walter Thompson production staff are on the receiving end of the criticism, they should also rate some accolades. Not so much an "E" for Effort as an E for Experimentation. For a show like "Jones," even if it didn't come off quite expertly, rates a bow from the waist for exploring the offbeat and the new in television. More of it is welcome, and better luck next time. Chan.

Broadway columnists are no novelty even in Paris but a Broadway-style columnist from Paris, yciept Art Buchwald, of the Continental edition of the N.Y. Herald Tribune, obviously is. He's now as much a port of cail for show biz Americans abroad as the Ritz Bar and VARIETY's own Gallic muggs around the George Cinq. Accordingiy, with Buchwald now on the local scene, having junketed over with the first trans-Atlantic showplane in history (about 20 ardent, and loaded, French Americanophiles paid around $700 round trip just to come from Paris to Broadway to see "Fanny"), Buchwald is making his three weeks in the U.S. count. On his Steve Allen NBC-TV personal he emceed a French fashion parade and got paid off in a strong plug for his "Art Buchwald's Paris" (collection of his columnar jettings). Book is apparently getting a second-time-around baliyhoo, keyed to the upcoming tourist season, after a slow sales start pre-Xmas, when initially published. (Apparently a book, like a nostrum or a cigaret needs the same kind of radio-tv exploitation campaign, as witness what Fred Allen has done for his "Treadmili to Oblivion" with beaucoup cuffo personals to merchandise the book and Bob Hope ditto with his "Have Tux, Will Travel").

Buchwald had a nice style in front of Allen's mike, utilizing "white lace" as a pleasant catchphrase after the French (no parlez Anglais) models "explained" the new duds from the top couturiers. He also reprised one of his columns, anent installment piane tourism; in answer to Allen's query wha' hoppens if the passenger defaults on a payment, Buchwald said he heard "the airlines had some brainwashing apparatus which nullified all they had seen, and besides which they take away all their postcards." Incidentally, Mike Todd is giving the visiting columnist a Chez Buchwaid shindig at Luchow's, with a fractured French-type of menu ("translated" by this reviewer) to fit the one-night-stand Gailic remake of the famed 14th St. German eatery. Abel.

Ed Sullivan lassoed a lot of talent for Sunday's (27) "Toast of the Town" on CBS-TV. The buik of it came off extremeiy well, and some of it, particulariy one high-priced name, somehow got lost in the shuffle. There was a hurried atmosphere about this display that mitigated against the total effect.

In the case of Eartha Kitt, she's a pretty high-priced act to open a show, and with her rep, she should be able to carry on her own. The opening siot had Miss Kitt doing "My Heart's Delight" with a lot of disturbing sideplay going around her. The action contributed little to the number. Her finale, a wordy recitative, could have easiiy gotten by but for the fact that the cameras focused on Sullivan during the closing chord. The entire effect was lost.

Carol Haney, assisted by Peter Gennaro, did a sprightly charming and humorous bit of terping to "Sunny Side of the Street." It was easily one of the highspots of the show.

"Young and Foolish" duet from "Plain and Fancy" should use longer lines at the boxoffice. Gloria Marlowe and David Daniels charmed with the "Y&F" ballad and Shirl Conway and Nancy Andrews did a kitchen scene that had a lot of movement, tunefulness and comedy.

From the disk world, the De John Sisters did "A Present for Bob" and "No More." Visually they're not up to their aural accompiishments. Another vocal session was by the Citadel Glee Club. Coilegians gave a good account of themselves with their schooi song and "Lord's Prayer."

The major comedy, by Biiiy De Wolfe came over weii. His "Mrs. Murgatroyd" bit was an excellent delineation of the hausfrau drinker. Jose.

Lisa Kirk needed all her poise, and she has lots, to cope with the asinine, right word, "situation" handed her in last Saturday's (26) Texaco session. This had Jimmy Durante mistaking a fat charwoman for Lisa Kirk, and vice versa, and getting both women down under the piano scrubbing the floor. How embarrassing can "comedy" material be! Further waste of Miss Kirk, since it denied her a chance to sing, had her joining Durante and Eddie Jackson for the oh, so, frequent cakewalk finale. While Miss Kirk's gams are gorgeous (if you saw last week's backpage of VARIETY you already know) it's not to see her legs or to see her strut that anw admirer would tune in. The gal is a song stylist! Nor is this the first time the Durante production team has failed to make happy use of guest talent.
Land.

Fred Waring's monthly stanzas on the CBS-TV "General Electric Theatre" all have a decided uniformity of style which, perhaps, militates against any surprises or excitement. The Waring style, however, is also marked by a musicality and a tastefulness that give his sessions an eye-catching neatness, especially since they come around so infrequently.

Last Sunday's session (27) was typical. Framed around a tour across the country, the Waring orchestra and chorus, with an important assist from the ballet troupe, dished up an attractive repertoire of vocals and hoofology. Highpoints of the show were the swinging production number built around "Chicago" and the finale, which spotlighted the Statue of Liberty in an effective number, "Give Me Your Tired, Your Poor." Other musical numbers presented in lyrical and dignified manner were "God's Country," "Song In My Heart" and "Dear Hearts And Gentle People." Herm.

'KENTUCKY STORY' SET FOR 28-STATION RIDE

Louisville, March 1.

Series of radio airings telling the story of Kentucky and its state government to Kentuckians is to start this week on some 28 stations which have indicated they would use the transcribed series. Known as "The Kentucky Story," the 13-week series will cost the state $9,100 to produce.

Stations will carry the transcribed shows as a public service, and Mack Sisk, director of the State Division of Publicity, said the state will be rendering radio stations a service similar to that provided for the press and wire services in the way of news and information.

TV's 'Operation M.D.'

Put a hospital, a sanitorium and a laboratory all together and sooner than you can say scalpel you have "Operation M.D." on the tv networks Monday night (28). This is muscling into the domain of "Medic" which, however, is first in, springing its caduceus at 9 o'clock on NBC. Comes the 9:30 segue and Robert Montgomery was presenting Jackie Cooper, who's discovered harboring TB on the eve of his debut as a major league ballplayer (thus putting the NBC hour in the timely spring training groove as well). Then, as it must to many viewers, there's a switchover to the CBS "Studio One" at the 10 p.m. mark, since a half-hour of the Montgomery show is better than none at all, despite the fact that sanitorium plot was just beginning to thicken and Cooper was proving once again that he's one of tv's most knowing players along with a good cast. "Studio One" focused on "Donovan's Brain," a two-time film from Curt Siodmak's grim science-fiction novel with Wendell Corey in the lead.

For the purpose of this clinical report, "Medic" rates a little noise on several counts. It was the first in the Worthington Miner (exec producer) series under Miner's direction, the first historical biography in the "drugnet" groove (and hence in the reflective class rather than contemporary), and a video coming-out for actor Arthur Space as Dr. William Stewart Halstead, the surgeon and medical inventor who discovered the use of cocaine as an anesthetic, became addicted to the drug and was finally rehabilitated to go on to fame. Otherwise, "Dr. Impossible" (the strange title) was not up to "Medic's" standard, while upping the stock of Space as a thesp. Good support in Richard Garland, Peter Miller, Wendell Holmes and Kathleen Mulqueen. An interesting opportunity to expand on famed Dr. Welch of Baltimore's Johns Hopkins Hospital was all but lost in devotion to the main theme. Trau.

JOHN HENRY FAULK
With Jeannie Johnson, others Producer: Arnold Peyser
Director: Roger Shope
60 Mins., Mon.-thru-Fri., 9 a.m.
Participating
WABC-TV, N. Y.

John Henry Faulk came up from Texas a few years ago and brought with him a folksy type show which made him a radio staple. He's now trying to work in a new direction. He has a tele layout slanted to the preschool set, and if his preem is any indication, he's going to be a troublesome element to a lot of people, generally older than those he's catering to, with the kid an integral part of the show.

This show starts at 9 a.m. Now in order for a mother to get her child onto that set in time for the opening, anyone living any distance away from the studio is going to have to get up mighty early. With labor saving devices having made life sufficiently easy for the young hausfrau so that she can remain abed for a while longer, this isn't going to be a popular show.

As far as Faulk is concerned, there's little that's educational or entertaining about the items he purveyed on his initial stanza (28). Faulk proceeded on a fairly good premise that children, among themselves, will ultimately provide their own best entertainment. He started talking about a pony named, of all things, Plum Pudding, and then interviewed moppets. As a reward for paying attention, they could either go to the drawing board or sit on the pony. There's too little incentive in that for either the kids or the parent, unless they're hammy enough so that the idea of cameras focussing on them is sufficient.

Initial layout indicated there isn't much substance to this show, and that which is purveyed is hardly commercial. The bouts with the brats are repetitious. Some are cute, naturally, and not all can sing, recite or dance. Faulk shows an infinite patience with them and handles them well. Still, he's got to have a stronger format to do himself and this time period any good. Jeanne Johnson did a vocal in cowgirl costume. Jose.

M MEN BASKETBALL
With Jim Grebe, Paul Royall
Director-producer, Duane Hill
120 Mins., at 8 p.m.
UNION PACIFIC R. R.
KSL, TV, Salt Lake City
(Gillham)

M Men Basketball is the biggest hoopster tournament in the country. Sponsored by the Mormon Church, preliminaries involve teams throughout the country and finals are played at Provo, Utah, with much interest shown by newspapers and local population which is predominantly Mormon.

KSL-TV's coverage was handled in professional style, using a remote unit. Jim Grebe, who handles high school sports for the Desert News, did a slick job of coming up with names of players as the ball changed hands; a feat that rates kudos since he did not follow the games played during the season. Paul Royall, filling in with color and experting did an equally smooth job.

Production and direction were in good hands, with cameras staying on the play in nice style. Only weakness was trying for too many closeups and then losing the action as the ball was whipped across court.

Union Pacific rates a hand for showing rare restraint in use of commercials. Berl.

EYE ON NEW YORK
With Bill Leonard, others
Producer: Leonard
Director: Lewis Freedman
30 Mins., Sun., 11 a.m.
Sustaining
WCBS-TV, New York

"Eye on New York" has been taken over by WCBS-TV, the flagship inheriting the production reins from the CBS web's public affairs. It's figured that local supervision under the watchful eye of Clarence Worden, station's public affairs chief, and with round-the-towner Bill Leonard continuing in his pivotal on-camera position along with his producer status, will strengthen the program as a "by and for Gotham" showcaser. The new 11 a.m. time slot may not be so hot, but that's only a "lazy Sunday" guess. The show itself is a hot property and its segue to crackerjack "Camera Three"—which also has undergone multiple shifting in both spotting and span—gives Ch. 2 an hour's coupling of substantial civic-cultural virtues.

Some "Eye" features rate extended public attention via the press, particularly when the subject matter is on top of the news or engaged in putting large issues through the wringer. Initial show, for instance, focused on Harvey Matusow, the confessed liar. Last Sunday (27) the burning issue was wiretapping, which has had the town in a tizzy of righteous indignation not unmixed with gossipy glee. Before offering the chapter and verse through guests, Leonard got into a quoting mood on "Operation Interception." Latest quip in the community is, "I know a man who has an unlisted tap." There's also a snob angle: "Unless your wire is tapped you're a nobody."

The D. A. and phone company declined to send reps to Sunday's show. Bernard Spindell, electronic consultant to the N. Y. C. Anti-Crime Committee, was heard in a tape recording to Leonard's live interview, since he's keeping himself under wraps until called before the Grand Jury. He spilled plenty. William Keating, the committee's counsel and ex-member of D. A.'s staff, teed off on the abuses of power by the police and city agencies, hinting at strange alliances. Assemblyman Anthony Savarese, Queens Republican, underwent questioning on legislative measures necessary to cope with wiretapping. The state has ordered an investigation and hearings are expected to start in a few weeks.

Middle segment brought in renowned photographer Edward Steichen for engaging chatter on the huge "family of man" exhibit at the Museum of Modern Art. Numerous stills were displayed with one of them causing Steichen to remark, "It's love and work that bind us—the goal of life." A lively bass instrumental hovered in the background as the stills were shown. In a concluding vignet, Leonard dared viewers to guess the racial strain of a girl flashed on the screen. It had a soft wallop all its own.

Windup was a lulu of a "face to face" interview, a running feature. This pitted Italo restaurateur Gene Leone (Leone's) against dietitian-author Gaylord Hauser in a snappy hassle on caloric intake, a sort of spaghetti vs. yogurt engagement. Leone seemed to be in the advantage; he kept on eating luscious viands picked from a huge pile while Hauser kept blowing a gasket trying to maintain face against his calm adversary who couldn't imagine Napoleon winning a war on yogurt. Good all-around show. Trau.

ENTERTAINMENT

WABC-TV, New York

WABC-TV veep Ted Oberfelder has taken a calculated risk in launching "Entertainment," a two and one-half hour cross-the-board daytimer that with its $30,000 a week budget is probably the most expensive and biggest local show ever staged. Since the ABC-TV flagship's daytime ratings can't get much lower, all Oberfelder has to lose is money. However, the economic thinking goes a good deal beyond that—the show is sold on a participating basis, and even if the ratings don't go up, the station has a chance to recoup on its production costs. More important is the philosophy inherent in the venture that nobody's going to sit with the show all 150 minutes, but it's the type of thing the housewives will go to at least once or twice during the day. From this viewpoint, "Entertainment" looks as if it's in for a moderate financial success.

As to the show itself, obviously nobody can carry 150 minutes a day for five days a week and expect socko results. That's not the primary aim of the segment—the goal is to put on a light and relaxed show to which the housewives can switch from time to time to get a slice of light entertainment. By these standards, the show looks to be a winner, as good as many of the network daytime variety segments. Producer Bob Claver has a group of talented and fresh faces, comedian-emcee Tom Poston, singer Marion Colby, crooner Bob Carroll, bandleader-comic Ray McKinley, comic-writer Gene Wood. Each of them has plenty on the ball, and they mesh nicely together.

Poston has the lion's share of the work, since he's the guy that integrates and provides the transitions. Just out of the recently-folded "Grand Prize" on Broadway, he's still to find the right relaxed groove for himself on the show. His gags were only so-so, his inrtoes a little repetitive and strained and his chatter alone and with the others somewhat strained. He did show some nice flashes of humor occasionally, and it's probably a matter of getting over the premiere jitters and tele's newness.

Miss Colby, who understudied Janis Paige in "The Pajama Game," and M-G-M records singer Bob Carroll provide most of the vocals, and they're a pair of comers. Miss Colby puts over song with style and verve, while Carroll's deep baritone ought to keep a few of the housefraus glued to their sets. As of the moment, McKinley, no slouch as a musician, is probably the funniest guy on the show, and he's something of a steadying influence too. Rounding out the group are Gene Wood, who doubles as a very funny comedian (he was the "agency" representative on the show on the preem and got off some good gags while he was at it) and one of the two writers; Billy Butterfield, who with five other musicians from the band form a Dixieland combo that features his excellent trumpet; and announcer Art Felming.

Guests on the premiere were Stan Freeman, who turned in his familiar "I Love a Piano" routine; Nell Fisher in an n.s.g. dance to the "Terry's Theme" music from "Limelight" (somehow, she's much more effective with a partner than in solo work); Jack De Leon, whose Army comedy routine is just par for the course; and Beverly Dennis, who's got a fine voice that shouldn't be thrown away on impressions, which is what she did via the theme song of the show.

It's a big and seemingly unwieldy cast, yet it's got the potential to become intimate and familiar to Gotham viewers. As is, it accomplishes one of its goals, giving pretty fair entertainment over an afternoon span ordinarily devoted to soaps and service shows. There must be some housewives who want to get away from the sweat and tears kick, or so WABC-TV hopes. Chan.

NBC-TV, from N. Y.

The NBC Opera Theatre finally came up with a "mixed group" that brings an important subject to the fore. Is a farrago of drama and opera, plus the subdivisional elements stemming from the modes and manners of 17th Century France, up the alley of the workaday television critics? The upper-crust dailies assigned the chore to their music critics, and while the straight portions of Sunday's (27) show were not too formidable an array (that would be Moliere's "Would-Be Gentleman") for the music appraisers, at least one of the latter elected to hold himself in check. Meaning the N. Y. Times' Olin Downes, who remarked: "And the comedy was done, we thought, extremely well. We are not highly versed—with apologies to Brooks Atkinson—in the technique of the drama, but humbly submit that Wally Cox, guest artist and the Jourdain of the occasion, was masterly and delightful in comedy and characterization. He may have clowned a little in the dancing and fencing scenes, but he was immensely diverting and more . . . We thought all the dramatic personae acquitted themselves excellently . . . But we have many differences with the treatment of the opera."

If music pundit Downes can come away with such trepidation, what chance have television's latterday savants who may not be such specialists—who go from quiz to variety show to telepix to full-blown dramatic exposures? It's a point which, whether well taken or not, may well set a new course of tv criticism from the view of the persons laboring in the living-room vineyards. 'Tisn't merely Moliere mated to Richard Strauss' "Ariadne on Naxos"—an opera, in fact, two diverse, two-language operas within the play; that's bad enough in the way of imposing difficulty. But within the mixture were other facets under which an appraiser must perceive a lot of things by ear or ride on pure faith —such as being hep to the modes, manners, clothes and architecture depicted in the period piece; the fencing and grammarian stuff pitched as lessons from the tutors; the etiquette of courtly bowing and the protocol of banquet arrangements; if not even a working knowledge of plain history circa 1670 as well as the history of the works presented, particularly the evolution of the Strauss opera from its "incidental music" beginnings.

Should Cox be judged on different standards than such lyric-pushers as Wilma Spence, Virginia MacWatters and Robert Marshall? And what about the fact that "Ariadne" is two-ply German and English, the Teutonic in serioso, the English text for the comedy episodes?

The whole package was a lulu, full of Faysian fun (or better yet, patterned on the Bobby Clark edition of a few seasons back) as far as Cox's romp on the "Gentilhomme" end is concerned, and catching arias in the Strauss part of the wrapup. But that said, this reviewer passes. Trau.

THE LATE SHOW
With Don Franklin
Producer: Stan Porter
Director: Ralph Chandler
75 Mins., Mon.-thru-Sat., 10:30 p.m.
Participating
WHBQ-TV, Memphis

When it comes to setting your tootsies in the living room and enjoying a Late Show, this guy Don Franklin, WHBQ-TV nightly maestro, "makes yourself comfortable" throughout the stanza. Franklin is a stellar salesman in this category and has earned beaucoup spurs for himself with his winsome and easy style in coming on in between scenes to handle the films breaks in entertaing fashion.

Despite the fact if the film is an oldie or even in the 10-20-30 series, Channel 13's Franklin proves always a "refresher" when he comes before the WHBQ-TV lenses late at night with his contagious personality and polished performance.

Franklin really pours it on for his long string of sponsors which are spread in the nightly 75-minute stanza. His timely comments and pickups from scenes of the film to segue in the coming commercials are naturals and make for good listening and viewing—especially for the lads who are picking up the tab. The boy doesn't go in for any gimmicks but just does a topflight straight-stint and turns in an all-around sparkling show. Franklin's opening from a theatre makeshift curtain scene spotlights him as a showman from the go. The guy should move up the ladder in this biz.

And he "does make it comfortable" for you. Matt.

BIG TIME

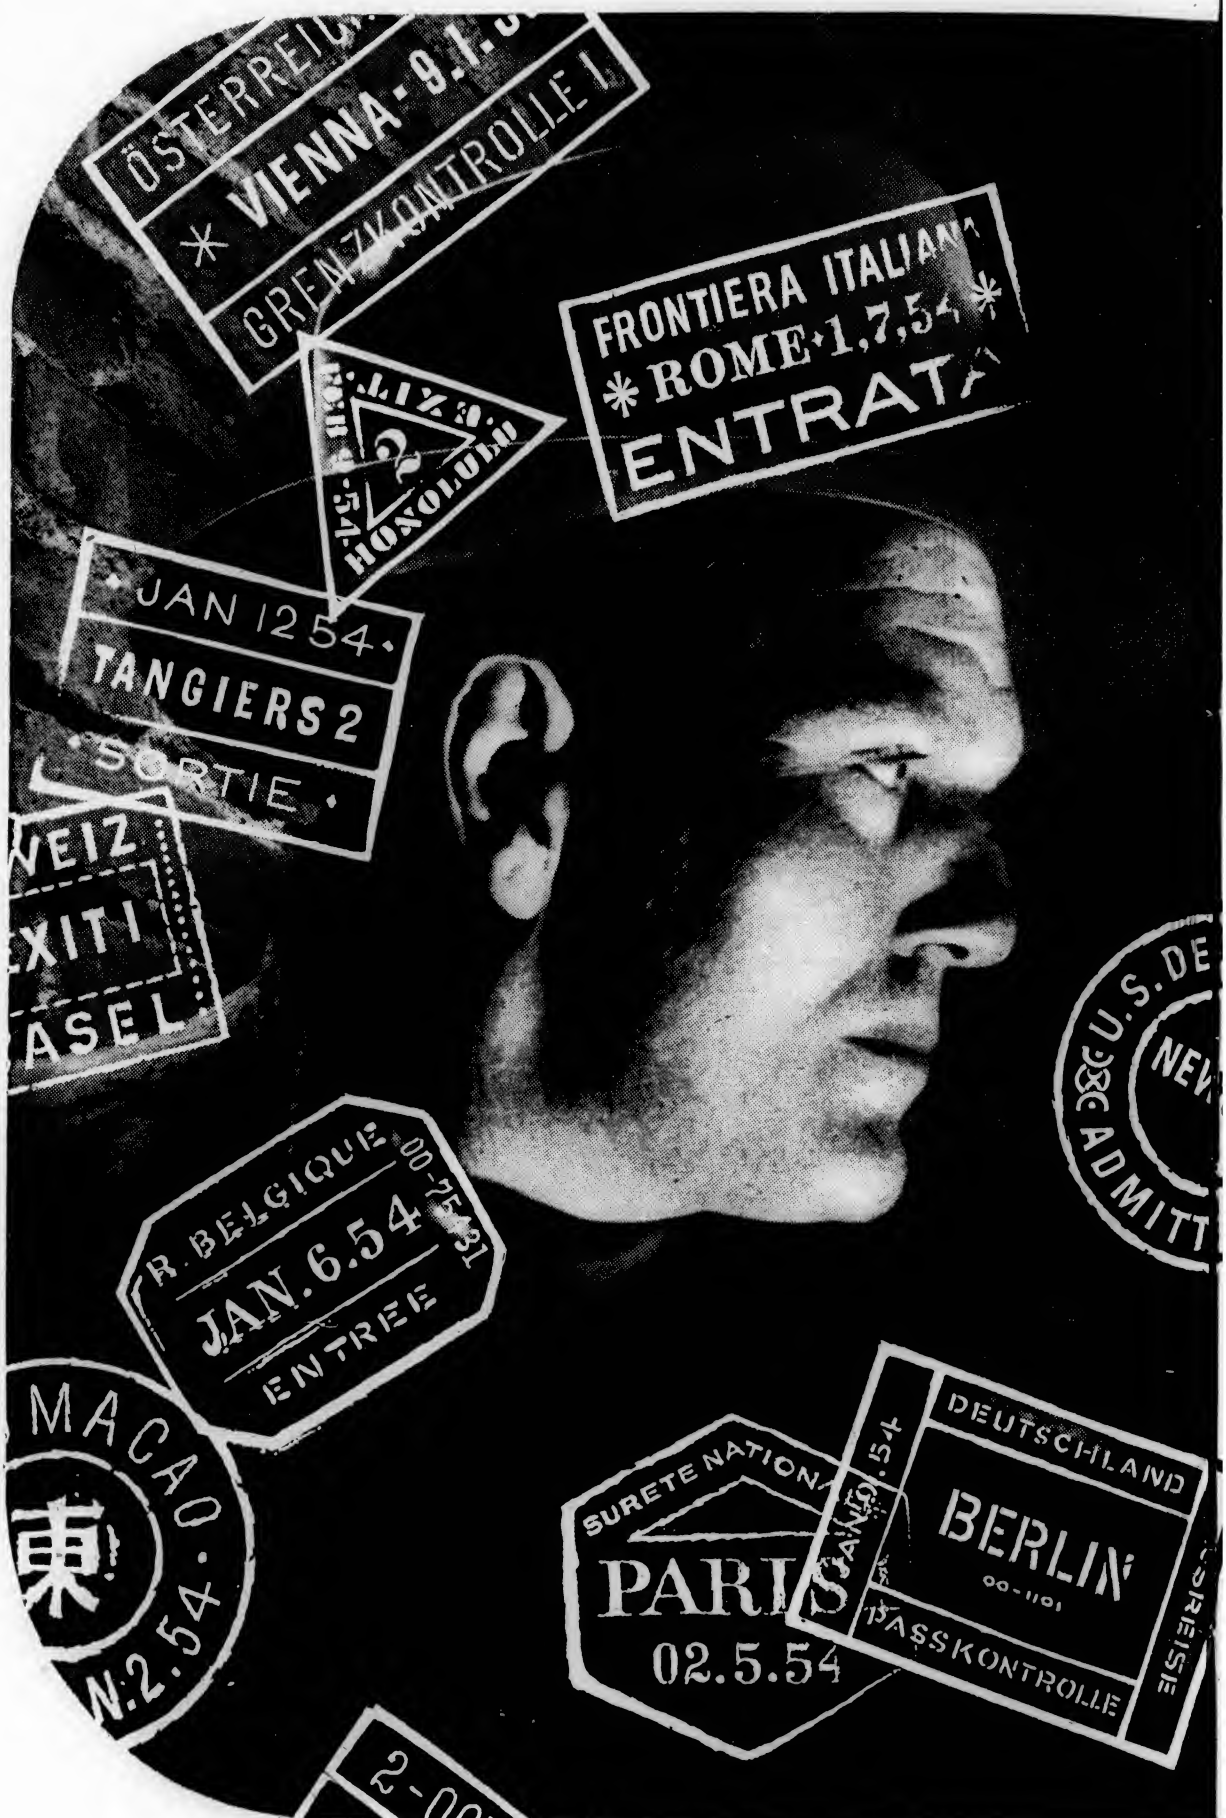
REYNOLDS METALS
NBC-TV, from New York (color)
(Clinton E. Frank)

Perhaps it's time for NBC to take stock of its ambitious series of spectaculars—at least the Sunday version—and determine just where it wants to go with them. If the initial concept was to introduce via these costly tinted extravaganzas something distinctive, apart from and above the usual Monday-through-Sabbath programming in order to generate a new excitement in television, then the Milton Berle-Martha Raye-Ray Bolger "Big Time" showcase as unfurled under the Max Liebman production banner on Sunday (27) becomes the No. 1 Ripley of the spec year.

Granted that the Tuesday 8 to 9 slot in which Berle and Miss Raye alternate on a periodic basis commands a Top 10 Nielsen audience. The fact remains that it doesn't take a scholar of the spectrum to come to the conclusion that both comics essentially work in the same metier, with the result that a "double feature" exposure as exemplified by last Sunday's spec must of necessity amount to compounding a crudity in the more tasteless moments (and taste unfortunately was something that was conspicuously absent). Since both are masters of mugging, for a while it looked like they were dedicating themselves, both in concert and individually, to outdo each other. The end result was a production that, for the most part, was devoid of any sensitivity—and to make matters worse the material was hoary with use.



Bolger, in rounding out the threesome, didn't fare much better, depending largely on reprise material (notably from his legit contributions) and only came into his own when he got around to the inevitable "Amy" number, with his terping the show's high spot.

Unfortunately, the writers practically sat this one out, for the comedy scripting was low ebb almost throughout, depending largely on the slapstick asides, notably in the case of Miss Raye and Berle. Certainly Miss Raye has been seen to much better advantage than in the crowded lunchroom scene trying to grab a meal during rehearsal respite; or in her dressing room scene wrestling with her makeup, or Berle's encounter with a fast-buck stockbroker (which appeared endless and repetitious), or even in his standup routine, which was far from Grade A Berle.

Bolger relied chiefly on past material, as with his shoe clerk sketch (from his "Three To Make Ready" Broadway revue of a few years back), which wasn't particularly funny this time up. His farmer routine with Pansy, the dancing horse (also reprise) was more in the Bolger manner, but it wasn't until he made with the eccentric stuff on "Amy" that he hit his wonderful stride. A three-way all-star teamup for Gershwin's "Mine" for the closing "Sky Room Cafe" finale.

There was nothing distinctive or imaginative in the production itself and a Bambi Linn-Rod Alexander cowboy ballet based on "Johnny Guitar" was out of the cliche department. The color, incidentally, was not too effective this time up, inviting gradations in tones in switch of cameras.

Reynolds Metals picked up the full 90-minute tab on this one and they didn't stint on the "sell," either. They were long and frequent. Rose.

WBBM-TV

stir created by "Town" and its big name guests.

Programming strategy as outlined by Frank Atlass, who has been specializing on the hour, is a three-pronged affair aimed at WNBQ's weather-news-sports 10-10:30 lineup, WGN-TV's feature films and WBKB's back-to-back half-hour vidpix. For the past several years Clint Youle has dominated the first 10 minutes of the block with his WNBQ weather show while WGN-TV's 10 o'clock feature film has been the big pull for the full hour. WBBM-TV theory is to use "Town" as the lure to draw over some of Youle's audience at the windup of his stint in the belief that much of that viewership usually shifts over to catch the rest of the WGN-TV or WBKB films. Idea is that if "Town" can capture and hold a bigger slice of the 10:15 to 10:30 audience, it'll be too late to move over to the WGN-TV feature and the dials will remain set on Channel 2 for the following John Harrington newscast and Kupcinet's talk show.

Although three segments of "Town" are still unsold and Kupcinet's stanza is only partially self-supporting with spot insertions, the CBS station is determined to keep the entire hour live with the four strips because the ultimate payoff is considerably greater than if the period were programmed with half-hour telepix or a full length feature. As Atlass points out, the WBBM-TV nightly tap for the full hour is $2,250 whereas it has a $3,600 potential when sold in quarter-hour slices, plus another $2,000 from the four station breaks. That's the same segmentized pattern used by NBC's WNBQ for its "Five Star Final" which kept its 10 to 11 block consistently in the big coin realm. WNBQ earlier this year telescoped the "Final" into the first half hour, turning the last half over to vidpix and the Tuesday night bowling show.

the board up to half the KUHT operating at a rate of $165 per hour, which now has been cut down to $130.

Since KUHT-TV began telecasting in May, 1953, the school board hasn't purchased a minute of time. Its money and time investment in the station both remain nil.

It costs KUHT-TV $105,000 on paper to operate last year. Station officials say the actual cost was considerablby less. Some school officials say more.

However all school officials say the station has proved its worth, but today they think it high time that their partner accept its share of the responsibility for worthwhile programs and the production costs.

(This, too, is exclusive of the Libby-McNeil-Libby buy in all the available Canadian markets.)

The individual station story is just about as fabulous. Take, for example, WOR-TV in New York. The bundle of 30 was bought for slightly under $200,000. Counting promotion, exploitation, etc., the figure comes to $250,000 at the most. With eight clients riding the series on its 16-times-a-week exposure, O'Neil's flagship station is reaping a total of $1,000,000 from the 30-week ride, with each client contributing $125,000 to the station coffers. That's a four-for-one payoff at the station. The WOR story is pretty much par for the course around the country. The stations love it, O'Neil loves it and the clients, eyeing those cumulative audiences, figure "how can we go wrong?"

out for recent heavyweight championship bouts since the events emanated from New York and the promoter felt it necessary to protect the gate. Although potential sponsors expressed interest in the Gotham-originated bouts, there was some reluctance to shell out the high tariff for the rights with two lucrative markets shut out. Events went to Nate Halpern's Theatre Network Television for a reported $100,000 to $125,000 guarantee.

Since Halpern has handled all of IBC's previous closed-circuit telecasts, he appears to be first in line again should the Marciano-Cockell clash go to theatre tv. Halpren has already conferred with the IBC and a number of interested exhibitors, but Jim Norris, IBC topper, has not given any indication yet as to which medium will be used. Just as opening of the northeast area will give a sponsor bigger circulation, it will similarly provide a greater theatre seating capacity with the use of many houses in the New York and New England area. In all probability, a 50-mile radius of S. F. will be blacked out. There's a chance, too, Los Angeles may be kept dark, since the promoter can expect many in-person attendees from Southern California.

ferior product will not be in business much longer.

Dozier, recently transferred here from N. Y. by CBS, said the televiewer is becoming far more discriminating "which is a good thing." "They are drifting more and more to shows that are stimulating and provocative. The tv audience is growing up and is much more demanding. The picture business for years made the mistake of saying they were aiming their product at an average intelligence of a sixth-grader. The public is smarter than we give them credit for being, and is basically equipped to absorb more mature material," he commented.

The exec predicted the epidemic of situation comedies is near its end, that only a few topliners will survive. He said, "there is a solidifying of dramatic shows, they've shown the greatest staying power in tv. While they haven't had the spectacular ratings, they're the most consistent, and not flash-in-the-pan." He cited as examples the long-runners, "Studio One," "Robert Montgomery Presents," and "Philco Playhouse."

"For longterm success I believe it will be dramatic and legitimate comedy shows."

Dozier remarked "everybody's groping in this business. Tv's only been in full swing for five years, and we've got lots to learn."

He said web's "Climax" series for Chrysler, which recently underwent wholesale changes on its creative staff, is going to have a broader base rather than the cops-and-robbers format of the past.

The web exec flatly stated CBS is not interested in producing spectaculars. Referring to NBC's spectaculars, he opined: "With very few exceptions they haven't exactly devastated the public."

Chicago—With six new stations buying in, Jack Van Coevering's "Adventures - Out - Of - Doors" 15-minute sports film is now riding in 14 markets. New stations are WGVL-TV, Greenville, S. C.; KOOK-TV, Billings; WISH-TV, Indianapolis; KTLX, San Angelo, WJVF-TV, Augusta, and WCOS-TV, Columbia, S. C.

Guild's Cartoon Pacts

Guild Films has landed its first deals on its recently acquired Warner Bros. cartoons, two-year library contracts with WJBK-TV, Detroit; WGR-TV, Buffalo and WTVO-TV, Rockford. Guild is selling the 191 Looney Tune entries on a straight library basis, rather than endeavoring to whip them into packaged shows.

However, firm is supplying suggested formats to clients for strip showings, weekend or special cartoon shows, quarter-hour, half-hour and full-hour versions.

Jax Beer's 350G On MBS Ballcasts

Mutual's off to a fast start on its "Game of the Day" (and night) baseball broadcasts. Southern outfit Jackson Brewing Co. (for Jax Beer) has pencilled a $150,000 regional contract with the web and Camels has come in again on the post game capsule.

"Game" investment (on a four-and-a-half innings, six-day weekly, 27-week deal) is believed Jax's first big radio outlay. Brewery's seven-state deal doesn't quite parallel the Falstaff 100 market buy of last year, but there are still several shopping days until the March 19 launching play-by-play of teams in spring training. Amount of coin in the ciggie deal was undisclosed. Incidentally, other half of Jax games are up for co-op sale.

As far as anyone can tell, Mutual intends after all to go into night broadcasting of baseball. This is quite a step in light of past opposition from minor league clubs.

CHASEMAN QUITS TV FOR RADIO IN BALTO

Baltimore, March 1.

One of the more surprising personnel shifts Baltimore has seen in years takes place effective March 14 when Joel Chaseman leaves WAAM-TV for the WITH 2 to 6 p.m. deejay and sports show. Chaseman was regarded as a WAAM fixture, and has been given trade and local credit for the indie tv's unique record of Peabody, DuPont and miscellaneous awards in the approximate seven years, he's been there.

Although he was pegged a director of public service and publicity, Chaseman doubled at WAAM as sports director, narrator for DuM's "Johns Hopkins Science Review," writer-talent on daily 7 p.m. sports commentary, and play-by-play man. At WITH, he picks up title of sports director as well as featured personality on Baltimore's solid AM afternoon show over the years.

the thing, with the writer credits part of the lure since many of the scripters have become established to the public.

Of the baptismal threesome, one is Calder Willingham, regarded in literati circles as one of the school of "naturalists" (grouped with the James Joneses and Norman Mailers in this sense). He'll be repped on "Playhouse" in April with a section of his play, "End As a Man," that was not included in the off-Broadway edition a couple of years ago. The television is titled "The Blind and the Brave." Charles Peck Jr. will have his coming-out via "The Shivington Raid," with a southern locale ("Playhouse" goes heavily for the magnolia beat). Richard Bimonte will debut with "Don't Call Me Sonny." From this point, it's figured that about 50% of the Philco-Goodyear skein will be composed of penners making their maiden voyage before the livingroom critics.

There's a new beat, too, among the standby scripters long in the Talent Associates packaging stable. David Shaw, for instance, is coming through next Sunday (6) with "Play Me Hearts and Flowers." This one has a song attached of the same name (under the Coral label) and Johnny Desmond and Joey Adams head the cast. Tunesmiths are Sanford Green, arranger for Sid Caesar, and Mann Curtis (latter the lyrics). "Hearts" will originate at the web's Century Theatre and have the first studio audience in the show's annals. Another regular, Tad Mosel, is slotted for the Sunday after that (13) with "My Lost Saints." There'll be a spacer coming along soon in "Visit to a Small Planet," by Gore Vidal (for more on latter's tv works, see separate story).

Herald Tribune columnist Hy Gardner did a walkon on Gleason's videoer last Saturday (26), to plug his "Champagne Before Breakfast" book. Another HT staffer, Art Buchwald is in from Paris for another once-around-the-radio-tv circuit to plug his book.

Incidentally, how and why Aldrich gave the book to Greystone, which is essentially a mallorder house, is something else again. S&S made a deal some three years ago to act as sales agent for Greystone and will soon distribute a two-volume "History of the World" for the same outfit. S&S is also distrib for Museum of Modern Art books. The Aldrich book, however, has sold chiefly through the trade department of Simon & Schuster.

the only indie packager to retain a fulltime film staff, comprising a unit manager, a film editor, a film director and a cutter. In addition, he hires cameraman, an assistant cameraman, an electrician, a sound man and a grip for each outing of the crew. Original investment cost him about $20,000, in equipment and the station wagon, but he feels it's been well worth it. At first, NBC, he recalls, protested that it was impossible to integrate the footage in a live show, but he worked out a system of cues which made integration a cinch. It's still used.

222-Market Spread For Cantor Telefilm Show

Ziv sales total for its syndicated "Eddie Cantor Comedy Theatre" continues to climb, largely through expansion of existing contracts by many of the show's sponsors. Total, according to Ziv, is now 222 markets, with Drewry's and Griesediecke breweries having picked up additional markets to help swell the total.

Griesediecke, which originally bought the show in St. Louis and Kansas City, has picked up 10 more markets in the midwest, Little Rock, Ft. Smith, Sedalia, Columbia, Evansville, Springfield (Mo.), Springfield (Ill.), Champaign, Pittsburg (Kans.), and Cape Girardeau. Drewry's has gone to 14 markets from its original coverage.

HORROR STUDY NEXT

Senate Will Take Up Films and Video Impact on Moppets

Washington, March 1.

If and when the Senate Juvenile Delinquency Subcommittee gets its requested $154,000 appropriation from the Senate, it will start its probe by looking into the impact of motion picture and television horror shows on youngsters.

This will be a followup of the study undertaken last year by Senator Robert C. Hendrickson. Subcommittee is now under the chairmanship of Senator Estes Kefauver, who has outlined the proposed program for this Congress.

"There will be no televised hearings where children appear as witnesses," Kefauver has disclosed.

NBC-TV 'Optionals' Get Crack at Gobel, Caesar for Local Sale

NBC-TV has added a brace of its major shows for availability to "unordered" optional stations, with George Gobel and Sid Caesar the new entries as of middle of this month. These join such programs as "Today," "Howdy Doody," "Home" and Imogene Coca under the web's Program Service Plan for optionals approved by the affiliates last fall. "Home" is currently on 42 opts, "Today" on 28, "Doody" on 65 and the Coca show on 25.

According to NBC, it serves the double purpose of helping these stations to develop audience and become more attractive to network advertisers, also realizing local revenue opportunities pending network sale, since stations receiving the programs are permitted to use them for local or national spot sales.

Web has created a station sales unit to build more network business on optionals. This is headed by Richard Soule.

MILT OLIN'S UPPED STATUS AT WICK ENT.

Milt Olin has been upped to national sales manager of Charles Wick's Telefilm Enterprises, replacing Jack Allcoate, who's returned to the tradepaper field. Olin, previously eastern sales chief and before that with United Artists Television and WABC-TV, New York, is mapping a sales expansion, with the first new property in the TE fold the Bob Trout-starring "The World of Stamps," which was formerly distribbed by Sterling.

Rather than abandoning his distribution setup, Wick is starting an expansion, with negotiations for other properties in the works. Meanwhile, though he's screened his "Fabian of Scotland Yard" for other distribs, he's holding onto it and has sold it in Milwaukee. Sponsor is First National Bank of Wisconsin, and the show goes on CBS-TV's new UHF o&o, WXIX.

CBS Sets WXIX Staffers

Milwaukee, March 1.

WXIX, CBS-owned UHF'er, is rounding out its staff with the appointment of a news director, three salesmen and an assistant promotion manager.

Guy Runnion, a veteran with 22 years in radio-tv and most recently a member of the KABC-TV, Hollywood, news staff, has signed on to direct the WXIX news department. Account execs joining sales manager Ted Shaker's staff are William Goodnow, ex-sales manager at WCAN here; Art Harris, ex-WCAN-TV, and Jim Dunham, ex-KSOO, Sioux Falls.

Robert Van Roo, formerly business manager for the Milwaukee Sentinel, has been named promotion assistant to promotion-publicity chief By Colvig.

CLETE ROBERTS' OWN SETUP

Telefilm reporter Clete Roberts, whose filmed "World Reports" are syndicated in several cities, has formed his own production company to handle the newsreel service. It's Clete Roberts Productions, which will headquarter in Beverly Hills with Roberts as prexy and Joseph Brenner as v.p.

Roberts is prepping another filmmaking trip to world trouble spots for his series.

New TV Areas a Major Factor In '54 Record Sales on Sets

Washington, March 1.

The new markets opened as a result of the lifting of the tv freeze were definitely responsible for the television industry's record receiver sales last year.

A breakdown of 1954 set shipments issued last week by the Radio-Electronics-TV Manufacturers Assn. reveals that at least 1,000,000 of the 7,161,000 sets shipped to dealers went to new tv areas. Nearly 800,000 sets went to states which had no tv stations until late 1952. These were Colorado, Oregon, Arkansas, Idaho, Kansas, Maine, Mississippi, Montana, New Hampshire, South Carolina, the Dakotas, Vermont and Wyoming. Alaska and Hawaii also contributed.

How much of the year's business was accounted for by opening of new markets in states which already had tv is not shown by the RETMA data but the figure is believed to be sizeable. In North Carolina, for example, there were only two stations until 1953. Since then, 10 new ones have started, opening new receiver markets in such cities as Winston-Salem, Wilmington, Raleigh, Durham, Asheville, Chapel Hill and Greenville. No doubt these stations were responsible for a gain of 50,000 sets in 1954 shipments to North Carolina over shipments in 1952 when there were only two stations.

In a number of other states where new tv stations have started since 1952, set shipments have shown substantial increases. These include Texas, Alabama, Florida (with 13 stations as against two in 1952), Missouri, Nebraska, New Mexico, Tennessee and Wisconsin.

It's interesting that in the big tv states of New York, California, Pennsylvania, Illinois and Ohio, set shipments have declined considerably since 1952. Dealers in New York State bought about 85,000 fewer sets last year than two years ago and those in Ohio bought nearly 100,000 sets fewer.

The explanation may be that while new stations opened in these states they were in cities which already had stations or in areas where people already had sets.

Marge Kerr to Guild

Latest in a string of w.k. broadcasting execs to move into the Guild Films telepix setup is Marge Kerr, a vet at the network-agency-production facets of the business. Miss Kerr will operate on the New York sales staff.

Latest of a string of associations for Miss Kerr were stints at DuMont as a sales staffer and at the Sloan Foundation as a consultant on the "American Inventory" show. She preceded these with tours with the N. W. Ayer agency, the William Morris office and a number of packaging operations.

Roach Jr. in $10,000,000 Bundle Buy (From Father) in TV Splurge

Hollywood, March 1.

Hal Roach Jr. acquired the 18-acre Hal Roach Studios in Culver City, along with rights to hundreds of feature films and short subjects, story and star material and the studios creative talent in a deal with his father over the weekend. Roach Jr. paid his father, Hal E. Roach, who founded the studio in 1914, in the neighborhood of $10,000,000 for the entire bundle.

Roach Jr. is probably the busiest telepix producer on the Coast, with all of his activities currently centered on the lot. He's consolidating all of his various corporate and filmmaking activities under one banner, Hal Roach Enterprises, with Roach Sr. slated to be a board member and adviser in the wholly-owned company. Among these corporations slated for consolidation are Rovan, which produces "My Little Margie" with Roland Reed; H. R. Productions, responsible for "Public Defender"; Hal Roach Jr. Enterprises, which produces the Stu Erwin show with Reed; and Rabco, the partnership with American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, which produces "Passport to Danger" and controls "Racket Squad."

All personnel in the various Roach Jr. companies and at the Roach lot will be integrated into the one operation, of which Roach Jr. will be prexy. Other officers will be Sidney S. Van Keuran, v.p.-general manager; Charles Meacham, secretary-treasurer; Emanuel H. Goldstein, v.p. and exec assistant to the president, and Herbert Gelbspan, eastern sales manager. Expansion program is already in the works, with two more sound stages blueprinted and more stage space and facilities being negotiated. Roach Jr. said his commercial division is also in for an expansion, with teleblurb production having incresed 300% last year. He's dickering for production quarters in New York and Chicago and is augmenting his sales staff.

favor to any station to overload it with product for a longterm period, especially in light of the fact that telepix is such a young and rapidly-changing industry. He said that despite its youth, telepix is already plagued with overproduction and with imitation.

As for the future, however, Kaufman was on an optimistic kick, declaring that the gross billings of the industry in the "immediate future" would make present billings "look puny" by comparison. The industry today, he said, is economically sound, and it is its "destiny" to reshape the television industry to where "ultimately films must become the major source of programming on all levels, national and local." He foresaw elimination of the "weak sisters" of the business, along with more consolidations resulting in fewer but stronger companies. But, he warned, "lack of unity among the elements of the industry" posed one of the biggest problems facing telepix today.

("you're the first to know about this publicly"). "They're in a different groove from those bearing my own name" (of which those with the Vidal stamp also include "Dark Green, Bright Red," "A Search for the King," "Season of Comfort" and "In a Yellow Mood"), and apparently some of them will turn up as video transmutations. On the other hand, his "Judgment of Paris," by Vidal-sans-the-Box, will be used as the basis for his first work on "Devil's Theatre," a half-hour series he's created for Theatre Guild-ABC. It'll be titled "The Deadly Lady."

Vidal, grandson of blind Senator Thomas Gore of Oklahoma, who reared him in Washington, D. C.—his sister-in-law, incidentally, is Ella Raines, for whom he's written 'some scripts, such as "Hired Hand," on her "Janet Dean" telepixer—is working on half a dozen tele projects currently. He's adapting "Stage Door" for "Best of Broadway," due April 6, writing an original, "Summer Pavilion," for Studio One," listed for April 18, and doing a 30-minute documentary on Radio Free Europe for "Omnibus," scheduled for late March or early April. (Last "Omnibus" effort was the recent "Turn of the Screw," adaptation which brought Geraldine Page back to tv after her "Rainmakers" closed on Broadway). He's also prepping "Visit to a Small Planet," a space opus, for the "TV Playhouse." Latter also produced his "A Sense of Justice" for which he has high hopes as a legiter, along with "The Ways of Life," a comedy which he's written strictly as a theatre offering.

As to the hits and misses in tv, Vidal has a word that absolves everyone but the playwright. "It's almost always the writer's fault when a play is bad." And he's amused by the advice of one producer who lays down this design: "Make it fresh, original, diverting and entirely familiar." Just like that.

realization of their obligations and responsibilities," he declared, "there is reason for grave concern. There is the danger that the industry will be repiaced by organizations and people more worthy, who have acumen in the field. It is a subject which should receive individual and collective consideration of the most serious character."

On pricecutting, he said, that unless some distribs don't stop pricecutting themselves out of the business, there'll no longer be any need for them to be in business. On library deals, he said, that it's no

Sarnoff. The network recognizes that there'll be some affiliate balking over the plan but also feels convinced that the majority will go along.

But one protesting affiliate put it thusly: "Why should we fall in with the plan when the network's own key station in New York [WRCA] kicks off the Saturday afternoon "Road Show" in order to put in its own program [Al Collins]. . . . And comes the fall, what are we to do—knock off our cushy football take?"

Cott joined NBC nearly five years ago as general manager of New York o & o's (radio and tv), was hiked to v.p. 18 months later when programming, promotion and merchandising were added to his sphere of activities. In August, 1953, he was named operating veep of the AM network, taking in programs, sales and promotion, and nearly a year ago took over organization and management of the web's new licensing department.

Among his creations or developments were the Chain Lightning merchandising plan, "Music Through the Night," the Three Plan participation gimmick, "Weekend" and "Roadshow," setting up of the Mary Margaret McBride and Dr. Norman Vincent Peale cross-the-board morning series and the "Biographies in Sound" stanzas. Before joining NBC he was v.p. over programs-operations of WNEW, N. Y., having started out on WNYC as announcer, producer and director.

Same situation applies to stars involved with their own independent film companies, for a major tv stint is tantamount to a "for free" coast-to-coast exploitation-promotion ride.

The same give-and-take pertains to Ed Sullivan's "Toast of the Town," for it's a case now of all the major Hollywood studios waiting their turn in line for Sullivan to do their story (next on the "Toast" agenda is the "Warner Bros. Story"). For Sullivan it's a passel of cuffo stars. For WB it's a commercial that even money couldn't buy.

Multiple Stations

til government policy has crystallized.

While the court ruling allows broadcasters to seek as many radio or tv stations as they desire, it's pointed out, the Commission is not precluded from turning down their applications if it finds that monopoly would result. But the agency, the Court holds, cannot impose an "absolute limitation" and deny, without hearing, an application which goes beyond the ceiling.

"It is conceivable," the Court observed, "that in some circumstances, common ownership of even five tv stations . . . might be undue concentration of control; while in other circumstances, common ownership of a greater number might be compatible with the public interest. But whether so or not must be determined . . . after consideration of all factors relevant in the determination of whether the grant of a license would be within the 'public interest, convenience or necessity'."

As the court emphasized, the removal of the ceilings does not prevent the Commission from denying an application by a multiple owner on a finding of monopoly. But the applicant "must be given a chance" to show that operation of another station will be in the public interest.

McConnaughey gave Uitra high broadcasters one ray of hope. He said that as far as he alone was concerned he favored deintermixture of UHF and VHF channels on a selective basis.

escaped the American distributors. At least one has planned a means of circumventing that possibility, or at least lessening its effects, by setting up a subsidiary jointly with Britons which would produce series in England as well as act as its sales rep there. Distrib figures if he isn't wholly exempted from a quota, at least the pictures he produces there will count against the quota. Others, while not having gone so far, have been shooting pictures in Britain not so much because of lower cost as because they feel they can accomplish the same purpose.

Newsreel experiment, thus far limited to a few stations on the Coast, may be expanded nationally. Hutchins pointed out that most local news shows are limited in the film they can show, and the Fund undertook to supply them through the device of buying the newsreel service of Tele-Features on the Coast and supplying clips to the stations themselves. Fund is talking to major newsreel services, Hutchins said, about buying the major newsreels and working out a free distribution plan nationally.

Re the blacklist study initiated by the Fund a couple of months ago, Hutchins said that the Fund is getting good cooperation from networks and agencies in procuring its information, and the written report should be finished by June. Fund will circulate it as widely and loudly as possible, and will follow this up with meetings with networks and agencies in hopes of convincing them of giving up the blacklist practice entirely. He said that the webs have privately admitted that the entire blacklist procedure has been more of a nuisance to the networks than anything else, that it deprives them of more than it gains. He's hopeful, he said, that blacklisting will be curtailed or dropped.

Pine-Thomas Pix On the TV Block

Hollywood, March 1.

Approximately 30 old Pine-Thomas pictures, currently owned by Paramount, are ready for sale to television. Understood studio has been offered $1,000,000 for the batch but is demanding more.

Paramount acquired all rights to the films through a deal with P-T five years ago. Pix were turned out when the two Bills were producing eight or nine annually for Par release. Among them are many service films.

CBS TAPS HESS FOR NEWSFILM POST

CBS' news and public affairs has created a motion picture photography post in its newsfilm production sector and tapped Robert Hess as the manager. Sig Mickelson, v.p. of news and public affairs, said that Hess will concentrate on "fresh approaches to covering the news in film. We believe we have come a long way since we entered the newsfilm field. We have a long way to go. We are still experimenting. We are trying to bring the most experienced, most creative personnel possible into the organization."

Crosby 'Sneaks' Color TV Tape Recording

Hollywood, March 1.

Bing Crosby Enterprises demonstrated its new method of color tv tape recording, recently developed by its electronic division, with a four-minute run of "The Women," taken off the air when it was telecast several weeks ago. Demonstration was favorably received although there still are technical bugs to be eliminated.

Frank Healey, head of the electronics division, said the color tape, after further refinements, would be ready for the market by the middle of next year.

ZITTAU'S NEW SETUP

Henry Zittau has ankled Western Television Co. and Motion Pictures for Television, where he was treasurer, to join Eliot Hyman's Associated Artists Productions as v.p. and treasurer.

It's a reunion for Zittau and Hyman, since the latter was one of the original founders of MPTV and was a consultant with the firm until he reestablished AAP.

Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By MIKE GROSS

Al Hibbler: "Unchained Melody"-"Daybreak" (Decca). Al Hibbler, ex-Duke Ellington orch crooner, has a solid chance to crack into the pop hit lists with "Unchained Melody." It's a strong ballad with a haunting melodic line and topgrade lyrics. Hibbler gives it a mood reading that's a knockout. "Daybreak," too, is an effective piece, but it looks like "Unchained Melody" all the way.

Perry Como: "Door of Dreams"-"Nobody" (Victor). It's getting so that Perry Como can do no wrong. He's following his rhythm & blues click, "Ko Ko Mo," with a meaty tango-styled ballad, "Door of Dreams," and it, too, is a natural for big plays. Tune's melody and lyric are exceilenty pegged to make the kids forget r&b, for a while, anyway. Como takes the oldie, "Nobody," for a slow ride. In fact, it's much too slow for any jock or juke action.

Hugo & Luigi: "Crazy Otto Rag"-"Medley" (Mercury). Decca started something when it released its German disking of Der Schrage Otto in the U.S. It kicked off a hot craze for barrelhouse piano and now Merc has come up with the first slicing to include a lyric. It should take off like a jet. The whole thing sounds like a gag; in fact, Hugo & Luigi are the diskery's artists & repertoire heads, Hugo Peretti and Luigi Creatore, but it adds up to shellac fun and that's what counts. There's more barrelhousing on the backside in a medley of "Nobody's Sweetheart" and "Somebody Stole My Gal." Hugo & Luigi are backed by the Hoffbrau Singers, a group that sounds like it was drafted for the recording date from a nearby bar.

Vera Lynn: "Addio Amore"-"I Do" (London). The driving, rhythmic beat of "Addio Amore" is a departure for Vera Lynn, but the thrush takes it in her stride and builds it into a potent platter. It's an infectious tune and she gives it the kind of zest hat fits today's market. Choral backing by the Johnston Bros. is a major asset. She's back on familiar ground with "I Do," a warm, effective ballad. It's the kind of song, however, that takes patience and plugging to get off the ground.

Burton Sisters: "Divided Love"-"Doin' The French Can-Can" (Victor). This is the market for gal groups, so there's no reason why the Burton Sisters can't grab their share. They have a good opportunity to ride in strong with "Divided Love." The tune has the beat and the femmes have the drive, and nowadays that's about all it takes to grab the jock and juke spins. The Burtons are less successful on the back side with "Doin' The French Can-Can."

Victor Young Orch: "Theme from The Medic"-"Bella Notte" (Decca). Victor Young has a lot of things going for him on his "Medic" slice. Tune is theme of the popular NBC-TV show, which gives it top exposure, and it's a solid instrumental as well. Young gives it a sturdy sendoff and it could creep into the pop market for a big impact. "Bella Notte," from the pic, "Lady Is A Tramp," is an above average item that gets a topflight reading.

The Gallahads: "Ooh Ah"-"Careless" (Capitol). Record companies have never been known to turn their backs to a trend. So if the vogue is for vocal groups that's what they iet you have—but good. Latest group to get a wax showcasing is The Gallahads and they seem no different from the rest. The boys have the r&b pattern with a pop touch and they belt with enthusiasm. "Ooh Ah" incorporates about all the sounds and grunts that have made r&b popular so it should appeal to the coke set. The boys bring the "modern" touch to the standout "Careless."

Dorothy Collins: "My Love's A Gentle Man"-"No One, Not Even You" (Audivox). Dorothy Collins knows her way around a ballad and even when she gets one that's not exactly meat-and-potatoes she turns it into a tasty dish. In the case of "My Love's A Gentle Man," thrush's delivery carries the song. In fact, she gives it such a heartwarming treatment that it's bound to win deejay plays. Not much chance, however, for "No One, Not Even You."

Vic Damone: "Foolishly"-"Is Mary There?" (Mercury). "Foolishly" gives Vic Damone some good material to fool around with. Incidentally, this is not a pop version of the r&b "Foolishly" waxed by The Chuckles for Label X — it's an entirely different tune. It's lyrical and catchy and Damone makes it worth spinning more than once. "Is Mary There?" is a trite offering.

Bob Carroll: "My Dearest, My Darling, My Sweetheart"-"I Love You So Much It Hurts" (MGM). Bob Carroll should win some new friends with "My Darling, etc." It's a long-titled tune but it's pleasant, and has the kind of innocent romantic quality that's missing in too many of the current clicks. Carroll puts it over in an ingratiating manner. If the jocks give it proper display it could make some noise. On the flip side is "I Love You So Much It Hurts," but it's doubtful if anybody'll care.

Kathy Lloyd: "It Worries Me"-"Tomorrow Night" (London). Kathy Lloyd is a promising songstress who could make it big on wax. She phrases and projects with savvy and shows topflight form on "It Worries Me," a solid ballad that builds under repeated spins. "Tomorrow Night" is a pretty number that she delivers with pleasing simplicity.

Album Reviews

"Plain and Fancy" (Capitol). Chalk up "Plain and Fancy" as a standout addition to the growing list of original cast sets of Broadday tuners. Diskery has put it into the groove with care and taste and the cast whips out the tunes in an ingratiating manner. Composer Albert Hague and lyricist Arnold B. Horwitt have supplied enough stuff to make it an overall shellac charmer. The ballads have the edge in this 13-tune offering with "Young and Foolish" (David Daniels) the stickout song. "Follow Your Heart" (Daniels) also is a strong contender for a pop breakthrough, while "Plain We Live" (Stefan Schnabel and male chorus) is a sincere and inspiring item. Shirl Conway and Nancy Andrews handle the lighter lines in "It's a Helluva Way to Run a Love Affair" and "City Mouse, Country Mouse," respectively, in expert fashion. Barbara Cook also rates a nod for her workover of "It's All Very New to Me." The liner notes are helpful.

Bob Shaver - Laurel Shelby; "Songs by Arthur Schwartz" (Walden). In the past few years Walden has done okay with wax studies of Cole Porter, Rodgers & Hart and the Gershwins. Diskery now has another winner with its Arthur Schwartz potpourri. For more than 20 years Schwartz has been turning out meaty melodies for words by such topflight lyricists as Howard Dietz, Dorothy Fields, Leo Robin, Johnny Mercer and Frank Loesser, and the label has done an A-1 job in culling 10 items from his vast repertoire. Bob Shaver and Laurel Shelby, backed by the Art Wanger Quintet, make 'em all fresh and vibrant again. Alfred Simon's notes will be an important guide to deejay programmers and researchers.

Teddy Phillips Orch: "Concert in the Sky" (Decca). You can't blame maestro Teddy Phillips for wanting to salute "the musical greats of yesteryear," but his tribute to such artists of the past as Russ Columbo, Eddie Duchin, Fats Waller, Hal Kemp, Bunny Berrigan, etc., comes across as sentimental shellac that borders on the ludicrous when prefaced by nickkennyisms. Howard Miller, a Chicago deejay, handles the verbal posies without embarrassment.

Guy Lupar Orch: The Esquire Album of Music for the Continental Host" (Victor). This is music to woo by in the Continental manner. Results aren't guaranteed but Guy Lupar has picked a slick assortment of melodies from abroad that helps set a romantic mood. Orch is rich and colorful and such newies as "Strawberry Festival," "Sleeping Waters" and "Whimsy" are easy on the ear.

Jack Teagarden: "Original Dixieland" (Period). This latest Jack Teagarden package has been produced by Leonard Feather. Both boys know there stuff when it comes to dixieland so the jazz buffs should go for it in a big way. Teagarden is still a solid lip-man and his tooting of "King Porter Stomp," "High Society" and "Riverboat Shuffle," among others, are knockout. Some of the sidemen assisting are Ray Bauduc (drums), Dick Cary (piano), Edmund Hall (clarinet), Jimmy McPartland (trumpet) and Kenny Davern (clarinet).

LEER-ICS: PART II

The rock 'n' roll editorial in VARIETY last week, apart from its trade reaction and the fact that the wire services picked it up widely—the N. Y. World-Telegram & Sun gave it P. 1, with full credits—has raised some salient discussions within the trade. On the affirmative side, RCA prexy Frank M. Folsom is broadcasting reprints of the editorial to the RCA Victor personnel.

On the straddling side is a vet songsmith like Albert Stillman who, for all his known personal frown on the double-entendre, forthrightly states that most all boy-girl lyrics have a possible "leer-ist" connotation.

Attorney-executive Bob Burton, for Broadcast Music Inc., is faced with a special problem of screening some 200 or more mss. weekly, and with an awareness that words and phrases and r&b jargon circa 1955 are different from the slanguage of the 1920s, for example. Also, he asks, whose and what standards are to obtain? Realistically, the post-midcentury standards are even more advanced than the Prohibition Era, when the Jazz Age and Flaming Youth and The Lost Generation were the so-called juvenile delinquency symbols of the racoon and ukulele decade.

The rhythm & blues publishers are dominantly in the BMI fold. Unlike the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers, which merely registers and licenses, BMI attempts to inspect before it registers and licenses. This "inspection" before registration, of course, becomes academic because lots of r&b stuff (1) doesn't expect to sell sheet music, and (2), in some cases doesn't have "published" lyrics. BMI states that it is insistent on at least a lead sheet—with lyrics—but concedes that this request is not always fulfilled.

On top of that, the trade knows that interpretations are uncontrollable. There are any number of instances where the "accent" on the wrong "syllable" can give standard ballads like "Lover Come Back To Me," "All of Me," and the like, a dirty connotation.

This is in the same class as what happened with Mae West's inflections in that now historic "Adam & Eve" radio sketch on a Sabbath night. Milton Berle can make reading Lindy's menu sound funny, and by the same token some "delineators" can make a lyric sound like a leer-ic.

It may be argued that some r&b are not explicitly indigo but are as the evil-minded listener, juvenile delinquent or adult, interprets them. It's like arguing that a certain singer's version of "All Of Me," and his ad lib topper-offer, "take it all," is an "interpretation," to be accepted as one chooses.

Disk jockeys, in the sensitive seat at the point of public reaction, concede that the r&b stuff is "tremendously popular," but, by the same token, for all its phenomenal public acceptance, there is just as much violent anti-opinion. But as many see it (viz., Bill Randle's piece herewith), there is no disputing that "much of it is obscene by direction or indirection."

Perhaps the r&b thing has snowballed beyond control, because obviously there are any number of independent diskery labels which neither know nor care about "ethics" and "concern about potential juvenile delinquency." Their prime concern is the fast buck. But this very red-hot snowballing has sparked a little self-examination in certain high places. This call to the conscience of the record and music business thus may prove to be not in vain after all.

Abel.

R&B May Not Cause Delinquency But It Reflects It: Bill Randle

Bill Randle, the deejay who shuttles between Cleveland (WERE) and New York (WCBS), sees a tie-up between the rock-and-roll beat and juvenile delinquency but doesn't believe that the new rhythm causes delinquency—"it just reflects it." However, Randle is against outright banning of the records since that would develop wide problems of censorship and control.

As Randle sees it, the only probable answer is an industry association code of behavior which would eliminate the use of semi-obscene or suggestive lyrics on the part of the record companies. "Even then," he claimed, "there will be the occasional record that will disturb some people's moral sensitivities." Such social forces as church groups, newspapers, trade papers, etc., figures Randle, can act as a restraining influence to meet the problem and wipe out the "leeric" craze. He expects the beat, however, to continue and to start the kids dancing again as they did during the "swing" era of the 1930s.

Rock-and-roll, says Randle, is part of the evolution of music and will become part of Americana. He

R&B Kilocycle Kick

Boston, March 1.

Impact of the rhythm & blues kick had unexpected power on Sherm Feller's disk jockey stanza early Sunday morning (27).

During the playing of Fats Domino's new release, "Don't You Know," the transmitter was knocked off the air due to an overload. Feller was speechless on the air for 12 minutes.

WARING CUTS LEGITERS FOR DECCA PACKAGE

Decca Records is wrapping up the tunes from the current season's top musicals in one album titled "Broadway '55." Fred Waring's orch and chorus will slice the selections from "Silk Stockings," "Fanny" and "House of Flowers."

Waring, incidentally, received a gold platter for hitting the 1,000,000 sales marker on his cut of "'Twas the Night Before Christmas."

Foreign Names Click for Decca

Decca Records has been clicking solidly in the past few months with its disk importations from Europe. Among the company's bestsellers currently are the series of Crazy Otto (Der Schrage Otto) nickelodeon piano releases from Germany and the Caterina Valente slice of "Maleguena." Miss Valente, an Italian, cut the Spanish tune in a Berlin studio.

Latest foreign name to be promoted by Decca in the pop field is Helmut Zacharias and his orch. Diskery is releasing an album, "Wine, Women and Waltzes," which was originally cut for the German Deutsche Grammophon Co.

CLEF REPACTS KRUPA

Gene Krupa's pact with Clef Records has been extended for another year.

The drummer is currently playing at the Crescendo in Hollywood.

KORN, EX-WNEW EXEC, TO REMINGTON LABEL

Bennet H. Korn, who resigned as sales exec from WNEW, N.Y., has joined Remington Records as exec veepee. He will handle both administrative and sales exec duties for the diskery, which was one of the pioneers in the low-priced long-hair platter market.

Donald H. Gabor, Remington prexy, stated that Korn's appointment is linked to the company's plans for building wider distribution throughout the country.

Cap in V-M Tie-in On New Hi-Fi Line

Capitol Records will tie in with the V-M company to step up the promotion on the latter's new hi-fi line. Drive will be kicked off tomorrow (Thurs.), and will run through April 15. The promotion will involve Cap branches in Boston, Philadelphia, Atlanta, Dallas, Milwaukee, Cleveland and Seattle.

Dealers who place a minimum order of $500 with one of the Cap branches will be supplied with special incentive promotion material such as display racks, cuffo demonstration records for consumers, window display cards and cuffo catalogs for consumers.

Promotion was set up by Joe Bour, accessory promotion manager, who returned to New York last week after a tour of the Cap branches. Bour moves his entire operation to Scranton, Pa., tomorrow (Thurs.) and V-M activities will, henceforth, be handled from that city.

Wexler Set to Head New Electronics Products Division for Columbia

Columbia Records made another step in its "Operation Diversification" last week with the setting up of an Electronics Products division. The new department will be headed by Col veepee Paul J. Wexler, who was shifted over from the national sales manager's spot.

According to James B. Conkling, Col prexy, the new operation will encompass the overall direction and supervision of the company's products other than Col records. Among the other products are Col phonographs, Col transcriptions and Epic Records. Wexler also will handle the sales supervision of Cryton Precision Products, a service for the manufacture of precision plastic products other than records. The new department also will take in future developments made by the company.

The Electronics Products division was set up after Col had named Hal B. Cook as Columbia's new national sales head, replacing Wexler. Cook resigned his Capitol post as veepee and national sales manager to move over to Columbia. The Cook assignment is part of Col's big push on its record line. Cook will concentrate solely on Col platters and will have nothing to do with diskery's platter subsids, Epic and Okeh, phono line or custom record department.

Other Col sales spots remain the same for the time being. Forrest Price continues as national sales manager for Columbia, and Bill Neilson stays as national sales manager for Epic and Okeh.

ASCAP-USO Unit Clicks; Extends European Run

ASCAP's troupe of songwriters, currently touring U. S. defense installations in Europe under USO-Camp Shows auspices, have been clicking so strongly that it is being held over for an additional week. Original schedule called for a three-week trek through Germany. Now it's planned for the cleffers to tour France under a suggestion made by Col. Joseph Goetz, who heads the Armed Services professional branch.

The ASCAP troupe consists of Mack Gordon, Abel Baer, Rube Bloom, Gerald Marks, Johnny Redmond, Lou Handman, Florrie LeVere and Bee Walker. Fran Russell, Gogi Grant and Marion Spellman are assisting.

Diskers Crack Down on Bootleggers; Piracy Charges to Be Filed Shortly

The disk companies are getting tough with the bootleggers who have been flagrantly pirating pop bestsellers for the past few months. Detectives for one of the major labels have already tracked down the distributor of bootleg disks on Long Island, and charges are slated to be filed shortly.

The piracy technique is direct and simple. The bootleggers are simply peddling such hits as The McGuire Sisters' "Sincerely" and Sarah Vaughan's "Make Yourself Comfortable," among others, on disks that are near-perfect copies of the original labels. Only an expert could detect the difference.

The retailers who buy the pirated labels may also be involved in any legal showdown between the companies and the bootleggers. Even though the retailer may not be able to tell the difference in labels, it's claimed by the disk companies that they can tell by the price differential when they are buying illegitimate disks. In one case, a retailer who had been purchasing 100 McGuire Sisters platters a week from the N.Y. Coral distributor suddenly suspended his orders. Investigation showed that this retailer had switched to buying bootleg disks at considerably lower prices.

Radio Rarities, producers of "The Investigator," the longplay disk which was taken from a Canadian Broadcasting Co. dramatic play satirizing Sen. Joseph McCarthy, also have taken measures to halt any counterfeiting of the platter. Company execs state they have collected damages from retailers who sold the counterfeits, and injunction proceedings are under way to halt any further distribution of the disk.

"The Investigator," meantime, is racking up phenomenal sales for a dramatic record. The platter is now hitting the 40,000 marker and is still going strong.

Road Co. 'Opry'

Washington, March 1.

The Library of Congress was turned into a road company "Grand Old Opry" last Thursday (24) when hillbilly crooner Eddy Arnold sang "Tennessee Waltz" to the D. C. bigwigs there. Song capped the formal presentation of Arnold's 10th anniversary RCA Victor album to the Folk Music Dept. of the Library.

Attending the ceremony were Congressmen Tom Jurray, J. Percy Priest and Roy Bass, all of Tennessee; Congressman Noble J. Gregory of Kentucky, and Acting Librarian Verner W. Clapp.

Ballad Oldie's Boff Sheet Sales

Although the rhythm & blues tunes are dominating the disk bestsellers lists, the ballad oldie, "Melody of Love," is showing up as one of the strongest sheet sellers in years. At the present pace of over 40,000 copies a week, "Melody of Love" is expected to top the 600,000 sheet marker before it runs its course. That would make the tune the top copy seller since "Tennessee Waltz" went way over 1,000,000 back in 1951. Since then, hits have been lucky to touch the 500,000 mark.

"Melody," penned by the late Hans Engelmann, was published by Theodore Presser Co. in 1903 as an instrumental. It has been a steady selling educational composition since then. Shapiro-Bernstein came into the "Melody" picture when it acquired the rights to publish the tune as a pop song in 1942. Presser retained the instrumental rights. S-B assigned John Klenner to write a lyric and the tune was released under the "Whisper That You Love Me" tag. Some etchings were made but the tune never got off the ground. Last year, S-B tapped folk singer-composer Tom Glazer for a new lyric and "Melody" broke wide open.

Ellington-Gillis Program For Ex-NBC Orch With Composers as Maestros

The Symphony of the Air (ex-NBC Symphony) will present a Don Gillis-Duke Ellington program at Carnegie Hall, N. Y., March 16. First half of the program will comprise three works by Gillis, who is prez of the symph, in "Boogie in Brass," "Bing, Bang, Bong" and Dance Symphony. Gillis will also baton.

Second half will find the Ellington band sitting in with the symph, to play three numbers by the Duke, "New World a-Comin'," "Harlem" and "Night Creature," last-named in its world preem. Ellington will conduct.

ARLENE FRANCIS TO WAX CAMDEN LONGHAIR GAB

Arlene Francis, tv panelist on "What's My Line" and hostess on the NBC-TV show, "Home," will now gab on wax for Camden Records, RCA Victor's low-priced line. Miss Francis will present an analysis and discussion of two longhair selections, Tchaikovsky's "Nutcracker Suite" and Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, on a 12-inch platter, together with musical illustrations.

Camden release is in the pattern of the Book-of-the-Month club disk releases, which also have verbal explanation of the music.

A-V'S RAND WINDS TREK

Ray Rand, A-V Tape Libraries sales manager, returns to his New York desk this week after a nationwide trek lining up distributors in new markets.

Rand also set up special tape promotions for the coming year with leading retail outlets in key cities.

ASCAP Now Operating With 25,000 Customers; Tightens Vs. Defaulters

Licensees of the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers, outside of radio and television, now reach an impressive total of 25,133. In addition, ASCAP has agreements with 3,052 stations and 28 networks in radio and 347 stations and four networks in television.

Although there has been delinquency in payments to ASCAP by some radio-tv licensees, a recent tightening up by ASCAP has minimized the number of defaulters. An additional staff, under sales manager J. M. Collins, has helped to improve this situation.

At the present time, ASCAP employs 316 staffers in its N.Y. headquarters and 108 persons in its branch offices. Approximately 50% of ASCAP's total operating expense goes for salaries which add up to $1,218,917. ASCAP's deductions for administrative expenses, which formerly totalled 20% of the total take, has now been reduced to 18%.

Cap's N.Y. Sales Huddles On New Distrib Setup

Capitol Records' three-day sales huddles in New York winds up today (Wed.). Confabs were called to brief the company's district sales managers on the new distribution and promotion setup sparked by the shift of Cap sales veepee Hal B. Cook to Columbia Records.

Meet was headed up by Cap's acting general manager Bill Fowler and the new sales v.p. John (Mike) Maitland. The district managers also were briefed on the diskery's March-April dealer program.

Met Opera basso Salvatore Baccaloni is acting as special artistic adviser on the forthcoming N.Y. City Opera Co. production of "Don Pasquale," to be preemed March 24.

ASCAP Needs New Cleffer Vitamins To Offset P.D. Malnutrition: Adams

Hollywood, March 1.

"A more progressive ASCAP is our goal for the coming year," prexy Stanley Adams told some 400-odd Coast members who attended org's semi-annual meeting, in reporting that ASCAP for the six months ended last Jan. 31 grossed $7,800,000 from licensing use of its catalog.

Operating expenses during this same period, he added, were less than 18%, repping a drop of 2% under the last semi-annual report.

"A static ASCAP is no good, a complacent ASCAP is not to our interest, a defensive ASCAP is a declining one," Adams observed in pointing up his org's future blueprint.

Unloading a barrage at coin operators, Adams praised U.S. Senator Kilgore for introducing the S1106 bill which stresses "the elimination of the jukebox exemption" from copyright law. He also observed that ASCAP today is emphasizing public relations more than ever and remarked, "The youth of the Society is helping to replenish our shelves with the vitamins of new members to offset the possible economic malnutrition of public domain material."

Question of a compulsory ASCAP license was brought up by Adams, who then asked delegates if it might not be better to alter it somewhat. ASCAP, of course, long has fought to get the 1909 Copyright Act rewritten so as to include jukebox licensing, at present prohibited.

L. Wolfe Gilbert, Coast ASCAP committee chairman, kicked off the conclave with the remark about the gavel he purchased on time payments when he was elected to office three years ago and that it finally was paid for.

Gilbert later hit a serious note when he told those present that he favored and expected the re-election of Adams and other officers now serving for the coming year. Other speakers included Saul Bourne, treasurer, and George Hoffman, comptroller, Alex Kramer read the executive report.

ASCAP Starts Balloting On New Directors Board; Elects Appeals Group

ASCAP elections for a new board of directors got underway this week with the mailing of ballots to both writer and publisher members. Under ASCAP's new bylaws, the full board of 12 writer members and 12 publishers are all elected every two years, instead of the rotational system used in previous years.

Incumbent board members are automatically renominated. New nominees for publisher directorships are Ben Barton, Ben Bloom, Joe Davis, Juggy Gayles, George Joy, Paul Kapp, Milton Kellem, Johnny Marks and Nat Tannen. In the standard field, the nominees are Morton Ascher, Charles H. Hansen and Arthur A. Hauser.

For the writer posts on the board, the new popular-production nominees are Pat Ballard, Harold Barlow, May Singhi Breen, Johnny Burke, J. Fred Coots, Sylvia Dee, Ervin M. Drake, Vernon Duke, Edward Eliscu, J. C. Johnson, Manny Kurtz, Sydney Lippman, Alfred Newman, Arthur Schwartz, Harry Tierney, Leonard Whitcup and Victor Young. The standard writers nominated were Abram Chasins, Padraic Colum, Aaron Copland, Norman Dello Joio, Ferde Grofe and Langston Hughes.

Meantime, ASCAP members elected a new board of appeals. Three-man writer group includes Abel Baer, John Redmond and Douglas Moore. The publisher trio consists of Joseph F. Santly, Joseph A. Fischer and Fred Fox.

Connelly Due in U.S.

London, March 1.

British publisher Reg Connelly sailed to the U. S. Sunday (27) and is expected to arrive in New York Friday (4).

Connelly, general manager of Campbell Connelly & Co., makes regular trips to the States to huddle with U. S. publishing execs.

Irv Sarnoff's Geisha Hop

Irving Sarnoff, executive veepee of Bruno-N. Y., RCA distributors, leaves with his wife March 15 to visit their son, Pfc. Arthur Sarnoff, in Tokyo, where he is on the PIO staff.

It's essentially a pleasure trip for the Sarnoffs and will take them also to Honolulu, Hongkong and Bangkok.

BRUBECK UNIT $3,200 IN SUB-ZERO MPLS.

Minneapolis, March 1.

Dave Brubeck Quartet unit at $3.30 top grossed a good $3,200 for a one-nighter at the 1,850-seat Lyceum in the face of sub-zero temperature and strong biting winds. Featuring Dave Desmond and Chris Connor, quartet was accompanied by the Oskar Nord Quartet.

They were brought here by Maw Bros., record distributors and sons of Ralph Maw, Metro district manager.

Decca Buys Masters From Memphis Indie

Continuing its recent buys of promising indie masters, Decca Records has picked up two sides from River Records in Memphis.

Tunes are "You'll Cry For Me" and "Might As Well Forget Me," cut by Buddy Blake and his orch, with Blake featured on vocals.

WELSH JAZZ PIANIST READIES STATES TREK

London, March 1.

British jazz pianist Dill Jones is shortly emigrating to the States, to follow the example of George Shearing, Ronnie Selby, Phil Moody, Ralph Sharon and other British pianists. He will be under the wing of Marian and Jimmy McPartland.

Welsh-born Jones is currently emceeing the BBC's Monday night British Jazz Program and is resident pianist in the Tommy Whittle Quintet at the Studio 51 Jazz Club.

Impending emigration to the States of another British pianist, blind bandleader Joe Saye, has been postponed. His four-month-old baby has had to have an eye operation.

'Song' Pic Infringe Suit

Songwriters Al Lewis and Al Sherman brought an infringement suit against 20th-Fox in N. Y. Federal Court last week, charging that the defendant unlawfully appropriated their tune, "When I'm the President (We Want Cantor)," in the film, "With a Song in My Heart."

Lewis and Sherman ask an injunction and an accounting of the profits derived from the alleged piracy.

MGM Sets Push On 'Deck' Soundtrack

MGM Records is prepping a big promotional push on its upcoming soundtrack set from the Metro musical, "Hit The Deck." Package, which is the diskery's 36th soundtrack set, will be tied in with MGM's 8th anni drive.

To hypo the platter on distributor and retail levels, the diskery is shipping out special exploitation platters. For the deejays, MGM has whipped up a 12-inch LP platter which is being sold to distribs for $1.25. For the dealers, the diskery has produced a special demonstration record of highlights from the score with a selling pitch delivered by Ted Brown, WMGM (N.Y.) disk jockey.

"Hit The Deck" score was penned by Vincent Youmans. Album will feature Jane Powell, Tony Martin, Debbie Reynolds, Vic Damone, Ann Miller and Kay Armen. Martin and Damone are on loan from RCA Victor and Mercury, respectively.

U. S. preem of William Walton's "Troilus And Cressida," first performed in London last Dec. 3, will be given by the San Francisco Opera this fall.

Trade Execs Generally Support Stand Vs. Indigio R&B Lyrics

New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

I was glad to see your blast at song "leer-ics" when it appeared in the Feb. 23 issue of VARIETY. The World-Telegram picked it up with approval last Saturday (25), and pointed out that at the Riverside Hospital for narcotic addicts on North Brother Island, where there has been a high rate of promiscuity among teenagers, a nurse stated that they had to stop playing a phonograph during recreational periods because "the inmates played certain records over and over again, danced in a slow, moody manner and came close to a state of hypnosis."

It is not necessary to go to a hospital for drug addicts to find this phenomenon. The entire public of a large area in Louisiana was recently exposed to it when a couple of disk jockeys played one record over and over for a whole day.

You seem to blame the popular music industry for this condition. I have talked to a number of members of ASCAP — popular music publishers and writers alike—who condemn the smutty and suggestive lyric just as much as you do. Let's get this issue out in the open. Who are the offenders? Let's name names. Of the songs mentioned in the last five issues of VARIETY—or any other trade publication—which songs would you say are off color?

We are glad to see your paper taking the lead in this challenge to those who pander to the lowest possible public taste. I am sure ASCAP will give you all the help you ask for in an endeavor to root out this evil. However, my hunch is that the responsibility lies at the doorstep of the recording companies and those broadcasters who encourage or condone the dissemination of these "leer-ics."

Keep up the crusade!

Theatre Exec Sees A Need for 'Cop' in Act

New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

Your carefully aimed "Warning to the Music Business" was something that has needed saying for a long time, and I can't think of any way in which it could have been said more effectively. It is a far, far better thing that such criticism, though momentarily painful to the target, should come from a friend rather than an adversary. In that way, the criticism is clearly labeled "constructive."

We in the business of motion picture exhibition are as sensitive as anyone to the merest suggestion of "censorship," by word or implication. Nothing has plagued us more consistently.

But it cannot be compared with the restraints that ought to be placed upon the music publishing business—preferably by itself. Movie audiences select their films with a certain foreknowledge of what they'll see—through advance advertising, publicity and reviews. They can pay their way into a theatre, or not, as they choose.

Pop music, on the other hand, reaches its audience mainly through community-owned facilities—namely, the air, which belongs to everyone. It comes via radio, tv and the inescapable jukebox. It booms its way into ears that cannot always choose. The obligation of the music business to toe the mark of decency, is therefore inescapable.

Doubly Obnoxious

Song lyrics, usually cursed by inanity anyway, have become doubly obnoxious. Their double-entendres now come sailing at you, carried and propelled by a throbbing, sultry beat that reduces a double meaning to only one. Songs used to put a lot of emphasis on the vertical image—dancing together, walking down the shady lane hand-in-hand, even whizzing up to the moon in an airplane. Not any more. The image has been sharply flattened and is now often horizontal in its suggestion.

This stuff about "giving the public what it wants," meaning smutty lyrics, would be strictly for the birds, if birds were stupid. As a matter of fact, I am wholly convinced that the lyric is a necessary evil to most songs—but how evil should it get? After all, many big pop song smashes have overcome most meaningless sort of lyrics, even to the moron trade. It was the music that put them over. That should take care of the argument that the muddy lyric is needed to "sell" a pop tune (as distinguished from the special material songs for the saloon trade).

The films, tv and the comic books have all been hit with blame for our blossoming juvenile delinquency. If the long accusing finger should now come down heavily on the pop music business, could it honestly plead not guilty? How could it answer the fat docket of evidence offered to support the accusation?

I have a couple of growing youngsters of my own. I'd rather they didn't hear the complained-of stuff. Neither their mother nor I can, or wants to, set up as two house dicks checking on the morality of the music lyrics they hear.

The music trade is giving me an uncomfortably split personality. As one engaged in the entertainment industry, I detest censorship. As a parent with a big emotional stake in his children, the urge to help blow that whistle may overpower the first reluctance. But there's got to be a cop in the act, and it's up to the music industry to put him there.

Martin Levine,
(Brandt Theatres Gen. Mgr.)

Frank Walker Sees History Repeating

New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

Some of us older fellows, know that history is repeating itself and it is quite unfortunate that before it gets an opportunity to repeat itself, many new people get into the business and take it from that point on without referring to the past. I am so happy that you have taken up the cudgel in behalf of good music and, particularly, good lyrics. We can't blame the kids for everything, for after all, they buy that which is offered and the trouble is that the offerings some times are not very dignified. So keep after us and all the others. I know how I stand personally, for I lived in the age when it became necessary to clean up this business once before. It was done then and it can be done now, providing we all put our minds to it and our hearts into it.

Defends Indie Labels For Open-Door Policy

Brooklyn, N. Y.

Editor, VARIETY:

If it wasn't for indie record companies, I do not know what some artists would do. You cannot even get into the front door of a large company unless a smaller company has given you "the artist" a chance before approaching the larger companies. The larger companies have for many years jumped on the band wagon, when it was evident a certain tune was selling, and snowed under the indie with promotion. That trend has been going as far back as I can remember at least fifteen years.

I've known many artists who would carry their own weight, if given a chance, but certain fields have been closed up tight to them. I for one am glad to see the small companies cause the large companies to worry; also the original version outselling the bandwagon boys. Here's hoping things along the line will stay and improve as much as the public permit.

Take a Cue From the Hillbillies

Troy, Pa.

Editor, VARIETY:

Anent the soiled lyrics that are flooding the airwaves, vets well know the pitfalls of triple-entendre prose-rhymes and the adage that they just don't pay. It all comes down to the taste of the author, who starts the whole ball of wax. The hillbillies jumped from their good and simple heart-felt stuff, that sold, into the questionable field of suggestive lyrics, and badly written ones at that. Today the c&w records just ain't sellin'—and maybe the r&b boys will meet the same fate, I hope, I hope, I hope.

Woody, Heath In Swap Scheme

London, March 1.

U. S. bandleader Woody Herman has put up a scheme to British bandleader Ted Heath. It proposes that the two maestros exchange batons for a couple of months this autumn—Heath coming to the States to conduct the Herman orchestra, and Herman going to Britain to conduct the Heath outfit. The leaders would also exchange vocalists and arranging libraries.

Herman feels the scheme would get the blessing of the American Federation of Musicians and the British Musicians Union, and that it is the next best thing to an exchange of bands, which is not possible under existing conditions.

Heath's reaction is lukewarm. He feels that neither band could do itself justice with a completely new set of arrangements written with individual solo musicians in mind. However, he and his band are due to play Australia in March and Heath himself will be visiting New York en route back to Britain. He will then meet Herman and discuss the plan in more detail.

BOB WEEMS' CINCY GAC POST

Chicago, March 1.

Bob Weems, former Willard Alexander Agency rep here, has joined the General Artists Corp.'s Cincinnati office.

He's the brother of GAC v.p. Art Weems.

Bill Randle

adds that folk music and rhythm & blues have a tendency to reflect the social era more accurately and quickly than the general stream of pop music which is based primarily on the simplest expressions of love and the basic ingredients of wholesome living, while r&b reflects basically a primitive and earthy conception of the way people really live. "This crude primitiveness has an appeal," says Randle.

The crudity, Randle adds, may persist on certain levels after the original acceptance but the major public interest will be toward a more acceptable popular type of music which ultimately will be absorbed into the main streams of the commercial music business.

'Clean-Up' R&B

Randle cites "Sincerely" as an original r&b hit but it now has become a popular song, via major record company cuts, and is no longer a strictly r&b record. "The difference between the original 'Sincerely' by The Moon Glows and the McGuires' cut of the same song," he says, "is the difference between the r&b pattern and the pop pattern. To recreate the original sound is to make the serious mistake of attempting to reproduce a crudity whose appeal is only transitory in the continuing output of pop music."

Randle doesn't believe that record company a&r men or deejays should be stampeded into playing nothing but r&b, nor does he believe that they should eliminate entirely because of unhealthy social implications. The answer, he says, lies in selectivity of material. "Selectivity," he concludes, "doesn't come easy, particularly in the current panic."

Lavern Baker Claims 15G Royalty Loss on Lifting Of Song Arrangements

Recurrent complaint over lifting of arrangements in the disk field has been voiced again by Lavern Baker, rhythm & blues songstress who had the original version of the current hit, "Tweedle Dee," on the Atlantic label. Miss Baker, in a letter to her Congressman, Charles Diggs, of Michigan, claims she lost $15,000 in royalties because of several major companies' cover disks that copied her arrangements.

She urged the Congressman to amend the 1909 Copyright Act so as to protect arrangements as well as the original tunes. She pointed out that "I spend over $7,500 for each of my record sessions hiring arrangers, special songwriters, and a big band and chorus. Then what happens? Some singer comes along and plagiarizes my creations. This is a bigger swindle than the Teapot Dome Scandal!"

A few months ago, Russ Carlyle also squawked about other bandleaders copying his arrangement of "In a Little Spanish Town."

VARIETY DISK JOCKEY POLL

This compilation is designed to indicate those records rising in popularity as well as those on top. Ratings are computed on the basis of ten points for a No. 1 mention, nine for a No. 2, and so on down to one point. Wherever possible, only records with two or more mentions are listed, even though their total points are less in some cases than those which receive only one mention. Cities and jockeys will vary from week to week to present a comprehensive picture of all sectors of the country regionally.

COIN-OPS!

Launch a bright new singing star...
Help her win an RCA VICTOR recording contract

Hurry Your Nominations Along For The M.O.A.—RCA VICTOR "Miss Juke Box of 1955" Contest!
Remember—Deadline is March 15!

Your Role Is Easy. Our Rules Are Simple:

1 Any Coin-Operator may submit entries, which will be judged on the basis of talent and beauty.

2 Entries must consist of a photograph (full-length view) and a record or tape (7½" speed) of the contestant singing any pop standard with piano accompaniment only. All entries become the property of RCA Victor and none will be returned.

3 Any girl 21 or over, either amateur or professional and not under contract to any recording company, is eligible.

4 Entries must include the name, address and age of the contestant as well as the name and address of the sponsoring coin-op.

5 Entries must be submitted to "Miss Juke Box," RCA Victor Record Division, 630 Fifth Avenue, N. Y. 20, N. Y., not later than March 15, 1955.

6 The judges — Paul Ackerman of The Billboard, Bob Austin of The Cash Box, Herm Schoenfeld of Variety and Joe Carlton of RCA Victor—will select three of the contestants as finalists. Their decision will be final.

7 The finalists will become candidates for the title "Miss Juke Box of 1955" and will be brought to Chicago at RCA Victor's expense to appear at the MOA Convention, March 28, 29, 30. Finalists will be notified on March 21.

8 In the RCA Victor Exhibit at the convention, coin-ops will meet the candidates, hear their recordings and elect a winner.

9 "Miss Juke Box of 1955" will win an RCA Victor recording contract, and her sponsor will receive an RCA Victor 21" Color TV set. The other two candidates will be awarded RCA Victor "New Orthophonic" High Fidelity "Victrola" phonographs. Duplicate prizes in case of tie.

Det. Jock Assn. Relaxes Nix on Coral & Jubilee, Holds Vs. Label X, Kapp

Detroit, March 1.

The ban against Coral and Jubilee records, imposed by a group of leading Detroit disk jockeys three weeks ago, has been lifted. However, the agreement not to spin Label X and Kapp records remains in force.

Charles Gray, president of Cosnat Distributing Co. which handles Coral - Jubilee, convinced seven of the 16 jocks, said to be members of the Detroit Disk Jockey Assn., who attended a meeting Friday (25) in Hotel Fort Shelby, that he had not been responsible for showing "partiality" to two jocks against whom the 16 are feuding.

In a statement later, Gray said: "Coral and Jubilee records never were banned because of payola. The whole question has been that a couple of jocks have got dubs ahead of the others. They were particularly sore at what they called 'discrimination' in favor of Don McLeod of WJBK. I convinced them it was not my fault, that the dubs came from out-of-town publishers, etc. On my promise to see that everyone got an even break from now on, the jocks promised to resume playing Coral and Jubilee records."

Spokesmen for the jocks stated that the ban against Label X and Kapp would continue until Robin Seymour, of WKMH, no longer is associated with the Arc Distributing Co. which handles Label X-Kapp. Seymour has admitted his wife owns stock in Arc which the jocks feel is "unethical" and which puts them in a position of plugging a competitor's label. Seymour and Henry Droz, prexy of Arc, say they see nothing wrong in the arrangement.

The seven who attended the meeting with Gray are Ed McKenzie, WXYZ; Marty McNeeley, WJR; Eddie Chase and Bud Davies, CKLW, and Ross Mulholland, Bob Maxwell and Art Lazarow, WWJ.

ROBBINS TO RESUME OLD PUBBER NAME

Vet publisher Jack Robbins, who sold out most of his music holdings to Ashley Music last year, will reassume rights to his former firm's name, J. J. Robbins & Sons, in June. Under the terms of his deal with Ashley, Robbins was not permitted to use the firm name for a specific period.

Robbins plans to print several song and band folios, as well as show scores, including the projected "Happy Dollar" by John Latouche and Billy Friml, son of Rudolf Friml.

Decca Expands Roster With C&W Signings

The Karroll Sisters, a hillbilly duo from Pennsylvania, has been added to Decca's country and western roster by Paul Cohen, diskery's c&w chief. Cohen has also signed Vaughn Horton's Pinetoppers to a pact. This group features Dick McCreavy on vocals.

From Atlanta Wally Fowler and His All-Night Singers have also been added to the Decca list.

Inside Stuff—Music

N. Y. Daily News' Inquiring Fotografer Jimmy Jemail on Saturday (26) submitted the question, "Songwriters do not get royalties from the use of their songs in jukeboxes. Do you think they should?" Evelyn Mills, Forest Hills, N. Y., submitted the question and only two of the six queried dissented. Brooklyn salesman Arnold L. Blum replied, "Why should they? The writer receives a royalty on sheet music, the live use of his song in night clubs and from every record sold. A royalty on jukebox plays is frosting on the cake. The jukebox is advertising of a sort." Another Brooklynite, advertising assistant Arkyn Schneiderman, could "see no reason for it. A record in a jukebox is in the public domain. Similarly, fashion designers do not ask for a commission every time a dress or gown they have designed is worn. Songwriters are fully compensated when a recording is sold."

On the affirmative side, Walter F. Lawrence, Verona, N. J., engineer, felt: "Since songwriters receive royalties from radio and television whenever a song is played, it logically follows that jukebox operators pay in the same way for using a song. It's grossly unfair to exclude jukeboxes and regulate other mediums."

Peter J. Blakney, Montclair, N.J., manufacturers representative, also said: "Yes. By denying them the right of royalties from jukeboxes, these men are being penalized for their creative talents. A hit record, played 100,000 times, would amount to a sizable sum in royalties. A songwriter is entitled to reap the profits from his song."

Mike Kastin, Brooklyn salesman, observed: "The profits from a jukebox are split between the place in which it is installed and the distributor. One of Bing Crosby's records can be played thousands of times and he doesn't get a single sou. Neither does the writer. The copyright law, dating back to 1909, should be changed to include both."

Max Weatherly, Manhattan writer: "As an author, I fully realize the importance of royalties. In many ways, it is similar to an annuity. If a writer turns out a song that lasts over the years, he can count on a steady income in his old age. And since jukeboxes are a medium of entertainment, he is entitled to his share."

The N. Y. Daily News' shot of Eilin and Irving Berlin, showing President Eisenhower formally presenting a gold medal, authorized by Congress "in appreciation of his patriotic compositions, including 'God Bless America'," was captioned with a VARIETY-style phrase: "Gold Pan Alley." Incidentally, this was a streamer on the lead story in the 40th Anniversary Number of ASCAP, which was an interview with Berlin wherein the songsmith traced the evolution of Tin Pan Alley into Big Business.

At the White House Ceremony on Friday (18), wherein the President officiated in the presentation, Berlin said, "This is the most wonderful gift we have." (The "we" referred to his wife, Ellin, who was also shown in the UP telefotos).

Sid Caesar turned vocalist Monday (28) on his NBC-TV show to give a ride to "Birthday Song," for which he wrote both music and lyrics. Originally written for his wife Florence last September as a mccoy birthday chant, but never performed publicly before, it was fronted amid a night club backdrop, with Nanette Fabray on the receiving end since she plays his frau on his stanza. Caesar has his own publishing company, Flo Music (after his wife), which in addition to "Birthday," has "Was That You?" on its lists. This is another but still unperformed Caesar tune, who composed it to Sammy Gallop's words.

Richard W. Pogue, an officer attached to the patents division of the Judge Advocate General's office in the Pentagon in Washington, copped the top award in the national Nathan Burkan Memorial Competition for essays in copyright law. Pogue's paper, titled "Borderland—Where Copyright and Design Patent Meet," won him a $500 prize in the annual contest sponsored by ASCAP in memory of its first general counsel. Pogue's essay will be published in May by the Columbia U. Press as part of the Sixth Copyright Law Symposium.

Sue Two Night Clubs For Copyright Piracy

Two ASCAP publishers, Bourne Inc. and Leo Feist, filed suit in N.Y. Federal Court last week against the Westchester Studio Club Galleries, Mt. Vernon, N.Y., for alleged infringement of two of its copyrights.

Action seeks an injunction and damages sustained of not less than $250 for allegedly performing on Jan. 15 and at various other times Bourne's "Careless" and Feist's "My Blue Heaven" without a proper license or payment of royalties.

Frank Music and the American Academy of Music, both ASCAP publishers, have filed suit in Mississippi Federal Court against the Beachwater Club in Biloxi, Miss., for allegedly playing their copyrights without a license. Tunes involved are "Hey There" (Frank) and "Caravan" (American). Plaintiffs ask for an injunction and statutory damages of $250 per infringement.

Native Jukeboxes Threat to U.S. Biz In West Germany

Frankfurt, Feb. 22.

U. S. jukebox toppers, who consider West Germany their second most important market for jukebox sale outside the U.S., may have to look for business elsewhere if the building boom in the West German record player industry continues. Formerly the German ops were content to buy the U.S. product for a cost of about $1,500 (including the high 22% import tax) for a new 50-record 100-selection box, because of the superior quality, tone and works of the U.S.-manufactured product over the less-expensive German-made box.

However, the major German firms of Bergman in Hamburg, Diplomat in Berlin, and Tone-o-matic in Frankfurt, which were formerly mainly doing the cabinet work and bringing the machinery in from the States, have now gone into interior construction as well, and the quality is so much improved that they are highly competitive with U.S. products. The local box, because of lower labor costs and less taxes, retails for about $800.

Most of the jukeboxes in West Germany are in the coffee houses or gaststattes (low-priced taverns selling wine and beer). The restaurant owners normally do not buy the machines outright but leave them for a 24-month period for about $2,000 to $2,500 including record changes and service—a heavy toll for a 5c a play intake. Since these eating houses have no other form of entertainment, though, the installation of a jukebox is usually a profit-making move. Records are about a 50-50 split of U.S. top pop tunes sung by Yank artists and German light classics.

Omaha Agency License Revoked

Omaha, March 1.

Revocation of the Paul Moorhead Agency license by AFM district rep Ernie Lewis of Tucson last week, provided the biggest bombshell in Omaha music circles in years. Moorhead handled about 75% of music biz in this territory, with top local bands of Skeets Mahoney, Eddie Haddad, Hank Winder, Mal Dunn, Al Lamm and many others.

Lewis used the clause that a license may be revoked by either party without notice or reason in picking up the Moorhead papers. He declined to file any charges, so AGVA refused to go along with the ban and has given the green-light to Don Romeo to continue to book variety acts at the Moorhead office.

Lewis also picked up the contracts of Richard Brown and Howard McArdle, but this was considered strictly window-dressing, as Brown booked only himself and McArdle wasn't handling any orchs.

Lewis's action leaves National Orch Service as only booking agency of any size in Omaha. Moorhead and his orchs have not announced any plans, although they're still able to book themselves individually.

MGM to Aid of Juke Ops With Special Packages

MGM Records is coming to the aid of the jukebox operators. Diskery is prepping a series of special extended play disk packages at low cost for the coin ops. Move is being made to speed up the juke switchover to EP platters and the upped tab of 10c a play.

MGM already has set two packages of 10 EP platters each for the juke ops. Accompanying the packages will be special counter cards, racks and title strips. MGM pactees featured in the initial packages are Leroy Holmes, Joe Lippman, Aquaviva, George Shearing and the Dick Hyman Trio. All the platters are instrumentals.

Capitol kicked off the EP pitch for the jukes several months ago with an operator pack of Jackie Gleason EP's at a sliced cost. Other diskeries, currently, are considering similar action.

GRANZ JAZZ TROUPE BIG CLICK IN PARIS

Paris, March 1.

Norman Granz's "Jazz At The Philharmonic" breezed into the Theatre Des Champs Elisees for four concerts in two days Feb. 19-20. Shows went on 5 p.m. and at 11:30 p.m. with longhair concerts sandwiched in between. Jazz enthusiasts jammed all four offerings for the jamming of such hands as Dizzy Gillespie, Roy Eldridge, Bill Harris, Flip Phillips, Oscar Peterson, Louis Bellson, Ray Brown, Herb Ellis, Buddy De Franco and Ella Fitzgerald. Show was put on under the aegis of Jazz Magazine.

There is no doubt about the jazz hold here, with the many new little jazz boites springing up, the three jazz clubs with big membership, and the many U. S. musicians who have found a niche here. In fact the U. S. Embassy has accepted this, and will atempt to put on a big jam session this summer as a part of the U. S. cultural salute to France which will also include the Boston Symphony Orch, an exhibition of French painting owned by Americans, two plays, the N. Y. City Ballet and a special road company of "Oklahoma."

Ella, Peterson Draw Big In London at $5.60 Top

London, March 1.

Singer Ella Fitzgerald and pianist Oscar Peterson gave a two-hour concert before 4,000 people at the Royal Albert Hall last Tuesday (22), with the highest admission prices ever charged for a jazz show here. Top seats cost £2 ($5.60).

Three provincial concerts among those scheduled for the two artists during a short tour here have now been cancelled—at Cardiff, Dundee and Leicester). Top prices were 21s. ($3) and 15s. ($2.15) a seat, but lack of support nixed the shows. However, Miss Fitzgerald and Peterson's remaining dates at Birmingham, Bristol, Manchester, Sheffield, Newcastle and Edinburgh are okay.

Liberace 42G, Frisco

San Francisco, March 1.

Liberace concert at the Cow Palace Sunday afternoon (27) grossed $42,314.90 with 14,000 admissions at $4.40 top, for the largest crowd and take at a musical event in Frisco. It was still not a sellout gross, being less than the Boston Gardens and Madison Square Garden, N. Y., takes last year.

N.Y. Juke Ops Up Spins to 10c

The inflationary trend has finally hit the New York jukebox industry. Over the past few weeks, the Gotham juke ops have been converting their machines to the 10c spin, thus giving up the nickel play which has been standard since the modern juke industry started in the early 1930s. The dime tab has previously been adopted in several other areas around the country.

Boost of the juke price has been smoothed by some operators with the use of 45 rpm extended play disks in the machines. This, in effect, gives the customers two songs for the dime and is expected to get the N.Y. juke patrons accustomed to using the 10c piece for coin machines.

WESTMINSTER IN 50% PLATTER CUT SPECIAL

Although Westminster Records, one of the leading indie diskers in the longhair field, refused to cut its prices while most others did early this year, the label is currently running a sale at 50% off its usual list price of $5.95. Special price of $2.99 on its 12-inch disks mark the company's fifth anni this month.

Low prices will prevail until April 9, when the regular prices will be reestablished. The discount houses, however, have been selling Westminster disks, along with the merchandise of other diskers, at prices ranging around $3. With the Westminster price cut, the discounters have sliced their prices on this label to $2.30.

E. R. Lewis to U. S.

E. R. (Ted) Lewis, British Decca topper, is due in New York this week from his London base to o.o. the operation of his U. S. subsid, London Records.

Lewis is expected to be in Gotham for several weeks.

Want Performing Fees for Music Lifted in Canada

Ottawa, March 1.

Abolition of fees for performances of copyrighted musical works and a government investigation into the financial operations of performing rights organizations are being urged in Canada.

Matter was brought before the Royal Commission investigating Canada's copyright legislation by the Musical Protective Society of Canada, which represents nine organizations of tune users, including hotels, jukes, radio, television, pictures, fairs, exhibitions, wired-music distributors, auditoriums, arenas and restaurants. Alternative to doing away with fees was suggested as reduction of the copyright term, now the life of the composer plus 50 years. MPSC recommended either the patent term, 17 years plus renewal rights for 17 years, or a 25-year period, or the United States term of 25 years plus renewal rights for 25 years.

In making the suggestion to abolish fees, MPSC claimed performances were "free publicity" leading to upped sales.

Chief Justice Ilsley of Nova Scotia, heading the Commission sitting in Ottawa, said authors and composers, members of the groups collecting performing rights fees, hadn't complained about returns, so a federal probe wouldn't likely be considered.

Spokesman for the users of copyrighted music told the Commission that the Composers, Authors & Publishers Assn. of Canada was owned by United States and British shareholders and Canadian members got little, if any, royalties collected in Canada. He claimed CAPAC had collected more than $1,000,000 in 1954 but only $13,000 had gone to Canadians, with no statement on what happened to the rest.

Coast Shrine Still Vaude's Most Faithful Customer After 20 Years

Los Angeles, March 1.

Vaudeville's most faithful supporter in the West is still going strong after 20 years and intends to keep on booking acts regularly "as long as they continue to attract people."

Al Malaikah Temple of the Shriners books an average of 175 acts a year for its 10 Family Shows at the Shrine Aud, its 10 luncheons at the Biltmore Bowl and its monthly visits by Temple officials to Shrine Clubs throughout Southern California, according to C. P. MacGregor, entertainment chairman and High Priest and Prophet of Al Malaikah.

During past year the Shriners have booked such acts as George Gobel (he took second billing to John Boles last March), Burl Ives, Allan Jones, Paul Gilbert, Jimmy Boyd, Florian Zabach, Anna Maria Alberghetti, Carsony Bros., Andrews Sisters and Connie Haines for the Family Shows, which are staged at the local Shrine Aud, which seats 6,800. House is always packed with Shriners and families who attend as guests of the Temple. Other standard acts are booked for the luncheons and Shrine Club visits.

"We don't believe in asking talent to work for nothing," reports MacGregor, who heads his own transcription studios here and formerly was Columbia Records' chief in San Francisco. "Naturally, we can't pay Las Vegas salaries, but we don't pay off in bottle tops, either." In addition to local showcasing, the Shrine showings usually net a goodly amount of local publicity space.

Another reason for Al Malaikah's accent on show biz lies in the fact that the current potentate is Glenn L. Pearce, onetime top tenor in Balaban & Katz houses, as well as Grauman's Chinese and film studios before entering banking. He still is an active participant as a soloist at most Shrine activities.

Chi Nitery Put on AGVA 'Unfair' List in Hassle Over Old and New Bonds

Chicago, March 1.

Club Hollywood, local nitery owned by Steve Harris, has been placed on the American Guild of Variety Artists' "unfair" list by Ernie Fast, midwest regional director of AGVA. Dispute centers around a cash bond demanded by AGVA to guarantee salaries of entertainers at the club. Harris, owner of the Hollywood, refuses to post the bond on the grounds that AGVA has not returned a portion of a previously-posted bond.

Club Hollywood was closed by a fire in 1953, and AGVA withheld one week's salary from that posted bond for entertainers then employed, returning the remaining portion. Harris maintains the entertainers were entitled only to wages for the two days they worked prior to the fire, and is suing AGVA for return of the monies withheld.

Herbie Fields signed for the Sahara, Las Vegas, starting next Tuesday (8).

WEEPER'S WORLD JAUNT TEES OFF IN HONOLULU

Singer Johnnie Ray left Friday (25) for a round-the-world jaunt. Weeper opened at the Civic Auditorium, Honolulu, (Tues.) for two days, and then he goes to Australia, where he will play a series of dates for promoter Lee Gordon, starting March 8. His show includes Helen O'Connell, Clark Bros. and Danny Crystal.

Ray, accompanied by his manager Bernie Lang, will then go to England where he will do a series of stands in the provinces before opening at the Palladium, London, April 25 for two weeks. Ray is due back in New York early June for a return date at the Latin Quarter.

N. Carolina State Fair Shows 40G Gain for '54

Greensboro, N.C., March 1.

The 1954 North Carolina State Fair showed a profit, excluding permanent additions and betterments of $40,116.93, compared with $57,831.95 in 1953, in the annual State Fair audit just released.

Revenue from general gate admissions last year totaled $95,355, compared with $113,477. Total revenue declined from $302,566 in 1953 to $273,365 in 1954. Total expenses were $233,248, a drop of $11,000 from the previous year.

Exhibitions received a total of $43,152 in cash awards during the 1954 Fair, compared with $41,979 in 1953.

Sullivan To M.C. Can. Exhib Show

Toronto, March 1.

Ed Sullivan has been signed for the Canadian National Exhibition Aug. 27 to Sept. 11. Sullivan will emcee a show that will showcase Canadian talent. One of the features of the show will be Marilyn Bell, who won the swim across Lake Ontario.

The Sullivan booking, initiated by Jack Arthur, CNE executive director, and set by Eddie Elkort, exclusive booker for CNE, is a result of the clamor to book Canadian talent for this event. As it now stands, Sullivan will present the native acts and will act as emcee on the show.

Sullivan, it's pointed out, has been instrumental in furthering Canadian talent through his "Toast of the Town" teleshow on CBS-TV. For example, he presented such acts as Giselle MacKenzie, Four Lads and the Crew Cuts.

Sullivan is getting $25,000 and the CNE will pay for the other talent.

For the past few years there has been considerable agitation for the greater use of native talent. As a result, it's not yet known what the surrounding show will consist of, but a healthy fraction of Britons and Canadians will be used whether in the production or as featured acts.

CNE has no Sunday shows, consequently, Sullivan will be able to fly down to New York for his "Toast of the Town" on CBS-TV.

AGVA's Housecleaning A Good Move

The American Guild of Variety Artists has taken a step that's long been necessary. The nitery performers' union has embarked on a housecleaning that indicates that this union may yet fight its way to stability and respectability.

For too long it's been victimized by a series of inept national administrators and receding employment in the variety field. It's been the delinquent in the field of theatrical unionism and the oustings last week by the national board make for a promising start.

Unfortunately, the board didn't go far enough. There are still some remnants that should be pushed out of the way. There are some political hacks remaining, holdovers from an era of double-talking, do-nothings. There are some to whom trade unionism is a dirty word, and there are some whose sole interest in their union is the possibility of a job with the organization. Or failing a job, an easy entree into the union's welfare fund (not the one administered by Nat Abramson, but the one administered in union headquarters). The broom didn't sweep far enough, but that may come later. The atmosphere at AGVA is a little cleaner than it was.

It's unfortunate that the union's resident counsel Henry Katz went out along with the others. He has frequently been referred to as the guardian of the union's morals. Katz acted as the conscience of the union too many times and too frequently was an uncomfortable specimen to have around.

The exit of Jack Irving and Irving Goss halted a trend, and certainly one which heralded the danger of AGVA aligning itself with non-theatrical elements.

The oustings, however, should be a signal for the big time acts to take an interest in their organization. Without the interests of top people, the union is likely to be run by small minds and smalltimers and will always lack the respect of the industry. If they continue in control, then it's not unlikely that there will one day be travelling taxes for migratory performers, to restrict the free flow of work.

Talent employers and agencies would also do well to cooperate with AGVA in furthering its legitimate aims. Last year, James C. Petrillo of the American Federation of Musicians, proved he could take over AGVA if he so minded. Petrillo can be a tough boy to deal with.

The new regime holds promise with the takec er by clear and vigorous minds such as Tom Melody, an articulate newcomer to theatrical unionism from Dallas; Joe Campo, of Philadelphia; Russell Swann, who has too frequently been discouraged from acting in the interests of all performers; and Jackie Bright, prexy, who is gaining stature in the councils of the Associated Actors & Artistes of America.

AGVA hasn't held so much promise since it was organized in 1939.

SIDELINES FILLING UP SPARE TIME FOR AGENTS

Indie vaude agents and bookers are gradually finding themselves sidelines. Latest to go in for a new line of endeavor, in addition to maintaining an agency, is Al K. Dow, longtime booker, who has gone into the travel agency business. He's associated with Leo Lazar in this endeavor.

Another, who recently got himself a second activity, is Eddie Smith, who has become a Westchester realtor. Some agents have invested heavily in the market as one means of making a buck. However, many of the indies are hardpressed in filling up the day and their wallets. Sidelines endeavor to do both for them.

COMES THE AGVA REVOLUTION

Mpls. Cops Padlock Switch Show After 2 Parade in 'Drag'

Minneapolis, March 1.

After the police department decided that a female impersonators show violated a local ordinance, the Gay 90s, local loop nitery, closed "The Jewel Box Revue." By so doing the bistro avoided a disorderly conduct charge which Police Inspector Pat Walling said he would have filed against it.

This was the first female impersonators revue to play here in five years, a previous one by the same name having been ordered out of another night club following a long run in 1950 when the police department said that it attracted an undesirable element.

"Jewel Box Revue" was in its fifth week at the Gay 90s until it came a cropper. Its trouble followed the arrest on two occasions

Jersey Burlesk Folds But Area Still Active

The Colony Theatre, a burlesquery at Union City, N. J., folded just a week ago after a run of several months. Spot was operated by Dominic Ferrone and Irving Stopak.

Despite the closing of this house, it's felt that there will be no underseating problem in North Jersey burley houses. Presently operating in that area are the Hudson, also at Union City; the Adams, Newark, and the Empire, Newark.

Big Shakeup Due In AGVA Branches

A shakeup in the various branches of the American Guild of Variety Artists looms as a result of the changes made in New York, last week, by the union's national board. The interim committee, comprising Dewey Barto, Tom Melody and Joe Campo, is expected to look into the operation of all the branches.

So far, it's expected that the major changes will take place in the midwest areas and possibly some in the east. Attempt will be made to put all branches on a paying basis. Where this is impossible, because of small membership, it's expected that there will be some consolidations.

Only post expected to be fairly safe is that of the Coast regional director, Irving Mazzel, who succeeds Eddie Rio. Latter resigned to become entertainment director for the soon-to-be-opened Royal Nevada Hotel, Las Vegas.

The trouble spot, aside from New York and Philadelphia, now without permanent branch heads, is expected to be around the midwest area. Chicago, for example, is still working without minimum basic agreements in many spots. The dispute with the strip spots is still unsettled, despite the fact that a cessation of hostilities has been declared. True, this condition was inherited from previous admlnistrations, but nothing has been done for a long time to cure the situation.

The top-to-bottom reorganization is expected to start as soon as problems in the national office are on their way to solution.

36G TWIN CITIES DEAL WITH BOB HOPE SCORES

Minneapolis, March 1.

For its matinee and night here and one evening in St. Paul, Bob Hope and his show grossed 39,400 empty potato chips bags and $9,200 cash, according to Vern Aanonsen, partner in the local Old Dutch company which manufactures the potato chips and brought in the attraction.

Show was scaled at $3.50 top, but every empty 39c potato chips bag counted 25c toward a ticket, which could be paid for entirely in bags or partially or entirely in cash.

Aanonsen says the cost of bringing the show to the Twin Cities, including the $22,500 paid to Hope (out of which he defrayed the other performers' stipends), exploitation and advertising, was between $35,000 and $36,000, charged, of course, to potato chips advertising. It was good advertising and not too expensive, considering the accruing value, he feels.

Previously, Old Dutch had Fred Waring and the latter's troupe similarly for a night each in Minneapolis and St. Paul. It's not only a sales stimulant for the company's product, but pays off in improved goodwill and public relations, Aanonsen points out, and more such ventures are under consideration.

IRVING, GOSS RESIGN POSTS

By JOE COHEN

The American Guild of Variety Artists national board has gone through its own house like a cycione. When the dust settled down last week, three of its top officials were out—Jack Irving, national administrative secretary; Irving Goss, head of the New York branch who was slated for the post of eastern regional director, and Henry Katz, resident counsel.

An interim committee was appointed to mind the store until replacements are found. They are Dewey Barto, former national administrative secretary; Joe Campo, AGVA's third veepee, and Tom Melody, a newcomer to the board from Dallas who has become one of its most articulate spokesman, and who precipitated the wholesale cleanup with questioning of its top echelon.

The axings took place at the Henry Hudson Hotel, N. Y., where the board convened last week in a three-day quarterly meeting. Precipitating the fireworks was a discussion of the Radio City Music Hall, N. Y., contract. As a result of this discussion, Irving and Goss took advantage of the board's offer to resign, while Katz said he had no reason to resign, since he was not ashamed of anything he did during his tenure at AGVA. If the board wanted to get rid of him, he said, they could fire him.

The fireworks started early in the meetings. Irving, in his report, stated that a deal with the Music Hall had been concluded, but hadn't yet been signed. Prexy Jackie Bright, in his report which

No Obvious Candidate for AGVA Nat'l Sec. Post for 1st Time in Yrs.

For the first ime in many years, there isn't a candidate evident for the post of national administrative secretary of the American Guild of Variety Artists. Jackie Bright, who has been learning the ropes of the entire organization since he's been spending a lot of time in running the union, has withdrawn himself as a candidate, because he said he's working on a deal which will take him to Europe for an extended trip.

Many feel that Dewey Barto, who's chairmaning the interim committee, is a likely prospect for the job. However, Barto has been in that spot prior to Henry Dunn's

Joanne Gilbert Subbing For Albert at Waldorf

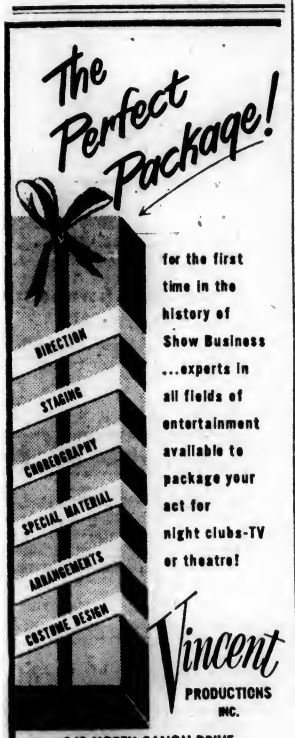
A film commitment is keeping Eddie Albert & Margo (Mrs. Albert) on the Coast, with result that Joanne Gilbert was booked to substitute for them at the Waldorf-Astoria's Empire Room, N.Y., March 10.

It's a four-week stint, followed by Dorothy Dandridge who comes in, per schedule, for five or six weeks to close the season before the Starlight Roof reopens.

Agencies Backing TA on Benefits

Theatre Authority has obtained the backing of agencies in a bid to elliminate all unauthorized benefits. In a meeting with a portion of a committee sent by the Artists Representatives Assn., actress Beverly Roberts on behalf of TA asked agency cooperation on the matter.

Percenters were repped by Tom Martin, General Artists Corp., veepee, and Leon Newman. Agents declared that they were opposed to actors performing at gratis affairs, since this process helps elliminate jobs for performers and with it agency commissions.



TA sought the agency cooperation on the ground that many offices fail to check TA on whether a benefit is cleared and frequently get acts to perform free.

followed, attacked the Music Hall contract, which he said had been signed, on the ground that it failed to include welfare fund contributions by the theatre.

The contradiction was picked up by Melody and Russell Swann, who started interrogating Irving. Latter insisted that he had not signed the pact. Goss, who negotiated the agreement, was then brought in, and he stated that he had the authority to negotiate and conclude an agreement with the Hall, and therefore his signature on the agreement carried the authorization from Irving. At the conclusion of the questioning, Irving said that they could have his resignation if they wanted it. However, the outcry of his simpaticos staved off acceptance of the offer.

Several board members had sought the scalp of Katz, who has been variously described as the conscience of the union and the self-appointed watchdog of the union's morals. They charged that operators didn't like him and couldn't get along with members.

On a point of personal privilege, Katz got the floor and hinted that the accusations were part of a plot to get rid of him. He charged that Irving was in on the plot and then gave a recital of alleged corruption in organization's morality.

At the conclusion of Katz's talk, the board went into in-camera sessions. At the conclusion they unanimously voted to offer Goss and Katz the opportunity of resigning. Irving's resignation was voted to be in effect by the board. Goss took the hint and accepted the resignation. Katz refused to do so, and so the motion carried a termination of employment.

A quorum of the board remained in New York on Friday (25) to continue deliberations. Just what went on there wasn't disclosed, since the entire meet was barred to the press. However, it's believed that the interim committee was being steered on what to look for in the way of administration. They'll also seek to affect economies, look around for possible candidates for the three vacant jobs, and carry out policy decision.

It's felt that nothing can be now done on the Music Hall contract since it's believed that Goss' signature makes it binding. However, it's a one-year deal and so a new attempt will be made to get a contract with the welfare contribution, at the expiration of that agreement.

Another attack on the Radio City Music Hall contract was delivered by Nat Abramson, head of the board of trustees of the AGVA Welfare Fund. Abramson declared that the theatre contract sets a dangerous precedent. Either all contracts carry welfare fund contributions or none. The union must decide which it shall be.

Rise and Fall

The only living group exceeding the number of former national administrative secretaries of the American Guild of Variety Artists is the number of former French premiers.

Since 1939, when AGVA succeeded the American Federation of Actors, the following have been in the top administrative spot in the variety performers union: Maida Reed, Mildred Roth, Joan Muir, Hoyt Haddock, Gerald Griffin, Tom Phillips, Matt Shelvey, Walter Greaza, Dewey Barto, Henry Dunn and Jack Irving. For a time, the union was helmed by a committee from the parent organization, the Associated Actors & Artistes of America. Hy Faine, executive secretary of the American Guild of Musical Artists, was also at one time head of AGVA on loan from the 4A's.

TWO 'DANCING WATERS' UNITS FOR FAR EAST

"Dancing Waters" toppers Sam Shayon and Harold Steinman have set two units for the Far East. First unit will open in Manila, April 10, with a second to preem in Tokyo a short time afterward. Between both units, stands will be played in Singapore, Hong Kong, Bangkok, Thailand and possibly Formosa.

A unit of the fountain display is now on the Central and South American run. It's currently in Baranquila, Colombia.

'Holiday' Set for First Indoor Mex City Stand

"Holiday on Ice" has been signed for a stand in Mexico City, starting May 15 for three weeks. It will be the first date in that city to be played in an indoor arena, previous engagements having been done in the open in a bullfight arena, where the problem of maintaining an ice surface was difficult.

Show will then go on vacation for several weeks and will resume in July in Montana.

A. B. "Tony" Anderson, manager of Schine's Pontiac here, renominated to succeed himself as mayor of Saranac Lake; will make his fourth term in office if elected.

Walter Silverman of Columbia Pictures sales department, here for a general check-up, returned to N. Y. after a week of specialist onceovers.

Rehabilitation appointments here, which are equivalent to limited ambulatory privileges, are a very big item among the patients. Latest appointments are Harold Golde and Marion McCrea a downtown shoppers for the bed patients. Max (Randforce) Rosenthal, George (Elephants) Powers, Phillip Klein and Tommy Trant handle mail, packages and publications, wires and special deliveries.

Nanon Millis Brown, dancer formerly with "Inside U. S. A." more recently with the "Hit Parade" tele program, ended her observation period, with a top clinic report that upped her for one daily meal in main dining room.

administration. Despite the honesty and hard work that marked his regime, the general feeling around the union at that time was that it wasn't a distinguished success and he was out after one try at the job.

Naturally, all the members of the interim committee are possible candidates. Joe Campo, now on the group, who is third veepee of the union, is a veteran in union affairs. He's possibly the hardest-working man in the union, and is regarded as a sincere trade unionist. He's one of the few board members identified as having walked picket lines in all kinds of weather.

Although at one time identified with Dick Jones, a former eastern regional director who was ousted for insubordination and forming a rival union, Campo broke with Jones before the latter went into open revolt against AGVA. He is regarded as a steady worker with sufficient experience to tackle the job.

Tom Melody, a Dallas delegate who has made an excellent record during his two years in union affairs, is one of the more articulate and able newcomers. Whether he would take the job if offered, is questionable, since he does too weil as a performer. It would entail a great financial sacrifice for him.

A lot of board members would like to declare for either the job previous held by Jack Irving or by Irving Goss, the N. Y. regional director who also resigned. It's possible that the interim committee might consider applicants from other unions with good records in organization. But after the abortive Goss regime, that's now unlikely. Goss was a consultant for various locals of the Teamsters Union before joining AGVA.

There' been only one other top AGVA administrator chosen from union ranks other than a show biz organization. Hoyt Haddock, now national legislative rep for the National Maritime Union, came from the NMU to be AGVA topper. He was ousted around 1941 following political charges. He's now identified with the right wing of that union.

Louis Armstrong to go in with Robert Merrill at the Sands Hotel, Las Vegas, Aug. 3. It's Satchmo's third date at this spot.

Joyce Bryant (with George Horder), Illinois Jacquet Group (6), Al Bernie, Roulettes (3), Marty Gould Orch; "Many Rivers to Cross" (M-G).

Vaude offering at this Balaban & Katz flagship shows slots all filled by competent turns, in a varied, pleasing layout.

Joyce Bryant, sheath-gowned sepia thrush with slinky curves, displays pleasing pipes and adroitly uses her obvious charms to showcase same. Relying heavily on the faves for a filmery audience, femme opens with "Everything I've Got Belongs to You," to get things off to a bouncy start. Following with "You Made Me Love You," Miss Bryant almost whispers the tune in a bid for hushed audience attention. She alternating the uptunes with slower numbers regularly. Occasionally thrush hints of strain in her stylings, sometimes overly drawnout, detracting a fine-textured voice, which is really at its best in an intimery. Gal goes off to a good mitt.

Illinois Jacquet shares top billing with Miss Bryant in this show, and leads his instrumentalists in a bouncing and stomping kind of jam session. Sextet produces sounds in perfect harmony, with a solid beat, and registers big with the customers. At one point, sax, trombone and trumpet come to the fore, in a blend of notes that sounds like a single instrument. Jacquet leads his group dynamically to a swinging climax in "Flyin' Home," for a hefty response.

Al Bernie holds up the comic end in this bill with a well-varied, fresh turn. Roving imaginatively all over the landscape, Bernie ribs sexy-covered pocketbooks, recording artists and himself. He slips into neat carbons of Churchill and Senator McCarthy. All this is tied together neatly with banter, a few well-timed stories and an occasional comico-musical flight. Turn is well received.

The Roulettes uncork this layout with a showmanly, graceful roller-skating routine. The three skaters would deserve a larger spot in a different type of layout, but as is, they do a bangup job of getting things started.

Marty Gould leads the house orch in the absence of vacationing house maestro Lou Basil. Gabe.

L'Olympia, Paris

Paris, Mareh 1.

Gilbert Becaud, Claude Luter Orch (7), Latin Bop Stars (6), Daniele Dupre, Yves Joly (4), Three Joannys, Riga (2), Sim, Fred Clifton, Vic & Adio, Gaston Lapeyronne Orch (12); $1.25 top.

Expected bobbysoxer pandemonium did not break loose at the opener for the starring stint of youthful wailer-singer Gilbert Becaud. His disks are hot, but this ex-songwriter for Edith Piaf, who now clefs his own turn, showed he was not quite ready for the big time by seeming intimidated by this big hall. His freewheeling, bouncing numbers still made for mitts, but a tendency towards song pamphleteering about homeless waifs, lost buddies, etc., smacked of schmaltz and watered down the expected response. Lukewarm supporting card, except for a few topnotchers, also did not help unfreeze the aud.

Becaud is being associated with the youth here on his frenetic displays, but this round denotes he still has to perfect a style, arrange his numbers to crescendo form, and stay in the realm of the loud and jazzy, with a knowing interspersion of wailing ballads, for the final sock stardom that should be his later.

Another young singer, Daniele Dupre, is also presented in an offlight, as this statuesque girl shows herself in the act of ruining her voice. Though lung power is there, she wastes it on bellowing gypsy love screams, and the strain communicates itself to the aud. Obviousness of this overbelt makes for an unsatisfactory act. She should curb this offbeat tendency and stick to standards until she can find the right groove for a big voice; otherwise it will soon be gone.

Claude Luter Orch (7) is one of the first young jazz bands to make its dent here since the war. Though not the best, it has the biggest name, but music is primarily derivative from U.S. jazz classics, and individuality is lacking, plus a rocking beat, to make this okay for the youngsters but not much fun for the older jazz fans. Latin Bop Stars (6) join Luter for a swirl of movement as they do a Gallic version of the old Lindy Hop in unison. Spirited and fast, this lifts the proceedings a bit. Fred Clifton stops things with his descent into the aud to lift watches, etc. He would do better to stick to his magico turns, for house is too large for aud shenanigans.

Other hard workers are The Three Joannys and Yves Joly (4). Joannys do a fine hand shadow bit as they reenact fullfights, a carioca love duel and all sorts of characters and animals in a sprightly interlude. Joly brings his umbrellas again to the stage in a beguiling ballet of umbrella handles who reenact a drama of love and life. It's well mitted, but this is getting too familiar and Joly should dig into his rep.

Riga (2) supply an acro opener, with main diversion the fact that a muscular girl unders for the man. Makes for good applause. Vic & Adio supply the class to the program in their flawless acro-balance to a carioca rhythm. Sim is an offbeater, noise impressionist pegged under New Acts. Mosk.

Apollo, N. Y.

Leslie Uggams; Irvin C. Miller's "Brownskin Models of 1955," with Rhythmaiers (4), Sandman Simms, Clay Tyson & Rastus Murray, Louise Wood, Charles Riley, Mabel Lee, Lee Richardson, Mantan Moreland & Flournoy Miller, Models (6), Chorus (12), Eubie Blake Orch (12); "Woman on the Run" (U-I).

Impresario Irvin C. Miller is touring a slightly overstuffed, ornate package on the Negro vaude circuit. The many-faceted show moved into N. Y.'s Apollo pewstery from a warmup week at the Howard in Washington, and from it Harlemites get the lavish production value they sorely miss the other 51 weeks. Eubie Blake's (who doubles as batoneer) melodic score and Smalls Bagkin's choreo are angled away from weekly rhythm & blues. Only item on the current card that perhaps carbons other bills at this bronze key are the Flournoy Miller-scribed comedics. It's noticed that helmsman Irvin Miller's extra-dimension brings near-SRO to a time otherwise commanding half-filled pews.

Though she's not slotted as part of the effort, 12-year-old thrush Leslie Uggams provides a solid capper to the Apollo bill. Juve has developed into a topnotch performer and gives evidence of becoming a sharp looker as well. There's knowhow in her "Them There Eyes" and new MGM Records tune, "Meet My Friend Mr. Sun." Takeoff on Ted Lewis is a cutey. One offish note: since she's grown so rapidly and her style is nearly mature, her clothes for a six-year-old (ribbon and short fluffy white shirt) stretch the "prodigy" point a little too far. Incidental tapping by the youngster rounds out 10 minutes well.

Excluding Miss Uggams, whose touring isn't mapped by Miller, session standouts are tenor Charles Riley and soprano Louise Wood. Voices demonstrate high degree of training. Brace teams for a fine original romancer by Blake, which the cieffer calls "It's Very Strange What Love Will Do." Also way up is baritone Lee Richardson, who does a big number about a tyro in show biz. Charmer Mabel Lee isn't an exceptional vocalist, but her punchy delivery and handy actions please stubholders. Quartet. Rhythmaiers, is okay in brief appearances. They utilize Richardson to fill in the neeessary volume.

If not very clever, there is at least an abundance of comical material and talent. Teamed are bubbling Clay Tyson & Rastus Murray in a slapstick bit, which has a six-foot charmer involved to keep it interesting. Then there's Charlie Chan's righthand of pix, Mantan Moreland, coupled with Miller, the scribbler-performer. Lines and action, though old laugh retrievers, are at least spotted carefully throughout the 80-odd minutes so that the plethora of funsters and funstering isn't so noticeable. Other turn is Sandman Simms, whose casual delivery of novelty taps elicit okay and support.

A special fillip for Harlem are Bagkin's six posing posies. All big, they make a classy background for the all-over-the-stage maneuverings. Their presence in nifty costumes on okay mobile scenery and in front of good lighting make it a richly staged affair. Art.

George L. Dahl, Dallas architect, has been named to design a new $2,500,000 auditorium in Galveston. Dahl is also architect for Dallas' new $6,000,000 auditorium.

Palace, N. Y.

Gilbert & Russell, Jay Lee & Princess, Roy Smeck, Four Colleanos, Lee Davis, Baudy's Greyhounds & Monkeys, Stump & Stumpy, Walton & Sina, Jo Lombardi Orch; "Hell's Outpost" (Rep).

Granted that the Palace is the last outpost of vaudeville, it's about time some imagination in programming was employed. Acts offered week after week, and their placement on the bill, have a sameness, in general, that borders on dullness. These type of acts may have a nostalgic appeal for oldtimers, but if there's any attempt to build up new fans, stronger, fresher and perhaps occasional offbeat acts and routines will have to be developed.

Current sesh at the Palace is an example of the lack of imagination. It opens with Gilbert & Russell, a pleasant, energetic boy-and-girl dance team. They work well together and are okay in their solo turns, the highlight being the lad's flamenco-like terp on a drum platform. In the deuce spot, Jay Lee and the Princess offer little excitement in their magico bit. It's an extremely short outing, consisting mainly of cutting up pieces of rope which, of course, emerge whole. Lee tries a singsong comedy patter which just doesn't come off. The Princess does nothing but stand around and look pretty.

Musical novelty via banjo, ukelele and electric guitar is Roy Smeck's forte. He's an acknowledged expert on string instruments and scores with a uke version of a Bill Robinson dance routine. The Four Colleanos, two boys and two gals, follow the family tradition as juggling wizards. They're a young, good-looking quartet who can throw the Indian clubs around as good as any juggling act. Lee Davis is a handsome, standup comic. He mingles one-liners with longer routines. He doesn't get any bellylaughs, but nevertheless wins the pewholders' appreciation. His best bit is the takeoff of the stereotyped southern politician.

Baudy's Greyhounds and Monkeys are a well-known animal act. The trainer, a little pretentious in his lion tamer's outfit and frequent eracking of a whip, succeeds in getting the dogs and monkeys to do what he wants. Closing bit with the monkeys mounted on the greyhounds as if they were jockeys is effective.

Stump & Stumpy, Harlem faves for many years, are in the next to closing spot. Their song and dance routines plus patter are pleasant to take although not overly sock. Walton & Sina, billed as "glamor in balance," are an acro team garbed in evening clothes. Act consists mainly of male lifting and holding the femme in various balancing positions. They spice the act by working on a high platform. Jo Lombardi's crew provides the usual neat backing. Holl.

Empire, Glasgow

Glasgow, Feb. 25.

Five Smith Bros., Dave Willis (with Jack E. Raymond, Florence Hunter), Chas. Warren & Jean, Two Angelos, Averil & Aurel, Syd & Paul Kaye, Jimmy Jeff & June, Bobby Dowds Orch.

Lively, entertaining layout is notable for strong headlining act by the Five Smith Bros., English quintet who harmonize lustily while garbed in kilts, and for stage comebaek of Dave Willis, vet Scot comedian now returning to the theatre with his small black moustaehe and bowler hat. Willis retired four years ago from showbiz, but after losing coin in hotel management returned as a moustache-less Dame in pantomime. He's now on a better course in his old line of Chaplin-style comedian with familiar, well-tried material.

At show caught, Willis gained good mitting, partly sympathetic as coming from his own fellow-citizens but mainly on strength of his still-funny miming and patter. He is the complete clown, has an amusing gait and makes much of rolling eyes and "I'm just a wee fool" manner. He did front-cloth routine of crosstalk and embarrassed antics with foil Jack E. Raymond, and returned after interval in bench scene with his longtime femme foil, Florence Hunter.

Averil & Aurel are a polished pair of hoofers, boy and gal, and exit to solid palming. Score with stylish routines and colorful costuming, especially in their post-interval clown sequence. Syd & Paul Kaye are two young males with fairly promising crosstalk folder, but must sharpen this for top effect.

Jimmy Jeff (with June) juggles on the slack wire, and the Two Angelos, another mixed twosome, rouse customer gasps with their aerial chores, he hanging upside down and the femme whirling round at top speed with dental grip.

Charles Warren & Jean offer more comedy, he being forced in his gags but the femme, a loose-limbed type with humorous facial movements, clicking strongly in eccentric acro contortions and tumbles. Good showbacking from the Bobby Dowds orch. Gord.

Aux 3 Baudets, Paris

Paris, Feb. 28.

Fernand Raynaud, Jean Constantin, Boris Vian, Marcel Amont, Pierre Repp, Bernard Regnier & Bob du Pac; "Les Carnets Du Major Thompson," by Pierre Daninos, adapted by G. Amia, R. Auboyneau; staged by Yves Robert, sets by Jean-Denis Malcles, with Gerard Sety, Hubert Deschamps, Colette Mille, Bernard Regnier, Robert Rollis, Michel Roux, Edmond Tamiz, Rozy Varte, Gilbert Le Roy; $3 top.

Pocketsize theatre will probably be shoehorning them in for the next year on the basis of their new show which is part variety and part revue, based on the satire of Freneh ways and mores in Pierre Daninos' "Les Carnets Du Major Thompson." House is still listed in the chansonnier orbit, but has enough theatrics and directness to appeal to both local and foreign auds, unlike the other chansonniers, which remain completely localized and offer little to those lacking the lingo.

First up is doubletalking Pierre Repp, whose lugubrious candor and mangling of the mother tongue starts things yocking. Mareel Amount is an interp singer who makes up in inventiveness what he lacks in voice. A good takeoff on a flameneo dance makes this an okay entry. Bernard Regnier & Bob du Pac offer a hilarious sketch about a nearsighted lecturer discussing his hunting prowess, and doing some fancy shooting which just about destroys the assistant. Good timing and clever patter make this risible.

Boris Vian is a writer and journalist who has now decided to turn lyric writer and singer. Under a highdomed dead pan he does his offbeaters that register wordwise, but a word to the wise makes it obvious that this is strictly for the hep Parisian set, and is not the thing to set Vian as anything but a specialized fluke. No voice but a cold, insistant demeanor make this okay for those in on the gimmick, but would leave an ordinary aud wondering.

Another cieffer, who fares much better, is Jean Constantin, who, besides having written some catchy and clever ditties, purveys them with wit and understanding and intersperses his piano and singing with some clever patter that makes his stint heavily applauded. This man has more than one string to his bow, and his bow on the house scene here uncovers a new talent.

Fernand Raynaud is a mime and raconteur who is seen about town in two niteries, a music hall and now his home spot again. However, one does not tire of his mime and spiel, and new additions, plus good timing and material, make him a veritable begoff.

"Carnets" emerges as a pleasant spoof of French manners, and, though necessarily a one joke affair, it has movement and genuine wit in the brisk staging by Yves Robert, the irresistible English mimicking of Gerard Sety and the finely coordinated work of the rest of the group. French attitudes and habits in love, traffic, eating, politics, etc. are lovingly twitted Mosk.

of men walking about downtown in feminine attire. Municipal Judge Dana Nicholson, before whom they were arraigned, ordered a police investigation of the show when the second offender, like the first, told the court he had come to Minneapolis hoping to join the revue. Neither man had any connection with the show. Newspaper publicity in connection with the judge's order hastened police action.

Revue did big business. With nitery trade here probably the worst ever, other clubs welcomed the crowds it attracted to and enlivened the loop.

Show consisted of 10 female impersonators and one girl who dressed as a boy and emceed. After giving it the onceover, the police morals squad had reported it contained nothing obscene or immoral and was unobjectionable.

Police Inspector Walling says that other loop niteries have been warned against such shows.

Glasgow, Feb. 25.

Frances Day (with Four Knights, Day & Night Trio), Roy Lester, Pan Yue Jen Troupe (4), Potter & Carole, Johnny Beattie, Les Poupees Fantastique (2), Merry Martins (3), Billy Bowers, Billy Rose Orch.

Frances Day, blonde star of English revue and musical comedy, has launched out as a new act in vaude, backing her own singing with four harmony males and an instrumental trio. Actress injects a fair amount of personality and oomph into her act, which emerges as better than average entertainment.

She is a shapely distaffer with smiling eyes and seductive manner, and makes many passes at the male customers. Has worked out a bright act which, at show caught, ran for over 30 minutes, and included audience participation in singing the "Gilly Gilly" song.

Rest of layout is only fair, best support coming from the Pan Yue Jen Troupe, one male and three femmes of Oriental appearance, who balance and spin plates and generally add eastern magico touch.

Billy Bowers is opening accordionist, and Potter & Carole are a mixed pair with comedy quarreling act atop trampoline disguised as a lounge settee. Act is lively in parts, unfunny in others, and is overlong. Johnny Beattie, a local comedian, works hard to win laughs that don't come.

Les Poupees Fantastique is an unusual act. Male comes forward before curtains are drawn to introduce what appears to be a pair of mechanical dancers, male and femme. To all appearances, the act seems to be composed of mechanical movements, and customers are kept guessing until end, when male head emerges to prove that he was using shapely gams to portray femme dancing with a male robot. Act has a certain appeal through novelty, but the male who introduces it should avoid flowery style of announcement.

The Merry Martins are father, mother and son act, as a poor trio of male singers and instrumentalists. Roy Lester, English comedian, spins old gags and intentionally insults audience to win his yocks. The Billy Rose house orch showbacks. Gord.

Unit Review

Gene Autry Show

Omaha, Feb. 25.

Gene Autry, Annie Oakley, Strongs (3), Merle Travis, Audrey Haas, Cass County Boys (3), Pat Buttram, Villenaves (2), Rudells (3), Carl Cotner Orch (5). At Auditorium Arena, Omaha, Feb. 20, '55; $2.20. top.

The Gene Autry name will bring 'em in, but the vet cowboy is smart enough to build a strong show around himself. As result, his present unit looks like a b.o. winner and crowd-pleaser.

Autry doesn't exert himself too much, although he's on stage enough to keep the kids happy. He handles the emcee chores, closes the first half of the show by singing seven numbers and brings on his hosses, Champion and Little Champ, for the windup.

Secondary billing goes to Annie Oakley, rapidly climbing in the tv ranks, a pretty blonde miss from Little Rock whose actual name is Gail Davis. She does a routine shooting act, then uncorks a nifty voice on "Y'all Come."

The other cowboy acts are also formidable. The Strongs, two men and a hefty but good-looking gal, double with trick roping and bullwhip routines. They use a cute pooch in the roping stanza. Merle Travis plays an excellent guitar and sings and the Cass County Boys stray away from the folk type to do "This Old House" and "Mr. Sandman" excellently. Pat Buttram, Autry's comedy sidekick, has some dated material but goes over big with the moppets.

Three vaude acts add considerable punch to the offering. Audrey Haas, a whistle-provoking brunet, is a good acro dancer; the Villenaves are two fine cyclists, and the Rudells have improved their trampoline act immensely.

Rudells open with pretty June coming on as a vocalist and doing a fine job until the two boys interrupt by putting up their rigging. June then dofls a skirt and jees off the jumping.

Logan Comeback

way play. He and producer Leland Hayward are reportedly splitting 15% of the profits of "Rear Window," through their sale of the original Cornell Woolrich magazine story. They bought it several years ago as an investment and resold it to RKO on the percentage arrangement.

Logan is also due for substantial income from Hayward's just-completed film version of "Mister Roberts" for Warners. He not only authored the legit edition with novelist Thomas Heggen, but staged the play and was silently partnered with Hayward in the Broadway and touring productions. Since the Warner picture version is under a percentage deal, Logan will participate as co-author and co-producer of the play.

Although his next Broadway assignment isn't set, Logan has a deal to direct pictures for Warners on a percentage arrangement. And among the stage properties currently paying him revenue or almost certain to do so are the touring "South Pacific" (he's co-producer with Rodgers & Hammerstein and Hayward), and such stock properties as "Wish You Were Here" (co-author, co-producer), "Picnic" (co-producer), "Roberts" (co-author, co-producer) and ultimately "Fanny" (co-author, co-producer).

At the time of Logan's breakdown in the fall of 1953, during the tryout tour of "Kind Sir," it was feared his active career might be over. Certainly no one would have dared predict that he would come back not only quickly, but to top his already spectacular successes and earnings.

Tympan Alley

played for 14 hours and 32 minutes before he got hungry and quit. Sandweiss wrapped up the record in Norman, Okla., and has now settled down in St. Louis. Such is the fleeting fame of offbeat talents.

Ulano is aiming at a 72-hour record and will go on longer if he can hold up under the strain. He said he had trained close to a year for a crack at the "title." A medic and a nurse visited him regularly and his aides took care of his feeding. (Ulano was still at it when VARIETY went to press.)

Gawkers crowded the sidewalk all Monday and a klieg-light truck came on the scene in the evening to lure more reviewers. The press covered the stunt and a gal photographer from Life mag was shooting most of the evening.

Primary pitch for the "drumathon" was Abel's planned production of a revue tagged "Safari," in which Ulano will be featured. He was garbed in a leopard skin during the longplay stint to give added sight values to the plug.

Also in for a cuffo ad was Gretsch drum manufacturer who supplied the equipment. Ulano chainsmoked stogies throughout the caper. The cigar manufacturer missed a good bet by not getting his credit in the window with all the rest.

New Acts

SOLERO DE ESPANA ORCH
Music, Songs
Tropicana, Havana

Several years ago, the Tropicana brought to Cuba a topnotch Spanish orchestra, Los Chavales de Espana. After a while the Chavales went on to greater fame and fortune in the U. S. Another Spanish orchestra, Los Churrumbeles, came to Cuba, and after a while it went on to better things in the U. S.

Now another Spanish orchestra has been playing in Cuba—mainly at the Tropicana—and the next move seems inevitable, on to the States. The Solera de Espana orch follows in the footsteps of the Chavales and Churrumbeles not only geographically, but also in quality. It ranks among the best.

In 1943 Spanish musician Enrique Oliva organized his own orch and named it Orquesta Olivian's. Olivian's successfully played at over a score of niteries and hotels and on radio in Barcelona and Madrid (including the latter's Hotel Ritz).

After making a name for itself in Spain, the group made some changes (broadening its repertoire of international songs; changing its name to Solera de Espana) and was brought to Cuba by the Tropicana, whose show producer, Alberto Ardura, reaches out all over the world for talent.

Solera has been at the Tropicana steadily for over a year (except for a brief trip to Panama, from which it has just returned). The Solera has also filled theatre and other engagements in Havana.

Solera's major claim to fame lies in its exceptional versatility. Its repertoire includes music from Italy, France, Portugal, Brazil, Argentina and naturally Spain, and now some Cuban numbers are inevitably being added. Its Spanish numbers range with charm and facility from the haunting, lovely "Rosa Cani" (composed by Oliva) to snappy marches.

Virtually every one of Solera's musicians plays three or four instruments, and can nimbly switch from one to another during the course of a single number. Jesus Peyron plays the trombone, accordion, violin, bass-viol and piano. Jaime Ventura plays the trumpet, accordion and violin, in addition to singing. Antonio Saigi plays the bass-viol and trumpet, and on the side does some clowning.

Orch director Oliva plays the piano, violin and accordion, in addition to composing and arranging numbers. Two of his w.k. compositions are "In a Spanish Garden" and "Maria del Alma."

The 10 members of the orch are able to play a total of 30 instruments. That's a lot of music. And it's highly enjoyable music, too.
Jay.

VERNON ALLEY TRIO
Songs, Instrumental
30 Mins.
Fack's, San Francisco

Veteran jazz bassist Vernon Alley (he used to be with Lionel Hampton and Count Basie) is currently debuting his new trio which deftly combines modern jazz, swing and good old fashioned entertainment to emerge as one of the most commercial groups in this field to show here in considerable time.

Alley, a pleasant personality with an infectious manner, sings novelty and up-tempo numbers like "Exactly Like You" and "Sunny Side of the Street" as well as taking numerous bass solos. Eric Miller, a fellow veteran of the Hampton band, plays guitar and sings ballads in a strong, moving voice. His best numbers are "Birth of Blues" and "Yesterdays," Richard Wyands is one of the best jazz pianists on the Coast and is effectively showcased here. This is a good bet for any club with a jazz patronage. They reach all types of customers.
Rafe.

McSOVEREIGN & PARTNER
Top twirling
10 Mins.
Bobino, Paris

McSovereign has tops which look like two funnels end-to-ended together which he puts into action on a string manipulated by two handles. He then makes the whirling tops bounce back and forth between two stringed boards on either side of the stage, play a small vibraharp by its vibrations and finally go out on a string over the heads of the aud to set off a box which sends back a tiny motorcycle.

Though looking from the caveman era of music hall, this emerges as an engaging offbeater and should be a good special entry for U.S. tv or vaude circuits.
Mosk.

GIGOLOS (2)
Disk mime
12 Mins.
Crazy Horse Saloon, Paris

Disk mime duo is composed of a tall, lanky, energetic Scotch lad and a more laconic, small English boy. They do some frenetic takeoffs to such disks as "Figaro," "Cocktails For Two," "John-Marsha" and "Mule Train" for generally funny results, but using many of the numbers done with more apiomb by other practitioners of this type of act makes for a detrimental aspect in comparison.

Boys have good timing and freewheeling tendencies but can do away with bounding into the aud. More interpretive material to the disks instead of practically straight synch, roughhouse and slapstick would make this a more original turn and pay off better. As is, this makes for a neat offbeat entry and with more work and rep should soon be ready for a possible assault at U.S. nitery or vaude spots.
Mosk.

JEAN CONSTANTIN
Songs, patter
20 Mins.
Aux 3 Baudets, Paris

A bemoustached, thinning-haired, heavyset type, this songwriter has taken to niteries and music halls, peddling his own songs backed by a solid patter routine. Constantin sports a fey, detached air with an obliviousness of the aud that is rendered supportable by his spirited diatribes about song contests and songwriters in general, plus a fine songalog of his own which he gives out with a well-modulated voice and good piano accomp. Such hits as "Fleur De Papillon," "Deux Thuns Sur Le Bestringue," "Tu Rime Avec Moi" are already well-known here, and they take on new depth with the author delivering them.

In short, he looks like a good bet for the U.S. intimers on wit and song talent, and also for tv.
Mosk.

SIM
Impressions
15 Mins.
L'Olympia, Paris

Sim is a simian-faced comic-impressionist who does an uncanny rendition of a series of noises from a railroad train to traffic, auto chases and a horrendous battle of the planets, with projectors casting flying saucers on the ceiling and walls. Then he goes into two ribtickling takeoffs on femme sopranos, with the first a gurgling coloratura and the second a dizzy voice teacher. Last two can be shortened, to make this a fine offbeater for possible slotting for U.S. vaude or niteries.
Mosk.

Schwartz-Dietz

will offer an "and-then-I-wrote" medley, Lena Horne will sing several numbers and Abe Burrows will m.c.

Total take from the premiere and party is expected to be about $40,000, which will go to the Actors Studio, which has been nicknamed "Temple of the Torn Shirt," after Marlon Brando, its best-known member. The coin, with additional contributions of $30,000, will be used by Actors Studio for the purchase of its own building in New York

Headed by Elia Kazan, who independently produced and directed "East of Eden" for Warners, plus producer Cheryl Crawford, stager Lee Strasberg and ex-producer Dorothy Willard, the actor training group has occupied various quarters since its formation in 1947. Chance to buy its own building arose recently, and the top donation for the project, $10,000, has been from Gene Kelly.

As part of the name-loaded affair, the usherettes for the fiim preem will include Miss Monroe, Margaret Truman, Fleur Cowles, Imogene Coca, Anita Loos, Carol Channing, Marlene Dietrich, Arlene Francis, Celeste Holm, Beatrice Straight, Patricia Neal, Meg Mundy, and numerous show biz and society names. Ticket takers will be Steve Allen, Sid Caesar and David Wayne.

Arrangements for the usherette and ticket-taker array and the after-preem party are being handled by Morton Gottlieb, whom Kazan recruited for the assignment.

Hotel St. Regis, N. Y.

Frances Bergen; Milt Shaw orch; Ray Bari Ensemble; $2.50 couvert; $4 minimum.

Frances (Mrs. Edgar) Bergen was Frances Westerman (Westcott), as a Hollywood bit player and Powers model, before she married the ventriloquist. Apparently not wanting to be a domestic Charlie McCarthy, especially with the star taking more and more to the road for niteries (Las Vegas, etc.), she is interpreting her penchant for thrushing into a class cafe stint of her own.

Whether the idea is to be booked jointly into the bistros, the casinos and the like, Miss Bergen, employing her married name professionally, makes for a polite songalog. That means, the classier the room the better the impact, for her stuff is tailored to the smart spots. Admittedly no song belter, she overcomes a parlor voice with poise and polish and, in a measure, is today's counterpart of the blue blood blues singers which hark back to the era when Adelaide Moffatt and Lois Elliman and in later years Juliana Larson and Rosalind Courtright cashed in on their strong personal followings. In most instances, the socialite turnout invariably gets its money's worth.

Miss Bergen's debut last Thursday (24), following the plush premiere of the new Cole Porter musical, "Silk Stockings," even had maitre d' August and his slick staff at the St. Regis' Maisonette tsk-tsking—they name-dropped like the phone book about the who's who that showed up at Miss Bergen's preem. From Mrs. Perle Mesta to the top network echelon (Sarnoff-Paley) to Barney Balaban and R. H. Macy's Jack Straus, with socialites and politicos in between, the preem pull was certainly good business. It was also murder on the thrush, facing not only a strong personal following but with the full knowledgeability that such pros as Lena Horne and Eddie Fisher were also among the outfronters.

On the second night (dinner show) catching, Miss Bergen was a considerably relaxed and improved chirp. For one thing, she was using the mike more—she can stand still further microphonic gain—and she was getting to the customers. Admittedly no vocal threat to the Ethel Merman belters or even the politer Dinah Shore song stylists, Miss Bergen is patently a lady with a pleasing and poised personality, sufficient unto the class purpose thereof, because agent Barron Polan and the St. Regis' managing director Pierre Bultinck undoubtedly knew, that for a limited two or three weeks, a Miss Bergen can hold her own and, on strong personal pull, likewise carry some freight into the exchequer.

Her stuff is wisely tailored to her special talents, and most of it is restricted. From the "High Time" opener to "I Like It," her repertoire embraces "You Started Something," "Breaking In The Next Guy," a musical Cook's tour including "Doggie In The Window" in Swedish, "It's The Same Thing All Over The World," an oldfashioned bit (avec parasol and Sunbonnet Sue getup), "Bumble Bee," "Lovey Mine" and a fast blues rhythm number for the getoff, which wraps up a pleasant polite 20 minutes. Incidentally, "Doggie" is riding a great international crest; Line Renaud does it French at the Waldorf.

Per usual, Milt Shaw's expert fiddling-maestroing gives strong assist to the Maisonette's thrushes. In fact Shaw is one AFMer who almost rates an honorary AGVA card—his personal contribution musically to the femmes has bailed more than one out. Jane Morgan next. Abel.

Ciro's, Hollywood

Peggy Lee, Dave Barry, Roxanne & Martin Bros. (3), Dick Stabile Orch (8), Ciro's Band (5); $2 cover.

With Peggy Lee holding down the spotlight, biz should be brisk for the next two frames at Herman Hover's Strip dispensary. Chirp has her own following and they turned out in force opening night to accord her the type of welcome entertainers thrive on. Current layout is well-balanced, to give customers that satisfied feeling.

In her 25 minutes onstage, artist socks over eight numbers and reprises one, "Tweedle Dee," for as good effect as the first time she sings it. Opens with "Oh, That Kiss," to which she gives a slight Calypso flip, "Come Rain or Come Shine" is another good entry, and the romantic "That's All I Want From You" is right down her melodic alley.

Singer really gets down to cases, though, with "Just One of Those Things," a familiar for her, and her windup number, "Lover," carries the impact of a favorite for her biggest hand. "You're My Thrill" is another well received. She's backed by the Ciro rumba band for Latin overtones, and Dick Stabile's orch.

Roxanne and the two Martin Bros., a Spanish dance act, offer a fast opening for show and Dave Barry is on for a comedy turn. A fast patter entertainer, he's best at impersonations. The eight Ciro's girls also come on briefly to give a bit of glamour and brightness to the moment. Whit.

Fontainebleau, M. B'ch

Miami Beach, Feb. 26.

Helen Traubel, Alan King, Patricia & Capella, Val Olman Orch, Lecuona Cuban Boys; $2.50-$4 bev. minimum.

This is Helen Traubel's second appearance in these parts, the former Metopera star having played the Clover Club early last season. The switch from a straight nitery to the super-swank La Ronde cafe in this hotel provides her with a showcase in which her vocal prowess is embraced enthusiastically by the upper-bracket resorters.

Taking command at once with a coupling of Viennese waltzes, she sweeps through a shrewdly-blended assortment of pops and operatic arias, and, for the wrapper-upper, a rousing rendition of "St. Louis Blues," which she introes as a "folk song sung by peasants of her home town." Encore demands bring the comedy-angled Jimmy Durante songmedley. Overall, the impact is strong, her rich tonal quality, authoritative, albeit simple, stage deportment and the varied assortment in her catalog leading into a begoff.

Patricia & Capella played the better night clubs in the area several years ago, but since have adhered to European boites. They're a handsome pair whose ballroomology is adept, the adagio aspects gasp-bringing. They play up lifts and neck-balanced spins throughout their routining, where most duos would be content to build to a finisher featuring one of their tricks for the applause garnerer. What makes their work the more effective is the ease with which they accomplish their climaxers to each patterning; the pair make for a sock opening act.

Joey Bishop, booked for the comedy spot, couldn't make the opening night (25). Alan King, who clicked in the previous show with Tony Martin, filled in until Monday. King again proved an adroit laughmaker, switching from the material he's using to what amounts to an almost new act. Val Olman and his crew handle the showbacks in admirable fashion. Lary.

Sands, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Feb. 23.

Billy Gray, Georgia Gibbs, Hal LeRoy, Chuck Nelson, Judy Sinclair, Copa Girls & Boys (14), Antonio Morelli Orch (12); no cover, no minimum.

Lacking the impact, the marquee-value and the class and calibre of shows that have long earmarked the Copa Room presentations, the current Jack Entratter layout has some pleasantries to offer in its overlong and no-doubt-to-be-pruned course.

Billy Gray brings his Band Box humor into the Copa Room, where his familiar brand of comedics is funny and where his blue material is incongruous in this slightly more formal setting. He still applies a heavy-handed treatment to individuals of abnormal sex habits during a too great portion of his 35-minute act. Seemingly the Gray humor can be genuinely funny when not so offbeat.

With the aid of pretty Judy Sinclair, Gray returns for the Zsa Zsa-Rubirosa finale, a colorful cowboy saga called "Continental Western."

Georgia Gibbs handles the costaring spot okay, socking her faves and new disk with fine feeling. She's a rhythmic belter in "There'll Be Some Changes Made," and in good voice with "I Love Paris." Her latest waxing, "Tweedle De Dee," please, as does a medley of her oldies.

Hal LeRoy is given a rousing welcome back and breaks from start to finish in his brief chore. Whether tapping out a swift beat, or performing a soft shoe, LeRoy is a master, nimble and smooth afoot and exhibiting a charm and warmth to match his dancing ability.

Chuck Nelson, in the production singing spot, is a standout. Larry Greene, musical conductor for Gray at the piano, is olid in support and Antonio Morelli leads his orch through the difficult show score in adept fashion. Bob.

Copacabana, N. Y.

Billy Daniels (with Benny Payne), Phil Foster, Blackburn Twins & Genie Stone, Donna Williams, Jack Drummond, Barbara Maye, Larry Howard, Mike Durso & Frank Marti Bands; Minimum $5.

The Copacabana has brought in some of the more formidable artillery to combat the natural box-office dip of the Lenten season and balmier weather. As a matter of fact, this layout is one of the more potent all-around displays to come to Jules Podell's basement boite in some time. It's endowed with name as well as entertainment value, and it's one that normally should keep even the room's Burma Road populated.

The heavyweights this session are Billy Daniels and Phil Foster, and a pleasing note on the bill is the turn by the Blackburn Twins, now partnered with Genie Stone. All of them have earned the admiration of the local cafegoers in previous engagements around town, and all deliver in a forte vein.

Daniels, in a 50-minute session, runs through an especially strong repertoire. At the midnight show on his preem night, there were times when he provided a nostalgic note. He ran through a medley of songs popular in a former era. This session recalled some of the moments in the 52d Street basements of years ago, in some of which Daniels was making his coffee 'n' cake coin. This was a particularly rewarding bit.

The Negro songster has added a lot of material that gives his act a fresh facade. He rambles into a Latin mood and recognizes the rock and roll idiom with "Ko Ko Mo" and gives a touching rendition of an obscure number, "Butterfly." Of course, "Yiddishe Mama" and "Black Magic" give him a pair of powerful sendoff pieces, and he and his accompanist share plaudits for a well-done turn that hits peak applause.

Foster's comedic exercises have that folksy and frequently a tradey feeling, but he manages to make himself understood and appreciated. Foster frequently shows a careful contempt for his audience. He gives the impression that nobody, bosses included, are gonna push him around. He does the alarm clock bit in which he sets the alarm for a normal 20-minute run. He walks off in the middle of a gag when it rings. However, circumstances on the initial night warranted a return. One of the reasons for Foster's tremendous appeal in this spot lies in the fact that he tell sof reminiscences in Brooklyn, which, no doubt, many in the audience, have experienced. Many laughed at themselves as well and Foster scored his best in a N. Y. nitery to date.

The Blackburn Twins have had a long succession of girls in their act. Included were Janet Blair, Martha Stewart, Pam Cavan, Marion Colby, and now a newcomer, Genie Stone, a former single that they caught in a Vegas nitery. It's a tough assignment to break in a girl and new material as well. Consequently, the lads decided that teaching the newcomer was a full-time job. Miss Stone does very well in the job assumed by a series of pretty predecessors. She's pert and cute, but she needs time before she adds distinction to the turn. The Blackburn boys should have brought with them a few numbers, so that at least the appearance of a new act and new interest could have been given. Even at that, their staples such as "Lulu's Back in Town" and the guys' mirror number are still strong enough to rate important attention.

The Copa production is picturesque, Donna Williams and Jack Drummond doing the vocals and Barbara Maye and Larry Howard in the terp spots. The Copadoils with their orchid coiffs provide an added conversation piece to a lush set of proceedings. Jose.

Viennese Lantern, N. Y.

Simone Dolphen; Lantern String Orch (5); no cover or minimum.

"Genial host" is one of the most overworked idioms in the cafe biz, but Max Loew works overtime at it to give it meaning without the hackneyed connotations. The host can get the most on the ball when he's on the E. 79th St. Yorkville sector, where the hair is down and the conviviality is up, as contrasted with the downtown conventions where there is a colder, more sophisticated stance, perhaps even along the snobbish route.

Loew's Viennese Lantern gets 'em uptown in the free air—the drops-ins, regulars, and once-in-awhiles as well as the name tradesters lured by the wine, the goulash, (etc.) and "the little show," which latter is currently a single act and the fiddlers three plus piano and accordion. Maitre d' Walter makes it an all-around gemutlich atmosphere.

Simone Dolphen is a Gallic confection brought back to the Lantern after some five years' absence, having been originally "new acted" from the No. 1 Fifth Ave. boite in that circa. Singing comedienne has an engaging charm, and there's a big pitch in her slim frame. Good chatterbox and ad libber, she's able to latch on to ringsiders interference and beat them at the game in clever reverses that disarm the offense.

There's a method to her madcappery and a gleam in her eye as she gets set for the attack. Her "Can Can" is in English with sufficient frenchification to make it a two-ply romp. "Tico Tico" is also anglicized and well articulated, switching to her native tongue. She scrams away from the songs with what seems extraneous text that comes out a finished package in the end.

Mlle. Dolpen's piece de resistance would always be "Kiss Me Sweet," wherein she mounts the piano for a mobile chant in prone and standup style that's punctuated by a peek at her structual endowments and tongue-in-cheek sultriness pinpointed at baldies and blown and throwaways, including a clever lovers-on-the-park-bench.

The fiddlers are in there fadding away with the schmaltzy, familiar Wien stuff in special numbers aimed to constitute a turn, being joined by squeezebox and 88. They also light out on U. S. and Strauss tunes for the lulls. Trau.

Congress Hotel, St. L.

St. Louis, Feb. 12.

Robert Clary, Dick Fister Trio; $1 cover.

French nitery entertainers have proven a click in St. Louis and Robert Clary, the latest import, is continuing to cop popular acclaim in this Town & Country room. It's a case of a little man the just tops the five-foot mark) effectively doing a big man's job.

Clary is a combo comic-warbler-hoofer-acro and in addition possesses an effervescent mien that inoculates the customers from the teeoff. Working on a tiny platform, Clary almost leaps into the lap of a femme ringsider while executing some of his screwball antics and nifty patter.

His teeoff ditty, "Lucky Pierre" in his native tongue, wins the mob that refuses to let him leave until he had warbied nine ditties in both French and English, the latter at times with a French flavor. His miming of a deadpan danceband warbler ogling the dansapators until he receives a cue to go into action is sock. Ditto for his interp of how a soubrette would sing "Triplets" and a schoolboy lamenting "I'm In Love With Miss Logan."

Among other ditties sandwiched in are "Fleur Bleu," "Autumn Leaves," "Calypso" and "Shrimp Boats Are Coming." Although the temperature was near zero at session caught, the room was near SRO. Sahu.

The Composer, N. Y.

Herman Chittison & Billy Taylor Trios; no cover or minimum.

For a jazz club that's only five months old, The Composer has established a solid niche as a hepster hangout. Formula is the same as its senior, The Embers, on the east side, but there's room enough in this town for two similar jazz rooms to operate in the black.

Main drawback in this room's operation is the pre-show setting. The headliners don't go on until 10 p.m. and instead of going to 802 for an 88'er to fill the before-showtime gap, room has gone to Muzak. Canned music serves as okay background stuff for the diners, but it's a bit incongruous with the jazz policy under which the club functions. It's a safe bet that a hep keyboarder would bring in a bigger dining crowd than Muzak.

Chittison belongs to the old style school while Taylor can be catalogued as a progressive. It's a solid pairing that excellently complements each other. Working with bass and guitar backing, Chittison takes the ivories for a clean and effective workover of w.k. numbers. His touch is sure and rhythmic.

Taylor's keyboard work is backed by bass and drums and the boys lay down some inventive touches on such items as "Let's Get Away From It All," "Willow Weep For Me," "Mambo Inn" and "Lullaby of Birdland." Taylor's style sparks with imaginative flourishes but he never strays too far from the melodic line.

Both groups alternate every half hour, which adds up to plenty of sock listening. Gros.

Hotel Statler, N. Y.

Dick Jurgens Orch (12), featuring Al Galante, Stan Vann; $1.50, $2.50 minimum after 10 p. m.

In this era of bands that stress the brass and growling sax, Dick Jurgens' orch stands out as a memory of the 1940s, when the terp beat was all that mattered. Jurgens doesn't fool around with intricate arrangements or special instrumental showcasers; he just lays down the kind of beat that crowds the floor—and that's all that's necessary, especially in room like the Statler's Cafe Rouge.

Jurgens has been on the podium of hotel rooms and prom dates long enough to know how to handle himself agreeably. He's got a pleasant easygoing manner and keeps the customers happy by filling all their request numbers.

Band operates with three rhythm, five brass and four reed and whips out a light, dance-able beat. Book consists of the usual blending of standard and pops and is projected without any flourishes. An occasional rumba and mambo are thrown in to please the chile wigglers.

Al Galante and Stan Vann split the vocalistics in okay fashion. Gros.

Hotel Muehlebach, K. C.

Kansas City, Feb. 25.

Dick Noel, Stanton & Stevens, Tommy Reed Orch (8); $1 cover.

Terrace Grill of the Muehlebach offers two turns that score well entertainment-wise, in a well-knit, audience-pleasing show. Dick Noel is the first male singer to play the room since its reopening a couple of months back, and the Stanton & Stevens team has not played the town before. The 37-minute show, in for two weeks, moves right along.

Ronnie Stanton and Gloria Stevens combine singing and dancing. They sing a rhy.hm bit, sing and tap "Singing in the Rain," and follow the pattern with "Ballin' the Jack," with the gal doing some unusually low range warbling, and the two getting off a lighting fast terp. They switch to "Similau," an Afri-Cuban rhythm, to close on high-level response.

Noel smartly makes his turn mostly music, with little chatter or other deterrent. His range and delivery put him in the personable crooner class, and he offers a great variety in his numbers. He mixes up softer ballads, a novelty or two, and draws biggest hand on the evening on "Birth of the Blues." Quin.

Last Frontier, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Feb. 28.

Dorothy Dandridge (with Nick Perito), Marshall & Farrell, Trio Gypsy, Frontier Girls (12), Garwood Van Orch (11); no cover and no minimum.

The crowds virtually stormed the gates at her first show to portend turnaway biz for every performance of the three-week stand of Dorothy Dandridge. The Academy Award nominee must rate a special gonfalon from the strictly competitive section known as the Strip. An assortment of singers is constantly on display in this area, but Miss Dandridge must be placed in a niche by herself, for her songs become a physical performance, a portrayal, not of a singer, but of the fictional character whom the number concerns. The classic beauty of her face can express the imp, the trollop, the lady with equal impact, and her lissome, intriguing figure can purvey sex, poise or petulance just as vividly.

A new comedy team that's a cinch to be heard from is Pete Marshall & Tommy Farrell. Farrell is the begorried, mixed-up type that constantly annoys the proud, poised Marshall and they complement each other to evoke waves of laughter during their chore. Marshall bleats "How Deep Is the Ocean?" with his vis-a-vis answering the questions in the lyrics in rapid, encyclopedic fashion, in a routine that's a rouser. A Texas radio bit is equally funny. Marshall renders nice vocal carbons of famed pop singers while Farrell goes through burlesque motions of same. Standout here is the Marshall aping of Dick Haymes in vockful vein. The team's astrology skit is okay while their topper is thoughts of a singer while performing, with Marshall on singing vocals and Farrell at a backstage mike making with the thoughts.

The heldover Trio Gypsy act thrills as the supple, blonde femme is balanced aloft and tossed about by her pair of male partners with skill and dispatch. The Frontier Girls are especially effective in a toreador number, colorfully befrilled, as they heel-stomp and whirl to good applause. Bob.

Dancers: Estelle Aza, Barbara Bostock, Verna Cain, Geraldine Delaney, Devra Kline, Pat McBride, Carol Riser, Carol Stevens, Onna White, Martin Allen, Tommy Andrew, George Foster, Bruce Hoy, John Ray.

Songs: "Too Bad," "Paris Loves Lovers," "Stereophonic Sound," "It's a Chemical Reaction, That's All," "All of You," "Satin and Silk," "Without Love," "Hail, Bibinski," "As on Through the Seasons We Sail," "Josephine," "Siberia," "Silk Stockings," "The Red Blues."

Although scar-tissue from the extensive surgical operations on the road are still visible, especially in the second act climax, which falls below the smartness and sophistication of the earlier action, the non-quibbling fact is that "Silk Stockings" is a very funny and entertaining musical, and a hit—the fifth in a row for Feuer & Martin.

A main asset is topically, political satire of Communism, as derived from Melchior Lengyel's old Metro film, "Ninotchka," starring Garbo and Melvyn Douglas. The loose adaptation of George S. Kaufman, Leueen MacGrath and Abe Burrows is often brilliantly funny, if occasionally rather talky.

Broadway's inclination will be irresistible to assign the lion share of the credit for the sock values in "Silk Stockings" to the music and lyrics of Cole Porter. He is close to his top, and that's very theatrically effective indeed. There is, of course, his usual stress on the theme of copulation. But while still master of rock and roll "leerics" with a college education, Porter's score displays enormous versatility.

There is soft sentimentality, per "Paris Loves Lovers" and the "I Accuse" interpolation; "Satin and Silk" girl stuff; a political rally chant, "Hail Bibenski." Finally there is the anatomical tour song, "All of You," already a hit, along with other tunes which circulated while the show was being trimmed and hemstitched on the road.

The script is heavy on sheer verbage and it would seem likely that Feuer & Martin have in no sense ended their flagellation of the book. Going immediately into story-telling and stressing libretto throughout, to the neglect of dancing, this is a musical comedy which, for once, has rather too much than too little plot.

Most of the action takes place in Paris and concerns the efforts of a series of envoys, culminating with a serious-minded woman commissar, to retrieve the person of a wayward composer who does not wish to return to dour Moscow after seeing gay Paree. Their object is "to force Boroff to go home of his own free will!"

Political wisecracks abound. Soviet making and breaking of commissars, Soviet ideological obsessions, Soviet terror are all lampooned. There is a gay off-to-exile-we go trio, "Siberia," sung strictly for laughs by Henry Lascoe, Leon Belasco and David Opatoshu, the birddogs who fall in love with the Parisienne chickens.

Ninotchka, who plays deadpan in the first sequences, when told she is behaving like Portia cracks, "Oh yes, I have seen her in Gorki's 'Merchant of Venice'." Inquiring for the doniker she says, "And where is the little comrade's room?"—a line which could become a catchphrase.

When the show reaches its assigned two-and-a-half hours, the American theatrical agent from Paris who has fallen in love with Ninotchka has followed her—travelling on the longest theatrical license ever used in lieu of a visa—into the slums of Moscow. He just walks in under the noses of the entire Soviet secret police and bureaucracy, takes her in his arms and announces that he will bear her off to America.

True, he is then arrested but he immediately sells Commissar of Art, amusingly played by George Tobias, on stealing a transport plane. Into this plane pile hero and heroine, assorted commissars, artists, dancers and singers and fly off to America "looking for a hole in the McCarran Act."

It's a corny, jerky climax, ending the show on its own least worthy level. Fortunately, by then, the solid merits have given the bourgeosie their money's worth and the production is safely in.

Weaving through the gay political plot is the sub-plot of a Hollywood swimming star who now has water-on-the-brain and must play non-aquatic roles. She is in Paris to shoot a musical comedy version of Tolstoy's "War and Peace," which suffers a switch and turns into a jazz "Josephine" with a "gone" Napoleon. This is where Gretchen Wyler comes in with the gentle force of hydrogen.

"Silk Stockings" is sure to enhance the careers of its two stars, Hildegarde Neff and Don Ameche, as well as Miss Wyler, who is top-featured with George Tobias. Miss Neff, a German film player, realizes Ninotchka with much intelligence, charm and deft timing. The deadpan sexless girl transforms into the woman in love most beguilingly. Miss Neff makes her American stage reputation forthwith.

The love affair of the Russian and the American is a delicious spoof on pitching the woo. Also quite torrid. Much of show's success in the romantic department belongs to Don Ameche, who reveals a surprisingly firm, flexible and masculine singing voice. Not that Ameche has been too far away, but he's certainly back now, front and centre spotlight. His debonair bearing and general easy competence qualifies him as a top musical lead. This fugitive from early radio is news again, a long time after that first film role of his, the awkward Indian in "Ramona."

Miss Wyler is established but big, with "Silk Stockings". The "Josephine" song-and-dance number in the second act is one of the sauciest bump-and-grinds of the decade as led and whammed over by this gal. Earlier she ties up the show with her lyrical report on Hollywood, where nothing counts anymore unless it is "in gorgeous Technicolor, breath-taking CinemaScope and stupendous stereophonic sound." She has a very funny piece of business which runs through the show, knocking the side of her head to shake out the water from all her swimming pictures.

By keeping the show on the road until it was right, or right enough, Feuer and Martin have displayed the tenacity which makes success. The anguish along the way needs no exploration here, although it confuses the issues as to where the direction of Cy Feuer, who took over, begins and the influence of George S. Kaufman ends. The proper apportionment of due is always difficult in any musical, since so many strands of talent and judgment must be combined.

Certainly the settings and lighting of Jo Mielziner count importantly, as do the flaming or dainty, or dowdiiy Russian costuming provided by Lucinda Ballard and Robert Mackintosh. The musical direction and vocal arrangement of Hebert Green, the orchestration of Don Walker and Eugene Loring's handling of the dance segments are the sturdy keel plates of a seaworthy craft.

The music, the lyrics, the topical satire, the fine performances, the general colorfulness of the production and the perspiration of Feuer & Martin have produced another demand ticket. Land.

Dark Is Light Enough

Katharine Cornell and Roger L. Stevens presentation of drama by Christopher Fry in three acts. Stars Miss Cornell, Tyrone Power; features Arnold Moss, John Williams, Marian Winters, Eva Condon, William Podmore, Christopher Plummer, Donald Harron, Paul Roebling. Directed by Guthrie McClintic. Decor by Oliver Messel. At Anta Theatre, N.Y., Feb. 23, 1955; top $5.75 (opening night $7.50).

Dr. Kassel ..... William Podmore
Jakob ..... Donald Harron
Belmann ..... John Williams
Stefan ..... Paul Roebling
Bella ..... Eva Condon
Willi ..... Charles Macaulay
Gelda ..... Marian Winters
Richard Gettner ..... Tyrone Power
Countess Ostenburg ..... Katharine Cornell
Colonel Janik ..... Arnold Moss
Count Peter Zichy ..... Christopher Plummer
Beppy ..... Ted Gunther
Rustl ..... Sydney Pollack
Third Soldier ..... Jerome Gardino
Fourth Soldier ..... Dario Barri

By Broadway theatrical standards, Christopher Fry does not behave like, or have the instincts of, a man of the theatre. Instead he is a pure ivorytower mystic who happens to put his verse in the form of dialog and launches it upon theatrical waters with small regard for either the motivation of many of his characters or for the statement of his own playwright's thesis, whatever it may be. In consequence, his play runs flat and dull as a show for American taste, despite the sumptuous values added by Cornell-Power-McClintic-Messel and company.

The title is derived from the writing of J. H. Fabre, something about butterflies venturing where screech-owls stay perched on a stormy night. For the butterflies, the darkness is light enough to get there. The moral is strained in the third act when the countess comes down, without prior notice of malaise, sick unto death and her bad boy ex-son-in-law is about to be captured by Austrian troops and strung up as a rebel. The time is 1848 and the Hungarian rebel army has just been routed.

Viewers of "The Dark Is Light Enough" must guess what the author means to convey. And the guesses will be various indeed, and conflicting. The countess appears to symbolize civilized and decent behavior, compassion for all living beings. The cad character, central to the thesis but the most carelessly drawn figure in the script as to motivation, apparently symbolizes all that is undisciplined, wild and irresponsible in humanity.

Tyrone Power, wearing chin whiskers, has perhaps the most thankless co-starring role of recent seasons. The author has stinted him almost completely as to the brilliant crackling epigrams, which are bestowed instead upon the secondary characters who constitute the membership of the countess' Thursday at home. Richard Gettner, whom Power portrays, is an unattractive military deserter. Why he, an Austrian, joined the Hungarian rebels and later quit them goes unexplained.

A craven coward while in flight, a boyish drunkard while in hiding, shooting the son of his benefactress, making love to his ex-wife, now married again, this clod of a man barges into the country house for the last time, shouting to the countess, "I hear you're dying!" as indeed she is; whereupon he proposes marriage! Try to act that hodgepodge of a role with conviction—yet Tyrone Power does just that. It's uphill all the way, with practically no help from the script, but he gets there — the dark is light enough.

Things are much happier for Katharine Cornell, since her role is more credible and has a grandeur which she is singularly capable of infusing with substance and texture. While her terminal illness is one of the innumerable privacies in the mind of the playwright and comes as a complete surprise to the audience (a week before in the action she was in fine fettle), Miss Cornell is superb in a disappointing play—and that's the story of her recent career.

To visualize the Austrian villa setting, Oliver Messel has designed a drawing room, the overarch of which blends into the stable of Act II. Within this imaginatively-realized frame, Guthrie McClintic moves his actors with astute theatricality. The uniforms and gowns of the period are colorful and the exchanges of cultivated literary insults between the men who attend the Thursday salon are amusing. There is a promise in the setting which is never fulfilled for action-and-meaning hungry Americans. McClintic's players must frequently freeze into the background while Christopher Fry goes philosophical at length in the midst of supposed melodrama.

William Podmore, Donald Harron and especially John Williams are the three who enjoy the playful lines and make the most of them. This is more than comic relief; this is the promise of theatrical entertainment which largely never materializes. Miss Cornell has the author's more revealing discourses on life and love and the idiocies of politics.

With Miss Cornell's characteristic generosity to her fellow-professionals, all the players get featured billing save the four soldiers and a houseboy. The company has been carefully selected and expertly guided, although the newness to the profession of Paul Roebling, as the son, is occasionally apparent, and Arnold Moss, ordinarily an actor of some fireworks, has the second-most-awkward role in the play, right next to the co-starring role of Tyrone Power. Fry does not waste a single bright line on this character. Only the members of the Thursday salon may be witty.

Marian Winters, who has attracted considerable attention in recent theatrical semesters, has a prestige credit in this contract. She handles herself with much authority, although some might suspect that technique was setting in rather young. Christopher Plummer, as a nobleman who really is noble, is firstrate, but it is his fate to wear the most unbecoming male garb seen on Broadway since John Gielgud played that Russian axe-murderer.

Roger L. Stevens, Manhattan's wizard with real estate equities, is lifting half of the tab on "The Dark Is Light Enough." Show made a profit on tour, plainly thanks to the co-stars' popularity, and the $60,000 production stood reduced to around $45,000 when the curtain went up for a 12-week limited engagement at the ANTA Theatre last Wednesday (23) with a $7.50 tab. Include Stevens in when running down the roster of those who have on this occasion labored for love of the theatre. Unfortunately, Christopher Fry loves his own beautiful language to the neglect of characterization, dynamics and payoff. Land.

'Silk Stockings' Running Wild

Broadway comment following last Thursday's (24) opening of "Silk Stockings" at the Imperial, N. Y., focussed on the strange collapse of quality in the last minutes of the show. Speculation ran to the question. Had the critics' departure just before the end and thereby missing this misfit segment of the script worked out to the advantage of the musical? Seldom has a show concentrated its flaws at the very end where the potential damage could be so minimal. Often a production reveals its script weaknesses in the early period and never quite overcomes the original downbeat impression. "Silk Stockings" is fortunate—goes Broadway comment—in being "safe" on points before revealing its crooked seams.

Trade buzz also centres on the credit for the topical and political wisecracks, much quoted around town, as between George S. Kaufman and Abe Burrows. People were guessing, by ear, saying "that sounds like Kaufman," or "that sounds like Burrows"—without knowing. The same guessing game also developed as to the direction, the street not knowing quite how to draw the line between Kaufman again, and Cy Feuer, who took over the staging from him during the long tryout tour.

Another matter of Broadway comment is the paucity of dancing in the musical, the only two Eugene Loring numbers being in the second act. Finally there's the question of whether Cole Porter was averagely, or more-than-averagely, indigo in his "leer-ics."

All in all, "Silk Stockings" stirred up as much afterglow comment as any show opening this season and quite blanketed comment on "The Dark is Light Enough," which opened the night previous.

Inside Stuff—Legit

According to Art Buchwald, N.Y. Herald Tribune columnist for the Continental edition of the paper, who came over on the first show plane from Paris for "Fanny," the $690-per-person adventure was a missout, if not a fiasco. Combination of fogbound N.Y. causing the Pan Am plane to light in Washington, after considerable delay, plus a delayed action "benzadrine audience," due to the extended flight and the general arduousness of the transAtiantic flight, didn't quite make it all come off.

True, Ezio Pinza did meet the plane, but author Marcel Pagnol, from whose trilogy the Joshua Logan-Sam Behrman-Harold J. Rome musical, "Fanny," was developed, just didn't bother even to see 'em off in Paris.

Anyway, French champagne was poured backstage for the doughty trio of the 20 supposed to make the "Fanny" preem; there was a hands-across-the-sea tape cut for dissemination by Radiodiffusion Francaise on the morrow in Paris (rushed back by Air France); and Pinza, Logan and a VARIETY mugg from Paris, Tom Curtiss, who happened to be in N.Y. by coincidence, said a few words of cheerio to the Eiffel Tower set. Buchwald said nothing. He put his thoughts in the form of a blast in the Sunday (27) edition of the N.Y. Herald Tribune, in between personalizing on sundry radio and tv shows to plug his new Little, Brown book, "Art Buchwald's Paris."

Cy Feuer, referring to a recent VARIETY story about him and his partner, Ernest H. Martin, remarked to a friend last week that the piece was incorrect in stating that he had formerly been musical director of Universal Pictures in Hollywood. "That flattered me," he is quoted as saying. "As a matter of fact, the studio was Republic."

The co-producer, guesting with Martin at a luncheon meeting last Monday (28) of the Drama Desk, legit reporters' group, at Sardi's restaurant, N. Y., revealed that he started in show business as a trumpet player, working in the pit at the Radio City Music Hall and Roxy Theatre, N. Y., and finally going to the Coast with Leon Belasco's band. When that outfit broke up, he remained on the Coast, doing arranging and working with American Records, which later became Columbia Records. President of American at that time was Herbert Yates, who subsequently went with Republic, taking Feuer with him.

Perhaps not entirely by coincidence, Belasco, now an actor, has a featured role in the new Feuer & Martin musical, "Silk Stockings."

John Byram, co-producer of "Wayward Saint," denies a story in last week's VARIETY that the play's author, Paul Vincent Carroll, was sore at Byram and co-producer Courtney Burr. The piece was based on the word of a mutual friend of Carroll and George Jean Nathan, who was also said to be angry at the producers. Byram further denies that Paul Lukas, starred in the show prior to the opening, was embarrassed at being billed above Liam Redmond, who was top-featured in the title role. Redmond was upped to costardom after the opening. Byram, finally, disagrees with the opinion in VARIETY's review that the play is "remote as film or tele material, or even stock," and he takes exception to the statement in the notice that "the play is seriously marred by faulty casting."

Tex McCrary and Jinx Falkenburg are going all out in their tv programs on NBC to promote business for the legit show, "Tonight in Samarkand." Pair gave the Jacques Deval-Lorenzo Semple Jr., drama a rave opening night and then, apparently in an effort to offset the generally unfavorable first-string reviews of the show, offered on the air the following night to refund the purchase price of anyone who saw the play on their say-so and didn't like it. They had Louis Jourdan, star of the drama, as guest on their program that night. According to co-producers Bruce Becker and Robert Ellis Miller, there was a sharp boxoffice upturn after the start of the Tex & Jinx campaign, and there have apparently been no requests for refunds.

For the second time in a single season, Chicago will have two conflicting legit openings next Monday night (7), with "Tea and Sympathy" at the Blackstone and "Dear Charles" at the Erlanger. The "Tea" booking was set several months back, while the "Charles" scheduling was arranged late last month. Similar conflict occurred several weeks ago with the simultaneous arrivals of "Caine Mutiny Court Martial" and Ruth Draper. Only the Sun-Times and the Tribune have regular supplementary legit staffers with Glenna Syse assisting Herman Kogan for the former sheet and Seymour Raven working with Claudia Cassidy for the latter.

Outdoor Drama Not Commercial; Author Hopes It Won't Become So

Chapel Hill, N. C.

Editor, VARIETY:

Contrary to general belief, outdoor historical dramas such as "Lost Colony," "Unto These Hills," etc., have not been designed to make money at the boxoffice. They are community projects, part of a move to draw tourists into the area. The financial rewards to the communities derive from increased tourist business rather than from boxoffice profits.

Our purpose is to break even. That is, to realize enough from the boxoffice to support the show and to carry it over to the opening night of the following season. The commercial aspect has thus far been absent from outdoor drama, at least to the extent that we are more interested in expressing the mood and spirit of an area, as seen in its history, and in giving life and vividness to a particular section of the country.

If that sounds a bit pompous, bear in mind that we still believe that the basic function of outdoor drama is in the fieid of education, religion and basic democracy. These words have been bandied about so much that perhaps they have lost their meaning, and although I do not mean to give the impression that we are longhaired prophets speiling out public morality and patriotism, we do feel that there are other, and greater, benefits in the theatre than boxoffice. For example, we are proud of the fact that we give fairly weli paying jobs to around 700 young actors and technicians each summer, and help

This Is the Millennium; Twin Cities End War, Cooperate on Bookings

Minneapolis, March 1.

The local civil war is over, at least in legit. After several years of feuding, the managements of the Lyceum here and the Auditorium, St. Paul, have buried the hatchet, and are cooperating in bookings and exploitation of shows.

Bennie Berger, operating the Lyceum, held out the olive branch to Edward Furni, manager of the Auditorium, As a result, although "Tea and Sympathy" last week played its Twin Cities' engagement exciusively here, St. Paul newspapers accepted the show's advertising. Likewise, local sheets gave similar consideration to "South Pacific," playing last week in St. Paul and passing up Minneapolis for its fourth visit in this area.

Under the new theatrical peace pact Berger is encouraging the booking of road shows both here and in St. Paul. That represents an about-face from the attitude of James Nederlander, former operator of the Lyceum. Through cooperation of the two adjoining towns Berger believes more shows can be brought to both.

As a concrete move in that direction, Berger is trying to have "King and I," which he was promised exclusively for the Lyceum after its current Chicago stand, divide its local date between his house and the St. Paul Auditorium.

Nederlander endeavored to and succeeded in having most touring Broadway productions play their Twin Cities' engagements exclusively in Minneapolis during his final two years at the Lyceum helm. St. Paul newspapers, city officials, business interests and Furni resented that and complained to New York producers about being slighted.

As additional bookings ensue, the current season, which until this month has been almost non-existent, gives more promise of winding satisfactorily. Set to follow "South Pacific" and "Tea and Sympathy" are "Tender Trap," April 3, and "Pajama Game," May 4, "Mrs. Patterson," had been set for May 23, but was cancelled last weeks.

There are other tentative bookings, so it looks now as if, for the first time in several years, the Theatre Guild may be able to fulfiil its commitments to the more than 2,000 season subscribers. At least five of the seven promised shows now are assured.

'Hearts' Backers Now Have 47% of 60G Investment

Backers of "King of Hearts" have received another $4,200 return on the venture, bringing the total repayment thus far to 47% on the $60,000 investment. Bulk of the latest refund was from the show's 40% share of the $10,000 advance received by Brandt & Brandt, as agents for co-authors Jean Kerr and Eleanor Brooke, from the Dramatists Play Service for the amateur and publication rights.

According to a note from producer Elaine Perry, accompanying the repayment checks, there is still a cash balance of $2,532 on the-last-season Broadway comedy.

'Pan' 85G in Red; TV May Recoup

"Peter Pan" closed Saturday night (26) after a 19-week Broadway run at the Winter Garden, N. Y., at an approximate $85,000 loss on a $125,000 investment. However, profit from the sale of the Richard Halliday production to NBC-TV for 7:30-9:30 p. m. airing next Monday (7), is expected to reduce substantially and possibly clear the deficit on the legit presentation. Management is understood to be getting a flat $250,000 from NBC to mount the show for tv and can retain any leftover coin.

As of a Feb. 5 accounting, the Mary Martin starrer still had $78,206 to recoup. Additional losses from musicai's last three weeks of operation and closing expenses are figure to bring the deficit to around $85,000. Profit for the four-week period ending Feb. 5 was $2,798, including a $1,758 loss the last week.

Originally produced by Edwin Lester for the Los Angeles Civic Light Opera Assn., "Pan" cost $99,841, excluding a $20,000 allowance from the CLO, to bring to Broadway last Oct. 20. The production cost was recently hiked $18,837, principally by reason of an additional $17,500 option payment to CLO. Balance availabie for distribution to backers as of the Feb. 5 accounting was $15,374.

Adapted from the James M. Barrie classic, "Pan" has music and lyrics by Mark Charlap and Carolyn Leigh, additional music by Jule Styne and additional lyrics by Betty Comden and Adolph Green.

Helen Hayes Set For Ann Arbor Festival

Ann Arbor, March 1.

Helen Hayes wiil star in a new production, details of which have not been announced, as the second offering this summer at the U. of Michigan Drama Festival. That was announced over the weekend by Valentine Windt, director of the series.

Other bills for the five-week series will be announced. Windt returns to New York the end of March to complete arrangements with casting agent Jane Broder. Lucille W. Upham will again serve as business manager and James D. Murnan will be company manager.

Capt. Max Morgan, USAF, Plans West End Show

London, Feb. 22.

Capt. Max Morgan, USAF, who has been interested in several West End shows, including the revival of Oscar Wilde's "Salome," is going into production on his own. He has acquired Mervyn Nelson's "The Jazz Train," done in New York several seasons ago and calling for an entire colored cast.

Nelson arrived here a couple of weeks ago to line up some of the cast locally or in Paris. Show opens out of town March 21, coming to the West End sometime in April.

Anything for Art

Chicago, March 1.

Fredd Wayne, who plays Grant Cobbler, the neurotic suitor, in "Oh Men, Oh Women," at the Harris Theatre here, is supposed to jam his thumb against his leg as a nervous mannerism whenever the part calls for him to become excited.

He recently had a bruise on his leg and, since he couldn't remember bumping it, he finally went to a doctor and, after an examination and considerable discussion, they decided he's been hitting himself too hard during the performance.

Equity-Chorus Merger 'On' Again, Bellamy Reveals

Chicago, March 1.

The on-again off-again merger of Actors Equity and Chorus Equity is definitely "on" again, according to AE president Ralph Beliamy. The star hopes to see a consoiidation of the two unions before his term expires next June.

Long an exponent of one-card unionism in the entertainment fieid, Bellamy views the projected consolidation of the two legit guilds as an initial step toward an effective unification of the various talent organizations. The actor, in Chicago with the touring "Oh Men, Oh Women," says he expects the merger blueprint to be ready shortly for presentation to the membership of the two groups.

The Equity Council earlier had approved the merger program, but subsequently voted to reconsider after what Beilamy describes as "a small minority" voiced its opposition. A joint committee was then formed to bring the two camps together. The committee has been reporting to the Council at regular intervals and the Council has already accepted the bulk of the recommendations.

After the merger proposals have been passed on by the iegal counsel they'll be presented for a membership referendum. Equity's quarterly membership meeting is scheduled for March 16, with the merger question iikely to be a major subject of discussion.

SEE 'WONDERFUL TOWN' LIKELY LONDON SMASH

London, March 1.

With a unanimous press to help him along, Jack Hylton has all the makings of a smash hit in his London production of "Wonderful Town" which preemed at the Princes Theatre last Wed. (23) with an all-British cast.

Pat Kirkwood, recreating the original Rosalind Russell roie, scores a personai smash, handiing the song numbers expertly and making the best of comedy dialog. Shani Wallis plays her sister Eileen with a unaffected charm and Sidney James and David Hurst are the best of the male performers.

Production is slickly directed by Richard Bird, with first rate choreography by Edmund Balin.

Littler Denies Plan To Tear Down St. James'

London, March 1.

Statements that the St. James' Theatre was being razed and that a block of offices would be built on the site were denied in the House of Commons last week when Duncan Sandys said that Prince Littler, a part-owner of the house, was not planning to sell it.

Although the minister admitted that the London County Council had given permission, in principie, for the theatre to be replaced by offices, he said the application to the LCC was made without the knowiedge of Littler or his partner. They had no intention, he assured the House, of demolishing the theatre or selling the site. On the contrary, he had been assured that Littler was most anxious to do what he could, consistant with the economic operation of his business, to preserve the theatre.

'Fanny' Earns Its 275G Back in 17 Wks.; Biggest Operating Gain on Record

'Men' Folding March 26; Bellamy Has TV Plans

Chicago, March 1.

"Oh Men, Oh Women" will end its road tour March 26 at the wind-up of its current engagement at the Harris Theatre here. Ralph Bellamy, star of the Cheryl Crawford-Anderson Lawler production, has given notice as of that date. He'll return to New York to work on fall tv plans. Bellamy's deal with the producers stipulated he could give five weeks notice anytime after Feb. 1.

Joan Grey, femme lead in the Edward Chodorov comedy, had been skedded to leave the show as soon as a replacement was found, but will presumably play out the remaining four weeks.

'Trap' Pays 20% Profit on 75G

"Tender Trap," which wound up a 13-week Broadway run last Jan. 9, has paid 20% profit on its $75,000 investment. Return is split 50-50 between the management and backers. Coin from play's preproduction film sale to Metro more than offset a loss from operation.

As of a final Jan. 31 accountant's statement the Clinton Wilder presentation had unrecouped production costs of $10,687 prior to consideration of income from the picture sale. Deal with Metro called for a flat $75,000, plus a sum equal to 10% of the weekiy gross on profit stanzas only. On the basis of the regular 60-40 split between the authors, Max Sulman and Robert Paul Smith, and the production, iatter received $27,000 of the minimum $75,000 after deduction of $3,000 commissions.

In addition to the $27,000, the comedy received a $500 advance from the touring edition of the show, sent out by Arthur Waxman, Jay Lurye and Bernard Simon. Income from those two sources brought play's available cash, as of the Jan. 31 accounting to $41,813, of which $25,000 was still due the backers on their investments, ieaving a $16,813 profit. Still to come from Metro is $10,433, representing the production's share of the additional coin due from the fiim deal.

The $25,000 due investors on their original stake was paid back Feb. 1, along with a 20% profit divvy. Future coin is expected from a London production and stock presentations and from the touring company, which acquired the property on a share of gross receipts and net profits basis and is also paying a rental to the parent company for play's physical properties.

Martha Wright in 'S.P.' At Seattle, July 4-10

Seattle, March 1.

Martha Wright will return to her hometown to star in "South Pacific," which she played on Broadway and in a local engagement with the touring company. Actress-singer will do the Rodgers-Hammerstein musical July 4-10 at the Aqua theatre.

Other shows set for the summer season are "Annie Get Your Gun," July 7-9, and "High Button Shoes," July 22-23. Annual stand of Al Sheehan's "Aqua Follies" is set for July 28-Aug. 10.

'Kismet' Back to Coast

Los Angeles, March 1.

"Kismet," which tried out as a Civic Light Opera presentation in August, 1953, before heading for the Ziegfeid Theatre in N. Y., returns to the Philharmonic Auditorium here in July for another subscription engagement.

The production, current at the Ziegfeld, N. Y., wiii move intact to the Coast, stopping over in San Francisco for a subscription stand in June.

"Fanny," which has been earning the biggest operating profit of any regular show in modern Broadway history, recouped the balance of its investment as of the end of last week, its 17th. The David Merrick-Joshua Logan production will repay the final $55,000 of its $275,000 investment this weekend.

As of last Feb. 5, the Marcel Pagnol-S. N. Behrman-Logan-Harold Rome musical needed $59,831 to recoup, having earned $75,898 for the previous four-week period, believed to be the largest operating net made by a regular Broadway production in modern times. For the ensuing three weeks, ended last Saturday night (26), it recouped ali but about $1,800 of the balance, and had more than enough assets (chiefly in pre-purchased electrical equipment) to make up the difference.

A major factor in the exceptionally high operating profit earned by "Fanny" is its advantageous deal with the Shuberts for the Majestic Theatre, N. Y. Arrangement gives the show the usual 70% of the first $20,000 gross and 75% of the next $26,000 gross. But whereas conventional theatre deals give a musical 75% on everything over $20,000, the "Fanny" deal cuts off the theatre at $46,000, so the show gets everything over that amount.

In other words, the production is saving the 25% on the approximate $20,000 receipts between the $46,000 cutoff point and the regular standee-limit gross of about $66,000, sharing only the usual royalties to stars, authors, director, choreographer and designer. Since the saving on the theatre share amount to $4,000 at capacity, the weekly operating net aside from that comes to around $15,000. (The latter amount will decrease slight-

$200,000 Suit Vs. 'Plain'; 'Town' TV Show Goes On; Defendants in Denial

"Plain and Fancy," currently in its sixth week on Broadway, has been slapped with a $200,000 infringement suit in N.Y. Federal Court. Compiaint, fiied by Richard Gehman and John B. Reniger, alleges that the Richard Kollmar-James W. Gardiner-Yvette Schumer production is a iift from the play, "Wonderful Good," and the musical, "By Hex."

"Good," written by Gehman, was produced in Pittsburgh in 1952, while "Hex," adapted by Reniger from Gehman's play, was produced in Lancaster, Pa., in 1953. Plaintiffs say they obtained a copyright on "Hex" in 1953.

Listed as defendants in the suit are the three producers of "Plain," plus Joseph Stein and Wiil Glickman, who wrote the book for the musical, and the Ford Motor Co., Ed Sullivan and CBS. Latter trio were brought into the action because excerpts from "Plain" were to be televised last Sunday (27) over Sullivan's CBS-TV show, "Toast of the Town," which the motor company sponsors. Plaintiffs sought to obtain an injunction restraining Sullivan from using "Plain" sequences, but were unsuccessful and the telecast went on as schedulied.

The "Plain" producers and iibrettists have issued a general denial of the suit's charges.

ST. LOO EMPRESS DARK; NEEDS BIG B.O. NAMES

St. Louis, March 1.

The Ansell Bros. shuttered their Empress Theatre here last week, probably for the remainder of the season because of "inability to complete negotiations for the ensuing weeks." Move was announced in the program of the recent "Prescott Proposals," with Judith Evelyn.

Joseph C. Ansell says that discussions are under way with several Broadway and Hollywood stars for stock appearances later in the season. He explains that he and his brother Louis have learned that only really big stars in hit plays are profitable. He adds that if and when such names are available the house will be relighted.

Serious Charge

London, Feb. 18.

H. J. Barlow (for Magnet Entertainments Ltd.) production of drama in three acts, by Philip King. Stars Victoria Hopper, Frank Lawton, Olga Lindo. Direction, Martin Landau; decor, Ronald Brown. At Garrick Theatre, London, Feb. 17. '55; $2.15 top.

Hester Ryfield ..... Victoria Hopper
Mr. Grainger ..... Frank Lawton

According to a program note, "Serious Charge" is described as "an exciting play." For once, the description is reasonably apt, although this drama of a clergyman falsely accused of homosexuality could have been told with greater conviction. Nevertheless, it has all the appearances of a potential hit and, with a degree of tightening, might even make the grade on Broadway.

Philip King has developed a controversial theme without undue sensationalism. All but one of the characters have been etched with great skill; the dialog is always lifelike and the settings convey the right atmosphere.

The play is staged in a typical English village in which local gossip appears to be the main activity. The newly arrived bachelor vicar, apart from having to cope with a frustrated and designing spinster, also has a major problem in dealing with a youth who has indulged in petty thefts, spread obscenity among his fellow choirboys and finally has become morally responsible for the death of a pregnant young girl. The guilty young man vengefully accuses the vicar of a homosexual assault and the slanderous poison quickly spreads through the village.

This is essentially a plausible situation, but the author and director have made the mistake of making the youth such an obvious liar that it is difficult to believe that this would be believed against the vicar. This may not be more than a quibble, but tends to rob the play of credibility and impact, particularly in view of the high standard of the other characterizations.

Otherwise, the play and production are fine, and the acting is on a general high level. The performance of Patrick McGoohan as the vicar is particularly moving, and Olga Linda is excellent as his worldly-wise mother. Victoria Hopper gives a touching portrayal as the designing spinster and Frank Lawton is as polished as always as the village schoolmaster. Anthony Wager makes the best of his part as the boy thief.

Wonderful Town

London, Feb. 24.

Jack Hylton production of musical comedy in two acts; book, Joseph Fields and Jerome Chodorov; music, Leonard Bernstein; lyrics, Betty Comden and Adolp Green; based on play "My Sister Eileen," by Joseph Fields and Jerome Chodorov, and the stories by Ruth McKenney. Stars Pat Kirkwood; features Shani Wallis, Sidney James, Dennis Bowen, David Hunt. Jack Hylton, who has imported a string of Broadway musicals with varying success, has a potential winner in "Wonderful Town"—and the only snag in the operation might be the location of the theatre. Oddly enough, the success is all the more assured by the hiring of a complete local cast, and Pat Kirkwood in the original Rosalind Russell role gives the production its full measure of verve, vivacity and vitality.

Normally an artist who hits a strident note, Miss Kirkwood plays the leading role with a friendly warmth and as a musicomedy star of standing. She is also able to contribute the necessary vocal qualities which Miss Russell is said to have lacked. This is a genuine case of local girl making good, as Miss Kirkwood had been in the wilderness for some time and now emerges with full star stature.

Although nobody would want to classify "Wonderful Town" as the best tuner to emanate from Broadway since the New York domination in this field began a decade back, it must be regarded as a very pleasant offering with a non-controversial theme, which should yield a comfortable return for the management. Admittedly it has a substantial operating nut, but the Princes is a large enough theatre to allow an adequate profit margin.

This musical adaptation of the pre-war legit hit, "My Sister Eileen," has been expertly directed by Richard Bird, who has given the production the speed and action now regarded as an integral part of any Broadway importation.

It is slickly paced, abounds with action and is adroitly timed to get the best from the comedy dialog. Edmund Balin has done an excellent job in recreating the original dances by Donald Saddler, and Raoul Pene du Bois has used plenty of imagination in his decor and costuming.

The story of the two innocent girls who come to New York from Ohio and set up housekeeping in a Greenwich Village cellar is flimsy, but the book by Joseph Fields and Jerome Chodorov is crammed with incident and contrives a sufficiency of situations to sustain interest. As apparently in the Broadway original, it is hard to appreciate why the male sex always make a pitch for the younger sister (played by Shani Wallis) and ignores Pat Kirkwood. This, however, is little more than a minor quibble, particularly as creditability is not an essential prerequisite for a musical comedy plot.

The score, surprisingly fresh to London ears despite the two-year time gap between productions is a plus feature of the show. The ballads "Ohio", "What A Waste", "A Quiet Girl" and "It's Love", have a sincere appeal and the more typical show tunes such as "Conga" and "Wrong Note Rag" provide the contrasting zest.

The hit tunes are sung with charm and sincerity by the two principal femmes, who duet with great skill. The weakest link is the cast is Dennis Bowen, who plays the romantic male lead; his personality is restrained and his voice does not carry too well through the theatre.

David Hurst, as the Greenwich Village landlord, and Sidney James, as an American footballer, offer more exuberant humor. Smaller roles are nicely filled and the big vocal and terping troupes fill their spots efficiently. Myro.

Sailor Beware

London, Feb. 17.

Jack Waller production of comedy in three acts (four scenes), by Phillip King and Falkland Cary. Stars Peggy Mount. Direction, Melville Gillam; scenery, Michael Eve. At Strand Theatre, London, Feb. 16, '55; $2.20 top.

Edie Hornett ..... Ann Wilton
Emma Hornett ..... Peggy Mount
Mrs. Lack ..... Myrette Morven
Henry Hornett ..... Cyril Smith
Albert Trufnell ..... Richard Coleman
Carnoustie Bligh ..... James Copeland
Daphne Pink ..... Jean Burgess
Shirley Hornett ..... Sheila Shand Gibbs
Rev. Oliver Purefoy ..... Anthony Marlowe

This new British comedy by Phillp King and Falkland Cary might be tagged the poor man's "Taming of the Shrew." This homely subject, with its conventional domestic setting, revolves around an overpowering and domineering mother and the role is brilliantly interpreted by a West End newcomer, Peggy Mount, with a lifetime of experience in stock. She has a plum part, and in large measure it's her performance that makes the play.

"Sailor Beware," (not to be confused with the 1933-34 Broadway farce of the same title, by Kenyon Nicholson and Charles Robinson), has a non-name cast, but looks set for a profitable run. It is a doubtful prospect for Broadway, but has obvious film possibilities as a modest budgeter for the home market.

Although the mood of the play frequently switches from broad, brisk humor to downright sentiment, the accent is mainly on comedy, and the co-authors derive maximum laughs from the simple story of the sailor who leaves his girl standing at the altar as a protest against the machinations of his prospective ma-in-law.

In the establishing first act there is a suspicion of farce, but the characters suddenly emerge as believable people and the main situation proves to be quite realistic. There is every sympathy for the young man who revolts against the proposal that he should live only a couple of doors away from his in-laws; and there is a genuinely moving scene in which the much-bullied husband defends his loyalty to his wife.

Peggy Mount's performance as the mother is as dominating as

Still Not the Type

"Inherit the Wind," upcoming drama by Jerome Lawrence and Robert E. Lee, deals with the celebrated Scopes "monkey" trial of the 1920s, and its leading characters are drawn from actual figures in that case, including William Jennings Bryan, Clarence Darrow and H. L. Mencken. An actor, hoping to play the latter part, last week sought out George Jean Nathan, long a friend and associate of the Baltimore editor, to get authentic information on how he looked and dressed.

Appearing at the producer's office next day, the actor not only had his hair brushed as Mencken used to, and was wearing a suit in the style the editor favored, but even had on an old-fashioned stiff collar such as Mencken wore.

It was no use, however. The part went to another actor, Tony Randall.

Marcel Marceau Wows Montreal With French Pantomime Sketches

Montreal, March 1.

Marcel Marceau, French mimer who played his first North American date at the local Gesu Theatre last week, is obviously a virtuoso in his classic field. Seldom has a Montreal audience seen such a perfectionist and seldom has it responded so enthusiastically.

Marceau, heading a company of 18 mimers in Paris, developed most of the sketches he's using on the tour as prologue pieces before regular three-act performances. Assisting the star on the present tour is Gilles Segal, who despite the obvious influence from Marceau, is a talented artist himself, and his broad, comedic miming offers ideal contrast.

For the first half of their show, the duo split sides evenly. They also make one appearance together in a drama that is rather overcontrived but effective in its broad Gallic treatment. Marceau takes over for the second act, reprising several boff sessions all resolving around his gamin-like character, Bip.

Both performers wear the traditional dead-white harlequin makeup, with accented mouths and eyebrows, and their costumes are simply a one-piece white suits with short sleeves and trousers. Cards announcing upcoming numbers are held by Segal, who adapts postures to fit title. With a bare stage, they rely on careful lighting to boost the overall impact.

Le Theatre du Nouveau Monde and Jean de Rigault sponsored Marceau's appearance here and in Quebec City, following which Marceau returns to Europe for a tour of the Scandinavian countries and Italy.

UCLA Will Tour Exhib Of Scenic Design Art

Los Angeles, March 1.

Exhibition of original designers' renderings of legit scenic designs is being assembled by Kenneth Macgowan, head of the UCLA drama department. After showing at the college, it will be toured across the country, being shown at university drama schools, regional theatres and in a few key legit cities.

All paintings will be cataloged and framed, with explanatory notes about the designer and the stage production for which the scenery was used. Idea is not only that the designers' original conceptions will have considerable interest as theatrical history, but may have inspirational value for young would-be scenic artists.

Although no name has been chosen for the exhibit, it will be limited to the work of American designers and will represent the period since about 1914, when such artists as Robert Edmond Jones, Lee Simonson, Claude Bragdon and Norman Bel Geddes started the "new" theatre movement. Exhibit will include renderings supplied by the artists themselves from museums and private theatrical collections.

UCLA showing is scheduled to open about next September and continue through March of next year.

THE WOODEN DISH

(Note: The Edmund Morris drama was produced in the West End last summer by Aldrich & Myers and Julius Fleischmann, in partnership with British manager E. P. Clift. It had a cast of nine, including Wilfred Lawson, Joan Miller and former Hollywood film actress Bessie Love. Despite favorable notices for the performances, the play failed to catch on at the boxoffice and operated at a loss, closing after seven weeks, the last three of which the author waived royalties and the cast was on minimum salary. The figures, translated into dollars by the U. S. accountant for Aldrich & Myers, may be of particular interest in comparison to such costs on Broadway.)

Chi Uneven; 'King' Edges to $49,000, 'Caine' $26,700, Bellamy OK $18,000

Chicago, March 1.

Chi biz was spotty last week with a couple of shows gaining and the other two easing off a bit. Two plays depart next Saturday (5), and a third folds March 26, but three new entries arrive next week.

"South Pacific" is due Sunday (6) at the Opera House for three weeks. "Tea and Sympathy" opens Monday (7) at the Blackstone for a run on subscription and "Dear Charles" comes into the Erlanger, same date for four weeks. "The Rainmaker" is due April 11 at the Erlanger for three weeks on subscription.

Estimates for Last Week

Caine Mutiny Court Martial, Blackstone (4th wk) ($4.40; 1,385) (Lloyd Nolan, John Hodiak, Barry Sullivan). Over $26,700 (previous week, $27,700); leaves next Saturday (5) to continue tour.

Fifth Season, Erlanger (15th wk) ($4; 1,300) (Chester Morris, Joseph Buloff). Over $13,800 (previous week, $14,900); exits next Saturday (5) to resume tour.

King and I, Shubert (14th wk) ($5; 2,100) (Yul Brynner, Patricia Morison). Nearly $49,000 (previous week, $47,500).

Oh Men, Oh Women, Harris (12th wk) ($5; 1,000) (Ralph Bellamy). Over $18,000 (previous week, $17,400); folds here March 26.

'Tops' Profitable 13½G For 1st Week, Detroit

Detroit, March 1.

"Pajama Tops," starring Diana Barrymore, grossed almost $13,500 last week at the 1,482-seat Cass at $3.50 tops, with plenty of twofers in circulation. It is holding a second week.

Current at the Shubert is Tallulah Bankhead in "Dear Charles" in for one week at a top of $3.85.

New Haven to Relight March 9 With 'Honeys'

New Haven, March 1.

Following a legit drought that set in on Feb. 5, the Shubert will again swing into action next week with the first of a rash of premieres.

"The Honeys' lifts its initial curtain March 9-12. Then "Ankles Aweigh" is due March 19-26. "Damn Yankees" tries out April 2-9 and the third consecutive musical preem, "Seventh Heaven," will unfurl on April 16 or 18.

DEBORAH HOT $32,000 IN 52-BELOW WK., MPLS.

Minneapolis, March 1.

Despite numerous cancelled subscriptions due to 52-below zero temperature and generally miserable weather, Deborah Kerr had three sellout performances and grossed a powerful $32,000 last week at a $4.40 top at the 1,850-seat Lyceum here in "Tea and Sympathy." It was the third of the Theatre Guild's promised seven subscription season shows.

Set as the fourth subscription offering is "The Tender Trap," the week of April 4.

'Teahouse' $41,400, 1st Week, Frisco

San Francisco, March 1.

"Teahouse of the August Moon," opening rave reviews at the 1,758-seat Curran Theatre, was a near sellout for its first week, and grossed a resounding $41,400 at a $4.40 top.

The Burgess Meredith-Scott McKay starrer is in for an indefinite run.

Bucks Opening May 13, To Play 24-Week Sked

New Hope, Pa., March 1.

Summer season at the Bucks County Playhouse will be stretched again this year. Mike Ellis, who took over operation of the strawhatter last summer, has skedded a 24-week run beginning May 13.

Besides the unusually early start, Ellis will carry the season into the fall, continuing through Oct. 29. A similar extension last year didn't pan out too well.

Production slate will include five tryouts. Of the shows to be presented during the season, four will be put on for two-week runs, while the others will be one-week entries. Staff for the Playhouse includes John Crowley, business manager; Kurt Steinbart, stage manager; Leonard Mulhern, box office; Bill Hackett, designer; Richard Marr, technical director, and Alan Lewis, pressagent under George Ross, who'll also handle publicity for the Playhouse Inn.

Since the windup of the Playhouse's '54 season, Ellis has gone over to the other side of the fence, criticizing plays on his own cross-the-board tv comment show, "Tonight in Philadelphia," carried over WPTZ, NBC's Philly outlet.

Morris Yuter Is Philly Press Rep for Shuberts

Morris Yuter has been appointed Philadelphia press rep for the Shuberts. Post, which has been vacant recently, was previously held by Maude Wilson, who succeeded her late husband Mark Wilson.

Yuter, recently out of the service, was once associated with Wilson, but hasn't been active in show business for some time.

'Trap' $14,600, Balto

Baltimore, March 1.

"Tender Trap" grossed a fair $14,600 last week at Ford's Theatre as the fifth offering on Guild-ATS subscription.

Advance sale is nice for "The Solid Gold Cadillac" due next Monday (7) at the house.

'Cadillac' $32,400, Hub

Boston, March 1.

The second stanza of "Solid Gold Cadillac," at the 1,590-seat Colonial, picked up momentum to a fast $32,400 last week. House is scaled at $4.40 and $3.85.

Final week is current.

'Itch' Racks Up $20,800, 3-Way Southern Split

San Antonio, March 1.

"Seven Year Itch" took in $20,800 in a three-way split last week. Dates included the Paramount, Baton Rouge, Monday-Tuesday (21-22); the Music Hall, Houston, Wednesday-Thursday (24-25) and the Texas here Saturday (26).

The Eddie Bracken starrer continued at the Texas last Sunday-Monday (27-28), moves to the Paramount, Austin, tonight (Tues.); the Auditorium, Fort Worth, tomorrow (Wed.) and Thursday (3) and the Auditorium, Dallas, Friday-Saturday (4-5).

'Bus' $19,300 In 2d Week, Philly

Philadelphia, March 1.

All local legit houses are dark this week, the first time since last September. Next arrival is "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof," Tennessee Williams' rewritten version of his 1940-41 play, "Battle of the Angels," which the Theatre Guild abandoned after a Boston tryout. It opens next Monday (7) at the Forrest as a Playwrights Co. production, staged by Elia Kazan and costarring Barbara Bel Geddes and Burl Ives.

"Bus Stop," new William Inge play, grossed just under $19,300 at the 1,430-seat Walnut last week at a $4.20 top for the second and final stanza of its tryout. The Robert Whitehead-Roger L. Stevens production opens on Broadway this week.

'GAME' SPORTY $48,200, 'VIA' $1,500, ROCHESTER

Rochester, March 1.

Touring edition of "Pajama Game" took in a solid $48,200 at the Auditorium here last week. Musical, starring Fran Warren, Larry Douglas and Buster West, is current at the Hanna, Cleveland.

The Arena Theatre, however, didn't fare as well, with initial six performances of "Girl on the Via Flaminia" racking up a poor $1,500. Stock revival is currently in its second week.

'Moon' Wanes to $7,500, 'Life' Capacity 4G, L. A.

Los Angeles, March 1.

Local legit scene was busy but not too profitable last week. Biltmore had rough going with "The Moon Is Blue," despite generally good notices for this repeat stand, but "This Is Your Life, Mendel" was a sellout again at the tiny Civic Playhouse.

In their third week, the American Savoyards presented "Patience" at the Las Palmas, with "Pinafore" this week. Holdovers include "Finian's Rainbow" at Hollywood Repertory; "Green Fields" at the New Playhouse, "Woman With Red Hair" at the Circle and "Ticklish Acrobat" at the Stage Society.

Estimates for Last Week

Moon Is Blue, Biltmore (C) (1st wk) ($3.30; 1,636) (Jerome Cowan). F. Hugh Herbert play drew a mild $7,500.

Patience, Las Palmas (5 days) (3.30; 400): American Savoyards got a modest $4,000, "Pinafore" is current.

This Is Your Life, Mendel, Civic Playhouse (C) (4th wk) ($3.30; 400) (Leo Fuchs). Capacity again at $4,000.

Finian's Rainbow, Hollywood Repertory (9th wk) ($3.30; 276) (Charles Davis). Slim $1,800.

B'way Bright; 'Stocking' $36,800 (5), 'Light' 23½G (6), 'Samarkand' $12,900, 'Wayward' 8G 'Plain' Fancy $55,300

Broadway had the traditional pickup last week. Business spurted for the Washington's Birthday stanza, instead of continuing its recent lull. Biggest hikes were registered by musicals, with one tuner jumping as high as $9,900 over the previous week's take. Top rise for a straight play was $4,800.

There were three closings last week, "Mrs. Patterson," "Peter Pan" and "Wedding Breakfast." Slated to wrap up next Saturday (5) is "Southwest Corner," with "Quadrille" calling it quits the following week.

Keys: C (Comedy), D (Drama), CD (Comedy-Drama), R (Revue), MC (Musical-Comedy), MD (Musical-Drama), O (Opera), OP (Operetta).

Other parenthetic designations refer, respectively, to weeks played, number of performances through last Saturday, top prices, number of seats, capacity gross and stars. Price includes 10% Federal and 5% City tax, but grosses are net: i.e., exclusive of tax.

Off-Broadway Shows

Shoestring Revue

Ben Bagley (in association with Mr. and Mrs. Judson S. Todd) production of revue in two acts. Direction, Christopher Hewett; dances and musical numbers, Dania Krupska; sketches, Mike Stewart, Sheldon Harnick, Richard F. Maury; lyrics, Bud McCreery, Mike Stewart, Ronny Graham; music, Arthur Siegel, Charles Strouse, Ken Welch; production design, Carter Morningstar; musical direction and arrangements, Charles Strouse. Cast: Dorothy Greener, Maxwell Grant, Rhoda Kerns, Arte Johnson, Dody Goodman, Arthur Partington, Beatrice Arthur, Mel Larned, Joan Bowman, Peter Conlow, Chita Rivera, John Sharpe. At President, N.Y., Feb. 2, '55; $3.45 top.

Nobody will go away from "Shoestring Revue" whistling a tune, but he may recall a poorer evening in plushier surroundings. Occasionally gauche and monochromatic, this still averages out as an okay show for a tiny house.

There are a dozen performers on stage, three musicians in the pit, and 17 other people who've done the rest of the honors. It's the dozen who act, dance and sing who give the two-hour revue its flair. They triple in brass until it's dizzying to watch them come and go, but they're generally with it.

The mood is satire, from subtle to slapstick, weighted on the obvious side. "Man's Inhumanity" is a rough opening and it's good to get it over quickly. Three numbers later things warm up a bit with Ken Welch's "Inevitabiy Me," a ballad danced and sung a la 1870.

Dorothy Greener then gets the show on the beam. As a roller derby queen, she skates on, grins, winks and goes into Mike Stewart's yock monoiog about the sport's vicissitudes. Luckily, Miss Greener pops up often, her portrayal of a Disney Medea being agreeably disconcerting.

Comedienne Beatrice Arthur has a couple of good spots, her "Couldn't Be Happier" monolog to an about-to-be-married ex-lover, and her raucous Italian film heroine being her top moments. Chita Rivera is a neat trick who dances nicely and scores as a well-known Hollywood blonde turned highbrow in "Epic." Dody Goodman has a gaudy time in "Someone Is Sending Me Flowers," and it seems too bad that Rhoda Kerns doesn't get to dance oftener.

The matinee trade will call Peter Conlow cute. He is also a passable hoofer and singer. Arte Johnson's wide-eyed dellvery is good for the dry laughs and Maxwell Grant delivers the brasher stuff with emphasis.

Mike Stewart's sketches are consistently strong and he has penned a decent lyric for the calypso number that opens the second act. Richard Maury's "In Bed With the Reader's Digest" has everything but a good blackout. Music-wise the show runs under par.

Christopher Hewett has staged for pep, while Danla Krupska's choreography has amusing touches. The duo pianists and percussionist hit a lively pace, seldom getting in the way of the voices. The physical production is shoestring without apologies.

It's an unpretentious revue, often uneven but sometimes sharp. They say producer Ben Bagley is just 21. It's a start. Geor.

The Three Sisters

Cast: Carol Gustafson, Peggy Maurer, Philip Loeb, George Ebeling, Eileen Ryan, Leonardo Cimino, Shirley Gale, Sanford Seeger, Erika Gippner, Roger DeKoven, Morris Carnovsky, William Woodson, Frances Chaney, Charles Brin, Albert Valentine, Alex Lord.

New York's downtown east side has another distinguished presentation, as the 4th Street Theatre players follow their fine "The Dybbuk" of last fall with a finer "The Three Sisters." The gloomy, pessimistic but never boring Chekhovian comedy of aimless souls and wasted lives is recreated vividly and fascinatingly. A grade-A cast of professionals, under David Ross' sensitive direction, carries "Sisters" off so well that it seems quite a pity that this virtuoso group and its presentation of the Russian classic aren't on Broadway.

In the bare, limited confines of this onetime synagog, with audience seated on two sides of the open center stage, Richard Jackson uses lights and minimum props skillfully for the three scene changes involved. The Stark Young translation, used here for the first time in New York, is faithful, while being fresh and unstilted, so that the full impact of the Chekhovian irony and weltschmerz, and the flavorsome though futile old-Russian middleclass life of the late 19th century, is eminently retained. With little action, there is talk and talk, and though some of it is repetitious, none of it is dull.

What keeps the interest constantly at high level is the uniformly fine level of acting, right down to the bit parts. The three femme leads are strikingly attractive as well as talented, in Carol Gustafson as the schoolmistress eldest sister, Eileen Ryan as the unhappily-married, love-smitten middle one, and Peggy Maurer as the eager youngest, constantly echoing the hopes of the three sisters that someday they'll get back to Moscow. Frances Chaney adds a fourth striking femme portrait as the upstart who's moved into the family and edges the sisters out.

Roger DeKoven has a meaty role as an unhappy colonel-philosopher. Morris Carnovsky gives a full picture of the weakling brother who fritters away his life and the family's inheritance, and Philip Loeb limns a rich study of a spineless though lovable old army doctor.

Supporting roles are also standout, with William Woodson as the rejected husband-teacher, George Ebeling as a baron hoping someday to go to work, and Leonardo Cimino as a warped, rejected suitor. Shirley Gale as an old nurse and Sanford Seeger as the deaf servitor bring small roles to sharp focus.

Chekhov isn't frivolous stuff; "Sisters" is meaty, with universal application, for real gutsy theatre. It's found here, vividly, in this out-of-way spot. Bron.

Juno and the Paycock

Cast: Anne Fielding, Edmund Williams, Virginia Downing, John Leighton, Howard Wierum, Albert M. Ottenheimer, Howard Augusta, Clark Morgan, Miriam Craig, Helen Martin, James B. McMahon, Charles Harrigan.

If "Juno and the Paycock" were just a comedy, the Greenwich Mews Theatre would probably have a strong entry. The humorous angles are played to the hilt in this off-Broadway presentation, but the mirthful moments are only an integral part of a serious theme in which playright Sean O'Casey depicts the breakdown of a poor Dublin family in 1922. And, it's in the absence of dramatic punch that the production misses.

As an off-Broadway offering, however, it's acceptable. Dominant among the performers are Howard Wierum as the irresponsible household head and Albert M. Ottenheimer as his sly drinking partner. It's these two who spark the production. Those playing more serious roles, including Virginia Downing as Juno, don't acquit themselves as well.

Bamboo Cross

Cast: Jenne Griffin, Jean McHenry, Myriame Kolon, Tanya Chin, John Lee, Ching-Ming Chin, Juan Velasquez.

In the village of Hen Yang, Red China, two Maryknoll Sisters make a last ditch stand for their faith. In sum, that is the story of Theophane Lee's new play, a tragedy that, despite its violent finale, stresses a note of affirmation. Although the plotting is elemental and the dialog only middling, the

Tea and Sympathy
(LONGACRE, N. Y.)

As standby for the star in "Tea and Sympathy" Mary Fickett pinchhit for Joan Fontaine on several occasions since first going on for her last Sept. 25. She's no longer subbing, having taken over the lead role on a fulltime basis. Cast change occurred during last month when illness caused Miss Fontaine to exit the Playwrights Co.—Mary K. Frank production prior to her scheduled departure last Saturday (26). Film star went into the play last May 31, succeeding Deborah Kerr, who's currently recreating her original assignment in the touring production of the Robert Anderson drama.

Miss Fickett, who gets top-featured billing, is an able replacement, although a dubious boxoffice successor. The warmth, understanding and sincerity of the housemaster's wife are evident in her portrayal. A completely effective performance, however, is marred by an occasional studied quality in her speech and actlons. Grosses have been declining in recent weeks, and the show is now on twofers. Production is currently in its 74th week on Broadway.

Co-featured with Miss Fickett are Leif Erickson and Anthony Perkins. Erickson, who's been with the play since its Broadway opening at the Barrymore, has seemingly lost none of his venom as the distasteful housemaster, while Perkins, who replaced John Kerr last May, is still standout as the sensitive, tormented youth.

Since "Tea" was last reviewed in VARIETY last summer, there's been only one other major cast change. Dick Yorke, who originated the role of Perkins' athletic roommate, has been replaced by Yale Wexler. Latter gives a first-rate performance. Despite play's long run, Florida Friebus, Richard Midgley, John McGovern and other cast members continue to give energetic and persuasive portrayals.

"Tea" remains a powerful and perceptive drama. Jess.

The Seven Year Itch
(FULTON, N. Y.)

Louise King, who played the girl from upstairs in the touring company of "Seven Year Itch" for many months, has recently taken over the same role in the Broadway edition, succeeding Sally Forrest, who replaced Vanessa Brown, the original in the featured femme lead. She's excellent.

Although comparisons may be odious, they are probably of some interest in this case. At a venture, then, say the newcomer is more convincing than Miss Forrest, perhaps not as animated as Miss Brown was at first, but she avoids the unfortunate mannerisms and fussiness Miss Brown gradually acquired.

Miss King is a looker, with the refreshing quality the part requires, plus an attractive personality. She succumbs slightly to the temptation to gush in her early scenes and, in common with the other members of the cast, rushes the lines and loses intelligibility a bit. But she improved as the performance proceeds and her later scenes are amusing and ingratiating.

Practically everyone in the cast, particularly those who have been playing the comedy since early in the run, have grown somewhat mechanical and in some cases a bit exaggerated. And as the nuances of timing and expression are lost, it's evident that the lines are being recited without thought and, consequently, without the illusion of spontaneity. That's inevitable, of course, after more than two years' run, but perhaps severe checkup rehearsals would help.

Rita Morley, now playing the vacationing wife, is acceptable where her predecessor, Neva Patterson, was outstanding. Some of the bit players are now adequate, or nearly so. Tom Ewell is likable and funny as star, although his little dancing mannerism seems a trifle overdone. Edward Emhardt is still notable as the psychlatrist, despite occasionally careless diction. George Keane remains solidly effective as the amorous writer.

In spite of the undeniable rough edges after 118 weeks on Broadway, the George Axelrod comedy remains a funny and immensely entertaining show. When it goes on the road a few weeks hence it should mop up in the various key stands not already played by the Eddie Bracken-starring second company. Hobe.

Traveling in Style

Rhoderick Walker, who plays a bit role of a footman and doubles as assistant stage manager of "Quadrille," has a third assignment not listed in the program. He's also the volunteer chauffeur for costars Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne, driving them to and from their apartment and the Coronet Theatre, N. Y.

There's a minor saga involved in the British actor's third stint. It seems that Walker plans to vacation this summer by taking a motor tour of Europe, so he bought one of the miniature-size new Nash hardtop sedans. Put having a problem in financing the purchase, he approached Lunt, with whom he played the footman part in the original London production of the Noel Coward comedy.

Walker suggested that, rather than taxi to and from the theatre each night, the Lunts let him drive them in his new car, and pay him a flat amount when the show closes, to be used to underwrite his vacation. Lunt agreed, and for the last few weeks he and Miss Fontanne have been cramping themselves into the rear seat of the tiny vehicle for the ride to the theatre and back.

There's been only one serious crisis. That occurred last week when Lunt, who likes to do the shopping for the Lunt-Fontanne household, bought a broom and had it delivered to the theatre. There just wasn't room for inside the car for the actors and the broom, so Lunt had to hold it outside the lowered window on the ride home that night.

Outdoor Drama Not Commercial

to bridge the appalling gap between the university and Broadway.

For this reason we cannot consider that any of these plays are "flops." At Petersburg, Ill., for example, "Forever This Land" ran for two seasons, brought in 85,000 people, broke even, and increased the tourist business in the nearest town 30% during its runs. It closed because of the shakiness of its local organization, after the second season.

Basic Purposes

"Thunderland," at Asheville, realized much of its purpose, in that it brought increased tourist business to the city and gave employment to hundreds of people for two seasons. It did not open for the third year because the whole operation had not been planned properly.

Paul Green's "Faith of Our Fathers," in Washington, was not a flop in the usual sense at all, mainly because its basic purposes were fulfilled, in spite of the fact that in the chaotic theatre conditions there it could not continue to operate in the way it was conceived. These "flops" are not being explained away, ostrichlike. I mean merely that when we set out to accomplish certain things, and manage to do so, and when for various reasons the productions cannot continue, we cannot compare them to New York plays which simply fail to draw enough boxoffice and immediately close.

For this reason we are able to plan ahead now with much more assurance than we could have five years ago. We can be more realistic about the possibilities of an area, about the types of plays and the ultimate success or failure to be expected. We do not conceive these plays to run merely for the 60 performances of one season, but rather to go on for many years.

We have hundreds of people who attend each year, some of them half a dozen times in a season because attendance at this type of production is different from the indoor type. The summer night, the awesome sense of mountains, water and sky, the transformation from urban to primeval—these things do something to the thinking of the spectator, and our whole purpose and approach are different.

That is why, for some curious reason, tragedy and even lamentation have a surer place in outdoor drama, where the spectator is not surrounded by the comfortable, secure four walls of the theatre. He is forced to find himself alone, so to speak, under the heavens, and his own mood changes.

Variable Costs

The costs of these productions are variable, of course, but our standard scale runs something like this. About $100,000 to open the show, including the building of the theatre and everything else; about $90,000 to operate for a full year (60 performances, plus the maintenance of the organization for the remaining 10 months and the rehearsal period the following season).

We expect, therefore, to play to about 50,000 people, which means that we break even and continue to operate. If, by chance, a play finds itself in a good natural location and can draw 75,000, or even 150,000 that "Unto These Hills" draws, the money is already earmarked in the non-profit charter of the corporation for various charitable, religious or educational enterprises.

There is no gravy train in the outdoor theatre. Whatever can be realized over operating expenses goes automatically into scholarships, museums, educational programs and a dozen other community non-profit projects. When the show cannot meet its operating expenses, the local group will usually dig up the money to keep it going, because it is important to the community to have the attraction operating.

That is what the outdoor drama is up to now. What it will become, if and when it is thoroughly and completely commercialized, we cannot predict. In a sense, we dread for that day to come, because we are well aware that one of the most deadly sins of the theatre in America today is the commercialism of good theatre.

We realize, of course, that in America we must almost live and die by the dollar mark, but somehow this rule has not been too operative in the outdoor drama thus far, and perhaps that is one of the reasons for its success, such as it is. We do not feel that much more will be accomplished by pure commercialism, and we know that a great deal will be lost.

Kermit Hunter.

the character she portrays. She's a real find. The other players may be overpowered, but are not overshadowed. Cyril Smith is firstrate as the hen-pecked husband, Richard Coleman is impressive as the groom and Ann Wilton gives a sincere performance as the shrew's pathetic sister-in-law.

Other parts are expertly played and the production has been shrewdly directed by Meiville Gillam. The single living-room setting designed by Michael Eve provides an excellent background. Myro.

A Kind of Folly

London, Feb. 17.

Henry Sherek production of comedy in three acts, by Owen Holder. Stars Flora Robson. Jean Kent. Direction, Denis Carey; scenery and costumes, Hutchinson Scott. At Duchess Theatre, London, Feb. 16, '55; $2.25.

Sarah Ashby ..... Flora Robson
Sarah Bellaire ..... Jean Kent
William ..... Wilfrid Hyde White
Eustace ..... Owen Holder
Henry ..... Jack Gwillim
Young Lady ..... Sylvia Syms

If this comedy had not been set in the early part of this century, garnished with phoney Edwardian dialog, and the basic idea presented in a clearcut modern setting, it might have had a chance. As is, not all the adroitness and skill of Flora Robson (for whom the play was written), nor the voluptuous charm of Jean Kent can make it anything but mediocre. Its run will be limited to the personal appeals of the stars, although even in that regard it will put a severe strain on the public's loyalty.

The locale is an opulent London home and the story turns out to be an ironic comedy of shuffled wives, husbands and lovers, with a mildly surprise twist ending, but it's all too complicated and unrealistic, with improbable situations and dialog.

Flora Robson, is an unaccustomed attempt at a comedy part, reads her lines in as nearly natural a manner as is possible. Jean Kent is alluring and feline as the other woman, and William Hyde White plays the erring husband in his usual style of suave sophistication.

As the collegiate son, the author hovers in the background as though unsure of his play and his active role in it. Jack Gwillim is excellent as a Government official torn between love and duty and Sylvia Syms registers briefly as the boy's sweetheart. Piece is well directed and sumptuously mounted. Clem.

Sensations de Paris

Paris, Jan. 3.

Henri Varna production of musical revue in two acts, 45 tableaux (designed by Jose de Zamora). Stars Lynda Gloria and Alfredo Alaria; features Robert Piquet, Simone Claria, Monica Ford, Jean-Louis Bert, Yoko Tani, Jonny-Mary, Jean Rigodu, Lily La Pudeur, Ballet Argentine (12), Italo Medini, Miss Pamela, Alicia Gonzales, Joe-Joe (2), Monique Bernachova, Marc Dauphine, Zaru, Les Rolwood, Claire Anderson, Bob Morel, Roger Dalphin, Janine Godest, Eve Line, Mariza, Rene Gollard, Mansfield Girls (40), Belles du Casino (26). Lyrics and sketches by Henri Varna, Marc-Cab, Rene Richard; new music by Mariano Mores, Gilbert Dasse, Serge Gut, Paulette Zevaco, Florent Lemirre, Charles Berman; choreography, costumes, lighting, direction of Ballet Argentine by Alfredo Alaria; music by A. Waitzman; sets by Pelergy, Bertin, Deshays; costumes by Madelle, Leon Guy, Vicaire, Falk, Paul Dimos; orchestra (25) under direction of Florent Lemirre. At Casino de Paris, Nov. 26, '54; $3.50 top.

Henri Varna, papa of the Paris revue producers, has a big, rousing hit in "Sensations de Paris." Bowing at his Casino de Paris, it is the best Casino show since the pre-war days.

Varna had held his previous show, "Thunder Revue," for four years, editing a slightly revised edition in 1953. This new revue offers a change with a vengeance. "Sensations" not only contains the ingredients of blazing nudity and eye-tickling spectacle but possesses freshness, style and compelling tempo, in addition to splendid talent.

The main talent, the newly discovered Alfredo Alaria Argentine ballet troupe, sweeping the stage like a pampas fire, has become a Paris sensation, and the Varna revue has supplied a tonic to the wilting local season.

"Sensations" begins conventionally enough with a we're-off-to-the-hunt tableau introducing singer Monica Ford as Lady Chatterley, singer-m.c. Robert Piquet, as master of the hunt, the Mansfield Girls as hunters and the Belles du Casino modeis as amazons. In a subsequent spot Zaru, gilded and turbaned as an Indian fakir, does a fancy contortionist bit and first big spectacle scene is "Christmas Greetings."

The Rolwoods (3), as ice-skaters, do expert work and there is a cute bit by Joe-Joe (2) and Mariza as polar bears balancing on rubber snowballs. Then Alfredo Alaria makes a sensational entrance in a gaucho sequence, "Zapateado," classic Spanish dance set to Argentine rhythm, which he follows with the suitry, tropical "Batucada de Peernambuco," with pop Brazilian airs as music.

Next comes a blackout sketch of burley variety, in which the well-stacked Simone Claris tries to interest her hubby in what she is wearing and what she is not wearing. The remainder of the first act presents the show's femme star, Lynda Gloria, former Montmartre nitery singer-dancer, in an 18th century West Indie spectacle, Alaria's dance interpretation of a Garcia Lorca song, "Cafe de Cintas," the nifty juggling of Italo Medini, a funny dance by Miss Pamela and a grand finale of a jungle carnival.

Second half starts with "Love Nest" tableau (girls and boys as turtle doves), then offers Alaria's brief history of 20th century show biz. Scenically show's high point is the Coronation ceremony in a Byzantine cathedral. Dramatically Alaria's "Mambo y Santo," which commences with a mambo, and finishes with an adagio sequence, plus a frantic voodoo.

A sound Montmartre number (with Monique Bernachova as queen of the Can-Can and with Jean-Louis Bert as its king). Curt.

'Fanny' Recoups

ly from here on, since costars Ezio Pinza and Walter Slezak get upped pay when the show is in the black.)

Unprecedented Terms

There are several angles in the virtually unprecedented sharing terms for "Fanny." The Logan, Behrman, Rome and Pinza names helped, of course, in making "Fanny" a desirable booking on paper. Also, at the time Merrick and Logan were dickering for a house, the independent 46th Street (City Playhouses) and the Mark Hellinger (Anthony B. Farrell) were available, so the producers were in an ideal position to dicker.

"Fanny" has naturally used up most of the $800,000 advance with which it opened last fall, but remains a lively broker ticket and is now reportedly beginning to feel the agency and mail order pressure from out of town, which the management has been working to build up by ads, publicity and personal promotion with key city newspapers.

Producers Merrick and Logan recently turned down an offer from 20th-Fox for a guarantee of $500,000 against 10% of the film gross for the screen rights to "Fanny." If they fail to get a better price, Logan may elect to do the picture himself, perhaps under his new percentage arrangement to direct pictures for Warners.

The pivotal figure is a young Chinese Christian who is persuaded that the People's Republic deserves his full support. His defection gives the sisters anguish, but when he becomes their prosecutor in the new era, the stress on him is too great. Made the agent of death and hatred, he turns on his new masters in a sanguinary denouement.

Surprisingly, this story of serenity vs. destruction is largely static. There are taut moments, and fleeting instants of dramatic impact, but the play is episodic and repetitious. It seems too bad that the victory of loving-kindness over evil must be passive and not more compelling.

Jenne Griffin and Jean McHenry are coolly courageous as the sorely tested nuns. John Lee plays the Chinese who betrays them, making amply clear his pangs of conscience, and vigorously facing the savage act that is his salvation.

Ching-Ming Chin has unexpected humor as the village commissar and is able to clarify some of the motives of the reprehensible character he portrays. Juan Velasquez is sly deferential as an oily villager, Myriame Kolon is a brave native woman who helps the sisters escape, and Tanya Chin charmingly plays her adopted daughter.

Dennis Gurney has not shied away from force in directing the script's melodramatic moments and he has pleasant touches for the placid passages. Floyd Allan's design for the Maryknoll Sisters' Chinese home is extremely attractive. Geor.

The Ascent of F6

Markaren Productions revival of tragedy in two acts by W. H. Auden and Christopher Isherwood. Direction, Eugene O'Sullivan; scenery and lighting, Gilbert Rathbun; music, Elmer Gordon; chorus coach, Joan Ford. At Davenport, N. Y., Feb. 25, '55; $3.00-$2.50 top.

Cast: Tim O'Connor, Eileen Whyte, Herman Dinkin, Joseph Ruskin, Rosemary Murphy, Mark Mitchell, John McGiven, Wm. Leggate, Frank Gero, Paul Erbach, Raf Michaels, Charles Reynolds, Bette Ramey, Sam Gray, Bob Conley, Chorus: Mary Ross, Natalie Richman, Sabina Holzka, Pat Sugrue, Joanne Reilly.

This revival of "The Ascent of F6" is a tight little show. While the philosophizing of co-authors Auden and Isherwood keeps the play in the egghead class, there is enough melodramatic device and dry humor to satisfy the average stubholder.

Mountaineering is used primarily as a graphic symbol of the life struggle. That "he who goes to the hills goes to his mother" is but one of the abstruse comments on human striving. Although the play was written during the 1940's, its political overtones seem ironically relevant.

The production's physical aspects are shoestring and may work against its draw. There is a uniformity of performance, however, that aids emotional impact and is a boon to "F6's" intellectualizing.

Focus is on a British climber who leads an expedition to F6 for motives he deems unworthy. Tim O'Connor's ascetic drive in this role is tensely concise. Among those who force the climb on its unwilling leader are Joseph Ruskin as his politically ambitious brother, Mark Mitchell as a crusty General and Bette Ramey as the climber's saccharine mother.

John McGiven's press lord is an excellently cynical portrait of a "realist" and Sam Gray has gripping moments as an Abbot. Frank Gero is a waggishly brash member of the climbing party and Paul Erbach is intense as a fine climber whose spirit breaks on the mountain.

Eileen Whyte and Herman Dinkin are pathetically drab as commoners whose lives are made brighter by their vicarious radio participation in the ascent. Eugene O'Sullivan's direction is intelligent and sufficiently pressing. Geor.

The Merchant of Venice

Shakespearewrights production of drama in two acts, by William Shakespeare. Production and design, Donald H. Goldman; direction, Marjorie Hildreth; scenery, Willis Knighton; incidental music, Ellen Bower. At Jan Hus Auditorium, Feb. 22, '55; $2.30 top.

Cast: Milton Jacobson, Earle Hyman, Robert Baines, Charles Aldman, Donald Mork, Claude Latson, Philip Lawrence, Charles Forsythe, Thomas Barbour, Robert Cass, John Monk, Robert Miller, John Main, Laurinda Barrett, Alene Hatch, Laurie Vendig.

The Shakespearewrights are playing "The Merchant of Venice" straight. The Venetians are good, Shylock is bad, and the play is billed as a "comedy." Not a very funny comedy, however.

It seems questionable judgment to use 17th century standards for "The Merchant." There has been progress since the bear-baiting days of Elizabethan England, inhumane humor fortunately having lost its savor. Shylock's downfall isn't funny, Launcelot Gobbo's plaguing of his blind father isn't funny, nor is it an amusing spectacle to watch a daughter rob and desert her father in favor of a worthless playboy lover.

Since the Venetians were a sorry crew, what's left of the play is often inescapably dull. This is a theatrical fault even Shakespeare cannot survive. If it were the work of a contemporary dramatist, "The Merchant" would have deservedly dim prospects.

The virtues of the present revival are in staging and performance. A platform jutting 20 feet into the small auditorium gets the audience into the action like an off-Broadway Cinerama. By reducing stage accoutrements to a minimum, director Marjorie Hildreth has achieved a lively flow and plasticity, pacing the play with a verve worthy of better Shakespeare.

Thomas Barbour's Shylock is swift-thinking, potent and acutely precise. It is a performance in which the actor knows how to tear a passion without leaving it in tatters. Robert Baines gives dimension to the tedious title role and Charles Aidman's Bassanio is as agreeable as such a calculating lover can be.

Laurinda Barrett's clear-spoken Portia is best in moments of sly levity and has the virtue of delivering the "quality of mercy" speech as if it were brand new. Alene Hatch is a pleasant Nerissa, but Laurie Vendig does not find much in Jessica to test her mettle.

Earl Hyman has a shrewdly-conceived scene as the Prince of Morocco, while Robert Cass' young Gobbo again raises the question "what's so funny?" Willie Knighton's sparse set is functional, if not particularly evocative of Venice and Belmont.

This is the second revival of "The Merchant" off-Broadway in as many months. It can safely be said that the town has had it. Geor.

Equity Review

Men in White

Equity Library Theatre revival of drama in two acts by Sidney Kingsley. Direction, Robert Laning; scenery, Zvi Geyra; lighting, Barbara Richter. At Lenox Hill Playhouse, N.Y., Feb. 16, '55.

Loyal Lucas, Si Oakland, Richard Kuss, J. H. Kingsberry, Fred Beir, Jerry Stiller, Fred Vogel, Peter Damon, Jo Rabb, Joyce Henry, Constance Davis, Albert Durand, Alfreda Wallace, Stefan Gierasch, Herb Voland, Mary O'Neill, Anne Coleman, Richard Kuss, Mary Hara, Charles Bell.

ELT has emerged from its mid-winter doldrums with a spanking revival of "Men In White." The company is on its toes in Sidney Kingsley's prize-winning drama of hospital life, and the staging is vital. As the second bill in the Community series, the production should rate good b.o. in the Bronx and Queens.

Told in terms of a brilliant interne who is tempted to sacrifice all for love, the struggle between medical ethics and human desire is a natural, and although it's a generation old, the play creaks hardly at all. If Kingsley seems to be dealing from a stacked deck, he is adroit enough to have the cards fall in ad-lib fashion.

As senior surgeon who is fighting to save the younger man's career, Si Oakland turns in a steely performance compounded of honesty and discipline. Fred Beir is clear and precise as the interne who is torn between love and duty, punctuating his playing with explosive moments.

As the girl whose possessive love is against the young doctor's best interests, Alfreda Wallace is handsomely debonair. Jerry Stiller is amusing as a casual interne and Jo Rabb is warmly intense as a student nurse who, in dying, saves a fine career for medicine.

Stefan Gierasch's low key performance of an indignant doctor had Row D first nighters audibly complaining that they couldn't hear. Experiment may be permissible at Lenox Hill, but "Men" is going to the neighborhoods commercially and it will be the customer's prerogative to demand communication.

Directing against the pace of Kingsley's writing, Robert Laning has mounted a trenchant production. Zvi Geyra's sectional hospital interior, revealed against a city skyline, is first class. Geor.

Off-Broadway Shows

Shoestring Revue

Ben Bagley (in association with Mr. and Mrs. Judson S. Todd) production of revue in two acts. Direction, Christopher Hewett; dances and musical numbers, Dania Krupska; sketches, Mike Stewart, Sheldon Harnick, Richard F. Maury; lyrics, Bud McGreery, Mike Stewart, Ronny Graham; music, Arthur Siegel, Charles Strouse, Ken Welch; production design, Carter Morningstar; musical direction and arrangements, Charles Strouse. Cast: Dorothy Greener, Maxwell Grant, Rhoda Kerns, Arte Johnson, Dody Goodman, Arthur Partington, Beatrice Arthur, Mel Larned, Joan Bowman, Peter Conlow, Chita Rivera, John Sharpe. At President, N.Y., Feb. 2, '55; $3.45 top.

Nobody will go away from "Shoestring Revue" whistling a tune, but he may recall a poorer evening in plushier surroundings. Occasionally gauche and monochromatic, this still averages out as an okay show for a tiny house.

There are a dozen performers on stage, three musicians in the pit, and 17 other people who've done the rest of the honors. It's the dozen who act, dance and sing who give the two-hour revue its flair. They triple in brass until it's dizzying to watch them come and go, but they're generally with it.

The mood is satire, from subtle to slapstick, weighted on the obvious side. "Man's Inhumanity" is a rough opening and it's good to get it over quickly. Three numbers later things warm up a bit with Ken Welch's "Inevitably Me," a ballad danced and sung a la 1870.

Dorothy Greener then gets the show on the beam. As a roller derby queen, she skates on, grins, winks and goes into Mike Stewart's yock monolog about the sport's vicissitudes. Luckily, Miss Greener pops up often, her portrayal of a Disney Medea being agreeably disconcerting.

Comedienne Beatrice Arthur has a couple of good spots, her "Couldn't Be Happier" monolog to an about-to-be-married ex-lover, and her raucous Italian film heroine being her top moments. Chita Rivera is a neat trick who dances nicely and scores as a well-known Hollywood blonde turned highbrow in "Epic." Dody Goodman has a gaudy time in "Someone Is Sending Me Flowers," and it seems too bad that Rhoda Kerns doesn't get to dance oftener.

The matinee trade will call Peter Conlow cute. He is also a passable hoofer and singer. Arte Johnson's wide-eyed delivery is good for the dry laughs and Maxwell Grant delivers the brasher stuff with emphasis.

Mike Stewart's sketches are consistently strong and he has penned a decent lyric for the calypso number that opens the second act. Richard Maury's "In Bed With the Reader's Digest" has everything but a good blackout. Music-wise the show runs under par.

Christopher Hewett has staged for pep, while Dania Krupska's choreography has amusing touches. The duo pianists and percussionist hit a lively pace, seldom getting in the way of the voices. The physical production is shoestring without apologies.

It's an unpretentious revue, often uneven but sometimes sharp. They say producer Ben Bagley is just 21. It's a start. Geor.

The Three Sisters

Cast: Carol Gustafson, Peggy Maurer, Philip Loeb, George Ebeling, Eileen Ryan, Leonardo Cimino, Shirley Gale, Sanford Seeger, Erika Gippner, Roger DeKoven, Morris Carnovsky, William Woodson, Frances Chaney, Charles Brin, Albert Valentine, Alex Lord.

New York's downtown east side has another distinguished presentation, as the 4th Street Theatre players follow their fine "The Dybbuk" of last fall with a finer "The Three Sisters." The gloomy, pessimistic but never boring Chekhovian comedy of aimless souls and wasted lives is recreated vividly and fascinatingly. A grade-A cast of professionals, under David Ross' sensitive direction, carries "Sisters" off so well that it seems quite a pity that this virtuoso group and its presentation of the Russian classic aren't on Broadway.

In the bare, limited confines of this onetime synagog, with audience seated on two sides of the open center stage, Richard Jackson uses lights and minimum props skillfully for the three scene changes involved. The Stark Young translation, used here for the first time in New York, is faithful, while being fresh and unstilted, so that the full impact of the Chekhovian irony and weltschmerz, and the flavorsome though futile old-Russian middleclass life of the late 19th century, is eminently retained. With little action, there is talk and talk, and though some of it is repetitious, none of it is dull.

What keeps the interest constantly at high level is the uniformly fine level of acting, right down to the bit parts. The three femme leads are strikingly attractive as well as talented, in Carol Gustafson as the schoolmistress eldest sister, Eileen Ryan as the unhappily-married, love-smitten middle one, and Peggy Maurer as the eager youngest, constantly echoing the hopes of the three sisters that someday they'll get back to Moscow. Frances Chaney adds a fourth striking femme portrait as the upstart who's moved into the family and edges the sisters out.

Roger DeKoven has a meaty role as an unhappy colonel-philosopher. Morris Carnovsky gives a full picture of the weakling brother who fritters away his life and the family's inheritance, and Philip Loeb limns a rich study of a spineless though lovable old army doctor.

Supporting roles are also standout, with William Woodson as the rejected husband-teacher, George Ebeling as a baron hoping someday to go to work, and Leonardo Cimino as a warped, rejected suitor. Shirley Gale as an old nurse and Sanford Seeger as the deaf servitor bring small roles to sharp focus.

Chekhov isn't frivolous stuff; "Sisters" is meaty, with universal application, for real gutsy theatre. It's found here, vividly, in this out-of-way spot. Bron.

Juno and the Paycock

Cast: Anne Fielding, Edmund Williams, Virginia Downing, John Leighton, Howard Wierum, Albert M. Ottenheimer, Howard Augusta, Clark Morgan, Miriam Craig, Helen Martin, James B. McMahon, Charles Harrigan.

If "Juno and the Paycock" were just a comedy, the Greenwich Mews Theatre would probably have a strong entry. The humorous angles are played to the hilt in this off-Broadway presentation, but the mirthful moments are only an integral part of a serious theme in which playright Sean O'Casey depicts the breakdown of a poor Dublin family in 1922. And, it's in the absence of dramatic punch that the production misses.

As an off-Broadway offering, however, it's acceptable. Dominant among the performers are Howard Wierum as the irresponsible household head and Albert M. Ottenheimer as his sly drinking partner. It's these two who spark the production. Those playing more serious roles, including Virginia Downing as Juno, don't acquit themselves as well.

Bamboo Cross

Cast: Jenne Griffin, Jean McHenry, Myriame Kolon, Tanya Chin, John Lee, Ching-Ming Chin, Juan Velasquez.

In the village of Hen Yang, Red China, two Maryknoll Sisters make a last ditch stand for their faith. In sum, that is the story of Theophane Lee's new play, a tragedy that, despite its violent finale, stresses a note of affirmation. Although the plotting is elemental and the dialog only middling, the

(LONGACRE, N. Y.)

As standby for the star in "Tea and Sympathy" Mary Fickett pinchhit for Joan Fontaine on several occasions since first going on for her last Sept. 25. She's no longer subbing, having taken over the lead role on a fulltime basis. Cast change occurred during last month when illness caused Miss Fontaine to exit the Playwrights Co.—Mary K. Frank production prior to her scheduled departure last Saturday (26). Film star went into the play last May 31, succeeding Deborah Kerr, who's currently recreating her original assignment in the touring production of the Robert Anderson drama.

Miss Fickett, who gets top-featured billing, is an able replacement, although a dubious boxoffice successor. The warmth, understanding and sincerity of the housemaster's wife are evident in her portrayal. A completely effective performance, however, is marred by an occasional studied quality in her speech and actions. Grosses have been declining in recent weeks, and the show is now on twofers. Production is currently in its 74th week on Broadway.

Co-featured with Miss Fickett are Leif Erickson and Anthony Perkins. Erickson, who's been with the play since its Broadway opening at the Barrymore, has seemingly lost none of his venom as the distasteful housemaster, while Perkins, who replaced John Kerr last May, is still standout as the sensitive, tormented youth.

Since "Tea" was last reviewed in VARIETY last summer, there's been only one other major cast change. Dick Yorke, who originated the role of Perkins' athletic roommate, has been replaced by Yale Wexler. Latter gives a first-rate performance. Despite play's long run, Florida Friebus, Richard Midgley, John McGovern and other cast members continue to give energetic and persuasive portrayals.

"Tea" remains a powerful and perceptive drama. Jess.

(FULTON, N. Y.)

Louise King, who played the girl from upstairs in the touring company of "Seven Year Itch" for many months, has recently taken over the same role in the Broadway edition, succeeding Sally Forrest, who replaced Vanessa Brown, the original in the featured femme lead. She's excellent.

Although comparisons may be odious, they are probably of some interest in this case. At a venture, then, say the newcomer is more convincing than Miss Forrest, perhaps not as animated as Miss Brown was at first, but she avoids the unfortunate mannerisms and fussiness Miss Brown gradually acquired.

Miss King is a looker, with the refreshing quality the part requires, plus an attractive personality. She succumbs slightly to the temptation to gush in her early scenes and, in common with the other members of the cast, rushes the lines and loses intelligibility a bit. But she improved as the performance proceeds and her later scenes are amusing and ingratiating.

Practically everyone in the cast, particularly those who have been playing the comedy since early in the run, have grown somewhat mechanical and in some cases a bit exaggerated. And as the nuances of timing and expression are lost, it's evident that the lines are being recited without thought and, consequently, without the illusion of spontaneity. That's inevitable, of course, after more than two years' run, but perhaps severe checkup rehearsals would help.

Rita Morley, now playing the vacationing wife, is acceptable where her predecessor, Neva Patterson, was outstanding. Some of the bit players are now adequate, or nearly so. Tom Ewell is likable and funny as star, although his little dancing mannerism seems a trifle overdone. Edward Emhardt is still notable as the psychiatrist, despite occasionally careless diction. George Keane remains solidly effective as the amorous writer.

In spite of the undeniable rough edges after 118 weeks on Broadway, the George Axelrod comedy remains a funny and immensely entertaining show. When it goes on the road a few weeks hence it should mop up in the various key stands not already played by the Eddie Bracken-starring second company. Hobe.

Traveling in Style

Rhoderick Walker, who plays a bit role of a footman and doubles as assistant stage manager of "Quadrille," has a third assignment not listed in the program. He's also the volunteer chauffeur for costars Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne, driving them to and from their apartment and the Coronet Theatre, N. Y.

There's a minor saga involved in the British actor's third stint. It seems that Walker plans to vacation this summer by taking a motor tour of Europe, so he bought one of the miniature-size new Nash hardtop sedans. But having a problem in financing the purchase, he approached Lunt, with whom he played the footman part in the original London production of the Noel Coward comedy.

Walker suggested that, rather than taxi to and from the theatre each night, the Lunts let him drive them in his new car, and pay him a flat amount when the show closes, to be used to underwrite his vacation. Lunt agreed, and for the last few weeks he and Miss Fontanne have been cramping themselves into the rear seat of the tiny vehicle for the ride to the theatre and back.

There's been only one serious crisis. That occurred last week when Lunt, who likes to do the shopping for the Lunt-Fontanne household, bought a broom and had it delivered to the theatre. There just wasn't room for inside the car for the actors and the broom, so Lunt had to hold it outside the lowered window on the ride home that night.

Outdoor Drama Not Commercial

to bridge the appalling gap between the university and Broadway.

For this reason we cannot consider that any of these plays are "flops." At Petersburg, Ill., for example, "Forever This Land" ran for two seasons, brought in 85,000 people, broke even, and increased the tourist business in the nearest town 30% during its runs. It closed because of the shakiness of its local organization, after the second season.

Basic Purposes

"Thunderland," at Asheville, realized much of its purpose, in that it brought increased tourist business to the city and gave employment to hundreds of people for two seasons. It did not open for the third year because the whole operation had not been planned properly.

Paul Green's "Faith of Our Fathers," in Washington, was not a flop in the usual sense at all, mainly because its basic purposes were fulfilled, in spite of the fact that in the chaotic theatre conditions there it could not continue to operate in the way it was conceived. These "flops" are not being explained away, ostrichlike. I mean merely that when we set out to accomplish certain things, and manage to do so, and when for various reasons the productions cannot continue, we cannot compare them to New York plays which simply fail to draw enough boxoffice and immediately close.

For this reason we are able to plan ahead now with much more assurance than we could have five years ago. We can be more realistic about the possibilities of an area, about the types of plays and the ultimate success or failure to be expected. We do not conceive these plays to run merely for the 60 performances of one season, but rather to go on for many years.

We have hundreds of people who attend each year, some of them half a dozen times in a season because attendance at this type of production is different from the indoor type. The summer night, the awesome sense of mountains, water and sky, the transformation from urban to primeval—these things do something to the thinking of the spectator, and our whole purpose and approach are different.

That is why, for some curious reason, tragedy and even lamentation have a surer place in outdoor drama, where the spectator is not surrounded by the comfortable, secure four walls of the theatre. He is forced to find himself alone, so to speak, under the heavens, and his own mood changes.

Variable Costs

The costs of these productions are variable, of course, but our standard scale runs something like this. About $100,000 to open the show, including the building of the theatre and everything else; about $90,000 to operate for a full year (60 performances, plus the maintenance of the organization for the remaining 10 months and the rehearsal period the following season).

We expect, therefore, to play to about 50,000 people, which means that we break even and continue to operate. If, by chance, a play finds itself in a good natural location and can draw 75,000, or even 150,000 that "Unto These Hills" draws, the money is already earmarked in the non-profit charter of the corporation for various charitable, religious or educational enterprises.

There is no gravy train in the outdoor theatre. Whatever can be realized over operating expenses goes automatically into scholarships, museums, educational programs and a dozen other community non-profit projects. When the show cannot meet its operating expenses, the local group will usually dig up the money to keep it going, because it is important to the community to have the attraction operating.

That is what the outdoor drama is up to now. What it will become, if and when it is thoroughly and completely commercialized, we cannot predict. In a sense, we dread for that day to come, because we are well aware that one of the most deadly sins of the theatre in America today is the commercialism of good theatre.

We realize, of course, that in America we must almost live and die by the dollar mark, but somehow this rule has not been too operative in the outdoor drama thus far, and perhaps that is one of the reasons for its success, such as it is. We do not feel that much more will be accomplished by pure commercialism, and we know that a great deal will be lost.

Kermit Hunter.

the character she portrays. She's a real find. The other players may be overpowered, but are not overshadowed. Cyril Smith is firstrate as the hen-pecked husband, Richard Coleman is impressive as the groom and Ann Wilton gives a sincere performance as the shrew's pathetic sister-in-law.

Other parts are expertly played and the production has been shrewdly directed by Melville Gillam. The single living-room setting designed by Michael Eve provides an excellent background. Myro.

A Kind of Folly

London, Feb. 17.

Henry Sherek production of comedy in three acts, by Owen Holder. Stars Flora Robson, Jean Kent. Direction, Denis Carey; scenery and costumes, Hutchinson Scott. At Duchess Theatre, London, Feb. 16, '55; $2.25.

Sarah Ashby ..... Flora Robson
Sarah Bellaire ..... Jean Kent
William ..... Wilfrid Hyde White
Eustace ..... Owen Holder
Henry ..... Jack Gwillim
Young Lady ..... Sylvia Syms

If this comedy had not been set in the early part of this century, garnished with phoney Edwardian dialog, and the basic idea presented in a clearcut modern setting, it might have had a chance. As is, not all the adroitness and skill of Flora Robson (for whom the play was written), nor the voluptuous charm of Jean Kent can make it anything but mediocre. Its run will be limited to the personal appeals of the stars, although even in that regard it will put a severe strain on the public's loyalty.

The locale is an opulent London home and the story turns out to be an ironic comedy of shuffled wives, husbands and lovers, with a mildly surprise twist ending, but it's all too complicated and unrealistic, with improbable situations and dialog.

Flora Robson, is an unaccustomed attempt at a comedy part, reads her lines in as nearly natural a manner as is possible. Jean Kent is alluring and feline as the other woman, and Willlam Hyde Whlte plays the erring husband in his usual style of suave sophistication.

As the collegiate son, the author hovers in the background as though unsure of his play and his active role in it. Jack Gwillim is excellent as a Government official torn between love and duty and Sylvia Syms registers briefly as the boy's sweetheart. Piece is well directed and sumptuously mounted. Clem.

Paris, Jan. 3.

Henri Varna production of musical revue in two acts, 45 tableaux (designed by Jose de Zamora). Stars Lynda Gloria and Alfredo Alaria; features Robert Piquet, Simone Claria, Monica Ford, Jean-Louis Bert, Yoko Tani, Jonny-Mary, Jean Rigodu, Lily La Pudeur, Ballet Argentine (12), Italo Medini, Miss Pamela, Alicia Gonzales, Joe-Joe (2), Monique Bernachova, Marc Dauphine, Zaru, Les Rolwood, Claire Anderson, Bob Morel, Roger Dalphin, Janine Godest, Eve Line, Mariza, Rene Goliard, Mansfield Girls (40), Belles du Casino (26). Lyrics and sketches by Henri Varna; Marc-Cab, Rene Richard; new music by Mariano Mores, Gilbert Dasse, Serge Gut, Paulette Zevaco, Florent Lemirre, Charles Berman; choreography, costumes, lighting, direction of Ballet Argentine by Alfredo Alaria; music by A. Waitzman; sets by Pelergy, Bertin, Deshays; costumes by Madelle, Leon Guy, Vicaire, Faik, Paul Dimos; orchestra (25) under direction of Florent Lemirre. At Casino de Paris, Nov. 26, '54; $3.50 top.

Henri Varna, papa of the Paris revue producers, has a big, rousing hit in "Sensations de Paris." Bowing at his Casino de Paris, it is the best Casino show since the pre-war days.

Varna had held his previous show, "Thunder Revue," for four years, editing a slightly revised edition in 1953. This new revue offers a change with a vengeance. "Sensations" not only contains the ingredients of blazing nudity and eye-tickling spectacle but possesses freshness, style and compelling tempo, in addition to splendid talent.

The main talent, the newly discovered Alfredo Alarla Argentine ballet troupe, sweeping the stage like a pampas fire, has become a Paris sensation, and the Varna revue has supplied a tonic to the wilting local season.

"Sensations" begins conventionally enough with a we're-off-to-the-hunt tableau introducing singer Monica Ford as Lady Chatterley, singer-m.c. Robert Piquet, as master of the hunt, the Mansfield Girls as hunters and the Belles du Casino models as amazons. In a subsequent spot Zaru, gilded and turbaned as an Indian fakir, does a fancy contortionist bit and first big spectacle scene is "Christmas Greetings."

The Rolwoods (3), as ice-skaters, do expert work and there is a cute bit by Joe-Joe (2) and Mariza as polar bears balancing on rubber snowballs. Then Alfredo Alaria makes a sensational entrance in a gaucho sequence, "Zapateado," classic Spanish dance set to Argentine rhythm, which he follows with the sultry, tropical "Batucada de Peernambuco," with pop Brazilian airs as music.

Next comes a blackout sketch of burley variety, in which the well-stacked Simone Claris tries to interest her hubby in what she is wearing and what she is not wearing. The remainder of the first act presents the show's femme star, Lynda Gloria, former Montmartre nitery singer-dancer, in an 18th century West Indie spectacle. Alaria's dance interpretation of a Garcia Lorca song, "Cafe de Cintas," the nifty juggling of Italo Medini, a funny dance by Miss Pamela and a grand finale of a jungle carnival.

Second half starts with "Love Nest" tableau (girls and boys as turtle doves), then offers Alaria's brief history of 20th century show biz. Scenically show's high point is the Coronation ceremony in a Byzantine cathedral. Dramatically Alaria's "Mambo y Santo," which commences with a mambo, and finishes with an adagio sequence, plus a frantic voodoo.

A sound Montmartre number (with Monique Bernachova as queen of the Can-Can and with Jean-Louis Bert as its king).

'Fanny' Recoups

ly from here on, since costars Ezio Pinza and Walter Slezak get upped pay when the show is in the black.)

Unprecedented Terms

There are several angles in the virtually unprecedented sharing terms for "Fanny." The Logan, Behrman, Rome and Pinza names helped, of course, in making "Fanny" a desirable booking on paper. Also, at the time Merrick and Logan were dickering for a house, the Independent 46th Street (City Playhouses) and the Mark Hellinger (Anthony B. Farrell) were available, so the producers were in an ideal position to dicker.

"Fanny" has naturally used up most of the $800,000 advance with which it opened last fall, but remains a lively broker ticket and is now reportedly beginning to feel the agency and mail order pressure from out of town, which the management has been working to build up by ads, publicity and personal promotion with key city newspapers.

Producers Merrick and Logan recently turned down an offer from 20th-Fox for a guarantee of $500,000 against 10% of the film gross for the screen rights to "Fanny." If they fall to get a better price, Logan may elect to do the picture himself, perhaps under his new percentage arrangement to direct pictures for Warners.

The pivotal figure is a young Chinese Christian who is persuaded that the People's Republic descryes his full support. His defection gives the sisters angulsh, but when he becomes their prosecutor in the new era, the stress on him is too great. Made the agent of death and hatred, he turns on his new masters in a sanguinary denouement.

Surprisingly, this story of serenity vs. destruction is largely static. There are taut moments, and fleeting instants of dramatic impact, but the play is episodic and repetitious. It seems too bad that the victory of loving-kindness over evil must be passive and not more compelling.

Jenne Griffin and Jean McHenry are coolly courageous as the sorely tested nuns. John Lee plays the Chinese who betrays them, making amply clear his pangs of conscience, and vigorously facing the savage act that is his salvation.

Ching-Ming Chin has unexpected humor as the village commissar and is able to clarify some of the motives of the reprehensible character he portrays. Juan Velasquez is slyly deferential as an oily villager, Myriame Kolon is a brave native woman who helps the sisters escape, and Tanya Chin charmingly plays her adopted daughter.

Dennis Gurney has not shied away from force in directing the script's melodramatic moments and he has pleasant touches for the placid passages. Floyd Allan's design for the Maryknoll Sisters' Chinese home is extremely attractive. Geor.

The Ascent of F6

Markaren Productions revival of tragedy in two acts by W. H. Auden and Christopher Isherwood. Direction, Eugene O'Sullivan; scenery and lighting, Gilbert Rathbun; music, Elmer Gordon; chorus coach, Joan Ford. At Davenport, N. Y., Feb. 25, '55; $3.00-$2.50 top.

Cast: Tim O'Connor, Eileen Whyte, Herman Dinkin, Joseph Ruskin, Rosemary Murphy, Mark Mitchell, John McGiven, Wm. Leggate, Frank Gero, Paul Erbach, Raf Michaels, Charles Reynolds, Bette Barney, Sara Gray, Bob Conley, Chorus: Mary Ross, Natalie Richman, Sabina Holzka, Pat Sugrue, Joanne Reilly.

This revival of "The Ascent of F6" is a tight little show. While the philosophizing of co-authors Auden and Isherwood keeps the play in the egghead class, there is enough melodramatic device and dry humor to satisfy the average stubholder.

Mountaineering is used primarily as a graphic symbol of the life struggle. That "he who goes to the hills goes to his mother" is but one of the abstruse comments on human striving. Although the play was written during the 1940's, its political overtones seem ironically relevant.

The production's physical aspects are shoestring and may work against its draw. There is a uniformity of performance, however, that aids emotional impact and is a boon to "F6's" intellectualizing.

Focus is on a British climber who leads an expedition to F6 for motives he deems unworthy. Tim O'Connor's ascetic drive in this role is tensely concise. Among those who force the climb on its unwilling leader are Joseph Ruskin as his politically ambitious brother, Mark Mitchell as a crusty General and Bette Ramey as the climber's saccharine mother.

John McGlven's press lord is an excellently cynical portrait of a "realist" and Sam Gray has gripping moments as an Abbot. Frank Gero is a waggishly brash member of the climbing party and Paul Erbach is intense as a fine climber whose spirit breaks on the mountain.

Eileen Whyte and Herman Dinkin are pathetically drab as commoners whose lives are made brighter by their vicarious radio participation in the ascent. Eugene O'Sullivan's direction is intelligent and sufficiently pressing. Geor.

The Merchant of Venice

Shakespearewrights production of drama in two acts, by William Shakespeare. Production and design, Donald H. Goldman; direction, Marjorie Hildreth; scenery, Willis Knighton; incidental music, Ellen Bower. At Jan Hus Auditorium, Feb. 22, '55; $2.30 top.

Cast: Milton Jacobson, Earle Hyman, Robert Baines, Charles Aidman, Donald Mork, Claude Latson, Philip Lawrence, Charles Forsythe, Thomas Barbour, Robert Cass, John Monk, Robert Miller, John Main, Laurinda Barrett, Alene Hatch, Laurie Vendig.

The Shakespearewrights are playing "The Merchant of Venice" straight. The Venetians are good, Shylock is bad, and the play is billed as a "comedy." Not a very funny comedy, however.

It seems questionable judgment to use 17th century standards for "The Merchant." There has been progress since the bear-baiting days of Elizabethan England, inhumane humor fortunately having lost its savor. Shylock's downfall isn't funny, Launcelot Gobbo's plaguing of his blind father isn't funny, nor is it an amusing spectacle to watch a daughter rob and desert her father in favor of a worthless playboy lover.

Since the Venetians were a sorry crew, what's left of the play is often inescapably dull. This is a theatrical fault even Shakespeare cannot survive. If it were the work of a contemporary dramatist, "The Merchant" would have deservedly dim prospects.

The virtues of the present revival are in staging and performance. A platform jutting 20 feet into the small auditorium gets the audience into the action like an off-Broadway Cinerama. By reducing stage accoutrements to a minimum, director Marjorie Hildreth has achieved a lively flow and plasticity, pacing the play with a verve worthy of better Shakespeare.

Thomas Barbour's Shylock is swift-thinking, potent and acutely precise. It is a performance in which the actor knows how to tear a passion without leaving it in tatters. Robert Baines gives dimension to the tedious title role and Charles Aldman's Bassanio is as agreeable as such a calculating lover can be.

Laurinda Barrett's clear-spoken Portia is best in moments of sly levity and has the virtue of delivering the "quality of mercy" speech as if it were brand new. Alene Hatch is a pleasant Nerissa, but Laurie Vendig does not find much in Jessica to test her mettle.

Earl Hyman has a shrewdly-conceived scene as the Prince of Morocco, while Robert Cass' young Gobbo again raises the question "what's so funny?" Willie Knighton's sparse set is functional, if not particularly evocative of Venice and Belmont.

This is the second revival of "The Merchant" off-Broadway in as many months. It can safely be said that the town has had it.

Equity Review

Men in White

Equity Library Theatre revival of drama in two acts by Sidney Kingsley. Direction, Robert Laning; scenery, Zvi Geyra; lighting, Barbara Richter. At Lenox Hill Playhouse, N.Y., Feb. 16, '55.

Loyal Lucas, Si Oakland, Richard Kuss, J. H. Kingsberry, Fred Beir, Jerry Stiller, Fred Vogel, Peter Damon, Jo Rabb, Joyce Henry, Constance Davis, Albert Durand, Alfreda Wallace, Stefan Gierasch, Herb Voland, Mary O'Neill, Anne Coleman, Richard Kuss, Mary Hara, Charles Bell.

ELT has emerged from its mid-winter doldrums with a spanking revival of "Men In White." The company is on its toes in Sidney Kingsley's prize-winning drama of hospital life, and the staging is vital. As the second bill in the Community series, the production should rate good b.o. in the Bronx and Queens.

Told in terms of a brilliant interne who is tempted to sacrifice all for love, the struggle between medical ethics and human desire is a natural, and although it's a generation old, the play creaks hardly at all. If Kingsley seems to be dealing from a stacked deck, he is adroit enough to have the cards fall in ad-lib fashion.

As senior surgeon who is fighting to save the younger man's career, Si Oakland turns in a steely performance compounded of honesty and discipline. Fred Beir is clear and precise as the interne who is torn between love and duty, punctuating his playing with explosive moments.

As the girl whose possessive love is against the young doctor's best interests, Alfreda Wallace is handsomely debonair. Jerry Stiller is amusing as a casual interne and Jo Rabb is warmly intense as a student nurse who, in dying, saves a fine career for medicine.

Stefan Gierasch's low key performance of an indignant doctor had Row D first nighters audibly complaining that they couldn't hear. Experiment may be permissible at Lenox Hill, but "Men" is going to the neighborhoods commercially and it will be the customer's prerogative to demand communicatfon.

Directing against the pace of Kingsley's writing, Robert Laning has mounted a trenchant production. Zvi Geyra's sectional hospital interior, revealed against a vivid city skyline, is first class.

Glamor Night Back at Met With 16G Recital House; Kid Mgr. Makes 4G

Shades of the hectic Enrico Caruso and Beniamino Gigli recital eras were revived in N. Y. last Sunday night (27), when the Italian colony (plus every manager and singer in town) turned out for the Renata Tebaldi-Mario Del Monaco-Ettore Bastianini concert at the Met Opera House. Overflow house had a wonderfully warm audience that generated more excitement than the Louis-Schmeling fights, with every aria being a showstopper, and curtain barely ringing down by 11:30.

Venture, first in N. Y. for a young 26-year-old pub-relations exec turned impresario, Joseph H. Conlin Jr., netted him about $4,000. House, at a stiff $5.75 top, was scaled to almost $16,000, with expenses about $12,000. (Concert had to be postponed a week, from the orlginal Feb. 20 date, costing Conlin an extra $1,000 in expenses.) Every manager in town tried to dissuade Conlin originally from taking the risk, but he went ahead, and has a repeat event with the same artists set for March 15. There were even scalpers working the Met sidewalks Sunday.

Conlin is flying to Europe March 18 for two weeks on a talent hunt, for next season, when he plans a regular concert series in New York. He's after only the top artists in the concert field. It's an open secret that he wants to present Maria Callas next year, in addition to Mme. Tebaldi, the two being the lead sopranos of La Scala, Milan, and probably the biggest b.o. draws in the business. Mme. Callas reportedly won't sing in opera at the Met for the present management, but might be inclined to appear there in recital for someone else.

Conlin is also planning to present Beniamino Gigli in two Gotham recitals this spring. The 65-year-old opera singer, who quit the Met in a huff over a salary cut in 1939, hasn't been here since, but has been successfully concertizing in Europe and South America.

S.F. Opera Needs Outside Aid With 157G Deficit; Guarantors Not Enough

San Francisco, March 1.

A campaign to secure outside financial support for the San Francisco Opera Co. has been launched by Robert Watt Miller, president, to secure an additional $89,635.17 to cover the deficit remaining after the guarantors of the opera company contributed their $67,985.

The 1954 season, according to a report by Miller, resulted in a gross deficit of $157,420. Guarantors of the company, assessed the full scale of $100 each, will still not total up enough to wipe out the deficit.

A heavy slump in ticket sales, resulting in $54,000 worth of unsold tickets for the Opera House season alone, plus a deficit for out-of-town performances totaling totaling $15,107 and including a loss in Los Angeles where a profit is customary, caused the deficit, Miller said. "Opera can no longer be given with the financial support of the guarantors alone,' Miller added.

Boston Orch Preps 18th Berkshire Fest Season

Boston, March 1.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will present the 18th season of its Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass., this summer, July 6 to April 14. This year's will be a Beethoven fest mainly, with all the nine symphonies, concertos, overtures, "Missa Solemnis" and a concert performance of "Fidelio" (Act 2) listed. First two weekends will be devoted to Bach-Mozart concerts in the theatre, and last four weekends to 12 concerts in the Music Shed.

Charles Munch will conduct, with Pierre Monteux, Leonard Bernstein and Thor Johnson as guest maestros. Soloists will include Bernstein (as pianist), Rudolf Serkin, Eugene Istomin, Isaac Stern, Gregor Piatigorsky, Margaret Harshaw, Jennie Tourel and Leontyne Price.

Halasz To Direct Fall Barcelona Opera Fest

Laszlo Halasz, onetime N. Y. City Opera Co. director, will run an opera festival at the Liceo, Barcelona, next fall, putting on four presentations, "Lohengrin," "Manon," "Amore dei tre Re" and a Gian-Carlo Menotti evening. Halasz recently returned from Spain, where he guested for the first time as conductor at the Liceo, batoning four "Meistersinger" showings in January.

Maestro also conducted the Colonne Orch in Paris early in February and is due back in May for further concerts. He's also already been asked to conduct both opera and symph at the Bordeaux Festival in 1956.

Berlin Orch Wins Over D.C.; 12G Gate

Washington, March 1.

The Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra made its American debut here Sunday afternoon (27) to a capacity house, rave notices, and all-out audience enthusiasm almost without precedent in Washington musical history. German Ambassador Dr. Heinz Krekeler, co-sponsor of the tour with German Chancellor Konrad Adenauer, topped an audience which filled every one of Constitution Hall's 3,844 seats, and grossed a dazzling $12,280 at a $5.50 top. Chief Justice and Mrs. Earl Warren were ranking government officials who attended.

Despite the stormy background which preceded the bow here, the concert was completely sans incident and was marked only by the almost hysterical reaction of stubholders to the batoning of maestro Herbert von Karajan and his 106-man troupe. Concert manager Patrick Hayes, under whose aegis the orch appeared here, stated that, despite extra precautions backstage and in aisles, there was no attempt at protest or demonstration. The local AFM union took no stand, despite violent protest by the New York local.

Immediate result of solid reaction to the German orch was a long queue at the Hayes b.o. Monday a.m. for the return stint March 27. First-day sale indicates another sure sellout.

Longhair Disk Reviews

With the Berlin Philharmonic holding the week's spotlight, Decca's two symphonic releases of the orch under its late, great conductor, Wilhelm Furtwangler, warrant attention. The Schubert Ninth is played in sturdy straight-forward fashion, with no frills or schmaltz, for an authoritative, appealing version. Other disk combines the gay, bubbling Haydn No. 88 (or 13) and the romantic, moody Schumann Fourth for another attractive recording.

Milhaud: Saudades do Brasil & Villa-Lobos: Saudades das Selvas Brasileiras, etc. (MGM). Very exotic, flavorsome disk. Milhaud's piece is a suite of 12 dances, using native Brazilian rhythms for pictorial scenes. The Villa-Lobos pieces are a fascinating variety of lyric, rhythmic, colorful South-American scenes. An accomplished young pianist, Lenore Engdahl shows virtuosity and skill in the performances.

Elgar: Enigma Variations & Wand of Youth Suite (RCA Victor). Sir Adrian Boult leads the London Philharmonic in a spacious, relaxed interp of the w.k. variations that's a pleasure to hear. Lesser-known "Wand" is a charming, youthful set of fairy-tale pieces, agreeably lyric in mood and effect.

Bizet: Symphony in C & Patrie Overture (Angel). Radiodiffusion Orch under Andre Cluytens in a somewhat strident version of the youthful symph. Overture, a tribute to French resistance in 1870, is martial, brassy and stirring.

'Roma' Adds Color But Little Else to NYCB

As major new work of its winter season, the N. Y. City Ballet presented George Balanchine's "Roma" at City Center, N. Y., last Wednesday night (23). Set to the music of Bizet's "Roma Suite," the ballet is pleasant but undistingushed. It's minor Bizet and minor Balanchine, the noted choreographer never rising above the mundane level of the score in his dance creations.

Eugene Berman has fashioned a striking set that suggests 19th Century Italy, while his costumes (executed by Karinska) are authentic, colorful and eye-filling. While the ballet has flavor, it lacks excitement, progressing evenly through a first-part set of group folk dancing, a pleasant pas de deux for the middle adagio, and a somewhat stepped-up, exhilarating series of movements for the finale (tarantella). Tanaquil LeClerq and Andre Eglevsky make an attractive pair for the leads, and they and the troupe work hard. "Roma" will add a splash of color to the NYCB repertory, but no brilliance.

In its second stanza at the Center last week, the troupe garnered a fine $45,500 at the b.o., a jump of $10,000 over the first week.

'Orfeo' Back in High Place At Metop After 13 Yrs.; All-Femme Star Cast

Gluck's "Orfeo ed Euridice" made its first appearance in 13 years at the Met Opera House, N. Y., last Thursday night (24), in an impressive production that had taste, beauty and distinction. Gluck's stately but static opera is slow, tame by some standards, and dated by others. But it has style, music and drama, and when as effectively staged as in last week's presentation, it's firstclass opera.

Herbert Graf has staged it with a keen eye for tableaux, for groupings and movement, while his lighting effects enhance the visual appeal. Harry Horner's sets and Frank Bevan's costumes add further to the classic aura. Zachary Solov has choreographed some appropriate dance numbers that fit the mood, with ethereal Alicia Markova to lead the dancers. Kurt Adler has done a yeoman job with the chorus.

As Orfeo, Rise Stevens looks the part handsomely, and after the first act rises steadily in vocal distinction in the role. First act finds her voice too dry and misplaced for the difficult music. Roberta Peters makes an attractive and vocally distinguished Amore, and Hilde Gueden an appealing, lovely and beautifully-volced Euridice. Laurel Hurley fills out the all-femme roster most advantageously as Felice. Under Pierre Monteaux's baton, the music flows steadily authoritatively, with rising excitement.

Commenting on a story in VARIETY concerning international opera tours, a la legit show trains, the London Daily Express suggests that the slogan in N. Y. should be: "Come to Britten" (a punnish bow to British composer Benjamin Britten).

Adele Sardi, wife of restaurateur Vincent Sardi Jr. and former musicomedy singer ("Fifth Avenue," etc.) sang the femme lead recently in the Julia Perry opera, "Cask of Amontillado," at the U. of Delaware. Howard Shanet conducted.

Vera Zorina, recently on Broadway as lead in the "On Your Toes" revival, was the narrator in Hindemith's "Herodiade," which the Saidenberg Little Symphony presented at Town Hall, N. Y., Sunday (27).

Composer Aaron Copland assumes a rare guise next Tuesday (8) when he appears in Town Hall, N. Y., as pianist to assist violinist Carroll Glenn in a performance of his own new Sonata for Violin and Piano. Miss Glenn is playing in a recital that night, with Arthur Balsam otherwise as her accompanist.

Karl Boehm, musical director of the Vienna State Opera, will make his American debut conducting the Chicago Symphony in January, 1956 . . . American composer-conductor Lukas Foss will be guest conductor with the Los Angeles Symphony on March 16, 17, 20 and 29 in Santa Barbara. On March 24 and 25 he will be piano soloist, performing his own concerto with the Chicago Symphony.

Home On The Range

It's a lucky voice that knows its place—or placement.

Albert Sochin, who sang on a Met Opera Auditions of the Air three years ago, as a baritone, is making the grade this winter—as a tenor. Now named Albert Da Costa, he makes his Met Opera debut tomorrow (Thurs.) at the N. Y. longhair emporium in "Tristan und Isolde," as the Sailor's Voice.

The Met's auditions committee (John Gutman, Kurt Adler and ABC's John Marshall) liked Sochin's voice well enough three years ago to put him on the air. But after the broadcast, they told him: "Go home and tell your teacher you're a tenor." A year later Sochin was back to sing for them, this time in the higher register, and the committee liked what it heard. "Now go home and tell your teacher you're a Wagnerian tenor," it said. Sochin came back, and went on the air last season in a "Lohengrin" aria. Rendition won him a semi-finalist status and a return airing, this time with a "Meistersinger" air.

He won the auditions, but wasn't signed to a contract by the Met until the past December. Meantime, as Da Costa, he had made an impression on critics last fall with his role in the American Opera Society's concert version of Rossini's "Othello" at N. Y.'s Town Hall.

Buff. Orch Rise Cinderella-Story; Budget Now 400G; Map Music Fest

Buffalo, March 1.

Rise of the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra from obscurity to what a leading Quebec newspaper critic last month called "one of the top orchestras of the continent" is a Cinderella success-story of the symphonic world—and incidentally one in which shrewd utilization of modern showmanship has played a prominent part. From 1934, when as described by a local wit, a group of 25 WPA musicians "stopped leaning on their shovels and started playing on them" at $15 per week, the Buffalo Philharmonic now numbers 84 musicians—an important ensemble under the baton of Viennese Josef Krips, with an annual budget of nearly $400,000.

Over 62% of its support comes from the boxoffice and the balance of approximately $135,000 is raised annually by public subscription, over 10,000 citizens of Western New York contributing to the fund. Both the percentage of boxoffice support and number of contributors are something of a record. There is now envisaged a Buffalo Music Festival along the lines of Salzburg and Vienna to be held here within the next couple of years.

The Buffalo orchestra during the current season is giving 20 concerts in 10 identical pairs on Tuesdays and Sundays for its regular winter subscription series; 20 summer pops; 20 winter pops, and 14 children's concerts, to an estimated annual total of over 200,000 people of the Niagara Frontier. All of these figures are in the upper brackets of contemporary symphonic organization statistics.

In its current campaign, the orchestra is exploiting its youth services with emphasis on the opportunities presented for young local musicians, the Philharmonic Youth Workshop, its special rates to students and its working rehearsals given in various school auditoriums. Main stress is placed on the school children's concerts, at which over 42,000 children a year hear the orchestra at Kleinhans Music Hall without charge. The current campaign is being featured by an appeal for wider community support, with an effort being made to double the number of contributions of last year.

Dvorak Opera in Preem; Adler as Guest Maestro

U. S. preem of Dvorak's opera, "Russalka," will be given in concert form at Town Hall, N. Y., March 11 by the N. Y. Concert Choir & Orchestra. Peter Herman Adler, music director of the NBC-TV Opera Theatre, will be guest conductor.

Leads will be sung by Virginia Haskins, Lorna Sydney, Leon Lishner, Rudolf Petrok and Robert Holland.

Festival Ballet Ends 885G Tour

Festival Ballet of London wound up its first American tour last weekend in Boston, to a healthy take of $54,000 for the week's Hub stay. Opening last Oct. 12 in Quebec, the British terp troupe took in $885,000 on its 19-week trek. Some towns were tax-exempt, others not, so that the troupe took in $814,000 after taxes, or over a $42,000-a-week average.

Company, booked by Sol Hurok, did good business generally, better than competing troupes. In its first week in Canada, it grossed $61,000. A second Canadian week took in $63,000. Troupe did $63,000 on nine in Chi; $51,000 in a split-week of Seattle, Portland and Spokane; a $47,000 Washington-Philly split-week; $41,000 in Frisco, and under $40,000 in a L. A. week.

But because it was a big company, of 65 (with musicians, etc., it came to about 100), and had to travel by train instead of bus-truck, it's understood the troupe didn't profit from the tour, one estimate being that it dropped $40,000 to $50,000. It arrived here burdened with a $162,400 debt from home, and is believed to have written off part of that debt from weekly receipts here.

Troupe, despite rumors, is not breaking up, but will open an eight-week season in Barcelona May 8. It returned home on the Ile de France yesterday (Tues.).

De Wilde Recites 'Peter' For His Disking Debut

Brandon de Wilde last Friday (25) recorded Prokofiev's "Peter and the Wolf" and Britten's "Young Person's Guide to the Orchestra" for Vox Productions. Two works will be backed and issued by Vox in April. Vienna Pro Musica orch under Hans Swarowsky furnished the background. Platter marks de Wilde's first disk, while also marking the first time that "Peter" has been narrated by a youngster.

Vox is also releasing "Peter" abroad, with film actor Hans Jaray reciting the German version. It plans releases in other tongues with native talent.

Detroit, March 1.

National Ballet of Canada grossed $14,000 at the 2,050-seat Shubert here last week.

Top was $3.85.

Hurok Signs Christoff; Bringing 500 Persons To U.S. for Next Year

Rome, Feb. 22.

Impresario Sol Hurok, here last week in connection with the U. S. tour of the St. Cecilia Choir next season, also repacted Boris Christoff to his roster. This is the w.k. Bulgarian basso, engaged to sing at the Met Opera a few seasons ago and refused a U. S. visa because of his Iron Country background. Basso has been singing in France and England, and Hurok now feels he can get him into the States.

Next season will be a big one for the impresario, via his talent importation. He estimates he'll be bringing about 500 persons to the U. S. during the season, as singles or in groups. Included are the Comedie Francaise, Sadler's Wells Ballet, Azuma Kabuki Co., Scots Guards Band, St. Cecelia Choir, Antonio & Co., and I Musici.

Literati

Reasonable Request

Richard Powell, a veep of the N. W. Ayer & Co. ad agency in Philadelphia, and author of whodunits, wrote the jacket blurb himself for his 10th Simon & Schuster (Inner Sanctum) publication, "False Colors."

He makes a plea therein, "Don't try to please me by saying you stayed up after midnight finishing it. It never seems fair to me that people can read in just a few hours something that took me a year to write."

TV Fisher Family In Book

Doubleday's book publication of 10 stories about the tv Fisher Family of the fictitious Middleburg, U. S. A., based on the video program, "This Is the Life," is copyrighted in the name of the Lutheran Church, Missouri Synod, which sponsors the tv serial. "This Is the Life," as the book anthology is also titled, is a program carried by more stations than any other video program (over 200 outlets).

Author is Mrs. Helen Chappell White, wife of the president of Emory Univ., in Atlanta, where they reside.

Clean Comics Co-op

United News and Central News have agreed to cooperate with the Philadelphia Citizens Council for Clean Comics by refusing to distribute comic books which the Council considers objectionable.

Daniel B. Michie, president of the Junior Chamber of Commerce, said the news distribs had also agreed to rid newstands of any comic books which the Council felt would contribute to juve delinquency.

Simenon Heads Whodunitters

George Simenon, Belgian novelist who now resides in Connecticut, last week was elected the 11th national president of Mystery Writers of America Inc. Group comprises some 400 members.

Other newly elected MWA officers are Anna Mary Wells, secretary, and Jerome Barry, treasurer. Regional v.p.'s named by local chapters are Harold Q. Masur, New York; Carl G. Hodges, midwest; William T. Worley, northern California, and Malden Grange Bishop, southern California.

Bill Hearst Jr.'s Top Spot

Coincidental with the serialization of William Randolph Hearst Jr.'s "Report on Russia—Uncensored!" series, the directors of Hearst Consolidated Publications Inc., at its Los Angeles meeting Feb. 26, elected him editor-in-chief of the Hearst newspapers. The post has been vacant since the death of his father in 1951. Hearst Jr. is 47. He has been publisher of the N. Y. Journal-American for the past 20 years and chairman of the Hearst newspapers since September, 1951.

Harold G. Kern, publisher of Hearst's Boston newspapers, the Record American and the Sunday Advertiser, was named general manager of Hearst Consolidated Publications replacing J. D. Gortatowsky, who resigned Sunday (27). Gortatowsky will continue as chairman of the board of Hearst Consolidated Publications and Hearst Publishing Co., president of King Features and International News Service, and will continue his activities in connection with the newsprint properties of the Hearst org. Kern will continue to supervise the Boston publications.

Other appointments in the Hearst setup were John R. Buckley, who was named proxy of Hearst Magazines and general advertising manager of the mag division. He had been publisher of Good Housekeeping. Harry Dunlop was upped to veepee and publisher of Good Housekeeping and G. Harry Chamberlaine was appointed v.p. and ad director. Robert A. O'Malley was named v.p. and publisher of American Druggist.

Publisher Bob Harrison claims a top newsstand circulation of 3,200,000 (print order) for the upcoming (May) edition of Confidential. Avers that not since Reader's Digest some 10 years ago has any publication had such a large newsstand circulation.

Dorothy & Charlton Ogburn's "Renaissance Man of England," referred to in a VARIETY roundup of new show biz books, is actually a condensation of an earlier book by the authors, "This Star of England." Theme of both the original and the condensation, published by Coward-McCann, is that William Shakespeare was the pseudonym of the Earl of Oxford. Ogburn, incidentally, is a New York and Washington attorney.

bution topper to enter the business end of independent production. Schwalberg's decision to leave Par was strictly his own. He wanted out from under the pressure of the job and intends to set a more leisurely pace for himself via new tieups.

Schwalberg, who had the title of president of Par Film Distributing Corp., the domestic sales subsidiary, already has consummated deals to join the indie production units of Paul Gregory and Charles Laughton, plus Ilya Lopert's unit, releasing through United Artists. Gregory and Laughton have "Night of the Hunter" and Lopert has "Summertime" awaiting release.

Decision to give Weltner the overall reins is in line with the industry trend first evidenced with Universal's appointment of Alfred E. Daff as global sales manager in 1951. He had been head of foreign. At Republic, Richard Altschuler recently was named worldwide sales boss in a similar switch from the international department. Walter Branson has the same kind of overall post at RKO.

New setup at Par will require the appointment of a domestic sales manager to operate under Weltner. Latter doubtless will have large voice on calling the turns on the candidate. As of early this week there was much homeoffice sentiment for E. K. (Ted) O'Shea to fill the post. He has been operating as second in command to Schwalberg.

Actually, Schwalberg will remain on the homeoffice premises for four to six weeks to help work out the distribution pattern for Par's super-sized VistaVision product, first of which, "Strategic Air Command," unveils at the N. Y. Paramount Theatre in mid-April.

Barney Balaban, Par president, in a formal announcement, said he accepted Schwalberg's resignation "with a deep sense of regret, both personally and from the standpoint of the company."

Smart Actors

an indie setup, Wilde argued, is that an actor doesn't have to sit and wait for his agent to bring job offers from studios or indie producers.

"Let's face it, with an independent company, the actor makes his own jobs," Wilde said. "He's always shopping for novels or screenplays. When he finds a good one, he can confine his argument to the price rather than his suitability as against another actor's who might be under contract to the studio owning the property and hence a more likely candidate."

Worthwhile Gamble

Wilde strongly contends the advantages to be gained by the actor from indie production far outweigh the possibilities of failure. Claiming the gamble is well worth the risk, he maintains the actor can wind up with two to three times his top studio salary, not to mention the capital gain advantages years after a film is made.

"How well the independent field can pay off for certain actors can be seen from the careers of Humphrey Bogart and Burt Lancaster," Wilde reported. "I understand Bogart recently received a check for a round million dollars for his share of Santana Productions.

"And I have no doubt that were Lancaster to sell out his share of Hecht-Lancaster Productions, he would be able to retire for the remaining days of his life, were he so disposed, and live off the fat of the land."

Both Bogart and Lancaster have used their companies to make pictures without their own services as star, Wilde pointed out, a practice he intends to follow at intervals with his own Theodora Productions.

"Once you have a going concern you can just act as a producer, stop acting occasionally and have something going on for you without involving your personal services in your actual profession," he commented. "For anyone in a personal service—and acting is this, make no mistake—an outside activity is a wonderful thing."

Despite his disagreement with Ford over latter's opinion on actors in indie setups, Wilde will seek his services for an upcoming Theodora film, he said. If he can't get him for one of Ford's outside pictures away from Metro, then he'll negotiate for a loanout, according to actor-producer.

can order the number of glasses he is sure of using, to start with. Then if the picture draws better than expected, he can get more glasses overnight as he needs them."

Local supplies of Polaroid glasses, permitting immediate delivery, will be available in exchange centers through RCA Theatre Supply Dealers and National Theatre Supply branches. To encourage good projection of the new picture, Polaroid is offering new projection port filters free, pointing out that fuzzy pictures result from filters that may have been of low quality to begin with, or filters that have become soiled and scratched in service.

Company is also offering at no cost a limited number of special outfits for keeping 3-D films in synchronization. It includes a 3-D sync monitor for detecting errors in synchronization and 3-D sync control switch.

According to Polaroid, stocks of polarized glasses that have been stored properly should be fit for service no matter when they were shipped. Exhibs, however, are urged to check stocks to make sure lenses have retained polarization. Company is sending a polarization checker direct to all theatres booking the picture.

At one time, 20th-Fox was actively interested in producing the Todd-AO and C'Scope versions of "Oklahoma." However, after considerable discussion, Mike Todd nixed the deal, reportedly feeling that Todd-AO version would receive secondary attention in distribution handling. As it turned out, a Rodgers & Hammerstein production unit made the film for Magna, with the latter set to supervise the roadshow engagements.

SCULLY'S SCRAPBOOK

By Frank Scully

Palm Springs.

Six on a current list of 10 bestsellers have been touched in one way or another by the wand of show biz. Publishers who wouldn't be caught in a crib with such a script in their portmanteaux 20 years ago, now leap at the chance of printing diluted or doctored memoirs of stars, even if it took them three times to pass the sixth grade.

You can go even further. Not one of the 10 is by a writer who has done nothing else all his life. J. K. Lasser is an income tax rewrite man, Norman Peale is a minister, Catherine Marshall is the widow of a preacher and the Saturday Evening Post Treasury is a corporation! The rest, Grantland Rice, Dan Golenpaul, Bob Hope, Edward R. Murrow, Fred Allen and Dick Aldrich are shots off the show biz backboard.

If this trend continues, except for ghosting, there will be no place for writers as writers any longer. Where will they go? They won't be able, by way of reprisal, to leap like salmon into radio, tv, legit or pix. Though, obviously, it takes no previous writing experience for a star of show biz to become a bestseller, it takes a lot more skill for writers to get over the hurdles going the other way.

Even the selling of books today follows the lines laid down by detergent Dostoievskys. There is a difference, however. The commerciais and the entertainment have become one. We're all familiar with the tv star who has drawn to his modest attention that a national mag is featuring him this month, or awarding him an old sprocket or something.

This isn't what I mean. It's these program-length plugs of books, thereby forcing them on bestseller lists, whether critics like them or not. And, by the same token, forcing off the lists what the critics do like.

Who's Picketing?

"The Literary Situation," by Malcolm Cowley; "In The Name Of Sanity," by Lewis Mumford; "The Diary of a Writer," by F. M. Dostoievsky; "Selected Plays," by Sean O'Casey; "Mahatma Gandhi," by Vincent Sheean, and "The Susquehanna," by Carl Carmer, are books by people who have worked in word-factories all their lives. But where are they now? Out picketing strike-breakers who have taken over their jobs? No, just sitting around in the baffled, bewildered, worn-out way of also-rans.

Is it that writers are such dopes they can't hold their own against amateurs? Well, no, that isn't quite the picture. There are thousands of celebrities who have one book in them. They know writers, ask their advice and get the best. These amateurs come up, hold the spotlight for a year (not because of how they write, but who they are), and then return to their calling. But, like the Russian army, their numbers seem endless. A new crop comes up each year. They do not have to pass any tests. Actors have Equity, doctors have the AMA, and so on. But writers hold the doors wide open for all. They get crushed to death in the stampede.

How To Start At The Top

In fact, the best way for a beginning writer to get to the top today is to submerge his talent and enter some other profession temporarily. Medicine is excellent. When he has accumulated a fat dossier of juicy case-histories, let him then throw away his shingle and jump into writing from the top. After that he may become a famous novelist like Chekhov, Maugham or Cronin.

One of the contemporary clicks in this category is "Gertrude Lawrence as Mrs. A.," by Richard S. Aldrich. This book already has got plugs over two major networks in a few weeks and if it does not top the bestseller lists, tv and radio need Vano; they're working too hard.

What under normal trade practices would be short puffs by rival authors and celebs for the back of the book's dust-jacket becomes under the present system a corona of long and loving personal pitches to sell a producer's memoirs of a departed wife.

Even I have been tracked down to the desert and asked to fly to town to plug a book of an eminent one-shotter. I said I simply couldn't do it. I was writing a book of my own, which had a deadline breathing down my neck like a gauleiter. Besides, I was feeling lower than the Salton Sea.

So they reluctantly settled for a tape-recording, which took only a day of my time and then as far as I know wasn't used anyway. Or even acknowledged. Probably wasn't glowing enough. But what do such people expect you to do? Rave so much about their product it gets on the best-seller list and stays there so long, yours can never get on? And so you starve to death in your own business while passing pitchmen clean up?

Insulin Does It!

To me, these saccharine pitches on tv and radio are, as George Jean Nathan once said in another connection, "like the triumph of sugar over diabetes." By the time Hollywood gets through with all this and it comes back to radio and tv again, Dick Aldrich will feel he's due for a martyr's halo. (A martyr is someone who has had to live with a saint.)

Of course a lot of this lotion is due to the edict: Either good or nothing of the dead. But that's for funeral orations. That's not for plugging books written after the period of mourning, even for Victorians, is over.

This one was not Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet," or even Cornelia Stratton Parker's "An American Idyll." Actually, by the time Gertrude Lawrence married Richard Aldrich they were both old established firms. Both had been married and divorced. Both had had children. It was no longer a case of a Cockney girl breaking into a Pilgrim stockade, sticking out her tongue and shouting "Actress!" as if it were a dirty word.

She was an arrived star with all the polish the stage gives its stars. Her education in this respect was longer than her husband's at Groton or Harvard. They met on common ground. She was already on top. He was practicing to become a Broadway producer.

I realize that no one is good enough or bad enough to write the truth about himself, and when several hands get together years after the obsequies to write a long obit, it will be a mess unless they all agree on an angle. But this sometimes produces a fairy tale under the billing of biography.

Lillian Roth's "I'll Cry Tomorrow" with one writer got so far off her story that another writer had to be called in to bring it back to where it all started.

There were obviously professional hands as well as many eager amateurs on the Lawrence book, too. In the old days these things were kept as secret as the marriage of a star itself. But no more.

Twenty years ago I broke with a publisher who wouldn't let me tell in my story what I had to do with the writing of another's biography. "We couldn't do that, Frank. It would make us look like damned fools."

Of course it's okay for the author to look like a d.f. but not the publisher. That figures.

Among current bestsellers written by Rice, Golenpaul, Hope, Murrow, Allen, Aldrich and Maxwell, which would you say had no help from the audience? Allen?

Well, I'd believe Fred if he said so, and of course poor old Granny Rice can't say yes or no by now. But from what I know of them, the rest are corporate enterprises, with billing simplified for marquee purposes.

Besides, most of them are too busy making money to bother with all the details that go into the making of a book.

Their chief dialog contribution is, "Where's the money? And where do I sign?"

H. G. Clouzot ordered south by his doctor for a complete rest.

Marcel Pagnol received an offer from William Wyler to do a film with him in Hollywood called, "The Only Love."

Jean-Pierre Melville has built his own studio here, Studio Jenner, and is setting up on his own production. Melville is a director.

Elvire Popesco's next play, at her Theatre Athenee next season, will be Aldo Benedetti's "Trente Secondes D'Amour" (Thirty Seconds of Love).

Paule De Beaumont has adapted Agathe Christie's "Witness For The Prosecution," which will be known as "Coupable" (Guilty) here. It will be done in September.

Borrah Minevitch will coproduce a pic based on an original script by Peter Lorre, "The Survivor," in Yugoslavia or Germany this summer. Lorre will also direct and star.

Maurice Evans has the English and U. S. stage rights for the J. P. Conty hit whodunit legit here, "Affaire Vous Concernant." Frederic Knott is doing the English adaptation.

Jean Anouilh has finished a new play which bows next season. It is called "Ornifle Ou Le Courant D'Air." Ditto Andre Roussin whose new piece, "L'Amour Fou ou La Premiere Surprise" (Mad Love or The First Surprise), will be done at the Madeleine in October.

Screen Rights

act would be anything like as gripping as it is.

"I suppose if I'd have even thought for a moment about 'Anastasia' as a picture, I'd have realized it's a natural. But when I read the script last summer, there was no indication that there would be such a seller's market in screen rights to plays. Therefore, even realizing its suitability as a picture, I probably would have discounted it for investment on the ground that the play would fail and therefore a possible film sale would be too small to save the investment. As it is, it certainly looks like 'Anastasia' will pay off as a play and have the picture money as a bonus.

Buying Everything

"There's one disquieting thing about trying to reevaluate plays in terms of vehicles for the screen, though. That is, Hollywood is apparently buying almost everything on Broadway, so perhaps I'd be just as intelligent to ignore the picture angle and invest in practically everything except the most obvious duds."

As the speaker pointed out, the picture deals already set this season include "Tender Trap," "Rainmaker," "Anastasia," "Solid Gold Cadillac," "Bus Stop," "Guys and Dolls," "Can-Can," "Pajama Game," "King and I," "Desperate Hours (bought as a novel, prior to its dramatization), "Pajama Game," "Bad Seed" and, in prospect, "Fanny," "Plain and Fancy," "The Honeys," "Witness for the Prosecution" and "Damn Yankees."

Regarding other aspects of the legit investment situation, the backer says he's tending to become disillusioned about the business methods of most producers. "Most of the objectionable things VARIETY mentioned in that big story of a couple of years ago still exist, and I have seen no inclination to correct matters," he declares.

But, he adds, "I don't suppose accounting practices and business methods really count for much in my decisions on whether or not to invest. One of the producers whose policies I particularly dislike has a great track record of boxoffice successes, so I back every show he does.

"It all comes down to this, I guess. I'd rather back a hit show produced by a management with questionable business practices than a flop presented by the most meticulous and upright citizen this side of the pearly gates.

"I'm not in theatrical investment to make money. But there's no fun in backing flops. What I enjoy is the feel of being part of a hit, regardless of what I may suspect about the ethics of the management."

signatures hadn't been affixed to the first reading. The committee then decided to reverse its original stand due to the content and suggestiveness of the work. Group also felt the play was "bad and boring."

"Profession" had been in rehearsal three weeks when the turnabout was made.

("Mrs. Warren's Profession" was originally banned for public performance in London and was first presented for private subscription audiences. When it was later (1909) produced in New York by Arnold Daly there were riots and the police raided the theatre and arrested the cast. At a court hearing, after the magistrate had read the play, the case was dismissed and the actors were released. When the show was revived off-Broadway in 1950-51 the critical and audience reaction tended to be that it was dated and curiously mild.—Ed.)

'Leagues' Payoff

An aside to this is that quite a few producers and over-zealous press-agents, perhaps influenced by the king-sized, but actual, budgets for such pix as "Leagues," are trying to get across the idea that their product is in the same swank monetary bracket, which it isn't.)

The negative cost of "Leagues" was $4,240,000. Prints and advertising bring the investment to $5,000,000. Figuring the distribution charges is a toughie because Disney's own subsid, Buena Vista, is doing the job. But a fair estimate places the break-even figure at a little over $7,000,000.

On the basis of business at its first 250 engagements, usually enough to project a total, "Leagues" ought to rake in a minimum of $8,000,000 in domestic distribution gross. In other words, the producers will come out on top via sale of the film in the U.S. and Canada alone.

In this respect, Disney invariably tries to gear his pictures so that the foreign field yields equals the domestic returns. This is in contrast with most films whose overseas take rarely goes above 40% of the overall worldwide total and frequently goes well below that figure.

Distribution charges run higher abroad. And there'll be the expense of dubbing. But if the gross nonetheless is anywhere near the $8,000,000 from domestic, the profit for Disney obviously will be hefty.

Condensation of the 274-page basic report showed that there was a recall average of 73% of those who remembered seeing theatre screen advertising on their last visit to a theatre. That recall was in almost direct proportion to the length of time since last exposed.

Duplicate audience exposure to the medium was high at the end of a year, Sindlinger found. Of the total potential audience, only 10.6% would be exposed once in 52 weeks; 17.3% would be exposed two to five times; 17.4% six to 13 times and 42.9% over 13 times a year. Highest recall was found in the 15 to 24 year old group, with females batting a better recall average than males.

OBITUARIES

TRIXIE FRIGANZA

Trixie Friganza, 83, veteran vaude headliner, died Feb. 27 in Flintridge, Cal., where she had been bedridden with arthritis at the Sacred Heart Academy since 1939. Running away from her Kansas home at 17, she started her stage career in Cleveland that was to last for some 50 years in musical comedy, vaudeville and silent films.

Miss Friganza, who was born Brigid O'Callaghan, starred in "The Prince of Pilsen" on Broadway shortly after the turn of the century. She appeared with Weber & Fields and was paired with Eddie Cantor and Jimmy Savo. While with Savo she made famous the song, "I May Be Wrong, But I Think You're Wonderful." Arthritis forced her to retire in the early 1930's.

Her first starring part was in "A Christmas Night" in 1894. She later had top roles in "The Belle of Bohemia," "The Girl From Paris," "Sally in Our Alley," "The Girl From Yama" and "The Sweetest Girl in Paris." A song from the latter play, "No Wedding Bells for Me," became her trademark until she wed Charles A. Goettler, a theatrical agent.

Miss Friganza appeared in such films as "The Charmer," "The Road to Yesterday," "Free and Easy," and "Proud Flesh." After her retirement she resided at the Sacred Heart Academy. But during World War II she frequently made appearances at veterans' hospitals despite the fact she was afflicted with arthritis.

This problem can be met, in part, by American parents insisting upon wholesome radio and tv fare for their children. Voluntary patronage or non-patronage of sponsors' programs and products is just about the most powerful lever for assuring good programs and curbing unwholesome ones. Government censorship as such is not the answer, except in programs clearly beyond the border of good taste.

"I have stated publicly, too, could use a top-notch regular radio-tv program, or programs, dedicated to the cause of combatting juvenile delinquency . . .

"What I want are down to earth, realistic radio-tv programs that tell the story of the average American home, the many wholesome influences in it that prevent delinquency and, yes, the all-too-common conditions in it, like parental neglect, which contribute to juvenile delinquency."

$250,000. Counsel for the indie exhibitor agreed that Congress has full power to tax penalty receipts. However, he continued, Congress has never passed a law expressly taxing such receipts, although the treble damage statute has been on the books more than 40 years. Samuel H. Levy, counsel for Goldman, pointed out that, although Congress completely revamped the tax laws only last year, it again failed to include penalties as something subject to tax.

Finally, he said, if such penalty payments are to be taxed, the question to be determined is whether they should be taxed as a capital gain or has straight income, and this has never been decided.

work on completely revamped film legislation which was to have been submitted in the meantime. This new law involves several changes in the rebate system, particularly as it applies to documentaries.

It now appears that internal dissension over the exact form and extent of these proposed changes of the rebate system makes it unlikely that the law can be submitted—much less approved— by June 30, the date when the old legislation expires.

MARION MARLOWE

VARIETY

"It isn't often that the nightclub circuit latches on to a novice as thoroughly 'presold' as Marion Marlowe, vocalist on Arthur Godfrey's CBS-TV show. And if Miss Marlowe is a sample of what else along that line tv may have in store for the bistros, the latter better had open their arms wide. She's an entertainer with a lot of class and know-how. And she wow's 'em at the Cotillion Room . . . She sails through her well-balanced songalog with the air of one perfoming for a group of close friends and enjoying herself thoroughly . . . A looker with a voice that's operatic in texture, she's equally at home with the high notes and the moanin' blues, exhibiting flexibility and an imaginative approach that tags her as a coming favorite with the larger spots. Here's a real crowd pleaser." Hift.

BOB FRANCIS
Billboard

"Miss Marlowe is making one of the most auspicious nitery debuts to be seen around here in a long time . . . She has the looks, voice and ability—but above all the charm—to become an outstanding night club personality . . . The whole is a smartly processed, highly professional job of personal salesmanship, building steadily in warmth and ingenuousness."

ED SULLIVAN
New York Daily News

"Marion Marlowe is jamming the Cotillion Room. Natch!"

LOUIS SOBOL
New York Journal American

"She sexy! She's hot! . . . zestful talentful and utterly delightful."

ROBERT W. DANA
New York World-Telegram and Sun

"This one thing is certain, she's a brunette beauty that the black and white of TV can do little justice for . . . She has a truly beautiful voice, as she proves later as she sing, in French, the Gypsy song from Carmen, and she can swing it with zest in a typical outburst of emotion . . . Miss Marlowe gives notice that she's a little child Godfrey can be proud of."

MARTIN BURDEN
N. Y. Post

"Following Marguerite Piazza's record-breaking Cotillion Room stand is, in the show business expression, 'a spot I wouldn't give to a leopard.' But Marion Marlowe, singing star of the Arthur Godfrey show, is up to it. She fills the big, handsome room with a verve and a charm and a big, operatic voice. Note: She's even prettier than the 21-inch tube would have you believe. Marion also shows a new side of her talent—the fact that she's a capable light comedienne with the ability to sing a downright saucy song with the best of 'em."

HY GARDNER
New York Herald Tribune

"Marion Marlowe looks and sings sexquisitely in the Cotillion Room of the Pierre . . ."

JIM O'CONNOR
New York Journal American

"Her beauty is matched only by her voice. She gives the supper club circuit the same wonderful entertainment that her millions of TV fans have learned to expect and admire."

FRANK FARRELL
New York World-Telegram and Sun

"Marion Marlowe, the gorgeous Godfrey lark gave an enchanting account of herself in her supper club debut . . . She is umpteen times more beautiful in person than on TV and her tuneful delivery of special material is as fresh and fascinating as she is oomphy and youthful."

"In all my years of experience in Show Business, I have never seen such tremendous crowds, two blocks long and in spite of the weather outdoors, reading two below zero and plenty of snow, the people waited patiently in line in order to see this Glamorous Star.

Thefted Comedy Bits & Routines Growing Evil in All Show Biz Facets

According to performers who have been victimized by thefts of material, the lifting of a single joke or gag is no longer a matter of concern. These days, according to some, entire routines are being stolen. With circulation in the mass media covering the entire country with one single airing, the owner of a routine is frequently accused of lifting material which he either originated or paid for.

The larceny of routines is being brought up by Will Jordan, the impressionist who has charged one particular performer with larceny of routines which he claims he originated.

However, as the courts have pointed out in the past, it's difficult to establish ownership. There has been one case on record in which Paul Gerrits sued Lew Parker for the theft of a routine which described the eating habits of vacationers at a summer boarding house. Gerrits had claimed that he had bought the act after it had been used in a Broadway revue. Parker countered that he had based this bit on his own observations over the years working in the borscht belt. Court, in that case, decided that original authorship was too difficult to establish.

The question of origination of material is more important today with television an increasingly important medium. A larcenous character coming on video first, is

See United Artists Free Of Politico Embarrassment With Chaplin Now Out

While United Artists officials haven't made any statements about the significance of their Charles Chaplin stock buyout, execs at other film companies have expressed the opinion that the deal should quiet the snipers.

Under the stock transaction, Chaplin agreed to surrender his 25% ownership of UA at a reported $1,000,000. This, it's said, is to be paid over a three-year period. Mary Pickford now holds 33⅓% and the balance is shared by Arthur Krim, Robert Benjamin, William J. Heineman, Max Youngstein and Matty Fox.

Chaplin's background has drawn the fire of veteran and religioso groups over the past several years. His identity with UA as one of the stockholders frequently has been mentioned in the blasts, this dealing a blow to the film company's public relations. A recent instance was a column by Westbrook Pegler, whose target for the day was Mary Pickford, Chaplin and the Krim-Benjamin management.

Observers among officers of other distribution organizations now feel that the Chaplin exit ought to put an end to such attacks.

Gladys Swarthout's ABC Radio Series from Italy

Network radio is taking on an international aspect. ABC is negotiating with Gladys Swarthout and her husband, Frank Chapman, for a weekly half-hour show to star the pair which would emanate from their villa outside Florence. Titled "Renaissance of 1955," it would be an interviews and musical segment, on tape, concerned with the rebirth of the arts in Italy. Featured would be professional musicians and singers, plus students, who've come over to Italy for study and polishing.

Chapmans would host and produce, with harmonicist John Sebastian mentioned as a regular.

Theatres Must Go After Kids Reared In Video Infancy

Philadelphia, March 8.

Plans to combat declining attendance at film houses with a "Spring Movie Festival" were launched by Ted Schlanger, Philadelphia zone manager of Stanley Warner Theatres, at a series of three meetings with 52 managers in this area.

Despite the improvement in grosses, Schlanger told his aides, attendance is steadily declining and special emphasis must stress their efforts to bring in patrons. Certain pictures attract bigger audiences today than ever before, Schlanger said, which indicates that the public is growing more discriminating in its film tastes.

"We must devise ways and means of attracting more people to purchase our wares by doing the odd and unusual and getting away

Metro Pitching Woo To Stanley Kramer

Indie producer Stanley Kramer, now back in the United Artists fold upon completion of his multipic deal with Columbia, has been offered a tieup with Metro, it was reported in N. Y. distribution circles this week. Kramer recently completed "Not As a Stranger" as the first film under his new pact with UA.

Deal which M-G offered Kramer is somewhat similar to the recent alignment of David O. Selznick with the same company, in that Kramer would be given substantial rein in calling the turns on his productions. This would extend to

NEW Q. T. STUDY PRO-NEW YORK

By ART WOODSTONE

A confidential study—thought to be the most authoritative made on the subject—indicates that in most all respects it's folly to produce motion pictures for tele in Hollywood rather than New York City. The few advantages of Coast production are far outweighed, at present, by the encouraging financial-labor-laboratory-studio-distribution picture in the east.

Concluded within the last month, the inclusive and highly objective confidential study was made on behalf of one of the three most active vidfilm firms, one with production interests on both coasts—simply and solely for the information of its own top brass. So anxious was the telefilmery for a clear appraisal of production in relation to faster distribution profits that impartial chemical engineers, time study experts and other technicians with no theatrical preconceptions were called in. Extreme secrecy of the report, until now, is due to fear of West Coast union and studio reprisals. Additionally, the vidfilm company execs foresaw that a leak might prompt a production shift to N. Y. which ultimately might wipe out the majority of benefits now credited to New York—just as oversaturation obliterated many of

'½ of a Nation' Gets Free Ride On 'Peter Pan'

"Peter Pan" hit the tv jackpot. It's figured that nearly half the nation's population saw the Mary Martin show on NBC-TV Monday (7), with estimates varying from 65,000,000 to 75,000,000 as the audience and up to 21,000,000 homes reached or about two-thirds of telesets in circulation. This would constitute the largest assemblage for a one-network show.

Whatever the figure, it was enough to play havoc with pay attractions throughout the country, with nabe and downtown film houses, night clubs, restaurants and legit suffering. Some of Broadway's "top tickets" were suddenly available at the boxoffices as thousands of tv parties were held in homes and public places, including dealer showrooms, to show off both the black-and-whiter and the color values.

"Direct from Broaway" show got whopping 48.0 average on the 15-city Trendex overnight tally, insuring its No. 1 rating on all March returns. All the competing shows took a drubbing, with "I Love

Olivier-Leigh Advance Stampede at Stratford

London, March 8.

A new boxoffice record for the Stratford-on-Avon season, in which Laurence Olivier and Vivien Leigh are to star, is looming. Since the advance sale opened last month at the Shakespeare Memorial Theatre, mail orders have averaged about 1,000 a day, and daily revenue has been about $2,000.

To cope with the demand, the b.o. staff has been increased to 20 and telephone order calls have jammed the local exchange.

Diskers Yen Sister Chicks Who Can Chirp

Only a couple of months ago, the male quartets, such as the Four Aces, Four Joes, Four Coins, etc., were high in the disk bestseller saddle. Now, however, there's been a switch in sexes and the canary combos, particularly the sister teams, have become the rage in juve circles.

The proliferation of sister teams in the music biz is now at the all-time peak, even exceeding the distaffers' boom that followed the Andrews Sisters' click with "Bei Mir Bist Du Schoen" back in the mid-1930s. At the present time, a disk company isn't regarded as being open for business unless it has a sister team (from a duo to a quintet) on its roster. Some of the majors, in fact, were caught without one for a time and hurriedly had to scout the hinterlands for related chicks who could chirp.

Perhaps the De Castros Sisters' click on "Teach Me Tonight" for

'Dolls' in Plush Status; Tops $2,000,000 Payoff

"Guys and Dolls" has now topped the $2,000,000 payoff mark, the third Broadway musical to do so in approximately the last dozen years. The others are "Oklahoma," which paid around $4,000,000 profit on a $90,000 investment, and "South Pacific," which has thus far returned about $3,500,000 on a $225,000 investment.

Latest "Guys and Dolls" dividend, paid last week, was $233,500, bringing the total distributed profit to date to $2,140,957. The Cy Feuer-Ernest H. Martin production was capitalized at $200,000, plus a $50,000 overcall. The new melon

Teenagers are held to control nearly three-fourths of U. S. homes when it comes to program selection. Teenage Survey Service goes to the front for "bigger audiences" through the casting of pop record artists and other favorites of the groups up to 19 or and gives tv variety shows as an example. According to a survey by the company, it was found that the teeners control the program choice in 74% of homes and that they listen to radio more than they watch tv principally because of their interest i pop records.

"It follows, therefore," says the teenage outfit, "that they are more apt to watch tv shows featuring record stars than they would other shows. This was proved again on Feb. 27 when 'Toast of the Town,' according to Trendex, had a 35.2 rating against NBC-TV's spectacular with 21.4. A Teenage Survey Service poll of the metropolitan areas showed 69% tuned in 'Toast.' The Ed Sullivan show offered two record favorites, the DeJohn Sisters with a current hit (up near the disker top with 'No More' the Epic label), and Eartha Kitt (latter with no platter in the money now but for several years more positively represented on wax). Max Liebman presented Milton Berle, Martha Raye and Ray Bolger, none of whom is of great attraction to teenage viewers."

He , says the service, program planners and talent buyers are overlooking "the tremendous 17,000,000 teenage audience and the fact that they control 25,000,000 tv sets."

25,500 Pack N.Y. Garden For Gambling Tribute On 30th Anni in Radio

John B. Gambling celebrated his 30th anniversary in radio yesterday (Tues.) before 25,500 people in Madison Square Garden, N. Y. The WOR wake-up gabber drew radio personalities from every network station in town plus all but one of the major metropolitan indies. There were even some video folks thrown in for good measure.

Gambling, aided by every WOR performer normally heard between 8 and 11 a.m., parleyed with at least 25 of his rivals in this one-shot 7:15 to 10:55 stand. It was radio in the round, with mikes and guests circulating around a small stand in the middle of the 18,300-seat sports palace.

The station had been pushing the affair since the middle of January. To the trade it looked like a successful way to impress ad agencies with the size of the waker-upper's following. The reason for the 25,500 attendance count (made by the Garden b.o. officials)) when the house normally holds 7,200 fewer people, was the turnover resulting

'Porgy' at La Scala Just Another Wow Date; SRO Show Eyes Tent Setup

By RICHARD L. COE

(Drama Editor, Washington Post & Times-Herald)

Milan, March 1.

Looks like a tent's next for "Porgy and Bess." Ending a walloping week ($57,000 gross) at famed La Scala, the Davis-Breen production of the Heyward-Gershwin musical is breaking precedents and records, and plans more of both.

Negro company's engagement was the first American company ever to play the top Italian opera house. Tentative opening nighters, who traditionally never applaud, wound up cheering and all the dozen or so reviews have been raves, including the Commy daily, L'Unita, which acclaimed this as "a masterpiece of lyric theatre." House, which never before has played anything for a run, wanted a second week, but Genoa, Florence and Rome are next. "Tutto Esaurito" sign's been up all week, but doesn't keep lines from the boxoffice winding around the square.

Tent idea is co-producer and director Robert Breen's idea of picking up hundreds of thousands who've not been able to squeeze into theatres played since the company returned to Europe at Venice last fall. A Paris outfit is working on this, and promises a full-sized stage, as wide as La Scala's with 3,000 seats. Along with the seats,

Vidpix's This-Or-Thataway

Hollywood's original vidpix advantages.

If any one factor must be chosen to reveal why the producer can exploit N. Y.—making savings of $6,000, or even up to $8,000, on a single middle-priced half-hour telepic—it's laid by the study to the marked eagerness of all New Yorkers concerned to make their city the celluloid capital once more. By the same set of standards, Hollywood, "having had it so good" for so long, has become what this research study labels an "overprofessional" film centre, where every step, no matter how slight, is akin to a major policy decision and eats up valuable time and cash. One word summaries for each town were suggested by the tv celluloid study: N. Y. "elasticity"; Hollywood, "bureaucracy."

The corporate study vividly reveals a point that few are cognizant of by tracing recent historical changes lessening the Coast's value as a film centre. According to the report, the relationship between video filming and feature film production has become very important. Not too long ago, it is noted, Hollywood theatrical pic production was "at an all time minimum" and vidfilming hadn't yet gained any significant stature. Therefore there were excellent sound stages available at nominal charges. Also the very best in picture crews and facilities. Many tradesters seem to think this situation still exists, yet the report states that the amount of Hollywood studio space has been diminished, that the top crews are aloof and hard to come by. The change is due to feature filming having regained its footing to a great degree, thanks to the CinemaScope boom, with the situation further cluttered by indie and "chain" vidfilm producers cluttering the best lots.

Not only are Hollywood crews more difficult to find, but once they are on salary, the study discloses, there has been a burgeoning trend toward old "featherbedding" practices. Moreover, the disproportionate and sudden rise in Hollywood production has put a great burden on the very essential film labs, editing rooms and other services, causing disturbing delays in completion of processing.

There are other downbeat elements that force favor upon a shift to N. Y. Conversely, though, the east has many characteristics that speak in its own behalf. First off, N. Y., by ending the heaviest concentration of filming shortly, will have by this spring several studios available. Thereafter, the generally favorable union attitude toward "bring that film business here," insures minimized, if not entirely absent "featherbedding"; and a unionized carpenter, for example, might not be overly perturbed if he were to find a camera grip doing a small share of his work in order to expedite matters. The same holds true for other unions.

N. Y. Pool of Talent

N. Y., though it has far more talent unions with which the tv producer must cope, is still the heart of the acting industry. The "enormous pool" of thesps is always available, and most of these actors take directions and complete a shot in half the time of "babied" Coast payrollees, the analysis reveals. Beyond the talent and union level, N. Y.'s big advantage lay in the film labs' anxiety to justify expansion. They will not only advance loans to producers when necessary, they will often—and this is a growing movement—they will actually get into the financing of telepix ventures, most of which are reportedly proving profitable to them.

Then, editing facilities, with many years experience in documentary and educational film production, have learned to cut corners. There are a number of them with excellent facilities, uncluttered as opposed to Coast cutting and editing rooms. Another facilities point which gives N. Y. the edge is that with studio rentals comes everything the landlord has to offer, including use of his own desk as a prop, if necessary. Lights cameras, sound equipment, prompters come under one pretty cheap rental fee. The Coast, on the other hand, spells individual charges on everything, even though renters have long since recaptured their original purchase costs.

Though the study definitely favors N. Y. for tv film production, the experts, in an effort to lay every fact out for the bankrolling company's high-level management, stress the fact that Hollywood still has decided advantages, one being "tight control." Not only are there several large sets (not presently available) that can accommodate simulated outdoor "locations," but labs, editing rooms, sets—in fact all production facets—are relatively close together compared with a N. Y. need to hop and skip all over the crowded metropolis as each production step succeeds another. (However, the report throws in this note: "careful preplanning minimizes wasted money and motion.")

California Versus New York

RUNDOWN OF ADVANTAGES

WEST

¶ Hollywood studios are set up for full-scale production and any kind of gear is ready to hand.

¶ Studios have accumulated know-how and perfected the "unit" system.

¶ Facilities are centralized—sound stages, offices, cutting rooms, carpenter shops are close together in one area, minimizing transportation nuisance and cost.

¶ Coordination of departments is smoother.

¶ Supervision of editing, mixing and shooting is kept under top management's eye, and not farmed out to subordinates at distant locations across town.

¶ Hollywood film studios possess a wealth of standing outdoor and indoor sets—city houses, villas, street scenes, marine and ship sets. These conveniences and economies cannot be duplicated in New York.

¶ It is an advantage that the whole Hollywood community is conditioned in an attitude sympathetic to theatrical production. While a subtle matter, this can count importantly.

¶ SAG can usually negotiate for all talent involved in a telefilm.

EAST

¶ It is an advantage that New York is not "rigid" in trade practices and that the bigness of Manhattan shields producers from salary demands based on pride rather than sense.

¶ New York unions are easier to deal with, as of now, and "featherbedding" is at a minimum. Also there are only a handful to deal with.

¶ New York's pool of acting talent is broader and more versatile than Hollywood's. New York talent has not been babied with innumerable takes. Vidfilm made in the east go through with a minimum of repeat scenes.

¶ Film processing labs are eager to please, anxious to justify their expansion.

¶ Editing skills in New York are almost as good as Hollywood's and sometimes better for video because of documentary and industrial experience.

¶ Optical bench technicians in N. Y. are equal to, some think better than, Hollywood where little demand for this type of lab work exists.

¶ Vidfilm producers operating in N. Y. can buy own equipment, amortize it over weeks and months and derive tax advantages. Against that, gear must be rented in Hollywood, the rental studios enjoying the tax advantages.

¶ N. Y. contractors are available to wrap up everything in the way of services needed into one lowcost package.

¶ Location sites cost less in N. Y., with the N. Y. Police Department and Chamber of Commerce throwing in their support, even so far as supplying police guards instead of necessitating a private force.

¶ Cost of film per foot cheaper in N. Y., because it is the point of shipment.

¶ Film manufacturers will work with producer on technical problems, and will expedite additional film needs.

¶ N. Y. is the heart of distribution. Many national vidfilm syndicators—NBC Film, CBS Film, MCA, Ziv, Official, etc.—are centered there.

AND THESE DISADVANTAGES

WEST

¶ Hollywood spells red tape.

¶ Fear of union blackball greater here than in N Y.

¶ Unions in Hollywood demand a bond on salaries, as well as other benefits, e.g., retirement, health insurance, severance—costing producers 14c on the labor dollar.

¶ There are over 30 separate craft unions to deal with.

¶ Processing and editing skeds are vastly overburdened, with delays ensuing.

¶ Studio space is at a premium. Telefilm producers forced to deal with major studios, which have a monopoly.

¶ There is a "more commercial attitude" in Hollywood, seemingly based on the fact that Coast industryites "have learned to expect more done in their behalf" by producers.

¶ Union don't-touch-that rules about conflicting jurisdiction prove the producer's worst headache.

¶ FOB charges jimmy the cost of film footage well out of proportion with the east.

¶ Hollywood producers, when they need technological guidance, find film manufacturers too distant for immediate help.

¶ Top camera crews are difficult to find and often more difficult to handle, due to the present great demand.

¶ Coast rentals on all equipment are prohibitively high, this (plus union costs) are rated, in the study, as major expense items.

¶ Nearly everybody featherbeds.

EAST

¶ While N. Y. may be the centre for performers, it also has a far greater number of acting guilds with which the vidfilmer must deal.

¶ Decentralization of studios and equipment, necessitates detailed pre-planning.

¶ Heavy street traffic hurts, runs up costs.

¶ There are no N. Y. facilities for exterior sound. And, generally, indoor studios provide little better in the way of audio.

¶ N. Y. has no room for large scenes, since big stages are non-existent at present.

¶ N. Y.'s "unprofessionalism," as evidenced by ex-documentary filmers, while making successful shoestringing possible also is the cause of considerable sloppiness in camerawork.

¶ N. Y. production may have to go to Hollywood for specific and costly new devices not available in east.

White House Vaudeville Clocks Extra 45 Mins. But Otherwise Socko

Washington, March 8.

A comedian, a tap dancer and a magician laid 'em in the aisles Saturday night (5) at the 30th annual dinner of the White House Correspondents Assn. to the President of the United States.

Comic Peter Lind Hayes, sepia tapster Teddy Hale and Channing Pollock, who makes with pigeons and playing cards, rang the gong before an audience of more than 900, including Pres. Eisenhower, Vice President Richard Nixon, most of the Supreme Court and Cabinet, a large segment of the Senate and House of Representatives, and other Federal toppers. It was the largest gathering over for the dinner.

Show, which was put together by ASCAP, with an assist by Harry Kalcheim of the William Morris Agency, and Joel Margolis, of Loew's ran overlong, as did the entertainment at the Radio-Television Correspondents Assn. dinner to the President, a month earlier.

Mrs. Roosevelt's Spillover Audience Close-Circuited

Armonk, N. Y., March 8.

Denied access to the Armonk public school, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt spoke to an overflow audience here Friday (4) via closed-circuit tv. Local Board of Education nixed use of the school on the grounds that a state law prevents its use for a political address.

As a result, Mrs. Roosevelt spoke at the Armonk Methodist Church. Her talk—"The Importance of Political Activities in Your Own Town"—was sponsored by the North Castle Democratic Committee. Local church was inadequate for the large audience, but closed-circuit tv made it possible for every one in attendance to view the proceedings in an annex building.

Fonda Wooed for 3 Pix But Yens B'way

Rome, March 1.

Henry Fonda, here for a vacation in Europe, and long a local film favorite, is currently being wooed by an unusually large number of outfits which want his services for either pic or stage work. Fonda recently signed a three-year deal with United Artists as producer-actor, and is scheduled to star in at least three of the six pix the pact calls for.

Fonda is reported as being considered for roles in Peter Moore's "Up at a Villa," and Astra's "Mastro Don Gesualdo," which would probably co-star Gina Lollobrigida. The last-named is said to have been nixed by Fonda.

STUDIOS: 'OUR TV WILL SHINE'

Shoot 'Em Wide Area, Keep Definition On Reductions, Is Techni's Prophecy

Convinced of the eventual necessity for an all-purpose process of making and showing pix, Technicolor is working towards that end and may enlist the cooperation of a major production outfit in carrying on the necessary experimental work.

In Techni's annual report, which detailed the economic recovery of the lab in 1954, Herbert T. Kalmus, president, envisioned an all-purpose process which would start with an increased area negative (a la VistaVision) which would then be printed or re-photographed in the lab to yield prints for both large screen special theatre projection and regular 35m projection.

Kalmus' view is confirmation of what already is gradually shaping up as an industry trend—the lensing of pix on wide area negative for subsequent reduction to any size required and with much greater definition. Into that category fall VistaVision, with a negative area two and a half times the size of the regular frame; Todd-AO, using 70m film, and CinemaScope which 20th-Fox is planning to expand to 55m or 65m size.

Technicolor in 1954 had a net of $2,319,160, just a shade below the record $2,371,735 profit in 1953. Earnings before taxes in '54 ran to $4,901,178 compared to $7,425,569 in the prior year. Sales in 1954 dropped about $3,000,000 to $34,654,980 compared with $37,701,770 in '53. Techni's print biz volume in 1954 was almost up to record

Trophy Says WB 'Disparages' Its Mitchell Venture

Los Angeles, March 8.

Gen. Billy Mitchell's biography is involved in a $1,375,000 damage suit filed in Federal Court by Trophy Productions Inc., with Milton Sperling, United States Pictures Inc., Warner Bros. Pictures Inc., J. C. Yoss and Paul R. Davidson listed as defendants. Plaintiff asks $1,275,000 general and $100,000 punitive damages.

Action states that Trophy acquired rights to the biography, "Mitchell—Prophet of Air Power," from Samuel Bronston who had paid $60,000 to its author, Isaac Don Levine. It states further that Trophy and Bronston had invested more than $125,000 in preparing the book for filming.

Last September, the plaintiff declares, the defendants began "unlawfully and with malicious slander, to disparage and deprecate" the story's market value by allegedly causing reports in the motion picture industry that Trophy and Bronson did not hold exclusive rights and that the defendants owned equal rights to produce the picture.

(Above litigation seemingly has points of resemblance to Fiske vs. Hitchcock which was tried last fall in N. Y. Federal Court. In that action, a writer, Irving Fiske, asserted his plan to produce a modern-language "Hamlet" was ruined when Alfred Hitchcock "announced" that he planned an up-to-date "Hamlet" with Cary Grant. Judge Bondy instructed the jury to dismiss the charge last October and followed up this February by assessing $5,000 legal fees against Fiske, payable to Hitchcock.—Ed.

$1,900,000 Week, All-Time UA High

United Artists for the week ended March 5 had the highest volume of domestic market (U.S. and Canada) business in its 36-year history, Billings for the stanza amounted to $1,900,000, representing a gain of $796,000 over the previous record single-week's total of $1,104,000 which was scored late last year.

William J. Heineman, distribution v.p., underlined that the March 5 week was the final one in the UA's sales drive which carried board chairman Robert S. Benjamin's banner. The salute-to-Benjamin campaign provided cash prizes totalling $50,000. Winners among the 32 competing branches will be determined shortly.

There hasn't been a tabulation yet on which pictures contributed what amounts to the 1,900,000 total. But rough estimates show these leaders in the order of monetary importance for the single week: "Vera Cruz," "The Barefoot Contessa," "Sitting Bull" and "Suddenly."

May Produce 'Phenix City' In Native Surroundings With N.Y. Video Actors

Birmingham, March 8.

Selznick Sues WB To Restrain 'Star Is Born' In Certain Foreign Lands

Selznick Releasing Organization has brought suit in N. Y. Supreme Court to restrain Warners from distributing the remake of "A Star Is Born" in any country where David O. Selznick has exclusive or perpetual rights to release his original version of "Star." Action also charges that WB's threat to exhibit the new "Star," in direct competition with Selznick's 1937 film has caused him "irreparable damage."

Selznick, according to the complaint, turned over all rights to his "Star" to Film Classics in 1943 but re-acquired them in 1952. It's claimed that his rights apply in a number of countries with the exception of the U. S. and its territories, Czechoslovakia, the United Kingdom and Canada. Warners, in making a general denial of the allegations, contends that Selznick's rights aren't as broad as he maintains.

Original "Star Is Born" was made by Selznick-International Pictures for United Artists release. Latest version was turned out as a musical by Sid Luft's Transcona Productions with Judy Garland and James Mason in top roles.

HOLLYWOOD MAPS VIDEO INVASION

By FRED HIFT

(Editorial Note: The following news account of Hollywood majors readying to take the plunge into television assumes special timeliness if read in connection with another story of this issue, detailing a confidential study of East vs. West production just completed by vidpix interest. See Page 1)

Ending its stand-offish stanza vis-a-vis television, Hollywood is now aggressively scouting ways and means of latching onto the video medium. Gone is the "tv is for the birds but we have to live with it" slant that has colored film company thinking so far.

Instead, there is now every indication that Hollywood is getting ready to move the massive impact of its facilities, know-how, talent and story reservoir into the tv field for what's seen as a mutual payoff. The studios have stopped thinking in terms of the worst being good enough for their electronic competitor.

Virtually every major is intensively studying the tv setup and its economics with a view to evolving a program formula for the most effective tieup. Columbia, of course, is way out in the lead via

Racial Segregation Limits Cinerama To One Southern Outlet, Dallas

With the opening of Cinerama in Buffalo March 16, Stanley Warner, holder of the exhibition and production rights to the medium, is expected to conclude the opening of Cinerama theatres in the U. S. Although the theatre chain originally set its sights on about 20 domestic installations, it's ready to stop with the Buffalo outlet. This will give SW a total of 14 Cinerama theatres in the U. S. and one in Canada.

Southern areas, such as Miami and New Orleans, were under consideration, but have been dropped. Segregation in the south works against permanent installations in these territories. It's feared that with at least half of the population barred from the theatres, the potential drawing power will not be as great for the long runs required. Dallas, with a wide trading zone, is the exception. A segregated balcony, as is the custom in many film houses in the south, is not feasible because of the necessity of having lower-priced tickets available.

Whatever the majors' interest in television, their tv subsidiaries—with the exception of Paramount—aren't exactly fingerpointing their parent companies.

Warner Bros. has Sunset Productions. 20th-Fox has set up TCF Television Productions. Universal works through United World. Columbia is active via Screen Gems, and Republic has set up Hollywood Television Corp.

Only Paramount is out in the open. There it's Paramount Television Productions, Inc.

More 'Indie' Pix; Columbia Sets 10; UA Goes Wilde

Independent production deals are continuing on the incline, Columbia over the past week lassoed Daniel Taradash, Julian Blaustein and M. J. (Mike) Frankovich for a total of 10 films while United Artists, which has been particularly active in this field, nabbed one more.

Taradash, who scripted "From Here to Eternity," and producer Blaustein recently formed The Phoenix Corp. as an indie operation. They're to do four films on the Col lot and for Col release, two of them to be written and directed by Taradash and all four to be produced by Blaustein.

Frankovich, head of Film Locations, Ltd., has signed to deliver six pictures for Col release. The pix are to be lensed in England, except for some location work on the Continent. New deal is an extension of Frankovich's association with Col. He recently completed "Rebound," starring Stew-

61 U. S. Features Go to Yugoslavs

Motion Picture Export Assn. this week concluded a deal with Yugoslavia Film for 61 features at an average purchase price of $4,500 a piece. Only seven of the MPEA member companies are involved and their take runs close to $300,000.

Metro, United Artists and Republic didn't go along with the MPEA arrangement. Metro has signed with Yugoslavia Film for 25 features and UA is currently negotiating.

Trade Turns Spotty; 'Battle' Again No. 1, 'Girl' 2d, 'Line' 3d, 'Deck' 4th, 'Country,' Russell Next

Biz continues very uneven in key cities covered by VARIETY this stanza, with lukewarm product, Lent and income tax headaches blamed in various localities. The situation of having some three or four great grossers and then lesser or indifferent b.o. fare naturally is contributing to this in numerous keys.

"Battle Cry" (WB), with some new, strong playdates and continued stamina on extended-runs, is pushing back to No. 1 spot this round. The Marine pic was a sturdy second-place winner last week. "Country Girl" (Par) wound up in second after being champ a week ago, lack of many additional engagements obviously hurting its overall showing.

"Long Gray Line" (Col) again is finishing third, same as a week ago, but with numerous bigger opening sessions. "Hit the Deck" (M-G), just out this stanza, is taking over fourth position.

"Far Country" (U) is moving up to fifth spot while "Underwater!" (RKO) is only a step behind in sixth, this Jane Russell starrer showing new strength. "Cinerama" (Indie) is landing seventh spot. "Gate of Hell" (Indie) is showing enough to cop eighth place.

"Leagues Under Sea" (BV), now in only five keys, will wind up in ninth position. It has about completed its bigger key city dates. "Jupiter's Darling" (M-G), very spotty currently, is sliding from fourth to 10th place.

"White Feather" (20th), "Mr. Hulot's Holiday" (GBD), "Racers" (20th) and "Bad Day at Black Rock" (M-G) are the runner-up films in that sequence.

"N. Y. Confidential" (WB) shows signs of becoming a fairly good grosser. One of the current newcomers, it is good in Cincy, lofty in L.A., and fine in N. Y. Pic is rated mild in Portland. "Crashout" (FM) looks so-so in Boston.

"Camille" (M-G) (reissue), also new in the keys, looms boff in Balto, stout in N. Y. and okay in Philly. "Many Rivers To Cross" (M-G) is lagging in current stanza, being mild in K.C., Minneapolis, Chi, Seattle and L.A. but shapes fine in Philly. "Capt. Lightfoot" (U) shapes fair in Minneapolis and Chi.

"Black Tuesday" (UA), stout in Chi, is brisk in Washington. "Bridges at Toko-ri" (Par), torrid in Minneapolis, is sturdy in Cincy and Balto. It has played nearly all firstruns in bigger citics. "Big House U.S.A." (UA) looms sluggish in Detroit.

"Cinerama Holiday" (Indie), now in five keys, is rated smash in Det., sock in Pitt, hotsy in St. Louis, wow in N. Y. and boffo in Philly. It goes into additional keys where the first Cinerama production, "This Is Cinerama," starts to falter.

Delinquency—and in Indo-China, Yet—Gets a Relaxed Crosby Headshake

Bing Crosby's groaning because certain critics are depicting Hollywood films as an evil influence abroad or an inspiration for juve crime.

"You know folks," he chats, "every once in a while I run across an item—with a foreign dateline—which raps Hollywood pictures. Usually these items rankle me. They don't make my blood boil, or cause any tossing or turning at night, but sometimes I must confess that I do find them rather annoying.

"For instance, I noticed a release from Saigon, Indo-China, recently which stated that a high Vietnamese official has been quoted as saying that 'Hollywood westerns are having a disastrous effect on juvenile morals.' Well, now, podners, this news comes as a big surprise to old rancher Crosby. You know Indo-China has been the recent scene of an eight-year-old war. From what I hear about the place, there are more guns and grenades kicking around underfoot than chopsticks or rice bowls. It beats me how one of our 'Hoss Oprys' could have a negative influence on kids' morale in an area ravaged by total war."

Crosby took to the defense of Yankee pix in a talk he taped for his CBS Radio cross-the-board 15-minute program.

He quoted from a Motion Picture Assn. of America pamphlet which contained opinions of noted psychiatrists, educators, etc., on the matter of films' effects on moppet behaviour. All of them made a "flat denial" that any films, westerns included, promote lawlessness among the youngsters, comments the crooner.

He goes on: ". . . For my part I think that most of our westerns are pretty tame stuff compared to the horrors of a real shooting war.

'Paris' Craze

Travel-happy Americans are getting their fill of Paris in film titles these days.

So far there's been "The Last Time I Saw Paris," "So This Is Paris" and "Innocents in Paris." Forthcoming is the British "To Paris With Love."

Metro, it would appear, thinks there's been too much of a good thing. It's switched its "Boulevards in Paris" to "Bedevilled."

Foreign Producers See Faster, Neater Profit If U. S. Remakes Features

Foreign producers, and particularly the Germans, are concentrating heavily on peddling the remake rights to their pix to Hollywood.

New emphasis stems from the realization that, in many instances, a sale of such rights can easily turn out to be more lucrative than a limited art house run of the picture itself.

This is particularly true in the case of the Germans whose potential in the commercial U.S. market is very small. Several German stories that have already been made into pix over there are currently being dangled before U.S. producers as potential remakes.

Foreign filmmakers face a difficult choice in offering remake rights. If their picture is a success at home, there's always the hope that it may be the one film that'll break down the U.S. barrier and turn out a b.o. hit, at least in the arties. If it's just an average grosser locally, they've got to cope with the tantalizing thought that it migh still have done well in the U.S.

Partly because of the foreign themes, and partly due to certain disadvantages accruing for a remake of a foreign hit, Hollywood so far has gone very slow in picking up makeover rights.

'STEEPER CLIFF' BACK TO 20TH'S SCHEDULE

Hollywood, March 8.

David Davidson's post-Nazi period novel, "The Steeper Cliff," has skidded back to 20th-Fox after being a temporary possession of Frank Rosenberg, now a producer at Warners.

When Rosenberg was with 20th-Fox the studio bought book as part of his production program and when he left the lot he made a partial payment on it with the rest to be paid off from the profits of an indie production. After joining Warners, Rosenberg decided to drop the deal, returning the novel to the Zanuck organization.

EIDOPHOR STILL TESTS

Latest For Color Theatre-TV Called Very Satisfactory

Eidophor, 20th-Fox's color theatre-tv system, has now been perfected to the point where, as one 20th exec put it, "we're ready to go into production with it any time we want."

Spyros P. Skouras, 20th prez, recently attended a private demonstration of Eidophor at the Movietone studio in N.Y. and is said to have been extremely satisfied with the results. Show was piped in "live" from an adjoining studio.

In view of its present preoccupation with developments in the wide-gauge film field, it's considered unlikely that 20th plans to press the Eidophor innovation at the present. Model that was used for the demonstration is a prototype of the set that would go into mass production. It was put together by Swiss and U.S. (General Electric) technicians.

Meanwhile it's understood that 20th still has made no final decision as to the width of the film on which it plans to shoot most or all of its future CinemaScopers. 20th technicians continue to experiment with various widths, including 55m and 65m film. Basic objective is to keep pace with developments at rival companies which use large area negatives to obtain better definition on the large screens.

Film Music Not So Over-Written Now, Says Green

By HY HOLLINGER

Hollywood's "new look," i.e., the shape of the screen, is being accompanied by a new sound, not including the stereophonic variety. According to Johnny Green, musical topper at Metro, there is a growing trend in the film colony among composers toward getting away from the so-called "Hollywood sound." "I predict," said Green, "that in five years from today I'll be able to make the statement that the Hollywood style of music will have disappeared."

Green, visiting New York on Metro and Academy Award business, feels that the term of opprobrium — "Hollywood sound" — will no longer exist in describing film music. The lush over-writing and schmaltzy scores usually identified with Hollywood pix, he feels, are on their way out and will be replaced by a more individual approach. "There is a far greater awareness among producers and directors," said Green, "as to the part music must play in a picture. As a result, producers and directors are taking greater participation in deciding the sound, the style, and the manner of presentation of the music. Careful atten-

MPEA Asks U.S. Probe On Whether Hungary Bootlegging Yank Pix

The U. S. State Dept. has a request from the Motion Picture Export Assn. to ascertain what American films are currently playing in Hungary. MPEA forwarded the query on the basis of a report that Hungarian audiences preferred Western pix, particularly the Hollywood variety, to their own.

There haven't been any MPEA films going into Hungary for the past five years. However, when the Hungarian Reds nationalized the country, they seized all U. S. prints. While it's possible that some indie productions have found their way into Hungary, it's assumed in N. Y. that the American features in question are part of the lot confiscated by the Hungarians.

If this is found to be so, MPEA intends to protest the illegal exhibition of these films and ask for an accounting.

Something similar happened last year in Czechoslovakia when the MPEA deal with the government there expired. The Czechs continued to show the MPEA pix but insisted on remitting royalties. This trickle of coin has now stopped.

CROWN'S MULTI-STINT ALLIED ARTISTS ROLE

Alfred Crown, who last week switched from president of Moulin Productions to v.p. of Allied Artists, will operate on a multi-assignment basis. Headquartering in N. Y., Crown will undertake to establish production-distribution deals in the U. S. and overseas, will work on foreign distribution of AA product as liaison with offices abroad and will continue with Moulin in an advisory role.

Moulin's recently completed "Moby Dick" is on Warners' upcoming release sked. Film is a bigscale money entry, production delays being partially responsible for an expanded budget of $4,000,000. It's understood the financing was on the basis of the first $1,000,000 from banks, second $1,000,000 from WB, third $1,000,000 from Moulin and the final $1,000,000 shared by Moulin and WB.

Goodwill Groundwork Set in Europe Via Show Biz, GIs, Sez Bus-Fekete

The combination of GIs, U. S. films, stageshows, music and the customs and mores of America's younger set may do more to ally Europe to the West than striped pants diplomacy and political maneuvers.

Playwright Ladislaus Bus-Fekete and his wife and collaborator, Mary Helen Fay, observed upon their return to the U. S. after three years abroad that the combination of American occupation troops and the U. S. mannerisms have established a firm beachhead on German soil, and frequently, the old German cities seem like a little bit of America.

The duo observed that American dances are being terped all over Germany and the youngsters now wear blue jeans with the shirttails all the way out. Expressions such as "okay," "hot dog" and a multitude of other specimens of the current patois have firmly established themselves in the Deutcher lexicon. What's more, observed Bus-Fekete, the Americans are well-liked.

"Even when the occupation is over," observed Bus-Fekete, "American tourists will continue the groundwork of the American soldiers. Their influence is felt throughout Europe. For example, in Paris, a restauranteur had the idea of opening an American-style spot where hotdogs, hamburgers and the like could be obtained. He called it the Oregon. Americans cannot get into the place because it's mobbed by Frenchmen."

It's Persecution

American films and stageplays are extremely popular. He observed that the two biggest hits of the current season in Germany are "The Crucible" and "Teahouse of the August Moon," which are performed by stock companies throughout Germany, with every version different and all very well liked.

"There is a reason why these plays are so popular," said Bus-Fekete. "In the case of 'The Crucible,' if you travel through Germany, there are no Nazis, and in viewing the Arthur Miller play, which treats of witch-hunting during the Pilgrim period, every Ger-

Banks Balky on 'Road Show Only'

Banks and/or major production companies involved in the financing or in participation deals relating to the specialized processes such as Cinerama and Todd-AO, both of which require road-show outings, are insisting, as protection, that popular-process versions of the pictures outside the "extraordinary" techniques be made. This holds particularly for story-line pictures and does not include the travelog entries of Cinerama.

Rodgers & Hammerstein's decision to shoot in CinemaScope as well as in Todd-AO was at the insistence of the Bankers Trust Co., which financed the project, reportedly to the tune of $1,500,000.

Delaying the finalization of deal between Stanley Warner and Warner Bros. for the latter to produce a Cinerama picture is the question of the handling of the CinemaScope version. Warners is balking at the protection asked by Cinerama for release of the C'Scope version. A deal, involving a radius of 100 miles, from which the C'Scoper is to be held out, has been discussed if the release time is to be pushed up. A stalemate is due to Stanley belief that Cinerama can draw beyond 100 miles.

Metro's 20% Terms on 'Guys & Dolls'

Goldwyn Starts With Own Financing Up to $5,000,000—Due for November Release

Metro will receive a 20% distribution fee for the worldwide handling of Samuel Goldwyn's "Guys and Dolls." Pictur which goes before the cameras Monday (14), will be ready for release next November. Nicholas M. Schenck, Loew's-Metro prexy, confirmed yesterday (Tues.) deal with Goldwyn foreshadowed in VARIETY last week.

Arrangement with Goldwyn points up Metro's new operational policy. Formerly the lone holdout among major studios in making outside deals, M-G is now taking the plunge and appears to be coming up with the cream independent deals. It previously snared Desilu (Desi Arnaz-Lucille Ball) Productions, David O. Selznick, and is set to release the CinemaScope version of Rogers & Hammerstein's Todd-AO "Oklahoma."

The "Guys and Dolls" deal affiliates Goldwyn with a company of which his name has been a part for 31 years and with Leo the Lion, which he introduced in 1917 after it was dreamed up by Howard Dietz, currently Metro's pub-ad veepee. The present Metro studio was originally known as the Goldwyn Studio. Goldwyn was founder of the Goldwyn Picture Corp., one of the companies that merged as Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Prior to

EXPENSIVE STROLL

Robert Newton Sued Double by Alderdale of Britain

Los Angeles, March 8.

Screen actor Robert Newton was named defendant by Alderdale Films, Ltd., British company, in a breach of contract suit in Superior Court asking damages of $320,000 on two counts. Case involves the picture, "Trilby and Svengali," which, the plaintiff asserts, Newton ankled "willfully and without cause or justification."

First count asks 25,000 pounds sterling (about $70,000) for "additional expenses" caused by the actor's walkout. Second count demands $250,000, based on profits the Alderdale company claims it lost on Western Hemisphere distribution.

New York's Share Less Taxable Under Japan's New Treaty With States

Double taxation treaty between the U.S. and Japan, approved by the U.S. Senate on Feb. 25, is seen reducing the Japanese tax on the N.Y. share of the American film companies' earnings by 5%, down to 15%.

The treaty is retroactive to Jan. 1, 1955. It's not clear yet whether all of the companies will reap the benefit since the agreement provides for the exclusion of certain types of "permanent establishments" in Japan.

A report from Tokyo over the weekend quoted the Kyodo news agency as saying that the government intended to tighten restrictions on the importation and showing of foreign films in Japan.

Feeling at the companies is that there will be no substantial cutback in American allocations in the new film year which starts April 1. Irving Maas, Motion Picture Export Assn. exec in charge of the Far East, left N.Y. Sunday (6) for Tokyo. It's felt that the reelection of the present government in Japan recently augured well for the interests of the U.S. distribs.

LEGALISTIC HERE-WE-GO-AGAIN

European Pix Crews Picking Up Yank Production Zip—Dieterle

Hollywood, March 8.

American key personnel are setting the pace for shorter production schedules in Europe, according to William Dieterle, recently returned from Germany where he produced and directed "Magic Fire," biopic of Richard Wagner, for Republic.

Pointing out that Germany has first-rate technicians but they are accustomed to working on longer schedules than U. S. companies here, megger commented: "The importation of top technical men from Hollywood — mainly the first cameraman, film editor and production manager — has caused the Continental movie-makers to tighten up their schedules."

During the production of "Fire," Dieterle and his troupe covered 51 separate location sites, traveling over 2,000 miles to the various communities concerned with the screenplay.

Normally," director said, "under old schedules, a European company would have been in production at least six months on a picture of this scope. We covered the location and studio shooting solidly in less than 10 weeks. Our American schedule set the pace, but the Germans were, in every

Hydrogen Echoes

Hollywood, March 8.

Hydrogen bombs are popping in great profusion these days, in film titles—not in reality. MPAA title bureau reports that Allied Artists has registered "H-Bomb, Chicago," "H-Bomb City," "H-Bomb, Detroit," "H-Bomb, L. A." and "H-Bomb, N. Y."

Meanwhile Sam Katzman has registered "H-Bomb" for filming at Columbia.

Howard Underwood Found Guilty of Piracy, All 'Tom' Prints Seized

A case of piracy in the picture trade came to partial conclusion over the past week as a Federal Court in Lexington, Ky., entered a summary judgment holding that Howard G. Underwood and his Trans-World Distributing Corp. made a duped negative and a number of positive prints of Universal's "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and distributed them to theatres around the country.

U filed the suit in 1952, charging copyright infringement and asking an injunction and monetary recovery. The court in effect upheld the charge and left open to trial the matter of money damages.

The court further ordered the defendants and all persons and companies associated with them to deliver for destruction all prints and trailers of "Cabin." Also, orders went out to U. S. Marshals in Lexington, St. Paul, Dallas and L. A. to destroy prints which they had impounded under writs of seizure previously issued by the Lexington tribunal.

Ben J. Kessinger of Lexington and Edward A. Sargoy and John F. Whicher repped U in the action.

MODELING, RIO SYTLE, DRAWS LEGION FROWN

"They Were So Young," Lippert release of a Kurt Neumann production, doesn't sit well with the National Legion of Decency. Catholic reviewing group has given it a "C" rating, meaning condemned, because, it's stated, "The subject matter of this film is judged to be completely immorally unacceptable for entertainment of motion picture audiences."

Film, which has Scott Brady, Johanna Matz and Raymond Burr in the leads, has Rio de Janeiro as its locale but actually was lensed in Italy and Germany. Story concerns a group of models whose jobs extend to paid-for romance.

Legion was slightly less harsh on six other new releases. Rapped as "morally objectionable in part for all" (class "B") were these: "Big Combo," Allied Artists; "Blackboard Jungle," Metro; "Conquest of Space" and "Run for Cover," Paramount; "Holiday for Henrietta," Ardee Films, and "Wayward Wife," Italian Films Export. The classification applies only to the U. S. prints of both "Henrietta" and "Wife."

Treasury Ponders Tax Relief For Earnings O'Seas

Washington, March 8.

The Treasury Department may make another effort this year to provide a tax benefit for income earned abroad by branches and foreign subsidiaries of American corporations. However, there is no indication of whether the Treasury will shift its position to request inclusion of foreign earnings of U. S. motion picture companies.

That the Treasury has such a tax cut provision in mind was explained to the Senate Finance Committee last week by Secretary of the Treasury George M. Humphrey.

"Consideration is again being given," he said, "to certain changes in the revenue law with respect to taxation of income earned abroad, so as to tax corporate business in-

ZANUCK HELPS EDIT FRANCO-GERMAN 'OASIS'

Dubbed version of "Oasis," a Franco-German coproduction and the first CinemaScope film to be lensed in Europe, will be released by 20th-Fox in the U.S. later this year.

Pic starring Cornell Borchers, Michele Morgan and Pierre Brasseur and directed by Yves Allegret, was shot in German and French, with allowances made for the possibility of a later English-language version. Largely financed by 20th, Darryl F. Zanuck, 20th production topper currently in Europe, is assisting in the editing.

"Oasis" will preem first in five German cities and later in British, French, Belgian and Swiss keys. In Paris, it'll open at the Normandie at an invitational preem. Film is seen as a 20th "convincer" for European producers to make the switch to C'Scope.

DIETRICH PONDERS SCRIPT

Clouzot Would Direct on Package Deal in France

Raoul Levy, whose last feature as an indie producer, "The Proud Ones," is being handled in the U.S. by John G. McCarthy's International Affiliates, reveals that Marlene Dietrich is currently mulling a script on the French Lido which H. G. Clouzot wants to direct. Film-Sonore, Regina and Famous Artists would produce.

Clouzot's latest film was "Les Diaboliques." He's currently represented in N. Y. by "Wages of Fear."

U Buys, Re-Tags 'Bandit'

Hollywood, March 8.

Universal has purchased outright the indie production, "The Bandit," from Joseph Shaftel and will retag it "I Love A Stranger" for 1955 release slate. Shaftel made film last year as Arthur Kennedy, Betta St. John starrer. Directed by Edgar Ulmer.

MORE 'TREBLE' WOE VIA 16M?

By GENE ARNEEL

The Government antitrust suit alleging a conspiracy among distributors and exhibitors to boycott users of 16m gauge prints is shaping as the hottest battle to face the film industry since the long-drawn-out row over divorcement of theatres.

When the complaint was filed last year observers in some quarters saw it as a grandstand play on the part of careerists in the Dept. of Justice—a bid for headlines. But film attorneys at this date are plenty worried.

On the side of the film business it's said the licensing of 16m versions of feature pictures would be economic foolishness. Tentshow operators, hotels and even telecasters couldn't pay enough to compensate for the competitive damage done to theatres, industryites argue. And what law compels anyone to take a loss on the sale of product?

But regardless of the validity, or lack of it, of the D. and J. contentions, execs in the trade wince at the possible outcome. They're hoping for, and believe they're entitled to, unqualified dismissal of the action. Failing this, trouble could follow.

Legalistic opinion has it that even a tame consent decree is like

$1,704,100 Net For RKO Chain

RKO Theatres had a net operating profit, after allowing for Federal taxes, of $1,704,100 for 1954, compared with $902,200 in 1953, stockholders were informed in the annual report issued in N. Y. yesterday (Tues.) by board chairman Albert List and president Sol A. Schwartz.

With so-called special items figured in, such as net losses on the disposition of theatres and, in 1954, an increase of $1,000,000 in the reserve for taxes and contingencies, the net income for 1954 was $829,900, against a loss of $296,600 in the previous year.

Gross income fell from $32,614,800 in 1953 to $34,075,600 in 1953. Decline was due mostly to the lesser number of theatres operating last year. "On a comparable basis, however," said the report, "our income was higher and our expenses were lower."

20th Sees Outlet for CinemaScope Product Thanks to Bausch & Lomb Perfecting $100 Lens for 16m

Bausch & Lomb optical outfit has come up with a 16m CinemaScope projection lens which sells for $100 and is adaptable to all types and makes of projectors. As a result, 20th-Fox expects, within about six months, to launch on the distribution of 16m CinemaScope versions of its pix.

Company has been quietly surveying the field to determine whether it would pay to expand into narrow-gauge C'Scope. Other distribs, such as Metro and Warner Bros., have been unsqueezing their C'Scopers for 16m presentation.

Bell & Howell also has come up with a 16m CinemaScope projection lens. However, it'd sell for $180 and would be adaptable only to Bell & Howell machines.

Failure to tap the 16m market would have cost 20th a good chunk of coin. In the past, including its foreign narrow-gauge revenue, 20th has added between $2,000,00 and $3,000,000 to its annual take from the 16m field.

It's understood that 20th, as it did to launch 35m CinemaScope in the theatres, has underwritten a basic order of 16m CinemaScope lenses with Bausch & Lomb. Schools, hospitals and other institutions are large users of 16m.

Vote for the addition to the Guild's by-laws was carried by an overwhelming majority of 1,116 to 45, it was revealed by prexy Richard H. Gordon.

Exhibs 'Guess' Is That 'Peter Pan' Hurt 10-30%

Theatremen in various locations yesterday (Tues.) agreed that Monday night's two-hour "Peter Pan" show on NBC-TV doubtless hurt their business. But no one professed to have a yardstick to measure with assured accuracy to what extent grosses were dented.

Some subsequent-run exhibitors offered figures; income was off 10-to-30%, they said. But they added their calculations were based solely on rule of thumb. Ticket sales were either good or bad depending on the boxoffice pull of the picture. Figuring was on this basis: "Pan" was a highly-touted program that couldn't fail to be competitive; no matter how theatre business was on Monday evening, it would have been better had there not been this major-scale tv bid for the public attention.

Stanley Warner revenue, circuit-wide was better than the corresponding Monday of a year ago. But at this time in 1954 the chain had less potent product on exhibition.

N. Y.'s Paramount Theatre, Broadway firstrun, had income of only $300 less than the previous Monday night. This is actually less than the normal dropoff on an extended-run ("Battle Cry") film. Radio Music Hall, in contrast, was badly damaged by the tv-er, a spokesman said.

Reports from other situations pointed up the incalculables in

Promising British Films Commanding Advances; 'Court Martial,' $50,000

Pointing up increasing American distribution interest in commercial British product, Kingsley International Pictures has obtained U. S. and Canadian rights to Anthony Asquith's production, "Court Martial." Guarantee involved runs over $50,000.

"Court Martial," produced by Romulus Films, is based on the British legit hit "Carrington V. C.," a suspense drama which ran for two years on the British stage. Film version stars David Niven and Margaret Leighton. Asquith directed the pic, which revolves around a present-day military trial.

Willingness of Edward L. Kingsley, Kingsley International topper, to offer a $50,000 advance for the film is indicative of the comparative shortage of crackerjack imports from Britain. Not long ago, Max Goldberg and Irving Lesser shell out $50,000 for the rights to "Chance Meeting" (formerly "Young Lover") and Continental Distributing put up an unprecedented $375,000 guarantee for the Alec Guinness starrer, "To Paris With Love."

Alaine Poire's French Problem Films

He Wonders About Legion on Defrocked Priest Story And Code on Dope-Smuggling Theme

Seeing that audiences in France and elsewhere are responding to "big" films only, there's actually less risk in making them today.

That's the opinion of Alaine Poire, director of production and distribution for the Societe Nouvelles des Establishment Gaumont in France. Poire was in N. Y. last week (on his first U. S. trip) to o.o. the distribution situation and map plans for improving it for his pix.

Poire, whose outfit makes four to five pix a year and distributes between 10 and 12, is a man with a problem. He has a picture titled "Le Defroque," about an unfrocked priest, which was a big grosser in Canada and also did well in Italy. He's now wondering what position U. S. Catholics, and specifically the Legion of Decency, are going to take in the light of the fact that in the past there have been occasions where Catholic views on pix here have clashed with those abroad.

Example cited is the Paul Gratz pic, "God Needs Men," which won a Catholic prize in Italy but was frowned on by the Legion in N. Y. In fact, the picture is one of the few that never got a Legion rating.

Poire said Gaumont, with a view to making a better showing in the U. S. market, would make an English-language version of "Diary of Maj. Thompson" which Preston Sturges has been signed to direct. Film, which may be tinted, rolls in May.

Gaumont also is planning "Marguerite de la Nuit," a story harking back to the Faust legend and set against a 1925 background. Michele Morgan will star, with Autant-Lara to direct. Since he's eager to experiment with dubbing for the U. S., Poire said the close-ups in that picture would be shot in two versions, one in French and one with English lip movements for possible dubbing later. Miss Morgan speaks fluent English.

Another film finished by Gaumont, which also runs a circuit of some 40 theatres in France, includ-

GRACE KELLY'S 3D NAY EVOKES SUSPENSION

Suspension of Grace Kelly by Metro followed the actress's turndown of a role in the third picture in a row offered her by the studio. The studio action followed Miss Kelly's refusal to report for a role in "Jeremy Rodock." She had previously nixed parts in "Quentin Durward" and "The Cobweb."

Miss Kelly, who spends most of her time east, revealed the suspension in New York and it was confirmed on the Coast by M-G production chief Dore Schary.

Although under contract to Metro, Miss Kelly has made only two pictures for the studio—"Mogambo" and "Green Fire." However, she has been a hot loanout property for the studio, having reached bigtime status in a short period via roles in "Rear Window," "Bridges of Toko-ri," and "Country Girl" for Paramount and "Dial M for Murder" for Warner Bros. She's also appearing in an upcoming Paramount entry, "To Catch a Thief."

Hit the Deck
(C'SCOPE-MUSICAL-COLOR

Remake of stage musical, plushily done in C'Scope, color, with youthful cast emphasis; fairly entertaining, medium b.o.

Hollywood, Feb. 27.

Metro release of Joe Pasternak production. Stars Jane Powell, Tony Martin, Debbie Reynolds, Walter Pidgeon, Vic Damone, Gene Raymond, Ann Miller, Russ Tamblyn; J. Carrol Naish; features Ray Armen, Richard Anderson, Jane Darwell, Alan King, Henry Slate. Directed by Roy Rowland. Written by Sonya Levien, William Ludwig; based on the musical play by Herbert Fields as presented on stage by Vincent Youmans, from "Shore Leave" by Hubert Osborne; camera (Eastman Color), George Folsey; editor, John McSweeney Jr.; music supervised and conducted by George Stoll; musical numbers staged by Hermes Pan; music by Vincent Youmans; lyrics by Leo Robin, Clifford Grey, Irving Caesar; orchestral arrangements by Robert Van Eps; vocal supervision by Jeff Alexander. Previewed Feb. 25, '55. Running time, 112 MINS.

The emphasis of youth, in the person of a number of personable young players on the Metro contract list, has been put on this remake of the venerable legit musical, "Hit the Deck." Their presence, plus the plushy CinemaScope treatment, indicates medium possibilities at the boxoffice. Overall entertainment is fair and reaction will be mixed.

There's not much producer Joe Pasternak could do to refurbish the shopworn plot about three sailors on the loose, with three femmes on their mind, and the sundry complications that batter at the steadfast portals of Navy redtape and credibility. With the limitations, he has made it a pretty picture, replete with songs from the old footlight piece, complete with new lyrics, flashy production numbers and some scenically beautiful C'Scope shots of San Francisco. These factors are blended together as neatly as possible by Roy Rowland's direction, and the latter generates a good heart feel in some sequences when he can get away from weary material that hasn't much of the spark of life left.

The vintage musical takes on its best semblance to life when Debbie Reynolds and Russ Tamblyn are lending their enthusiasm, either alone or together, to the action. They particularly scored with "A Kiss Or Two" and an intriguing production number located in a fun park. The latter is a real pleaser, easily topping the several better moments in the long 112 minutes of footage.

Young and old should react favorably to the feeling projected by "Ciribiribin" as socked by Kay Armen with an assist from Jane Powell, Miss Reynolds, Vic Damone, Tony Martin and "Why, Oh Why?," which finds the Misses Powell, Reynolds and Ann Miller lamenting about men as they wait for a bus on the street of San Francisco, pleases, as does Martin's singing of "Keepin' Myself For You" to a chorus line topped by Miss Miller, and, later, "More Than You Know," again to Miss Miller. The latter's special piece is a sexy mamboed "Lady From the Bayou," while Miss Powell and Damone join on "I Know That You Know," and her solo number is "Sometimes I'm Happy." Opening and closing the show is "Hallelujah," the finale including a cast roundup. Also heard is a medley of "Join the Navy" and "Loo-Loo," serving as a situation setup for some chase comedy.

The plot, as framed by Sonya Levien and William Ludwig from the Herbert Fields musical play which Vincent Youmans presented on stage, deals with three gobs, Martin, Damone and Tamblyn, who come to San Francisco on leave; Martin to see his chorus sweetie, Miss Miller, Damone to visit his mother, Miss Armen, and Tamblyn to salute his admiral father, Walter Pidgeon. The boys mistakenly try to defend the honor of Miss Powell, Tamblyn's sister, from the designs of Gene Raymond, romeo stage star. A scrap ensues, after which Tamblyn and Miss Reynolds, a musicomedy star, develop a romance, and the remainder of the footage is giving over to the sailors dodging a comic shore patrol consisting of Alan King and Henry Slate while they straighten out the mess, their own romances and the amor between Miss Armen and J. Carrol Naish.

The girls are fetchingly costumed by Helen Rose, the entire cast and furbishings prettily photographed in Eastman Color by George Folsey, and Hermes Pan's musical numbers staging keeps the feet in time. Other technical credits are equally able. Brog.

Rage at Dawn
(COLOR)

Good Randolph Scott outdoor actioner with average possibilities in that market.

Hollywood, March 8.

RKO release of Nat Holt production. Stars Randolph Scott, Forrest Tucker, Mala Powers, J. Carrol Naish; features Edgar Buchanan, Myron Healey, Howard Petrie, Ray Teal, William Forrest, Denver Pyle, Trevor Bardette, Kenneth Tobey. Directed by Tim Whelan. Screenplay, Horace McCoy; story, Frank Gruber; camera (Technicolor), Ray Rennahan; editor, Harry Marker; music, Paul Sawtell. Previewed March 4, '55. Running time, 86 MINS.

(Aspect ratio: 1.85-1)

Behind the rather odd title of "Rage At Dawn" is a good Randolph Scott westerner that shapes up to average possibilities in the outdoor action market. It's the story of some early-day badmen, the notorious Reno Brothers, who preceded such other baddies as the Youngers, the Daltons, etc., in a life of crime that paid off at the end of a rope, and has been put together expertly by Nat Holt for RKO release.

While western in flavor, site of the Frank Gruber story, which Horace McCoy scripted, is early Indiana, and standing in for this frontier terrain is the Columbia Historic State Park in California. Enacting the Renos are Forrest Tucker, J. Carrol Naish, Myron Healey and Richard Garland, four bad brothers who regularly raid banks and other cash boxes around the state and return to the safety of their own county, where they control the law represented by Edgar Buchanan, Howard Petrie and Ray Teal.

To bring these baddies together with Scott, special agent assigned to catch them, the plot has the hero and Kenneth Tobey posing as train robbers. They get into the Reno gang and Scott even participates in a holdup with the crooks before he stages a train heist that is to prove their downfall. With the robbers jailed, the citizens of the county become aroused enough to form a mob and lynch them just to make sure there will be no escape from justice. While probably historically correct, this finale act seems rather anti-climactic and permits the script to do a little soapboxing about the evils of mob rule.

Tim Whelan's direction scores best in the action sequences, being less competent in the more personal conflicts between characters, this latter seeming forced in contrast to the easy stride of the picture when dealing with the broader phases. Scott is a good hero, and even has a romance with Mala Powers, sister of the bad Remos, who are capably portrayed by Tucker, Naish and the others. Buchanan, Petrie and Teal form a choice trio of political crooks and Denver Pyle does well as a good Reno.

The Technicolor lensing by Ray Rennahan is ably done and the other behind-camera assists are expertly handled. Brog.

Yellowneck
(COLOR)

Offbeat but overlong trip through the Florida Everglades by deserters of the Confederate Army. Doubtful b.o.

Republic release of Empire Studios production (Harlow G. Frederick). Stars Lin McCarthy, Stephen Courtleigh, Berry Kroeger, Harold Gordon, and Bill Mason. Direction and original story by R. John Hugh. Screenplay, Nat S. Linden; camera (Trucolor), Charles O'Rork; editor, William A. Slade; original music, Laurence Rosenthal. Previewed in N. Y. March 2, '55. Running time, 83 MINS.

The Sergeant	Lin McCarthy
The Colonel	Stephen Courtleigh
Plunkett	Berry Kroeger
Cockney	Harold Gordon
The Kid	Bill Mason

"Yellowneck," the title of the Republic release, is the term used during the Civil War by the Confederate Army for a deserter. This is the story of five "yellownecks" who, for various reasons, deserted the Confederate cause and sought to escape to Cuba by way of the treacherous Florida Everglades. It's a grim, morbid yarn, overlong at 83 minutes, and of doubtful boxoffice appeal.

Filmed in the heart of the Florida Everglades by Empire Studios, it punches home effectively the feel of the jungle area—the heat, the storms, the animals, the reptiles, and the annoying bugs the men face in their aimless search for the sea where a boat is supposed to carry them to safety. But the trudge through the jungle, added to the danger of hostile Seminole Indians, appears repetitious to the point that one wants to cry out, "Enough, enough!"

In addition to the elements and the dangers of the Everglades and the Indians, the personalities of each individual member of the group play a key role in the fight for survival. There's a Colonel, addicted to drink and sick with shame for having retreated; a sergeant, disgusted with the futility of a pointless war; a young private, an idolizer and follower of the sergeant; Plunkett, a licentious thief, and Cockney, an English mercenary of low character. The battle against the jungle and the Indians has the five men at each other's throats before long.

One by one each of the men meets a horrible death. The manner of each death is presented in such a way that it's not for the squeamish. The colonel gets an arrow in the back but doesn't die until after an unpleasant delirium. A rattlesnake gets the Cockney; an alligator takes care of Plunkett; and the sergeant sinks to his end in a quagmire. The kid, practically out of his mind, gets to the sea, but there's no boat there, only the wide, empty sea.

There's apparently a moral in Nat S. Linden's screenplay of R. John Hugh's original story. There's an inkling of it in the conversations of the kid and the sergeant and has something to do with standing up and facing your responsibilities rather than running away.

"Yellowneck" has the ingredients of a good off-beat film, but its moral and obvious effort to make use of the Everglades background could have been presented dramatically in a half-hour video. The five-man cast—Lin McCarthy, Stephen Courtleigh, Berry Kroeger, Harold Gordon, and Bill Mason—carry out their assignments well. Charles O'Rork's Trucolor photography succeeds in capturing the atmosphere of the Everglades. Hugh's direction and other technical credits, including Laurence Rosenthal's music, are okay. Holl.

Hell's Outpost

Lusty outdoor film geared for action houses.

Hollywood, March 2.

Republic release of a Joe Kane production. Stars Rod Cameron, Joan Leslie, Chill Wills, John Russell; features Jim Davis, Ben Cooper, Kristine Miller, Taylor Holmes, Barton MacLane. Directed by Kane. Screenplay, Kenneth Gamet; based on novel, "Silver Rock," by Luke Short; camera, Jack Marta; editor, Richard L. Van Enger; music, R. Dale Butts. Reviewed March 2, '55. Running time, 89 MINS.

Beth Hodes	Kristine Miller
Alec Bacchione	Ben Cooper
Timothy Byers	Taylor Holmes
Sheriff Olson	Barton MacLane
Mrs. Moffit	Ruth Lee
Harry Bogue	rthur Q. Bryan
Hotel Clerk	Oliver Blake

This lusty outdoor film is tailored for the requirements of the action trade, although it could be snapped up by the trimming of a good 10 minutes. The marquee strength of its four star names coupled with usually good movement should carry feature through for okay returns.

Struggle for a tungsten mine motivates the Kenneth Gamet screenplay, adapted from the Luke Short novel, "Silver Rock," with plenty of dirty work by the heavy. Yarn takes its premise from the try of a Korean vet to worm his way into an interest in the mine through claiming friendship with the owner's son, killed in the war. He's honest in trying to develop the mine, but finds stiff opposition right down the line from the man who has been trying to get it away from the owner for years.

Rod Cameron as the vet delivers his customary rugged performance and gets in a couple of gusty brawls with the heavy, played by John Russell for good effect. Joan Leslie handles the femme lead prettily, pursued by Russell but leaning romantically toward Cameron. Chill Wills, as fourth star, is the mine owner, a serious role for him, but he also gets in a song number, "Packin' the Mail," his composition. In satisfactory support are Jim Davis as a newspaper editor; Kristine Miller, sister of Russell; Ben Cooper, Cameron's pal; Taylor Holmes, a crooked lawyer, and Barton MacLane, sheriff.

Joe Kane as associate producer-director establishes a pace after a slow start which builds well to a fast climax, and Jack Marta's outdoor camera work is expert. Whit.

Ma and Pa Kettle At Waikiki

Strictly for the Kettle fans and last with Percy Kilbride as Pa.

Hollywood, March 8.

Universal release of Leonard Goldstein production. Stars Marjorie Main, Percy Kilbride; features Lori Nelson, Byron Palmer, Russell Johnson, Hilo Hattie, Loring Smith. Directed by Lee Sholem. Screenplay, Jack Henley, Harry Clork, Elwood Ullman; story by Connie Lee Bennett; camera, Clifford Stine; editor, Virgil Vogel; musical direction, Joseph Gershenson. Previewed March 1, '55. Running time, 79 MINS.

Birdie Hicks	Esther Dale
Secretary to Rodney Kettle	Claudette Thornton

(Aspect ratio: 1.85-1)

A wacky adventure in Waikiki is used in this latest release in the Universal series to springboard a mild brand of comedy. In the territories where previous entries have built a following for these two escapees from the 1947 "The Egg and I," this one can be figured to serve its purpose.

With this release, Percy Kilbride departs the series and his Pa Kettle character, and Universal plans continuing the comedies without a father for the large brood of 15 young Kettles.

When a cousin in Waikiki gets in health and financial troubles, he sends an emergency call to Pa to come take over operations of a pineapple factory until he recovers. Pa, Ma, and oldest daughter, prettily played by Lori Nelson, head for the islands, where papa proceeds to cause an explosion in the factory, get himself kidnapped and then have all of the adventures rebound for the good.

Marjorie Main and Kilbride team in the kind of antics their fans expect, while Miss Nelson pairs romantically with Byron Palmer, a mating that doesn't get much of a play because most of the footage is given over to Pa's difficulties being a tycoon. Loring Smith plays the bombasting cousin, while Lowell Gilmore is the promoter trying to take away the canned fruit business, an abortive scheme in which Russell Johnson participates. Hilo Hattie and Charley Lung head up an island family that counterparts the Kettles.

This production by the late Leonard Goldstein actually was lensed years back, but held up in release while later comedies went out. Lee Sholom's direction does what it can with the chuckle intents of the screenplay by Jack Henley, Harry Clork and Elwood Ullman, from a story by Connie Lee Bennett. Technical credits are standard. Brog.

Seven Angry Men

Mild action-drama about John Brown's crusade to free the slaves. Talky and slow; a programmer.

Hollywood, March 7.

Allied Artists release of Vincent M. Fennelly production. Stars Raymond Massey, Debra Paget, Jeffrey Hunter; features Larry Pennell, Leo Gordon, John Smith, James Best, Dennis Weaver. Directed by Charles Marquis Warren. Story and screenplay, Daniel B. Ullman; camera, Ellsworth Fredricks; editor, Richard C. Meyer; music, Carl Brandt. Previewed March 3, '55. Running time, 91 MINS.

John Brown	Raymond Massey
Elizabeth	Debra Paget
Owen	Jeffrey Hunter

Green	James Edwards
Wilson	John Pickard
Newby	Smoki Whitfield
Doyle	Jack Lomas
Col. Washin	Robert Simon
Doctor	Dabbs Greer
Mrs. Brown	Ann Tyrrell
Col. Lee	Robert Osterloh

(Aspect ratio: 1.85-1)

This Allied Artists release dips back into history for a story about John Brown's crusade to free the slaves. It fails to qualify as worthwhile entertainment, being slow and talky. Some familiar names may help, but the grossing outlook is not promising.

The Vincent M. Fennelly production stars Raymond Massey as the fanatical Brown, a cold-blooded murderer who left a path of blood across history's pages as presented in this Daniel B. Ullman screen story. While the religious fervor that moved Brown is shown, the character still seems to lack proper motivation, as do the other people and events, including the battle at Harper's Ferry, Virginia, that proved Brown's downfall. Charles Marquis Warren's direction doesn't do much probing and the portrayals are shallow.

Picture opens with Brown's efforts to get Kansas into the Union as a free state, depicting the killings that ensued, mostly retaliations on both sides. After this section of history is dealt with, plot moves on to Brown's rallying of money and supporters to wipe out slavery throughout the country, climaxing in his futile stand at Harper's Ferry when he is taken by the then Colonel Robert E. Lee and hanged for his crimes.

Jeffrey Hunter plays one of Brown's many sons, who meets and marries Debra Paget while aiding his father. These two younger players are competent, as is Massey, but the performances haven't much impact. Leo Gordon does the Rev. White who opposes Brown in Kansas; Larry Pennell, John Smith, James Best, Dennis Weaver, Guy Williams and Tom Irish are among the sons, and James Edwards portrays a Negro follower of the fanatic.

The lensing by Ellsworth Fredricks and the other technical credits are average. Brog.

Comte de Monte-Cristo
(Count of Monte-Cristo)
(FRANCO-ITALIAN—COLOR)

Paris, Feb. 22.

Sirius release of Jacques Roitfeld-Cineroma production. Stars Jean Marais; features Lia Amanda, Folco Lulli, Daniel Ivernel, Jacques Castelot, Roger Pigaut, Daniel Cauchy. Directed by Robert Vernay. Screenplay, Georges Neveux, Vernay from novel by Alexandre Dumas; camera (Gevacolor), Robert Juillard; editor, Monique Kirsonoff. At Broadway, Paris. Running time, 86 MINS.

This is part two, "The Vengeance," of this episodically distributed version of the well known Alexandre Dumas romantic yarn. First part, "The Treason," was released previously. Neither could stand alone for U. S. purposes and would have to be welded together for any opportunities with time run of 183 minutes naturally needing much pruning. Tale is told soundly with little film imagination, but engenders the usual interest paid any well made romantic opus. For the U.S., it is primarily for special situations.

This spans time by having Monte-Cristo relate his past adventures to his loyal follower, the man who saved him after his escape from the Chateau D'If where three treacherous enemies had put him by trumping up a charge that he was conspiring with Napoleoen.

Narrative then has him tracking down the three men, and by exposure of their dastardly past leading to the murder of one and the suicide of the others. He renounces going back to his youthful love, now freed from a husband and goes off with a young Eastern Princess.

All the characters of "Vengeance" cavort in this many years later, but romantic license is taken, for none of the seems to have aged very much. Jean Marais has the proper romantic dash for the vengeful count and the heavies are well done by Jacques Castelot, as the jaundiced procurer; Roger Pigaut, as the false general, and Daniel Ivernel, as the cowardly Caderousse. Color is uneven but techincal gloss is high. There is something in this for youth appeal, and for chopping into a possible small series for tv. Mosk

Verliebte Leute
(Loving Couples)
(AUSTRIAN)

Vienna, Feb. 22.

Sascha film release of Neusser-Hope production. Stars Peter Lasetti; features Hannelore Bollmann, Doris Kirchner. Directed by Franz Antel. Screenplay, Herbert Reinecker; camera, Hans Theyeri music, Lotar Olias. At Wienzeile Kino, Vienna. Running time, 90 MINS.

This modestly budgeted tale of a love affair in the beautiful Salzkammergut stands a few notches above the average. With an interest-holding story line, acceptable performances and so-so direction, "Loving Couples" is a film tending to prove that West German and Austrian coproduction may soon figure in world competition.

Peter Pasetti has the lead role, that of a chauffeur, who meets a telephone operator, Hannelore Bollmann. He becomes convinced she is the daughter of a millionaire. Yarn gets more complicated when others further muddle the affair. Pasetti is excellent but the two femmes are routine.

Of the support, the routine fun-making is well taken care of by Oskor Sima, as the millionaire, and Hans Moser as a garage-owner. They surpass the remainer or the cast. Frank Antel directed without much imagination, but cameraman Hans Theyer showed good taste.

Lotar Olias cannot be expected to write a hit tune every time, and perhaps he couldn't do any better in this pic. Other technical details are good. Maas.

Mary Pickford's Active Ideas for Producing 'If' She Gets Studio

Los Angeles, March 2.

Mary Pickford will go in for motion picture and telefilm production in case she wins full possession of the Samuel Goldwyn lot, currently on the auction block with the deadline for seal bids set for April 2. Miss Pickford owns 41/80ths of the property and Goldwyn owns 39/80ths, and both are bidding for complete control.

Miss Pickford told a press conference that she is prepping a story about a female Chinese pirate and also has a complete script on "There Goes Lona Henry," based n a novel she bought some time ago. In addition, she said, she has 26 other story properties.

If she is winner in the auction sale, Miss Pickford stated, she will throw the studio open to rental producers within 24 hours with new equipment, such as cameras, lights, parallels, etc. She said she hoped her pending suit against Goldwyn for an accounting of rentals and his counter-suit for maintenance will be settled out of court without the expense of a long legal battle.

Miss Pickford stressed the fact that she has no intention of selling her share of stock in United Artists, of which she is a third owner, with the Krim-Benjamin management group owning the rest. UA sales during 1955, she asserted, are expected to reach $50,000,000, compared with about $43,000,000 last year.

JULIA FAYE'S REPEAT

She's Played Queen In First 'Commandments' Production

Hollywood, March 8.

Julia Faye, who played the Egyptian queen in the first version of Cecil B. DeMille's "The Ten Commandments" 31 years ago, has been signed for a role in the remake at Paramount. This time she will play Elisheba, wife of Aaron, the brother of Moses. Martha Scott has also been signed for a featured role.

In addition to these two the cast thus far consists of Charlton Heston, Anne Baxter, Yul Brynner, Yvonne De Carlo, Edward G. Robinson, Debra Paget, Sir Cedric Hardwicke, John Derek, Vincent Price, Nina Foch, John Carradine and Olive Deering.

'Karamoja' Posters Lewd

Milwaukee, March 8.

A warrant charging the Fox Wisconsin Amusement Corp., operator of the Palace Theatre, with displaying "lewd and obscene" posters in connection with the showing of "Karamoja" was issued here yesterday (Mon.) by Asst. District Attorney Robert Sullivan.

The Milwaukee Police Department and the City Motion Picture Commission held this pic and "Halfway to Hell" objectionable and both were withdrawn Sunday after five showings.

DROP HARDTOPS, ENTER NEW LINES

Although enjoying a generally upbeat market currently, the big theatre chains are giving all their properties a careful onceover. They're unloading the weak sister theatres or consolidating their holdings to tighten the reins should the present prosperity period take a dip. The experience of a few years ago, when film houses were considered precarious real estate are not forgotten. The circuit trend now is toward diversification, either in show biz or other commercial ventures, and to fewer hardtop theatres, although the drive-ins are increasingly eyed as a sound investment.

Majority of the circuits, under consent decree restrictions, have completed the divestiture provisions. However, several are continuing to sell theatres not required by the Government. One of the most active sellers recently has been the Stanley Warner circuit, which, at the same time, has been active on the diversification front as, for example, its takeover of Cinerama, its acquisition of the International Latex Corp., and its move into television station operation. Prexy S. H. Fabian has frequently stated that the company is continuing its prowl for other diversification ventures and Wall Streeter David Baird, chairman of Stanley's finance committee, has been given the task of uncovering new investment possibilities.

Pattern of SW's unloading of theatres is curious. It involves a complete pullout of all interests in a particular city. For example, last week it sold all its four theatres and adjacent real estate in Atlantic City, N. J., to George Hamid, operator of other theatres in the resort city as well as the Steel Pier. Previously, SW peddled all its Santa Barbara, Cal., holdings, two theatres and an eight-story office building, to Metropolitan Theatres Corp., headed by Coast theatre operator Sherrill Corwin.

(Stanley executives have declined to comment on the reasoning behind this type of unloading.)

RKO Theatres and National Theatres have also been peddling properties, mostly theatres that haven't been paying off for the chains. At a recent stockholders meeting, National's prexy, Elmer C. Rhoden, said that as a result of the company's compliance with the Government's consent decree and its divestiture of 105 theatres, the circuit was embarking on a program to increase its earnings. This would include liquidation of unproductive properties as well as investments in additional theatres (presumably drive-ins, and with Government permission) and allied phases of the industry.

Loew's Theatres, which has completed its divestiture program, is actively prowling the ozoner market, seeking to add to the Oak Park, Ill., Twin-Drive-In it acquired recently after the Government okayed the purchase. Loew's Theatres, it's understood, is also in search for other type of investments.

Decision of the big circuits to work close to the vest is giving smaller chains an opportunity to expand their holdings. In addition to the Hamid and Corwin buys, Harry Brandt has picked up a number of Loew's houses in the N. Y. area. Similarly, other minor circuits have latched on to theatres which the big boys are shedding. That these purchasers are showing confidence in the future of the theatre business is evidenced by their plans for modernizing, refurnishing, and reequipping. Both Hamid and Corwin have set elaborate new operation plans.

Stan Brown's New Post

Hollywood, March 8.

National Theatres has created the new post of Director of Advertising Research and Stan Brown has been upped from present spot as FWC district manager to head department.

Ernest Sturm of San Diego succeeds Brown.

Prosperity Picture Bleeding at Edges; Weaknesses in Widescreen Product

The national boxoffice currently presents an annoying paradox—an extreme between well-liked, sock product and pictures which range from so-so to just plain mediocre. Traffic at the wickets of film theatres over the country reflects such setup, par usual, in gross totals. For example, an average big key city recently had two or three big grosses while the remainder of the first-run pix fell on their individual faces.

Oddly enough, nearly every company has had its quota recently of thin grossing films. Only two companies have had a steady string of big grossers or at least consistent grossing pix which have meant fine revenue in the long run for the companies.

The headache foisted on exhibitors is that they must show a reasonable profit week after week. And at the present time there don't appear to be enough big money films to go around.

Generally an offish season of the year, with Lenten influences and income tax burdens to bother, some keys have reported film trade is in the doldrums. Such cities, notably N. Y., report biz lagging to a point comparable with last year when the boxoffice was anything but good.

An unfortunate development is that the current string of lukewarm screen vehicles comes at a time when the public apparently was becoming more than ever sold on films as top entertainment as against all other forms of amusement. The lineup of so-so product arrives at the same time a number of smash grossers are out in the keys, pictures like "Battle Cry," "Country Girl," "Far Country," "Long Gray Line," "Bridges at Toko-ri," "Leagues Under Sea," "Vera Cruz" and "Show Business." Last two currently are playing smaller cities or subsequent-run.

Such product is responsible for greater awareness by potential film patrons. Some of these pix have drawn so much attention that it has resulted in editorial comment in the dailies. This in turn obviously has caught the eye of the average non-cinema attending citizen.

Of course, the big catch to this welcome development is the release by major companies of numerous routine to poor b.o. pix. In other words, the advantage of having more people than ever interested in films bids fair to be washed away in a flood of substandard screen product.

It's okay for the Hollywood producers to point to another big dimensional and perhaps artistic screen vehicle, say the exhibs. But this same exhibitor is worried about when the production end will get in the groove again and start to turn out consistently strong boxoffice product.

Typical of the exhib attitude is what one of the bigger city operators said about a recent b.o. clinker: "Sure, it has widescreen—and color — and is a well done story. But that pic hasn't a single star the current public will pay money to go to see. It won't last two weeks in my house (where three weeks is rated a minimum for a good pic)."

P.S.—It lasted less than two weeks.

Autry's Company Trying Luck On Theatre Screen

Hollywood, March 8.

Flying A Productions, headed by Gene Autry and Armand Schaefer, will shift temporarily from television filming to make a theatrical feature, "The Lady Takes a Swing," starring Johnny Weissmuller and his wife, former golf champion Allene Gates.

Picture will be shot in Acapulco, Mexico, with Schaefer directing and Lou Gray producing.

Dispute Postal Action; 'Lysistrata' Text Looms As Salient Precedent

Washintgon, March 6.

Federal regulations, having the effect of censoring motion pictures imported into the U. S. (and the movement of films through the mails) will be influenced by the outcome of a suit filed in the U. S. District Court Friday (4).

Action was brought by Harry A. Levinson, rare book dealer of Beverly Hills, Cal., to enjoin the Post Office Department from keeping a copy of "Lysistrata," which he imported from England. Book was seized in the mails by the post office in Los Angeles and turned over to postal officials in Washington.

In battling the constitutionality of the post office action, Edward de Grazia, attorney for Levinson, pointed to the Supreme Court decisions in two motion picture censorship cases in New York—Burstyn v. Wilson ("The Miracle" case) and Commercial Pictures v. Regents, which dealt with censorship of the French import, "La Ronde." Supreme Court overthrew the New York censorship statute in both instances.

De Grazia pointed out that Aristophanes' play, "Lysistrata" is one of the great literary classics. He went on to add: "Virtually all the Federal cases bearing upon the postal 'obscenity' statute are cases involving criminal prosecutions, and not cases of exclusion by the Postmaster General. Thus, this challenge of the constitutionality of the exclusionary provisions of the postal statute, and the issues herein raised, are without precedent. If the court finds, as it properly should, that the exclusionary provisions are unconstitutional, the criminal provisions will, of course, remain intact. . . .

"The chief issue here before the court is whether the exclusionary provisions of the postal statute are not repugnant to the 1st and 5th Amendment."

Excluding something from the mails as "obscene" is comparable to pre-censorship. Hence, anything which would knock out the exclusionary provisions for printed matter, would also affect motion picture films moving through the mails and also imported films which was barred from entry into the country by Customs officials.

'LATUKO' SHOCKS DETROIT

Suggested Deletions Leave Little Left In Documentary

Detroit, March 8.

Greta Garbo in "The Kiss" was substituted for "Latuko" when the Museum of Natural History documentary of the nudist African tribe lost a bout with the censors. Film had been scheduled as part of Wayne University film series.

The University, a City-supported school, decided on substitution after the Censor Bureau of the Police Department had "suggested" so many deletions of the ungirdled natives that there weren't any Latukos left. Inspector Herbert Case said the pix featured too prominently the undraped pelvic zone.

'MOON IS BLUE' RULING DUE IN KANSAS APR. 9

Kansas City, March 8.

Kansas State Supreme Court is expected to rule April 9 on whether "The Moon Is Blue" is to be still enjoined from playing or permitted to play theatres in Kansas.

Tribunal has the case on appeal from a lower court's reversal of the Kansas Board of Review's tabu. Despite this reversal, the film has been kept out of exhibition pending the Supreme Court's determination.

L.A. Holds Even; Russell Robust 20G, 'Biz' Brisk 29G, 'Timberjack' $10,000, 'Battle' Big 22G, 5th, 'Girl' 9G, 11th

Los Angeles, March 8.

With three of four new openers on the good side at the wickets, local firstrun biz pace is holding up even though h.o.s and extended-runs predominate. Some of the longrunners are starting to fade. "Underwater!" looms robust $20,000 at Hollywood Paramount while "Show Business" is taking a brisk $29,000 playing in four locations.

"N.Y. Confidential" looms nifty $29,000 in three sites. Slight $10,000 is expected for combo of "Timberjack" and "Hell's Outpost," also in three houses.

"Country Girl" and "Leagues Under Sea" continue to show strength despite length of runs. Each likely will hit $9,600 for 11th showcase weeks. "Battle Cry" still is nice $22,00 in fifth round, two spots, but "Gray Line" is rated only moderate $15,000 in third frame, also two situations.

'Toko-ri' Tall 14G Balto; 'Line' 16G

Baltimore, March 8.

Rainy weekend is hurting firstrun biz here this round despite some strong new entries. "Bridges At Toko-ri" is tall at Keith's, while "Long Gray Line" is socko at the Town. "Bad Day At Black Rock" is sturdy at the Century. "Cammile" is plenty boff at the Little. "Women's Prison" is slow at the New. "Sign of Pagan" was still solid in third Hipp week.

Estimates for This Week

Century (Loew's-UA) (3,000; 25-65-95)—"Bad Day Black Rock" (M-G). Brisk $11,000. Last week, "Long John Silver" (UA), $7,000.

H.O.s Hobble K. C. But 'Line' Smooth 12G, 'Feather' 13G, 'Battle' 8G, 4th

Kansas City, March 8.

Big newcomer here is "Long Gray Line," headed for nifty biz at the Midland, and a holdover. Other newcomer is "White Feather" which is getting moderate play in four Fox Midwest houses. Otherwise holdovers are the rule. "Underwater!" being good at the Missouri, "Battle Cry" continuing strong at Paramount in fourth week and "Many Rivers To Cross" modest at Roxy. Weather went back to coolish temperatures over the weekend.

Estimates for This Week

Glen (Dickinson) (750; 85-$1)— "One Summer Happiness" (Indie) (3d wk). Okay $2,000. Holds. Last week, $2,500.

Kimo (Dickinson) (504; 85-$1)— "Little Kidnappers" (UA) (3d wk). Fair $1,400. Last week, $1,500.

Midland (Loew's) (3,500; 70-90)— "Long Gray Line" (Col). Fancy $12,000. Holds over. Last week, "Bad Day Black Rock" (M-G) and "Crest Wave" (M-G) (2d wk), $6,000.

Missouri (RKO) (2,650; 65-90)— "Underwater!" (RKO) and "Utopia" (Indie) (2d wk). Nice $7,000. Last week, $12,000.

Orpheum (Fox Midwest) (1,913; 75-$1)—"Racers" (20th) (2d wk). Slow $5,000. Last week, house coupled with Uptown, Fairway and Granada, "Racers" got okay $14,000.

Paramount (United Par) (1,900; 75-$1)—"Battle Cry" (WB) (4th wk). Hotsy $8,000. Third time in eight years house has had a 4-week run. Last week, $11,000.

Roxy (Durwood) (879; 70-90) — "Many Rivers To Cross" (M-G) (2d wk). Moderate $4,500. Last week, $7,000.

Tower, Uptown, Fairway, Granada (Fox Midwest) (2,100; 2,043; 700; 1,217; 65-85)—"White Feather" (U) and "Bob Mathias Story" (AA). Average $13,000. Last week, Tower alone had "6 Bridges To Cross" (U) (2d wk) with $4,500.

Vogue (Golden) (550; 75-$1) — "Faust and Devil" (Col). Medium $1,500. Last week, "American in Paris" (M-G) and "Lili" (M-G) (reissues) (2d wk), $1,500.

'Country Girl' Great $20,000, Cincy; 'Confidential' 10G, 'Toko-ri' 8G, 3d

Cincinnati, March 8.

"Country Girl," this week's downtown cage champ, has the big Albee in velvet while tilting general outlook over town to a healthy plane. "New York Confidential," also a new bill, shapes okay for the Palace. Two holdovers, "Battle Cry" and "Bridges at Toko-ri," are potent third rounders. "Cinerama" maintains a solid stride in 38th week at the Capitol.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (3,100; 75-$1.25)— "Country Girl" (Par). Great $20,000. Holds for second stanza. Last week, "Battle Cry" (WB) (2d wk), $17,000.

Capitol (Ohio Cinema Corp.) (1,376; $1.20-$2.65) — "Cinerama" (Indie) (38th wk). Holding at last week's strong $18,500 clip.

Grand (RKO) (1,400; 75-$1.25)— "Battle Cry" (WB) (m.o.). Hefty $9,000 in sight for third downtown session. Last week, "Black Shield" (U) and "Tanganyika" (U), $7,000 at 90c scale.

Keith's (Shor) (1,500; 75-$1.25)— "Bridges at Toko-ri" (Par) (3d wk). Sturdy $8,000 or near after $10,000 second round.

Palace (RKO) (2,600; 75-84) — "New York Confidential" (WB). Good $10,000. Last week, "Jupiter's Darling" (M-G), same in 8 days.

'Girl' Mighty 14G, L'ville; 'Line' 15G

Louisville, March 8.

New boxoffice entries this week are making a great stand against variable weather, and a steadily rising Ohio River. Predictions of a crest in the river by Sunday (6) had to be revised to later date. When rising waters create concern cutting into the firstrun biz. However, despite all this, all houses are doing fine. "Country Girl" looks terrific at the Kentucky while "Long, Gray Line" at the State is excellent. "6 Bridges to Cross" at the Rialto also is good.

Estimates for This Week

Kentucky (Switow) (1,000; 75-$1) —"Country Girl" (Par). Solid b.o. impact at opening, and terrific $14,000 looms. Last week, "Yellow Mountain" (Par) and "Abbott-Costello Meet Keystone Kops" (U), $6,000.

Mary Anderson (People's) (1,000; 75-$1)—"Battle Cry" (WB) (4th wk). Maintaining hefty stride at $7,000 after $9,000 last week.

Rialto (Fourth Avenue) (3,000; 50-75)—"6 Bridges to Cross" (U) and "Sleeping Tiger" (Indie). Good $11,000. Last week, "Racers" (20th), $10,500.

State (United Artists) (3,000; 65-86)—"Long Gray Line" (Col). Shaping excellent $15,000, and may hold. Last week, "Hit Deck" (M-G) and "White Orchid" (Col), $11,000.

H.O.s Hot, New Pix Dull In Mpls.; 'Darling' Lean 8G, 'Toko-ri' Big 10G, 2d

Minneapolis, March 8.

Holdovers rule the roost here currently. They're in the majority and getting the bulk of the total gross. "Jupiter's Darling," "Many Rivers to Cross" and "Captain Lightfoot" comprise the newcomers and none is able to hold a boxoffice candle to the h.o.s "Cinerama," "Battle Cry," "Country Girl" and "Bridges of Toko-ri" all are continuing big. "Battle Cry" is in its fourth and "Country Girl" in third round. A second lofty canto is being racked up by "Bridges." The weather still is a handicap.

Estimates for This Week

Century (S-W) (1,140; $1.75-$2.65)—"Cinerama" (Indie) (4th wk). Holds at powerful pace with sold-out special matinees. Tall $14,000. Last week, $15,000.

Gopher (Berger) (1,000; 65-85)— "Many Rivers to Cross" (M-G). Taylor's mixed opi ions probably holding back patrons. Mild $4,500. Last week, "Black Tuesday" (UA), $3,000.

State (Goldberg) (875; 65-90)— "Bad Day at Black Rock" (M-G) and "Young Wives' Tale" (Indie) (2d wk). Slow $3,200. Last week, $4,500.

Chi Strong; 'Line' Snappy $33,000, 'Hell' Hot 16G, 'Battle' Wow 50G, 2d, 'Country' Lofty 25G, 'Girl' Huge 33G

Chicago, March 8.

Biz continues strong here this round with top pix at key situations overcoming Lenten slump. Upbeat is boosted by continued mild weather as five new films preemed this frame. "Long Gray Line," hypoed by much drumbeating, should do a snappy $33,000 in first week at the Oriental.

"Gate of Hell" looms sock $16,000 opening frame at the Loop. First session at the World of "Illicit Interlude" is solid $5,000. "Belles of St. Trinian's looks nifty $5,500 at Carnegie for the same round. "Trouble In Store" at Ziegfeld is sturdy $3,000 on opener.

In second session, "Many Rivers To Cross," with Joyce Bryant helming vaude, looks sluggish at the Chicago. "Battle Cry" continues smash at the State-Lake in the same stanza.

"Far Country" at the Woods is holding well in the second round while "Black Tuesday" and "Lone Gun" combo shapes solid in the same week at the Roosevelt. "Capt. Lightfoot" is fairish in the third frame at the McVickers.

"Country Girl" continues terrific at United Artists also in the third. "Cinerama" stays sturdy in the 84th stanza at the Palace.

Estimates for This Week

Estimates Are Net

Film gross estimates as reported herewith from the various key cities, are net; i.e., without usual tax. Distributors share on net take, when playing percentage, hence the estimated figures are net income.

The parenthetic admission prices, however, as indicated, include the U. S. amusement tax.

'Deck' Dandy 16G, Cleve.; Janie 14G

Cleveland, March 8.

Main stands are running into Lenten barriers but "Underwater!" is fine at Palace. However, "Hit the Deck" is standout with a big take at the State. Fourth laps of Allen's "Battle Cry" and Stillman's "Country Girl" remain great.

Estimates for This Week

Allen (S-W) (3,000; 70-$1)—"Battle Cry" (WB) (4th wk). Lusty $18,000 after $19,000 last week.

Hipp (Telem't) (3,700; 60-90)— "Smoke Signal" (U) and "Jesse James' Women" (Rep). Average $11,000. Last week, "The Racers" (20th), $12,000.

Lower Mall (Community) (585; $1)—"Romeo and Juliet" (UA) (2d wk). Satisfactory $3,000. Last week, $3,500.

Ohio (Loew's) (1,200; 60-90)— "Bamboo Prison" (Col) and "Women's Prison" (Col). Light $7,500. Last week, "Timberjack" (Rep), $4,000.

Palace (RKO) (3,287; 60-90)— "Underwater!" (RKO). Big $14,000 for Jane Russell starrer. Last week, "Americano" (RKO), $12,000.

'Darling' Lusty $15,000, Pitt; 'Holiday' Sockeroo 20G, 3d, 'Battle' 27G, 2d

Pittsburgh, March 8.

"Battle Cry" continues its blockbusting in Stanley second round after topping everything this house has had in a long time, including "Leagues Under Sea" and "A Star Is Born." "Jupiter's Darling" looks good at Penn. Pre-Oscar festival of reissues at Harris, "On the Waterfront" and "Caine Mutiny," at Harris, look nice. "Cinerama Holiday" is running far ahead of "This Is Cinerama" at this stage of run. Fulton is winding up "White Feather" in fairish fashion with second week.

Estimates for This Week

Fulton (Shea) (1,700; 65-$1.10)— "White Feather" (20th) (2d wk-5 days). Looks fair $5,000. Last week, $8,500.

Harris (Harris) (2,165 ;65-$1)— "Caine Mutiny" (Col) and "On Waterfront" (Col) (reissues). Likely will hit $8,000, not bad at all. Last week, "Capt. Lightfoot" (U), $5,500.

Guild (Green) (600; 65-$1)— "Ugetsu" (Indie) (2d-final wk). Oke $1,500 or near. Last week, $2,000.

Penn (UA) (3,300; 65-$1)—"Jupiter's Darling" (M-G). Only musical downtown, and so it is partially paying off. Fairly good $15,000. Last week, "Bridges at Toko-ri" (Par) (2d wk), $14,000.

Squirrel Hill (SW) (900; 65-$1)— "Bread, Love, Dreams" (IFE). Crix weren't very cordial, and will get just one week. Nearly oke $2,200. Last week, "Trouble in Glen" (Rep), $2,300.

Stanley (SW) (3,800; 75-$1.25)— "Battle Cry" (WB) (2d wk). Biggest thing house has had in more than a year. Dropping little from sensational first stanza, wham $27,000. Last week, $30,000.

Warner (SW) (1,365; $1.60-$2.40) —"Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) (3d wk). Off to excellent start, much better than original Cinerama pic at this stage of run, and staying around $20,000 mark. Last week, ditto.

'COUNTRY' CRISP 11G, PORT.; 'GIRL' 12G, 2D

Portland, Ore., March 8.

"Far Country" is standout newcomer here this session with big takings at the Broadway. Best coin, however, is going to "Counry Girl," still socko in second Paramount session. "Mr. Hulot's Holiday" looms fine at the Guild. "Battle Cry" still is tall in fourth week at the Fox.

Estimates for This Week

Broadway (Parker) (1,890; 65-90) —"Far Country" (U) and "West Zanzibar" (U). Stout $11,000 or near. Last week, "6 Bridges To Cross" (U) and "Abbott-Costello Meet Keystone Kops" (U), $8,300.

Orpheum (Evergreen) (1,600; 65-90)—"N. Y. Confidential" (WB) and "Unchained" (WB). Moderate $6,000. Last week, "White Feather" (20th) and "Laughing Anne" (Rep) (2d wk), $4,500.

Paramount (Port-Par) (3,400; 90-$1.25)—"Country Girl" (Par) (2d wk). Sockeroo $12,000. Last week, $19,000.

'Holiday' Boff 29G, Philly; 'Line' 18G

Philadelphia, March 8.

Blue-chip films are snaring the major biz here currently, with steady 5-day rain plus few new pix hurting. "Many Rivers To Cross" is rated fast at the Goldman but is staying only one week. "Unchained" shapes poor at Stanton. "Long Gray Line" is stout in second Stanley stanza while "Battle Cry" is smash at Randolph, also second frame. "Country Girl" still is sturdy in fifth session at the Midtown. "Cinerama Holiday" continues boffo third Boyd week.

Estimates for This Week

B'way in Doldrums; 'Deck'-Stageshow 125G, 'Battle' Brisk 51G, 5th, 'Girl' Great 27G in 12th, 'Line' 30G, 4th

Just when Broadway deluxers were starting to shake off the early March doldrums, the firstrun theatres were engulfed by Sunday's (6) all-day rain. This cut into one of the two really solid days of the week, and left the Street in a spotty condition for the current session. Biz had hit the skids starting last Thursday (3), and only a few spots had been displaying any real strength. Favorable keather that day and Friday left most managers blaming the b.o. doldrums on Lent, moderate product and a general business dip.

The two-hour "Peter Pan" tele show, early Monday night, also hit many theatres to some extent. However, biz has been so laggard recently on Mondays that this was not rated as any great influence.

"Hit the Deck" with stageshow looks to wind its initial week with a fairly good $125,000 at the Music Hall. Sunday's steady rain hurt and the telecast also were felt heavily at this house. "Innocents in Paris" with vaudeville shapes only good $19,000, below recent levels for the Palace.

Otherwise, the Street is 100% holdover, with many of the overly extended longruns starting to show signs of wear. Longrunners are paced by "Battle Cry," still big with $51,000 in fifth week at Paramount, and "Country Girl," continuing stout with $27,000 or near in 12th session ending today (Wed.) at the Criterion.

Second week of "Three For Show" slid to lightweight $25,000 in eight days at the Roxy. "Leagues Under Sea" also is off with around $13,500 in final six days of 11th week at the Astor. "East of Eden" replaces today.

Despite all obstacles, "Cinerama Holiday" still is packing them in at the Warner. This second Cinerama production landed a giant $56,300 in the fourth full stanza, close to second week's take.

"N. Y. Confidential" is down sharply to a fine $15,000 in third round winding up tomorrow (Thurs.) at the Victoria. "Long Gray Line" also suffered but looks solid at $30,000 for current (4th) week at the Capitol.

"Gate of Hell" continues to amaze with a socko $11,500 for 12th stanza at the Guild. "Romeo and Juliet" still is sturdy with $6,100 in 11th frame at the Sutton. It is now set to hold on until April 11 at this house.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (City Inv.) (1,300; 75-$1.75) —"East of Eden" (WB). Opens tonight (Wed.), with a benefit preem. Regular run starts tomorrow (Thurs.). In ahead, "Leagues Under Sea" (BV) (11th wk-6 days), off to okay $13,500 or near after $20,000 in 10th. Wound up highly successful longrun, one of biggest and longest here in some time.

Little Carnegie (L. Carnegie) (550; $1.25-$2.20) — "Aida" (IFE) (17th wk). Current round winding today (Wed.) is heading for fair $4,000 after $4,800 for 16th week. Stays.

Baronet (Reade) (430; 90-$1.55) —"Game of Love" (Indie) (13th wk). The 12th round ended yesterday (Tues.) was fine $4,300 or near after $4,600 for 11th week. Stays three or four weeks longer, with "Trouble in Glen" (Rep) coming in next.

Capitol (Loew's) (4,820; 85-$2.20) —"Long Gray Line" (Col) (4th wk). Still in the chips with fancy $30,000 likely for current stanza ending today (Wed.). Third week hit $42,000, over hopes. "Purple Plain" (UA) announced as next pic, but date not set.

Criterion (Moss) (1,700; 75-$2.20) —"Country Girl" (Par) (12th wk). Present session finishing today (Wed.) probably will hold with smash $27,000 after $30,000 for 11th week. Stays on.

Fine Arts (Davis) (468; 90-$1.80) —"Holiday For Henrietta" (Arde) (7th wk). The sixth frame ended Sunday (6) held with fancy $6,400 after $7,900 in fifth week. Stays until March 28 when "To Paris With Love" (Indie) opens.

Globe (Brandt) (1,500; 70-$1.50) —"Far Country" (U) (4th-final wk). Heading for mild $6,000 in 6 days after $8,000 in third week. "Gilda" (Col) and "Deeds Goes To Town" (Col) (reissues) open Friday (11).

Guild (Guild) (450; $1-$1.75)— "Gate of Hell" (Indie) (13th wk). The 12th week finished Monday (7) hit sock $11,500 after $13,500 for 11th week. Stays on.

Mayfair (Brandt) (1,736; 79-$1.80)—"Underwater!" (RKO) (5th wk). Fourth stanza finished yesterday (Tues.) was mild $11,000 after $14,000 for third week.

Normandie (Trans-Lux) (592; $1.15-$1.65)—"Camille" (M-G) (6th wk). Fifth session ended Monday (7) was stout $9,000 after $13,000 for fourth week. Holds on indef.

Palace (RKO) (1,700; 50-$1.60)— "Innocents in Paris" (Indie) and vaudeville. This stanza finishing tomorrow (Thurs.) ooks to reach good $19,000 or near. Last week, "Hell's Outpost" (Rep) and vaude, $21,000.

Paramount (ABC-Par) (3,664; 85-$1.75)—"Battle Cry" (WB) (6th wk). Fifth round ended last night (Tues.) held with big $51,000 after fourth week landed $53,000. Saturday biz topped fourth week on same day. Stays on through March according to present plans. "Strategic Air Command" (Par) is due in next, with theatre now constructing a giant screen to take care of the VistaVision of this pic.

Paris (Pathe Cinema) (568; 90-$1.80)—"Wages of Fear" (Indie) (4th wk). Third week ended last night (Tues.) was fine $11,000 after $11,600 for second round.

Radio City Music Hall (Rockefellers) (6,200; 95-$2.75)—"Hit the Deck" (M-G) and stageshow. Looks to reach fairly good $125,000 i first session winding up today (Wed.). Holds. In ahead, "Jupiter's Darling" (M-G) and stageshow (2d wk), $100,000 and below hopes.

Rivoli (UAT) (2,093; 85-$2)— "Bad Day Black Rock" (M-G) (6th-final wk). Fifth frame ended Monday (7) was mild $8,500 after $12,000 in fourth week. Winds run on March 14 when theatre is scheduled to close to ready for launching of Todd-AO's initial pic.

Roxy (Nat'l. Th.) (5,717; 65-$2.40) —"Three for Show" (Col) (2d-final wk). Current stanza of 8 days looks to dip to light $25,000 or less after $33,000 opening week. "Untamed" (20th) opens Friday (11).

State (Loew's) (3,450; 78-$1.75)— "Timberjack" (Rep). Opens today (Wed.). In ahead, "Sign of Pagan" (U) (2d wk-11 days), dipped to fair $18,000 after $19,000 in second full week.

Sutton (R&B) (561; $1-$1.80)— "Romeo and Juliet" (UA) (12th wk). The 11th week ended yesterday (Tues.) was good $6,100 after $6,400 in 10th stanza.

Trans-Lux 52nd St (T-L) (540; $1-$1.50)—"Doctor in House" (Rep) (3d wk). Current session winding today (Wed.) likely will hit smash $13,000 after $14,500 for second. Stays on indef at current gait.

Victoria (City Inv.) (1,060; 50-$1.75)—"N. Y. Confidential" (WB) (3d wk). This stanza ending tomorrow (Thurs.) is heading for fine $15,000 after $21,000, over expectancy, in second. Continues, with "Man Without a Star" (U) du in March 23.

Warner (Cinerama Prod.) (1,600; $1.20-$3.30) — "Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) (5th wk). Fourth round finished Saturday (5) was huge $26,300, not far from terrific take of second full week. This week was $62,100, but this was for 19 shows or two more than the normal 17-show week. Stays on indef, with seats now selling into July.

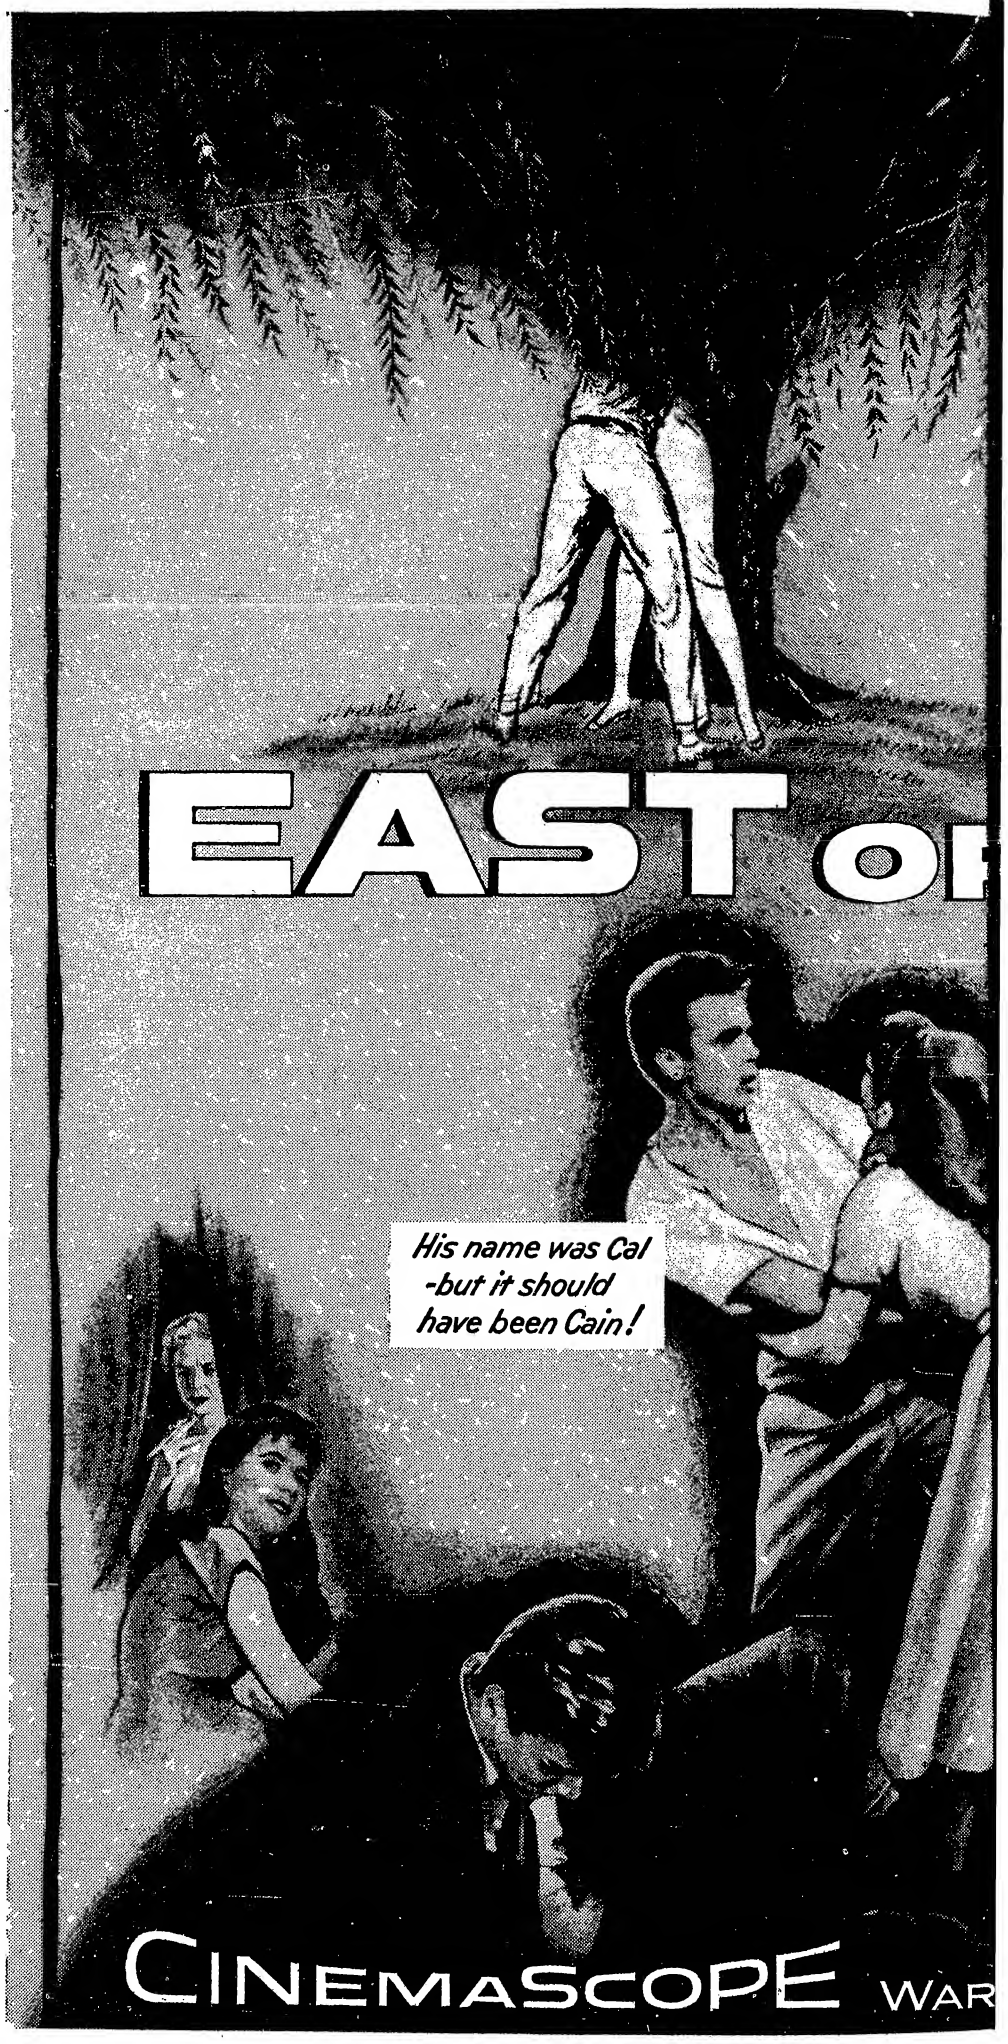
Storm Hits Hub Albeit 'Girl' Lush $17,000, 4th; 'Crashout' So-so $16,000

Boston, March 8.

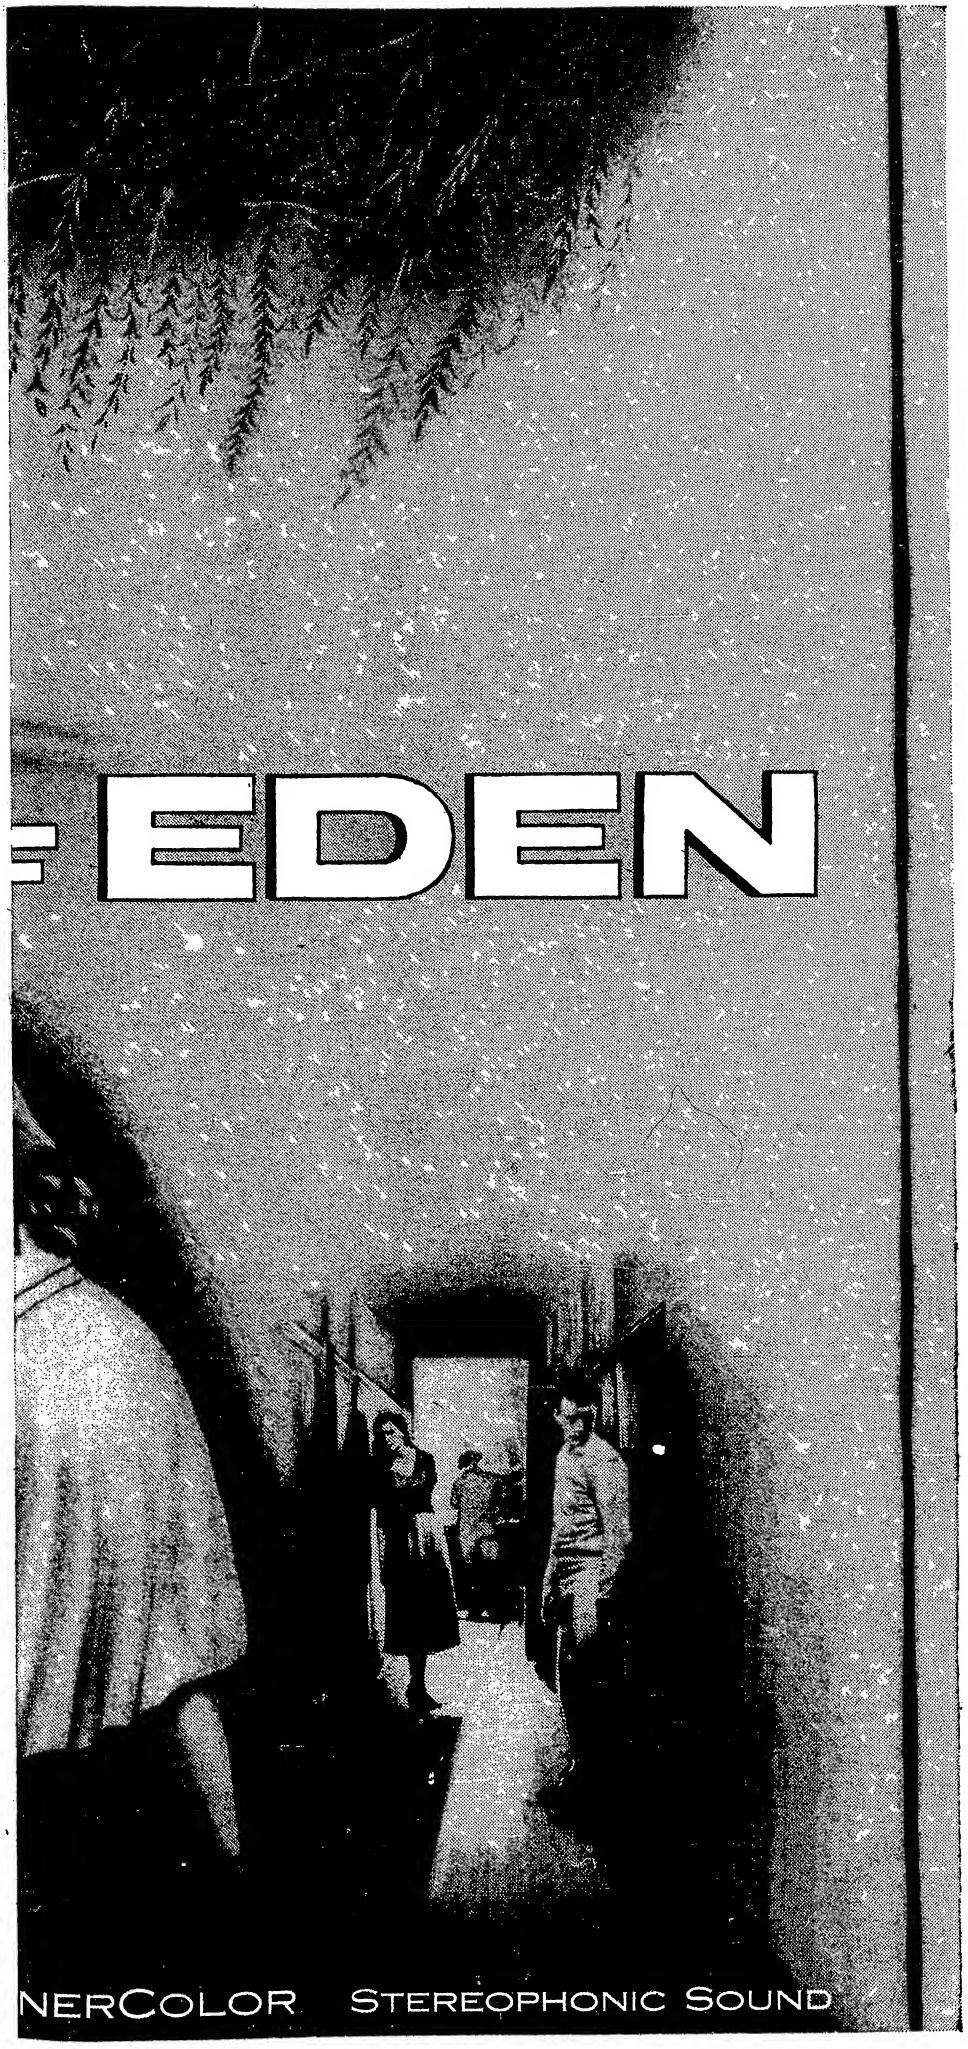
With a stormy weekend fouling up transportation plus the fact that most major spots are holding over, biz is taking a dip here this stanza. "Battle Cry" in third week at the Met appears standout with a stout session. "Long Gray Line," also in third frame at the State and Orpheum, still is sturdy. "Country Girl," especially strong at the Astor is off but still big in its fourth week. "20,000 Leagues Under Sea," in fourth session at the Memorial, also slipping. "Crashout" at the Paramount and Fenway shapes only so-so.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (B&Q) (1,500; 75-$1.25)— "Country Girl" (Par) (4th wk). Down to $17,000 but still sock following $25,000 for third.



Beacon Hill (Beacon Hill) (800; 75-$1.25) — "Intimate Relations" (UA). Fairly good $8,500. Last week, "Romeo and Juliet" (UA) (10th wk), $2,500.



Boston (Cinerama Productions) (1,354; $1.25-$2.75) — "Cinerama"

See Early Okay of Protective Film Law, Resumption of Full Italo Prod.

Rome, March 1.

Relief from the production slowdown current in Italian film studios, which saw only nine pix going into production last January as against 27 for the same month in 1954 (ANICA head Eitel Monaco termed the situation critical and threatening to stop all film production) is expected shortly following the House of Deputies approval of an extension to the old protective film law until next Dec. 31.

The House move on this statute, extension of which had previously been limited to June 30, thereby discouraging production, would be followed by approval from the Senate. After that the law goes into force.

Meanwhile, a completely new protective film measure, said to include sharp changes in method and quantity of government subsidization of the local film industry, with particular attention to the elimination of speculation in the documentary and newsreel field, a previous sore point, is reportedly ready to be submitted to the proper authorities for approval.

The new law has been under study for considerable time, with interference from pressure groups designed to preserve previous advantages in various sectors, holding up final shaping of the edict.

CNC, Opposed by Most French Film Producers, May Soon Be Liquidated

Paris, March 1.

At a recent film industry dinner, Henri Ulver, Minister of Industry and Commerce, under whose aegis the welfare of the film industry is administered by the governmental bureau, the Centre National De La Cinematagraphie, headed by Jacques Flaud, intimated that this body may be liquidated in the near future. Most of the film producers are against the CNC which they claim has infringed on their complete creative liberty. They cite such things as the conditions set up for pic production plus receiving film aid under the Film Aid Law, foreign negotiations and censorship.

The CNC was a wartime measure, created under the occupation, for film control. Now producers feel there is no need for it. Exhibs, whose opinion was voiced by Adolph Trichet, also were behind its dissolution as was Henri Flouvier, Deputy Minister in charge of Cinema, who felt its bureaucratic setup interfered with real efficiency. Ulver promised that if his government remained in power he would do something about it and create a special cinema section to deal with his pic problems.

Bernstein Would Buy St. James's, Stoll Houses

London, March 8.

Sidney L. Bernstein, head of the Granada Theatre circuit, has made an offer to buy the St. James's and Stoll theatres, both of which have been in the news with reports that they are to be razed and replaced by office buildings. His intention would be to retain them as legit theatres.

Circuit topper revealed last week that he had made a bid to Prince Littler which was now being considered by his board. It is understood that if Bernstein's offer were accepted, he would not enter into legit management but would lease the houses to other managements.

Jacques Pils Signed For Littler Musical

London, March 1.

Jacques Pils, husband of Edith Piaf, has been signed by Emile Littler for the lead in "King for a Night," a British musical authored by Eric Maschwitz with score by Sam Coslow. Georges Guetary had been originally paged for the role, but will not be available in time.

The production is skedded to go into rehearsal in June. It starts an out-of-town tryout in Bournemouth Aug. 7. It is due in the West End early in September, probably at the Palace.

'Fewfers, Nofers' Again

London, March 8.

Commenting on the studio grab by commercial tv interests and its possible effect on feature film production, Anthony Asquith, in his presidential address at the Assn. of Cine Technicians annual meeting last weekend, said he felt he could borrow and slightly adapt that recent headline "from that peer of unique newspaper headlines, VARIETY, which the other week referred to 'Twofers, Fewfers, Nofers.'"

Freely translated and applied to their problems, said the ACT prez, that would mean there would soon be fewer two-feature programs and in due course none at all.

ACT Chief Sees TV Helping Pix

London, March 8.

If only one-third of the programming required by the new commercial tele web were to be recorded on film, the output required would be equivalent to more than 1,000 features a year. This was the estimate given by Anthony Asquith when, as the union's president, he opened the 22nd annual general meeting of the Assn. of Cine Technicians here last Saturday (5).

Although the additional volume of employment to be provided by the new outlet would be fairly considerable and most welcome, Asquith warned that the association must avoid another South Sea Bubble from which industry had suffered on past occasions of sudden expansion. At the same time he didn't consider that the solution to a program shortage would be the importation of foreign programs. And that was why act had supported the labor campaign for an 80% British quota.

Demands of the new tele system were leading to a considerable shortage of studio space, Asquith observed, and that his association did not want the development of commercial tv to be at the expense of film production. Video production, he insisted, must be in addition to and not an alternative to films for theatrical exhibition.

The union prexy joined in criticism of the Board of Trade which has authorized considerable expansion by the three major circuits. This he averred was scandalous as it would allow the J. Arthur Rank groups to acquire a further 51 theatres and Associated British, 182. It was a policy, in his opinion, which put the independent producer completely at the mercy of the circuits and must in turn lead to his extinction.

BRIT. COM'L TV ASKS COPYRIGHT PROTECTION

London, March 1.

A new bill to amend the 1911 Copyright Act and extend its scope to embrace tele has been introduced by the government in the House of Lords. It is designed to come into force Oct. 1, coinciding with the advent of the commercial network. It will be debated in both Houses of Parliament as soon as time can be provided.

Known as the Copyright and Television Exhibiting Right Bill, it incorporates the amendments agreed on at the International Brussels Convention in 1948 and the Universal Copyright Convention in Geneva in 1952.

Principal provision of the new legislation is to give either BBC-TV or the Independent Television Authority a 25-year protection on telecast programs. Where both have televised the same show, the rights will be shared.

Brit. Pic Ad Group

London, March 8.

A merger of two major screen advertising groups which will bring coverage of 2,000 indie theatres under a single control announced here. Amalgamation embraces the companies of Pearl & Dean and Younger Publicity Service, within the framework of a new company to be known as Pearl, Dean & Youngers.

Pearl & Dean will continue as exclusive screen ad reps of Associated British circuit, and joint activity by new outfit will be restricted to the independent field. There is to be no personnel change in either company.

Scot Legit Biz Upbeat; 'Dolls,' 'Judy' B.O. Hits

Glasgow, March 1.

Biz is good for legit shows in Scotland despite strong counter-attractions of tele. Quality shows are being rewarded by packed houses, as in case of Emile Littler's "Love From Judy" at King's Theatre here. Jeannie Carson, star of this English musical, is the current toast of Glasgow in role of Judy Abbott. She exits from the musical after a date at Stockton, Eng., and is pacted for star role in the new pic "An Alligator Named Daisy." "Judy" has played to SRO biz at all night performances, with matinees good.

"Guys and Dolls," after two weeks at the H. M. Theatre, Aberdeen, has moved into the King's, Edinburgh, for a three-week stint, with Jacqueline James in the part of Miss Adelaide.

Scot customers are also getting their share of legit preems. "The Lovers," starring Eva Bartok, Sam Wanamaker and Helen Haye, preemed at Lyceum Theatre, Edinburgh, Monday (21) on pre-London tour.

New play by Eric Linklater, Scot novelist, is set for world preem at Citizens' Theatre, Glasgow, Monday (28). Titled "The Isle of Women," it is comedy with settings in a London theatre and on an island off the west coast of Scotland. Linklater's two previous plays, "Love in Albania" and "The Atom Doctor" (later renamed "The Mortimer Touch"), were both given their first performances by Citizens' Theatre.

Moira Shearer is due at Theatre Royal, Glasgow, April 4 in "I Am A Camera." "Tam O'Shanter's Tryst," musical about Robert Burns characters, drew spotty biz at Citizens', Glasgow, during an overlong four-week run.

Duke Hosts 200 Leaders Of Britain's Film Biz

London, March 8.

Nearly 200 leading personalities in the British picture industry were guests of the Duke of Edinburgh at an informal cocktailery in Buckingham Palace last Tuesday (1). They were received by the Duke and Lt.-Gen. Sir Frederick Browning, chairman of the National Playing Fields Assn.

The invitees included the general council of the Cinematograph Exhibs Assn., the council of the Kinematograph Renters Society, the head of the British Film Producers Assn., and three trade union secretaries. Also present were such leaders as J. Arthur Rank, John Davis, J. D. (Jack) Goodlatte, C. J. Latta, Alfred Shipman, Sam King and Sol Sheckman.

Although the occasion was strictly informal, it is understood the reception was the Duke's way of thanking the industry for the help it has given in raising coin for the National Playing Fields Assn. of which he is president. The CEA council likely will vote this week to help further, the aim being to collect a minimum of $150,000 for the Duke this year.

American distributing reps who went to the Palace included Sam Eckman Jr. and Charles Goldsmith (M-G), James E. Perkins (Par), Arthur S. Abeles Jr. (WB), Max Thorpe (Col), James F. Pattinson (20th) and Montague C. Morton (UA).

Fewer Brit. Exhib Quota Defaults; Big Chains Top Obligations on Pix

London, March 8.

British exhibitors are putting up a better performance in meeting their quota obligations. An analysis compiled by the Board of Trade shows a substantial decline in the number of defaults, with all the three major circuits topping their legal commitments.

The BOT survey, covering the 1953-54 quota year, notes that after allowing for reliefs accorded theatre owners in competitive situations, the average prescribed quotas for the country as a whole were 25.2% for the first features and 23.7% for the supporting program. Over 1,500 theatres were given modified percentages ranging from 10% to 25%.

Out of a total of 4,210 theatres required to comply with the quota law, 734 (representing 17.5%) failed to meet their obligations, but many by only a narrow margin. In the previous year the defaulters numbered 884.

In the supporting quota class, the number of defaulters was higher at 1,116, but substantially below the previous year's total of 1,626.

Although none of the major circuits is entitled to quota relief under the Act, the three main theatre groups-screened British product in excess of their obligations. On the Odeon and Gaumont-British circuits the proportion of British first features and supporting program amounted to 36%; on the Associated British group the comparable figures were 35% and 38%.

15 Pix in Mex By U.S. Prods. in '55

Mexico City, March 1.

Now that the Mexican pic trade is losing money, decision of Hollywood producers to make 15 pix down here during 1955 is a welcome one to the natives. It will mean a round $560,000 to the film trade. Yank productions are skedded to get going pronto. The beginners will be at the Churubusco studios here, March 9-April 30.

Ball starts rolling with King Bros.' "The Boy and the Bull" early this month. Numerous Mexican secondary and bit players as well as extras have been employed. Columbia follows March 15 with "The Gilded Rooster," starring Victor Mature.

A week later, 20th-Fox begins "Seven Golden Cities," starring Spencer Tracy. RKO swings into action April 11 with "Pancho Villa's Treasure," starring Van Heflin. Then on April 30, "The Tall Man," with Clark Gable and Jane Russell co-starred, gets under way.

SPIKE JONES JUNKET TO AUSSIE ON SHELF

Sydney, March 1.

Next big-name import for the Aussie public will be Spike Jones or British bandleader Ted Heath, but probably Heath. Heath is due here March 10. Jones seems to be temporarily mislaid. Date for the U.S. band is not yet definite. Jones was to have opened here February 18—then Feb. 28. Now his arrival date is indefinite. The Mike Castor office here is vague regarding details that should be ironed out.

It will cost $1,100 to air-freight the Ted Heath outfit's instruments to this country from London. Heath is bringing 17 instrumentalists and three vocalists, including Kathy Lloyd, a local band warbler who will come home as a star thrush after 11 months abroad.

Entertainment Enterprises and Aztec Services are handling Heath, who will do two shows at the Sydney Town Hall March 11. Later the combo does three shows at the Sydney Stadium and one night at the biggest dance hall here. It will also play six stints in Melbourne at Wirth's Olympia; two shows in Brisbane, four in Adelaide, two in Newcastle plus a visit to New Zealand.

Abbey Players to Paris 1st Time Since War

Dublin, March 1.

Abbey Players Co. will make its first overseas tour since before the last World War when the Irish players go to Paris this spring to present Sean O'Casey's "Plough and the Stars." It will be given at the International Theatre Festival in the Sarah Bernhardt Theatre.

Lead roles in O'Casey drama will be played by Philip O'Flynn and Angela Newman. Ria Mooney, who played Rosie in original Abbey production, will direct. Abbey prexy Ernest Blythe said he had not yet received invitation sent to Abbey Players to appear in Johannesburg, South Africa, next year in connection with that city's 70th anni celebrations.

M.P. Would Compare How Brit. Pix Fare in U. S. With Yank Take There

London, March 1.

While a question on dollar earnings of British pictures and dollar expenditure on American imports was deferred in the House of Commons last week, the Board of Trade head, Peter Thorneycroft told another questioner that the government does not intend taking any further action to promote increased British production as a dollar saver.

F. M. Bennett, Conservative M.P., asked the BOT prez to report how many dollars had been earned by the exhibition of British films in the U. S. during 1952, 1953 and 1954; also how many dollars have been spent in the same period for U. S. films exhibited here.

The other question was put by Stephen Swingler, a Labor supporter, who asked the BOT prexy what action was being taken to promote greater production of British films so as to save dollars and facilitate a higher standard of quota observance.

The reply, given by the Parliamentary secretary to the BOT, suggested that the quota legislation, together with the facilities provided by the National Film Finance Corp., was designed to create favorable conditions for British film production.

BRIT. CHANCELLOR MUM ON COIN FOR TELEPIX

London, March 8.

Despite a barrage of questions by one of his own supporters, R. A. Butler, Chancellor of the Exchequer, refused to divulge in the House of Commons on March 1 how many dollars were spent on the importation of telepix into the United Kingdom. He took a similar stand in regard to a series of questions on the dollar cost of imported panel games. The Chancellor insisted throughout the debate that it was the normal practice to withhold such info, as details of individual exchange facilities were not revealed.

Butler also stood firm when one of his own party supporters challenged the payment of dollars for the British rights of "Twenty Questions" which, said his questioner, had been played in this country over 100 years ago. The Minister agreed that he had a paper of 105 years ago describing the game but noted that copyright can subsist in the literary form in which the rules of the game are expressed.

Paris Legit Season Slows Down To Walk, One Click in 3 New Entries

By GENE MOSKOWITZ

Paris, March 1.

The legit spurt here has slowed down to a mere walk as the season rounds itself out, but the trend of reprises and foreign plays goes on. Three shows have opened with one, an adaptation of Noel Coward's "Quadrille," looking in for a run. Reprises of Moliere's "L'Etourdi" (The Madcap) and a retelling of an old Greek legend, Kostas Zaroukas' "Erotokritos," probably will be only shortermers mainly because of lagging mounting and acting.

"Quadrille," called "Quatour" here, and adapted by Paul Geraldy, though fragile in outline and form benefits from bright performances by Alice Cocea and Pierre Dux. On this top thesp pull and the charming quadrangular affairs of two asserted couples this play looks to tenant the Capucines Theatre for a long time. It is amusing throughout and adds a wistful, charming touch helped by the telling acting of Miss Cocea as the bright, gentle and wise English Lady and Dux as the robust, forthright American. Beguiling period sets and costumes make this easy on the eyes. Good crix and word-of-mouth all will help this—probably way into next season.

"L'Etourdi," put on by a young company at the Theatre Mathruins, is the first and weakest of Moliere's plays. The unsure thesping and lagging production does not help to put this over. The Theatre National Populaire has added this little known piece to its future rep where it will probably fare better, since obviously needing full professional staging.

"Erotokritos" is a dreary bauble in which an old legend of lovers suffers from a trite presentation and adaptation. Put on as the filler in the new theatre, Theatre De La Comedie De Paris, this looks in for a short stay as it marks time for the arrival of Paul Claudel's "Prote" (Proteus), which will be the official curtainraiser at this new house, formerly the Theatre De L'Humour. Crix rapped this slipshod show.

Arg. Film Biz Holds Up Well Despite Heat, Mardi Gras Opposition

Buenos Aires, March 1.

Although last week was Mardi Gras week, with three non-working days splitting it up, firstruns were filled to capacity. Added handicap of many going to the summer resorts did not appear to cut much into business for this season of the year.

"The Merry Widow" (M-G), running day-date at three firstrun houses, has held for three weeks so far. "Mogambo" (M-G), first released day-date at three firstruns, has held for seven weeks at one of these houses. So far it has grossed close to $100,000. "Prisoner of Zenda" (M-G) grossed $152,628 in a 14-week firstrun. "The Man Between" (UA) did $100,370 in five weeks. All of these are unprecedented figures for the strawhat season.

"The Robe" (20th) has now run consecutively for 46 weeks with a total gross of $1,220,644 in the first 43 weeks. It has played at the higher admission scale or almost four times the ordinary rate.

"Bread, Love and Dreams," the Italian pic with Gina Lollobrigida, has now run 23 weeks at the Luxor and grossed $303,623. "Phone Call from a Stranger" (20th) racked up $46,425 in a firstrun which lasted three weeks. Local product predominates at most firstrun houses. Five out of 18 major firstruns currently are showing native pictures.

Valentine Skedded As Palladium Headliner

London, March 1.

British vocalist Dickie Valentine has been signed as a Palladium headliner for a fortnight's season starting April 11. He will follow Eddie Fisher, who opens the vaude season on March 28 and precede Johnnie Ray.

A former call-boy at the Palladium, Valentine has already been seen on American tv and was in last year's Royal Command vaude gala. Last month he won the top male singer award in Britain.

ARG. CITY UNDER-SEATED

Mar del Plata's 19 Cinemas Unable to Handle Crowds

Mar del Plata, March 1.

The 19 film theatres in this great beach resort city are proving insufficient to cope with the outstanding popularity of pic entertainment, even in face of competition from almost every kind of sport, apart from surf bathing, and the lure of the gaming tables at the Casino.

Admission to all cinemas is only after prolonged early-morning queuing. It has spurred financiers to seriously consider building new film theatres for next year.

With a 300,000 all-year population, Mar del Plata's populace swells at this time of year to around 1,000,000. However, motion pictures do well all year. In 1954 the 11,199 film performances were attended by 3,613,476 patrons and a total gross of about $1,964,642.

Brit. Pix May Top '54 By $3,000,000

London, March 8.

British films in their biggest postwar boom this year are likely to top last year's gross by at least $3,000,000. Already in the first six months of the current Eady year from Aug. 1 last, the b.o. revenues are up by approximately $1,500,000.

According to a breakdown of British film rentals during the last half year, the upward trend has been consistently maintained. In the first quarter, gross rentals of approximately $5,300,000 were up more than a $1,000,000 over the corresponding period in the previous year. One month later showed that the improvement had been maintained, and in the subsequent four weeks British rentals were running $1,300,000 ahead.

Gross rentals earned by British pix, however, is not being matched by the income of the Eady levy. Results for the first six months show a slight decline, mainly because the interim rate of levy in operation during the first quarter. In the last 14 weeks, however, there has been a slight improvement.

Winnick Wins Damages In '20 Questions' Suit

London, March 1.

Agreed damages of $5,600 to be paid Harry Alan Towers and Towers of London Ltd., to Maurice Winnick were approved in the High Court last week. They arose out of a case back in 1952 in which Winnick was granted an injunction.

Under that injunction, Towers was prevented from being concerned in broadcasts of any show under the name of "Twenty Questions." It also prevented records of "Twenty Questions" from being used without Winnick's consent.

Mex Clasa Studio Set For Big Facelifting

Mexico City, March 1.

Clasa Studio, Mexico's original modern pic plant, is to be facelifted with repairs and installation of latest equipment, thanks to a credit of $80,000 granted by the trade's own bank, the Banco Nacional Cinematografico. Improvements are counted upon to save Clasa $1,600 per production.

Clasa continues to be federal government property. The administration runs the studios through its fiscal agency, the Nacional Financiera. The government recently called off its offer to sell Clasa.

Granada Forms TV Co.

London, March 1.

A special company to operate its commercial television outlet has been formed by Sidney L. Bernstein, the Granada Theatres' boss. The new company was registered here last week. Known as Granada TV Ltd., the new outfit includes on its board Cecil G. Bernstein and Joseph Warten, who is secretary of the theatre group.

Building 1st Cuba Ozoner

Havana, March 1.

Construction has started on Cuba's first drive-in. With space for 800 cars, it is to be located outside Havana on the Rancho Boyeros road. Opening is scheduled for June or July.

Owners of the ozoner are Herb Copelan, who owns the Miramar Theatre; Eleir Rodriguez, owner of the Rodi and America theatres, and Albert Alejo, boss of the Polar brewery. They have formed the Cine Aeroes to operate the drive-in.

Bank Rate Tilt In London Hits Brit. Pix Prods.

London, March 1.

British film producers will have to pay more for borrowed money as a result of the increase in the bank rate from 3½% to 4½%, announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer last week. Interest rates will rise by at least 1% from 5% to 6%.

The situation has become more acute as the National Film Finance Corp. has exhausted all the $16,800,000 advanced by the Treasury and will now have to borrow from private sources to continue financial aid to producers. Authority for the State Film Bank to raise coin in the City was given in an amending Act passed by Parliament some time back.

Of the total original capital, something over $6,000,000 has already been written off as lost. The British Lion operation accounts for a major share, but some may eventually be recovered if the newly formed company arising from the NFFC receivership prospers.

Of the remaining capital tied up in recent and current productions, most of it will continue in the form of a revolving credit. But at this point, the NFFC has run out of actual cash and can only offer financial aid by getting it themselves on the regular financial market.

In its transactions with producers, the NFFC will make an adjustment on interest rates in order to provide a margin to meet operating costs. In other words the producer will actually pay more in interest for his additional coin from the NFFC than for the front money which is usually raised by discounting a distributor's guarantee.

The amount of cash which the NFFC may have to borrow from banking houses is now being calculated by the board and an estimate will be given in the annual report due for publication next month.

BRIT. TO SHOW 3 PIX AT CANNES FILM FETE

London, March 8.

As a result of representations by the Foreign Office, British film makers are to be allowed to show three pix at the upcoming Cannes Film Festival instead of only two. The films selected are "The Prisoner" (Col), "End of Affair" (Col), and "Kid For Two Farthings" (Korda). On the basis of British output in the past year, native producers could really only claim the right to two entries but the Foreign Office considered two inadequate and applied for a third entry.

The Foreign Office, which is becoming increasingly active in regard to foreign films fests, is also urging the British Film Producers Assn. to give utmost support to the annual Berlin junket due to open June 24. In view of the strategic situation of that festival the Foreign Office usually agrees to pay transportation charges for British stars who make the trek.

Justice-Meyer TV Prod Co.

London, March 1.

James Robertson Justice and Richard Meyer have joined forces in a new tv production company named the Four Falconers. The former is a w.k. screen actor and Meyer is his personal manager and also on the board of Essanay, a local booking firm.

London Pix Biz Holds Up Despite Cold; 'Affair' Lush 11G, 'Riot' Wow 9G, 'Prize' Trim 8G, 'Biz' 8½G, 4th

London, March 1.

Despite near-arctic conditions, most firstrun situations report better than average biz in the last session, with best results chalked up by the strong holdovers.

Of the new entries, "Prize of Gold" grossed a staunch $8,000 in its second frame at the Odeon, Leicester Square, while the Empire's "End of Affair" is heading for a strong $11,000 opening week. The new British comedy, "Raising a Riot," shapes terrific $9,000 in its first Plaza week.

"Show Business" looks big $8,500 at the Odeon, Marble Arch, in fourth round. The London Pavilion's "Vera Cruz" shapes fancy $8,000 in its third round. "Young at Heart" at the Warner looks to do $10,000 in its fourth frame.

Estimates for Last Week

Carlton (20th) (1,128; 55-$1.70)—"Desiree" (20th) (3d wk). Steady $6,000 after $6,700 in previous week. "That Lady" (20th) preems March 10.

Casino (Indie) (1,337; 70-$2.15)—"Cinerama" (Robin) (21st wk). Still big at over $14,000. Continues.

Empire (M-G) (3,009; 55-$1.70)—"End of the Affair" (Col). Heading for solid $11,000.

Gaumont (CMA) (1,500; 50-$1.70)—"Underwater" (RKO). Below hopes at $7,000 or near.

Leicester Square Theatre (CMA) (1,753; 50-$1.70)—"Out of Clouds" (GFD) (3d wk). Poor $2,800. Second round was $3,600. "Long Gray Line" (Col) opens March 3.

London Pavilion (UA) (1,217) 50-$1.70)—"Vera Cruz" (U) (3d wk). Still big at around $8,200. Previous week was $9,000.

Odeon, Leicester Square (CMA) (2,200; 50-$1.70)—"Prize of Gold" (Col) (2d wk). Heading for stout $8,000 or near after $9,000 opening round. "As Long As They're Happy" (GFD) opens March 2.

Odeon, Marble Arch (20th) (2,200; 50-$1,70) — "Show Business" (20th) (4th wk). Hitting fancy $8,500 after $9,600 in third week. Continues.

Plaza (20th) (592; 50-$1.30)—"Raising a Riot" (BL). Looks wow $9,000 or near. "Country Girl" (Par) bows March 11.

Rialto (20th) (592; 50-$1.30)—"Carmen Jones" (20th) (5th wk). Trim $4,500. Stays on.

Warner (WB) (1,735; 50-$1.70)—"Young at Heart" (WB) (4th wk). Great $10,000. Last week, $11,000. "Star Is Born" (WB) opens March 3.

SEES TV AS NO THREAT

Mex Amusements Chief Also Won't Okay Cinema Admish Tilt

Mexico City, March 1.

Adolfo Fernandez Bustamantes, chief of the City Amusements Supervision Department, who enacted the ceilinged admission prices for local cinemas in 1952 (a 20% slash many exhibitors still fight in the courts), aired his views on two big things in a recent interview.

"Right now, there is not the least prospect that cinema admission prices will be modified," he said. "Television is certainly no threat to the cinema, and has not yet become serious competition to it."

The fixed cinema admission prices benefit the public and most exhibitors, he contended. Film theatres are enjoying higher box-office returns than ever, and more people, many of them those who never before went to the cinema, are attending pix houses, he asserted.

"Though many people here have television receivers, the poorness of programs is no inducement for them to stay home," the top amusement supervision official claimed.

U.S. Distribs Give German Pix Boost

Frankfurt, March 8.

American member companies of the MPEA in West Germany are becoming more and more active in developing foreign export markets for some outstanding German films. This is not a move being done on an industry basis. And it has received little publicity, either from the German press or from the U. S. But it is being efficiently accomplished to the benefit of the German film industry, with the Yanks taking top German pix for release in various territories outside of Germany.

RKO, for instance, has licensed to take the biggest German moneymaker since the war, "08/15" from Gloria, into France. And it is understood here that three other deals are being set to give outstanding German pix worldwide distribution through American firms.

Gloria's "08/15" is described as the German equivalent of some GI's in training, their escapades, romances and brawls, biggest moneymaking film to show in Germany since the war.

Pic has done record biz on its showings outside of Germany in Stockholm, Zurich and Brussels. Gloria now is offering other foreign deals, and bids have come in from Italy with the highest prices ever offered for a German film.

"08/15" is now being dubbed into English in Paris. It is reported that after several of the more sexy scenes have been removed, the pic will receive a major release in the U.S.

Mex Cinex Sets Check On Production Setup

Mexico City, March 1.

Cinex, the semi-official company which controls distribution of Mexican pix abroad, has named a committee to check and make "absolutely sure that cash advanced against profits to producers is handled justly and with equity." Membership of the committee changes, by appointment, every three months.

Producers Jesus Grovas, Eduardo Quevedo and Alfonso Patino Gomez are the members of the first committee. The committee which makes the cash advances is made up of Eduardo Garduno, Cinex chief who also heads the trade's own bank, Banco Nacional Cinematografico; Cesar Santos Galindo, manager of the Churubusco; Cesar Santos Galindo, manager of the Churubusco studios here; and Mario Zacarias, Pedro Galindo and Alberto Salas Porras, producers.

2 Major Cinema Chains Seen Sure of Stake In Aussie Key City Tele

Sydney, March 1.

Value of a commercial television license for Sydney would be around $2,250,000, a witness estimated at a hearing by the Australian Broadcasting Control Board. The board has been hearing apppications for two commercial licenses for this city. Seven applicants seek licenses.

It seems likely that one license will go to Amalgamated Television Services Ltd., a group which includes the Macquarie Broadcasting Network and the Sydney Morning Herald and the Sun newspapers, and that the other will go to the Consolidated Press group.

20th-Fox, through Hoyts Theatres; Greater Union Theatres, J. C. Williamson's (legit), Tivoli Circuit and Fuller's Theatres all have interests in one or other of the applications, for Sydney or Melbourne. Others concerned include radio interests, newspaper owners and electronics firms.

Late in the hearing, Hal Lashwood, president of Actors and Announcers Equity, urged a ban on importation of filmed tv commercials, a ban on telecasting any imported film within five years of completion and a quota for local talent. Representative L. C. Hayden, urging a 55% quota for native program material, declared there were 30,000 shipments of "canned horror" in America waiting for the Australian tele market to get started.

Stock Prospectus X-Rays Universal; Reissues Gross $8,156,000 to Nov., 1954; 163 Trust Suits Ask $382,700,000

Universal reissues in the U. S. and Britain up to November, 1954, netted the company a lucrative $8,156,000. Involved are U's own releases in the U. S. up to 1945-46 and in Britain to 1941-42. In the period thereafter U farmed out its reissues to other distributors.

Figures are set down in a U prospectus in respect to a series of outstanding warrants for the purchase of common stock at $10 a share. Prospectus is dated Feb. 24, 1955 and shows that, as of Oct. 30, 1954, there were 995,289 shares of common outstanding, including 118,075 held in U's treasury. Also as of that date, the company had out warrants for the purchase of 53,143 (exclusive 12,800 held in the treasury).

Decca ownership of U common as of Dec. 31, 1954, was put at 68.9% of the voting stock. Record outfit as of that date owned 718,585 shares of common.

As of Dec. 31, U warrants evidencing rights to purchase 222,566 shares had been exercised to the extent of 201,833 shares. In another series of warrants to purchase 232,000 shares of common, 189,850 shares have been picked up prior to Jan. 1, 1955. Universal itself had bought in 7,000 shares of its own stock.

Prospectus showed 186 civil suits pending against U, 163 of them asking treble damages amounting to $382,700,000. Seven of these actions asked in excess of $6,100,000, i.e., 15% of the company's current assets.

U rental breakdown showed that a little more than 35% of the company's revenue in 1954 came from abroad (counting in Canada as part of the domestic field). Whereas global rental revenue last year ran to $77,887,000 (a record for U), the foreign take (excl. Canada) ran to $27,029,000. Largest revenue producing country abroad for U was Britain with $5,508,000 in '54 as against $4,677,000 in 1953. Canada in '54 earned U $4,029,000 last year as against $3,488,000 in '53. Miscellaneous foreign revenue was up to $19,625,000 in '54 from $16,898,000 in '53.

Reissues in the U. S. are being handled for U by Realart under a 1947 deal which guaranteed U a minimum of $3,250,000 and 35% of the gross over $9,714,000 on pix through 1945-46. Under this arrangement, U reported that, up to Oct. 30 last year, it had earned an additional $3,476,000, bringing its total U. S. reissue take to $6,726,000.

In Britain, where Eros Films handles the U reissue product through 1941-42, the total earned by U via that arrangement to Oct. 1954, was $1,430,000.

U annual stockholders meet is skedded to be held at the U home-office in N. Y. today (Wed.).

COLUMBIA PICTURES BUYS 711 5TH AVE.

Columbia will invest $3,000,000 in remodeling the 15-story and penthouse office building at 711 5th Avenue, N. Y., purchase of which was finally consummated this week following months of negotiations. Col bought the property from Webb & Knapp and will occupy it as its new home-office early next year, switching from 729 7th Avenue.

The building at one time housed NBC and present tenants include radio station WMGM and MGM Recording Studios, Marcus Loew Booking Agency, National Concert Artist and Henry Soule's Pavilion Restaurant.

2,000-Car Drive-In

San Diego, March 8.

One of the biggest drive-in theatres in the land, with a capacity of 2,000 cars, will be built here by Wade E. Allen and Associates of Phoenix. Ozoner is expected to be ready to open late in May.

J. E. Poynter Film Booking Service of California has been signed to handle the film buying and booking.

'Them' Cops Sound Award

Hollywood, March 8.

Motion Picture Sound Editors presented its 1954 award to Warners' "Them" as the best sound-edited picture.

Producer David Weisbart and sound editors David DePatie, Walter Feldman, Irving Jay and Lincoln Lyons received separate plaques.

Revised Academy Setup To Give All Nominees Part in Oscar Telecast

The Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences in Hollywood will have a revised format for the Oscar ceremonial on March 30. Under an arrangement worked out by the plans committee chaired by Johnny Green, all the actors and actresses who are nominees will be part of the proceedings, not just those ultimately getting the tap.

Heretofore nominees were "part of the audience" while sweating out the suspense until the final moment. Now these artists will be utilized to make the preliminary awards in the writing, directing, musical and technical categories. The climax will come with the awards to stars and supporting players. At that point last year's winners will do the honors for this year's winners.

Use of the stars is expected to give added glamour to the proceedings and to enhance the showmanship facets of the occasion for the television sponsor, Oldsmobile. Efforts are being made to obviate criticisms made of the 1954 telecast.

Green, in New York last week, conferred with NBC officials in setting up the Gotham pickup of the telecast. He held sessions with Hudson Faussett, the NBC director of the New York end; Sid Eiges, NBC publicity topper, and Michael Dann. NBC studio to be used hasn't been selected as yet.

New format was dictated by the fact that there are to be awards in 26 categories, that they had to be presented within an alloted time, and that time also had to be reserved for playing the five nominated film tunes. For the first time, Green revealed, a committee of the "nominated" songwriters had been formed to act in a consultant and advisory capacity in casting the "song singers."

Trade Execs in N. Y. Meet on Attendance; Prowl New Pic Talent

Upwards of 70 of the top circuit operators and film company executives will convene at the Sheraton Astor Hotel tomorrow (Thurs.) to explore ways and means of boosting theatre attendance. Despite fancy financial statements of late, the trade's execs are frankly concerned over the number of ticket sales. (The earnings upbeat is largely attributable to streamlined economies and price boosts.)

According to the Council of Motion Picture Organizations, which is sponsoring the meeting, average weekly admissions are 49,200,000, which is only 3,300,000 above the all-time low and substantially short of the 1946 high point of 82,400,000. Also significantly, the nation's population has risen from 131,000,000 in 1940 to 164,000,000 presently.

Production-distribution officials as well as the exhibitors expectedly will focus much attention on pic talent. They're beefing that important "name" players have become too few in number. Ditto with new directors and writers. And they add that the artists' agents are exploiting the "seller's market" with continually rising compensation deals which are bringing pic costs up and up.

Pre-meet talk has been centering on the possibility of making a series of films for the sole purpose of introducing "new faces." The hope is that a greater roster of Hollywood stars ultimately will cut down on talent costs and at the same time lure the public.

Other subjects to be discussed are these: An audience poll on best pix and players as a device to bring Hollywood closer to the public; research on why there aren't more regular film theatre goers; ad-pub approaches; prices, particularly for youngsters, and how to woo the moppet trade; programming, including the pros and cons on double features and the possibility of running the main feature back to back in the evenings instead of alternately with the second feature; and, finally, press relations.

The filmmen relate they have no illusions about coming up with a panacea for the attendance ills. The conclave will be successful "if we come up with only three or four constructive ideas," commented one homeoffice v.p.

Oboler Bedevils UA

Los Angeles, March 8.

Arch Oboler and his 3-D picture, "Bwana Devil," are in the law courts again, this time with a breach of contract suit against United Artists asking $102,116, plus 7% interest dating from July 1, 1954.

Plaintiff claims his Qulu Pictures Co. had an agreement with UA calling for payment of $840,113. Of this amount, he says, only $687,072 had been paid.

Seek Dallas Smythe As Anti-Fee Consultant; New PR Firm Hired

Alfred Starr, co-chairman of the exhibitor's Joint Committee on Toll-TV, is sounding out Prof. Dallas Smythe, of the U. of Illinois, about becoming economic adviser to the theatre group which is fighting Federal Communications Commission okay of subscription television. Starr met with Smythe, an economist, in Chicago last week. He'll relay his report to the full committee shortly.

Meanwhile, after interviewing almost a string of public relations firms in New York and Washington, the exhibitor group has settled on Robert Taplinger & Associates to replace Harold Wolfe & Associates. Taplinger has a one-year contract. Wolfe had the job for one month only at $1,000 per week, and his exit is as unexplained as his hiring.

Retention of a legal counsel, economic adviser, and engineering expert is part of preparing answers for the FCC to guide the Government agency in its study of pay-as-you-see video.

Odd angle is that, as late as last November, Prof. Smythe offered his services to one of the toll-tv outfits, declaring himself to be in total agreement with their aims and stressing the positive public interest aspects of subscription-tv.

Duggan's Kaye Encore

Hollywood, March 8.

Pat Duggan, who worked on five Danny Kaye comedies when he was with Samuel Goldwyn, replaced Paul Jones as producer of the Kaye starrer, "Intermission," at Paramount.

Reason for the replacement is that Jones has been shifted to Paramount's remake of "The Lady Eve," starring George Gobel.

New York's City Council is as opposed to theatres snatching "free" tv programs from the networks as it is to subscription-tv doing the same thing, Leonard P. Stavisky, assistant to Abe Stark, Council president, said last week.

Stavisky maintained that the Stark resolution against toll-tv, which the City Council last week referred to its rules committee, properly belong within the province of the Council "because coin-box television would seriously affect the low and middle income families in the city."

He acknowledged his, and presumably Stark's, opposition to anything negatively affecting New York's 4,000,000 tv set owners, stating that the Council hadn't acted on theatre-tv so far "because the question hasn't come up." Stavisky indicated that, should the theatres grab off a prize-fight or some other important tv event in the future, exhibs may well hear from Stark.

In this connection it's noted that, in such future events (the theatres are currently bidding for a May boxing bout originating from San Francisco), toll-tv proponents are likely to make a big issue of the "blacking out" of such an event for home viewers in all or some parts of the country. It's their contention that toll-tv would do precisely the opposite, i.e. bring the big fights everywhere, including the towns where they originate.

New Yorkers in the past have particularly suffered from the desire of sports promoters to protect their gate by blacking out the N.Y. area where most title bouts originate.

Meanwhile, the City Council has heard from the toll-tv interests in connection with the Stark resolution.

In a wire to Council members and Mayor Robert F. Wagner, Zenith prexy E. F. McDonald Jr. maintained the Stark resolution was based on a misunderstanding. "Subscription tv, if authorized as a commercial service, will not interfere with the present system of sponsored television and will not take 'free' programs away from anybody," he stated. "Instead, it will provide, as an addition to present programs, fine entertainment not now available on television."

Stavisky's comment on this was that the fee-tv interests inevitably would have to "water down" their present envisioned high program standards to appeal to the general audience. This he equated with a tendency to charge for shows now going out for free.

Replying to a wire from Arthur Levey of Skiatron, Stanley M. Isaacs, minority leader of the Council, observed he was "very doubtful of the wisdom of any resolution in this connection with the City Council." He agreed with Levey that there should be a committee hearing prior to any action by the Council.

All Agree: Pay-See Is Revolution!

There is a surprisingly large area of agreement among both friends and foes of toll-tv that, if and when it comes, it'll eventually sweep the telecasting field by the sheer strength of its economic weight.

It's all predicated, of course, on the assumption that the Federal Communications Commission sooner or later will greenlight pay-as-you-see, as to which likelihood opinions differ. Subscription-tv proponents are as confident as ever that, come the fall, the Commission will hold a hearing and that it'll be favorable to them. The opposition doesn't see it that way at all.

In their official pronunciamentos so far, the groups favoring coinbox tv have taken the position that the new medium would serve only to bring to the air the type of programs not now available to home viewers, i.e. firstrun features, opera, educational shows, etc. Assurances have been given over and over again that "we don't want to deprive the public of anything they're now getting for free."

In private conversations, the future architects of toll-tv agree to a surprising extent with exhibs and others opposing them that, if pay-as-you-see is as successful as they envision it to be, it won't be confined to "new" programs but, very likely, will encompass a much larger range of attractions, including many now on the air.

The argument is comparatively simple: A producer of a film sells it to "free" tv and, unless it's a major attraction, gets peanuts in return. He now sees his competitor go to subscription-tv and—again assuming that the public will go for toll-tv as expected by its proponents—sees him raking in heavy coin.

How Long? Not Long!

How long, ask the exhibs and others, will producer number one be in a position to resist the lure of fee-tv? And for that matter, considering the economics of it, how long will the major shows like "I Love Lucy," "Toast of the Town," etc. hold out when faced with the prospect of heavy coin via the livingroom b.o.?

Exec of one of the toll-tv systems, on pondering that question this week, agreed that even though he or his company may not favor the conversion of a "free" show to a pay basis, the pressure may be on eventually from the other side, i.e. the program producers themselves, if they're convinced that the home b.o. offers a more lucrative payoff than a group of advertisers.

From here on in, of course, slants on toll-tv differ. Those in favor are hesitant to envision all of tv broadcasting adopting the "pay" basis, but at the same time they're not scared by the prospects of such a development.

Anti Angles

The "anti" forces make a big pitch on the basis of precisely that argument, holding that toll-tv might well have disastrous consequences to the economy of the entire nation. They see the advertisers crowded out of the "cream" time slots and deprived of the opportunity of selling their merchandise over the air. As did N.Y. City Council prez Abe Stark, they cry "foul" on behalf of the public which, they hold, will be deprived of its "right" to "free" shows.

Prime consideration, in the view of observers, isn't so much the "rights" issue, although this undoubtedly will play a prominent part in any FCC deliberations on the subject. Rather it's which system of broadcasting, in the long run, provides the program originator with more income. And there's no question that, if toll-tv catches the public fancy, it'll rake in the heavier coin.

HAYWARD'S PARIS MEET ON 'OLD MAN' FILM

Producer Leland Hayward planed to Paris today (Wed.) for a week of huddles with screenwriter Peter Viertel regarding the filmization of Ernest Hemingway's "The Old Man and The Sea."

Filming of the Pulitzer and Nobel prizewinning novel has been scheduled by Hayward to follow "Spirit of St. Louis," now in preparation, and slated for a June start.

While in Paris, Hayward will scout Le Bourget Field, actual site of Lindbergh's landing, which he will use in the CinemaScope filming of Lindbergh's bestseller.

Charles Lederer and Billy Wilder coauthored "Spirit of St. Louis" screenplay, and Wilder will direct.

'GIRL' GREAT $15,000, PROV.; 'ROCK' FIRM 13G

Providence, March 8.

The State with "Bad Day At Black Rock" has the only new bill in town; it's rated good. But most holdovers are doing very nicely. Majestic's "Battle Cry" in the third week is oke. "Leagues Under Sea" in same week is hotsy. "Country Girl" is prize h.o. with smash total for second Strand round.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (2,200; 65-90)—"Leagues Under Sea" (BV) (3d wk). Still hot $10,000 after $15,000 in second.

Majestic (Fay) (2,200; 70-$1)—"Battle Cry" (WB) (3d wk). Okay $9,000. Second week was $22,000.

State (Loew's) (3,200; 50-75)—"Bad Day Black Rock" (M-G) and "Southwest Passage" (UA). Good $13,000. Last week, "Jupiter's Darling" (M-G) and "White Orchid" (UA), ditto.

Strand (Silverman) (2,200; 70-$1) —"Country Girl" (Par) and "Assignment Children" (Par) (2d wk). Smash $15,000 after $19,000 opener.

'Darling' Solid $16,000, St. L.; 'Holiday' Hot 26G

St. Louis, March 8.

Sharp drop in temperature and snow flurries over the weekend will hypo biz at mainstem houses here this week. "Jupiter's Darling" shapes firm at Loew's and will hold. "Black Knight" shapes good at Orpheum. "Cinerama Holiday" continues its great draw at the Ambassador. "Hamlet" is best pic in arty houses, with big round at the Shady Oak.

Estimates for This Week

Ambassador (Indie) (1,400; $1.20-$2.40) — "Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) (2d wk). Hotsy $26,000 after $24,500 opening session.

Fox (F&M) (5,000; 75)—"Battle Cry" (WB) (3d wk). Fancy $14,000 following $22,000 for second stanza.

Loew's (Loew's) (3,172; 50-85)—"Jupiter's Darling" (M-G) and "They Rode West" (Col). Solid $16,000. Last week, "Bad Day Black Rock" (M-G) and "Operation Manhunt" (UA), $9,500.

Orpheum (Loew's) (1,400; 50-85) —"Black Knight" (Col) and "Black Dakotas" (Col). Good $9,000. Last week, "Beau Brummell" (M-G) and "Drive a Crooked Road" (Col), $7,500.

Pageant (St. L. Amus.) (1,000; 82)—"Prince of Players" (20th). Okay $3,000. Last week, "Beauties of Night" (UA), $2,500.

Richmond (St. L. Amus.) (400; 82)—"Beauties of Night" (UA) (2d wk). Big $2,500. Last week, $2,000.

St. Louis (St. L. Amus.) (4,000; 90)—"The Racers" (20th) (2d wk). Fine $9,000 following $13,000 for teeoff stanza.

Shady Oak (St. L. Amus.) (800; 82)—"Hamlet" (U). Big $3,500. Last week, "Leonardo Di Vinci" (Indie), $2,500.

'BATTLE' WHAM 22G, INDPLS.; 'LINE' $12,000

Indianapolis, March 8.

Biz is more robust here this stanza, despite rain and snow over weekend. Not all entries are up to expectations. "Battle Cry" is great at Indiana to lead city, with "Country Girl" still solid in 2d week at Loew's. "Long Gray Line" shapes sharp at Loew's.

Estimates for This Week

Circle (Cockrill-Dolle) (2,800; 60-95)—"Country Girl" (Par) (2d wk). Hot $13,000 after $21,000 opener.

Indiana (C-D) (3,200; 60-95)—"Battle Cry" (WB). Great $22,000. Last week, "White Feather" (20th) and "Mighty Fortress" (Indie), $6,500 at 50c-85c scale.

Loew's (Loew's) (2,427; 60-90)—"Long Gray Line" (Col). Sharp $12,000. Last week, "Bad Day Black Rock" (M-G) and "Pirates of Tripoli" (Col), $7,000.

Lyric (C-D) (1,600; 35-70)—"Shield For Murder" (UA) and "Fast and Furious" (ARC). Modest $5,500, with All-Star Jamboree on-stage replacing second feature Sunday only at $1.25. Last week, "Unchained" (WB) and "Carolina Cannonball" (Rep), $5,000, same setup.

WASHINGTON

—"Black Tuesday" (UA). Brisk $10,000. May hold.

Dupont (Lopert) (372; 65-$1) — "Gate of Hell" (Indie) (2d wk). Solid $5,500 after $6,500 last week. Stays.

Keith's (RKO) (1,939; 90-$1.25) —"Long Gray Line" (Col) (4th wk). Pleasant $15,000 after $17,000 last week. Shows steady power though has never been up to hopes. Stays.

Metropolitan (SW) (1,200; 90-$1.25)—"Battle Cry" (WB) (5th-final wk). Handsome $8,500. Last week, $10,700.

Palace (Loew's) (2,370; 70-95)—"White Feather" (20th). Okay $14,000. Last week, "The Racers" (20th), $12,000.

Playhouse (Lopert) (435; 70-$1) —"Aida" (IFE) (3d wk). Steady, $5,000 after $6,200 last week. Stays on.

Trans-Lux (T-L) (600; 70-$1)—"Country Girl" (Par) (5th wk). Continues to top town with wow $14,000 after $16,000 last week. Holds.

Warner (SW) (1,300; $1.20-$2.40) —"Cinerama" (Indie) (69th wk). No signs of slowing up with trim $14,000 for second consecutive week.

Majors' Own TV

Screen Gems, and Republic has long been peddling its oldies to tv.

And now the big guns are getting set for their turn. Warner Bros., which recently sold 190 cartoons to tv, has been huddling with the ABC network and there are recurrent reports that the company is on the verge of unloading some of its oldies to the broadcasters. Metro also is studying the tv layout and has talked to ABC, and 20th-Fox's brass is up to its ears in tv plans and has just concluded extensive talks with networks and ad agencies. 20th's Western Ave. lot on the Coast is being converted for tv production.

Paramount, too, has its foot in the door and is said to be anxious to sell a slate of old Pine & Thomas features to tv.

Disney's Example

While Col paved the way, it would seem that it was Walt Disney's plunge into the video pool, and the impressive ratings of his show, that cued the new Hollywood interest. There's still a degree of caution evident on the part of some of the producing companies who prefer not to antagonize their exhib customers.

(J. Arthur Rank is peddling a bundle of 52 English features for U. S. video.)

WB, for instance, has set up Sunset Productions not only to take care of any tv film production, but also to handle possible feature sales at a later date. Persistent story is that WB, with ambitious plans for tv film lensing, is seeking a format under which it could integrate edited versions of the oldies in its vaults.

One of the conclusions reached at the 20th huddles in N. Y. last week was that, whatever the outfit decides to do in the production field—"live" or otherwise—will be on a scale and of a quality commensurate with the prestige of the studio.

While 20th hasn't reached any definite conclusions as to what properties it might turn into video fare, impression is gained that execs are aiming at a part "live" and part film package that may run an hour longer. Two properties mentioned in the past as being tv "naturals" are 20th's "Mr. Belvedere" and "My Friend Flicka." At the meet with the American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres execs, 20th prexy Spyros P. Skouras disclosed he had had various bids in the past for "Mr. Belvedere" rights, but had turned them down. 20th also may bring the "Junior Miss" shows to tv.

Expect Producing

There is every reason to believe that, once 20th, WB and the rest fling caution to the side and take the plunge, they may be tempted not only to film properties, but to build "live" programs as well, utilizing their stars. At the moment, the contracts of many top b.o. stars still restrict them as to tv appearances.

It's long been reasoned that, once it caught the tv bug, Hollywood might well find video a useful training ground for new talent of which there is a shortage.

Observers see in the film companies' new slant on tv the possible dawn of a new entertainment era for the home viewers. Hollywood's attitude in the past has tended to downbeat the tv potential, the comment frequently being heard that the small screen was incapable of transmitting the true values of the type of show Hollywood is capable of providing.

Accent significantly now is on an approach involving tailor-made material for tv with all its limitations. At the same time, the companies aren't unawares of the popularity of feature films on tv and there is an open admission that the time may be at hand to consider all aspects of tv programming, and that includes feature film.

Film Music

Green believes that Hollywood has been influenced by the growing public interest in music, as evidenced by the increasing number of hi-fi fans. "The result," he said, "is a blossoming maturity in film music," the abandonment of assembly-line composing, and the drawing to Hollywood of gifted composers such as Leonard Bernstein, Leonard Rosenman, and Alex North. Even the old-line composers, such as Bernard Herrmann and Franz Waxman, according to Green, are changing their styles, the result being that the veterans and the newcomers, encouraged by producers, "are stepping away from the lush Hollywood sound" and are introducing "a sparse and linear" type of music.

Last year Green snared an Academy Award as producer of the nine-minute musical short, "Merry Wives of Windsor." Reel was one of the series made by the musical director to accompany Metro CinemaScope films. While sold as a package with a full-length feature, each of the musical reelers are available separately to exhibitors. This year, another of Green's musical shorts, "Strauss Fantasy," has been nominated for an Oscar award in the shorts category.

The shorts, all in the form of large orchestra overtures, Green believes, are starters toward reorienting audiences to musical portions of film programs. "Entertainment-wise," he said, "there is far greater interest in music, properly presented, than we suspect." The trouble with many musical shorts, he maintains, is that all the attention is concentrated on the music and "no one bothers to make a good picture." In supervising the production of the musical reelers, Green said, he took it for granted that "the musical performance would be as good as we could make it. Now our objective was to make a good movie."

In addition to employing such directors as Rogers Edens, George Sidney, Vincente Minnelli, and Charles Vidor, extra care was taken in the grooming of the orchestra, costuming the femme members, and designing an eye-catching set that would hold the aud's attention. A gimmick that proved effective was the use of the camera as the conductor, so that with every nuance of the music the eyes of the fiddle section, for example, lifted simultaneously as if catching the conductor's direction. "I couldn't depend on the music and performance alone to fight the popcorn," Green notes in explaining the many production details.

Goodwill

man who sees it cries out 'this is what they did to us too, under the Nazis.' They readily identify themselves with the persecution."

"In 'Teahouse,' the Germans see an expression of what's happening in Germany under the easygoing American occupation, but are too polite to speak out on the subject. Consequently, they identify that play with their own experiences."

American film musicals are very popular in Germany. The old crop of composers, Strauss, Lehar and the like, are gone, and the new batch haven't excited them as yet. Consequently, the big U. S. musical films make up for that void in a great way, Bus-Fekete said.

Commercial Titles

In a city divided such as Berlin, his own play, "Lot's Wife," was a revelation to those who came over from the Soviet side of the city. Here an entertainment hungry crowd virtually devoured everything because it was a non-propaganda piece. An actor just had to say "hello" to bring down the house. "They laughed in the most peculiar places, just because they appreciated a bit of entertainment that didn't have any political message."

The play, "Lot's Wife," incidentally was called "Hexenschuss" ("Lumbago") in Vienna, and "Seiltanzer" ("Tight Rope Walker") in Germany. They seemed to be commercial titles in both countries, since the play was a pronounced success.

The Germans, reported Bus-Fekete, are loathe to try out new playwrights, especially as most of the theatres receive some sort of state or municipal subsidy. "Consequently, the directors take the assured masterpieces and try to endow them with tremendous productions in competition with another theatre trying the same play."

While abroad, Bus-Fekete made a propaganda film which was a hit because it had no visible propaganda. The celluloid was based on Nora Kovach and Istvan Rabovsky, dancers who escaped from behind the Iron Country to the sanctuary of the United States. "The Russians," he said, "had been propagandizing that only failures who couldn't make good sought refuge in the west. We showed that they were good in this film, and that helped destroy their propaganda."

The Bus-Feketes are preparing for the production of a film, "The Other One," which he will shoot in several European countries.

He feels that the American cause in Europe is far from lost. "Why they're even playing bingo there," he noticed.

16m 'Consent'

a blanket that covers far more area than a plaintiff's alleged injury. Next, it's feared, could be a loosening of releases to tv and others to the extent that the entire theatrical market might be upet. Pic entertainment possibly would be reaching the public from variety of new directions because distributors, wary of violating the consent judgment and facing a contempt rap, would more and more unleash product to new outlets.

Encourages Suits

Also being given heavy thought is the possibility that any kind of a decree short of dismissal would encourage private antitrust suits. The divorcement and trade-practice edicts that culminated the first Government attack influenced many an exhib to trek to the nearest courthouse. This has resulted in a heavy drain on film company exchequers and the economy of the industry as a whole.

Any unfavorable windup of the 16m suit could set off treble-damage actions cut from the same pattern, with 16m operators, middlemen and telecasters as plaintiffs. At least, this is the pessimistic view expressed by some in the trade.

Majority of film companies are named defendants in the Government complaint. The prominent national and regional theatre trade associations and the Council of Motion Picture Organizations are listed as "co-conspirators." Federal Court in L. A. has set the trial date at Sept. 6 but chances are this will be postponed.

Par's Special 'International Bureau' Solely to Plug DeMille's Super-Epic

ternational news bureau" to disseminate information about a single picture, "The Ten Commandments." The press, television audiences, clubs, schools, clergy, etc., have shown interest in the Cecil B. DeMille production, states Par adpub v.p. Jerry Pickman. He added that the info released to any one outlet will cover the particular field of interest involved.

Bureau will be under the overall supervision of Teete Carle, studio publicity chief. Director of the unit will be Art Arthur, DeMille's exec assistant in charge of public relation. Set to work under Arthur are Albert Deane, former editor of Paramount International News, foreign department house organ; Jack Hirshberg, Par staff publicist; Harry Mines, former drama editor of the L. A. Daily News, and two still photographers.

Others slated to work closely with the bureau include Rufus Blair, who heads Par's major city newspaper contacts, and Jimmy Sarno, in charge of still photos at the studio. Blair flew to Egypt during "Commandments" locationing. Deane was with the production company several months in the same country.

The setup is unusual not only for its scope but also because of the time angles. The bureau goes into full-scale operation immediately and will continue to function without letup, according to Pickman. Yet the DeMille epic, in Vista-Vision, will not be released before another year and a half.

Outlets for news and pictures include these: lay press, trade papers around the world, magazines of general leadership and those covering fields, industrial house organs, school and college publications, church and religious press, radio commentators and panel shows and a variety of tv programs.

Flock of Dailies Pressure MPPA For 'Equal Space'

Newspapers around the country are putting the pressure on the various film companies and the Motion Picture Assn. of America for advertising deals patterned after recent tieups with both the Dallas News and N. Y. Herald Tribune. Latter dailies recently printed special tabloid sections comprising one-page insertions each by the 10 MPAA member companies, eight by exhibitors and two by the Council of Motion Picture Organizations. The papers padded this out with 10 pages of editorial text, including articles by film critics, and cuts.

Dailies in Indianapolis, Denver and Milwaukee have made the pitch for "equal space" in formal letters and their counterparts in other cities have approached MPAA and the companies via telephone calls and personal visits.

Exhibs want in the act, too, offering to buy eight pages of ads for every 10 pages by the distributors. Indications are that the distribs will go along with the idea in various locations.

However, Milwaukee has become a problem situation. Theatremen in this area want to gear the special layouts to the Academy Awards. Film outfits which are out of Oscar contention this year have nixed this plan.

Biggest Is 2,070 Cars

Hartford, March 8.

Midwest Theatres of Boston has leased the world's largest drive-in theatre here from its builder A. J. Bronstein, local paper merchant. Ozoner will house 2,070 cars when completed next month at North Meadows. Costing $500,000, park will open on May 15.

Swimming pools, wading pools and an extensive kiddies playground are included. Midwest Theatres, controlled by Phillip and Richard Smith of Boston, owns 20 outdoor theatres. Lease is for 10 years.

RAPPAPORT CASE'S $65,000 SETTLEMENT

Washington, March 8.

The $2,700,000 treble damage suit brought by the Hippodrome and Town Theatres, of Baltimore, wound up last week with a cash settlement of $65,000 by the distributors to th[illegible]

Case, which had been on trial in the U. S. District Court here for three weeks, wound up in a settlement without reaching the jury. Defendants were Loew, Paramount, Warners, United Artists, Universal and the Loew and Stanley Warner circuits.

Action alleged that I. M. Rappaports' two theatres—Town and Hippodrome—had been unable to get enough firstrun pictures from 1947 through 1951. It charged a conspiracy among the distributors to favor the large circuits. About two years ago, the indie houses regained access to sufficient firstrun product.

Robert Wright, former specialist for the Justice Department antitrust division, handled the case for Rappaport. John F. Caskey tried the case for the defendants.

MPEA to Byrd: Foreign Take Is Pix Salvation

Washington, March 8.

Speaking for MPEA, Eric Johnston today called on the U. S. Senate to approve the House-passed bill extending the reciprocal trade agreements for three more years, with added authority for the President to cut tariffs.

In a letter to Senator Harry F. Byrd, Chairman of the Senate Finance Committee which is now studying the legislation, Johnston wrote:

"Our film producers now derive approximately 45% of their revenues from abroad. In relation to size, we are the largest single export industry in the United States. Without our export business, domestic film producers would be forced to curtail production and employment; without our export business, many foreign lands would suffer economic losses."

Johnston argued that the reciprocal trade policy strengthens both our allies and ourselves and should be expanded as a matter of "paramount self-interest."

HOLLYWOOD'S BIBLICAL SCHOLARSHIP DUBIOUS

Producers of Biblical films now have a place in the Holy Land that'll supply them with all the authentic research they need.

It's the Biblical research department of Israel's Forum Film which has been established by O. Sonnenfeld, managing director of Forum, and Theodor F. Meysels, art historian and archeological expert. At their disposal is the cumulative knowledge of Hebrew University, the Israel Exploration Fund, the Pontifical Bible Institute and the Ecole Biblique of the Dominican Fathers.

Sonnenfeld, who headquarters in Tel-Aviv, said Hollywood frequently made mistakes in its portrayal of Biblical times and characters. For instance, he pointed out, his staff might have warned 20th-Fox against using the Star of David in "David and Bathsheba." Seems it wasn't a Jewish symbol before the 17th century.

As for "Samson and Delilah," the Forum Film department might have improved on the finery of the beauties of Philistia via documented creations of the period. The real McCoy would have outshone in both originality and sex appeal any of the oriental costumes worn on the screen.

instance, able to meet the requirements efficiently."

The Hollywood films, "Decision Before Dawn," "Night People" and "Carnival Story," provided the vanguard in Germany for American procedure, D'eterle declared.

Director also stated that Europeans now are gathering American exploitation material during production, having briefed still fotogs in the needs of U.S. distribution. Further, he asserted, pictures being made on the Continent are being hypoed via large-scale publicity campaigns during production. His "Fire" set was visited by 80 newspaper correspondents from all over Europe, director reported, and a large group of U.S. wire service reps covered the filming phase.

Friends of Bayreuth, the Wagnerian society being run by the composer's sons in Southern Germany, is behind the picture for its European run, utilizing their extensive exploitation facilities, Dieterle said. In return for the use of the Festival amphitheatre at Bayreuth, he gave the society a small percentage of the picture's overall profits.

More Indie Pix

art Granger and Jean Simmons, for release by that company.

Theodora Productions, recently formed by actor Cornel Wilde, has entered a pact with UA to picturize "Storm Fear," novel by Clinton Seeley, with Wilde as star.

Horton Foote, stage and tv playwright, is doing the screenplay, this being his first film assignment. UA will finance and distribute.

Producer David E. Rose, who's also been linked with Col in past, over the past weekend entered a new agreement to lens three pix for the distributor. First is to be "Port Afrique," based on the novel by Bernard Dryer. Rose recently completed "End of the Affair," from the Graham Greene novel, which is set for release by Col in the spring.

The actor-turned-producer trend is continuing at UA, where Robert Mitchum signed to make five pictures—one a year—under the banner of DRM Porductions. This is his own outfit, just formed for the purpose of indie producing in the UA tieup. He's also to star in at least three of the five and the entire lineup will be financed by UA.

Exhibs Push Distribs for Roundtable; The 'Or Else' Is U.S. Intercession

U. S. TO BELGIUM ON PRINTS: BE REALISTIC

American distribs are expected to take a much firmer stand on the Belgian color printing demands than they did vis-a-vis similar requests from the Italians. Belgians have been told the U. S. companies plan to "study" the situation.

Whereas the Italians had asked that the Americans do color printing in Italy, without fixing any exact amounts, the Belgian labs specified that 80% of the color prints being released locally should be processed in Belgian plants.

This, according to company execs, is an unrealistic demand in that Belgium only rates about three prints on each tinter whereas Italy goes up to as many as 30. Thus, it's pointed out, it's going to be a lot tougher to make the Belgian proposition pay off. It's not clear at the moment whether the Belgians intend to make the local printing issue part of the negotiations for a new film agreement with the government there.

French Carbon H'wood: Fewer, Bigger Films

French film industry, in keeping with the Hollywood trend, is turning out fewer but bigger pictures according to Henry Deutschmeister, head of Franco London Film. But, he added, despite keen Gallic interest in new projection and camera techniques most producers have not rushed to adopt the new methods principally due to the expense involved.

Deutschmeister, who returned to Paris yesterday (Tues.) after a month's U.S. stay, noted that while several CinemaScope films have been made by French filmmakers he personally prefers the 1.85-1 aspect ratio. "All Franco London product," he said, "is being made in this dimension since it affords a wide screen effect but still preserves a feeling of intimacy."

Although primarily in America on a vacation, Deutschmeister visited Mexico to arrange a possible coproduction there with a Mexican studio. But no deal, he emphasized, has been consummated as yet and the project is still in the discussion stage. Participating with him in the talks was Raoul Levy, Paris rep of Charles K. Feldman's Famous Artists agency. Venture, to be called "Camerone," would concern the French Foreign Legion in Mexico circa 1863.

Franco London, which customarily makes around six pictures annually, envisions production of the same amount again this year. Due to roll in two weeks is "Chiens Perdus" (Lost Dogs). A Jean Gabin starrer, it will be lensed in Eastman Color. "The Poison Affair" follows, "Camerone" is tentatively set as third and slated as fourth is "Modigliani," a biopic on the celebrated painter which Max Ophuls will direct. Remaining pix on the program have not been set as yet.

Meantime, Deutschmeister plans to return to the U.S. sometime in September to set American distribution deals for F-L's "French-Cancan" and "Le Rouge et le Noir" (Scarlet and Black). "Cancan," a Jean Renoir production filmed in Technicolor, is virtually completed. Jean Gabin, Francoise Arnoul and Maria Felix have top roles in this French-Italian coproduction. Also in Technicolor, "Rouge" is based on the Stendhal novel and currently is doing top b.o. in French theatres.

Joan Crawford Producing

Add Joan Crawford to the list of screen personalities who've formed their own companies to produce pix independently.

Mrs. Crawford yesterday (Tues.) closed a deal to make one film a year for the next six years for United Artists. She is to appear in at least three of them.

Wilbur Snaper, Allied States Assn.'s representative on the Council of Motion Picture Organizations, is expected to bring up the subject of the proposed roundtable industry session at the governing body's meeting tomorrow (Thurs.) at the Sheraton Astor, N. Y. Allied's move toward seeking Government intervention in industry affairs relies largely on the outcome of the proposed meeting at which, it's hoped, exhibitor leaders can sit down with the general sales managers and company presidents to discuss film rentals and other industry problems separating distributors and exhibitors.

The roundtable, officially proposed by the distrib's COMPO rep, 20th-Fox's distribution chief Al Lichtman, although long advocated by exhibitors, has already been delayed several times. When Lichtman made his proposal, he felt that the confab should be held outside the jurisdiction of COMPO. COMPO is an all-industry public relations outfit which is not geared for the handling of trade problems.

However, Allied leaders, in unofficial off-the-cuff statements, have said that it would be impossible to work with the distribs on other industry affairs if there were no eye-to-eye agreement on trade matters. In fact, Allied once intimated that it would pull out of COMPO if a better relationship between distribution and exhibition is not established.

Allied has refused to accept the distribution point that the roundtable session will be held as soon as the arbitration draft is completed. Allied wants no part of arbitration as long as it does not include the arbitration of film rentals but wants the all-industry meeting to be held at once regardless of the outcome of arbitration. Snaper will press hard for a fixed date for an all-industry meeting.

Allied and TOA have already agreed to a joint meeting, to be held prior to the roundtable, to map joint strategy in facing the film company executives. The date for this get-together depends on the one set for the all-industry session.

Distribs Want New Index For Foreign Wages

Concerned over the steady rise in operating costs abroad, some of the foreign managers for U. S. film distributors are advocating a firmer and more realistic policy re the constant demands for wage increases.

Feeling is that the industry is too easily given to granting pay boosts abroad on the basis of local pressures and, in the case of some individuals, on the assumption that the rise is comparatively minor if split up among 10 companies.

In one territory, where a pay increase had already been agreed on, investigation showed that it was a good many percent points above the local cost of living index. Elsewhere, the companies are said to be given to gauging the wage situation by American, i.e. dollar standards.

One of the difficulties, it's pointed out, is that the distribs' field execs, including the local film boards, are frequently apt to take the side of their employees. "The local managers want to keep peace in the family. They don't want to be bothered with fighting about raises," said one top foreign exec in N. Y. last week. "It's up to us to bring a bit of realism into this situation. There is no reason why, as it's done in the U. S., wages shouldn't bear some relationship to the cost of living. We tend to be pressured into granting wage rises blindly, without adequate investigation."

While they have to cope with such uncontrollable expenses as taxes and wage boosts, the companies are trying hard to keep the lid on foreign operating costs, with each outfit instituting its own economy schemes.

Off-and-On, Including Amusements

Zenith Zooms—Wall Street Welcomes 'Friendly' Investigation With an Upsurge

By MIKE WEAR

The stock market fell off sharply yesterday (Tues.) and Monday, industrial averages showing a loss of more than four points. However, Amusement shares declined only minor fractions in most cases.

With market prices advancing five days in a row (hit 25-year highs for third consecutive day Friday), some of the bullish sentiment spread over into the Amusement Group last week. Wall Street paid little attention to the "friendly" Senate probe into stock market conditions excepting for a great show of strength the day that the quiz opened. Of 24 amusement issues, 14 showed gains, seven lost ground and three were unchanged. Three new highs were posted.

The gains in film shares were made in face of currently uneven boxoffice returns, with some keys reporting biz in the doldrums. Cinema stocks as a whole made a much better showing than film issues.

The sensational performer was Zenith Radio which soared past the century mark in Friday's (4) trading to register a fresh peak for a year and longer at 100¾. The stock closed at 100, a gain of 5¼ points for the week. Always a fast mover, either up or down, the price of $100 per share is the highest achieved by an amusement stock since pre-1929. It compares with Zenith's low price in 1954 of 63½. Reports of a stock split naturally follow such an achievement, and, of course, these were prevalent in Wall Street Friday.

Technicolor and ABC-Paramount Theatres were the other two to go into fresh ground. Former hit a new high at 16⅜ on what was regarded as an excellent earnings statement. It was up only an eighth on the week at 16⅛. ABC-Par climbed to 28⅛, for its fresh peak. This stock was one of the four amusement issues to sport gains of better than one point. It was up 1⅛ for the week at 27⅞.

The two CBS issues soared. Class "A" stock advanced $2 while "B" shares were up 3 points at 86¼. The "A" issue wound up at 86½. Zenith, of course, was the fourth stock to show real improvement.

Stanley Warner climbed five-eights to 21½, great returns from "Cinerama Holiday" no doubt causing the most interest. National Theatres went to 10⅛ at the close, where it was a quarter of a point from the year's best price.

Eastman Kodak climbed with other blue-chips, at one time being about a point away from the 1954-55 high. However, it was up only 25c on the week.

Decca, WB and Universal were up nice fractions. Columbia Pix was off half a point to 34. Skiatron was unchanged at 4⅜ bid.

OSCAR AWARDS EVENT PICKS THREE SCRIPTERS

Hollywood, March 8.

Richard L. Breen, Jack Rose and Melville Shavelson were named as scripters of the Academy Awards presentations show by general director Jean Negulesco. In addition the trio will turn out special material for emcee Bob Hope.

Ned Washington was appointed chairman of the Special Advisory Committee for the presentation of songs, under general supervision of Johnny Green, chairman of the Awards Planning Committee.

Goldwyn will film the picture on his own lot and is providing his own financing, with the budget said to be $5,000,000. Goldwyn paid $1,000,000 for the film rights to the Jo Swerling-Abe Burrows-Frank Loesser stage hit. Joseph Mankiewicz wrote the screenplay and is also directing. Picture will be filmed in CinemaScope, with Marlon Brando, Frank Sinatra, Vivian Blaine, and Jean Simmons in the leading roles. Choreography will be staged by Michael Kidd and Loesser will supervise and augment his original musical score.

6! to Yugoslavs

MPEA, the Yugoslavs have some 320 titles to choose from. Price being paid by the Yugoslav outfit for individual pix differs, with some bringing as much as $6,000 and others only $3,750.

Deal was negotiated in N. Y. by Bozidar Torbica, general manager of Yugoslavia Film, the Yugoslav industry's import-export agency, and the MPEA's Herbert Erlanger. Convertibility of the Yugoslav payments is guaranteed by the U. S. Information Agency. The Yugoslavs are under obligation to make their selections before the end of 1955 with payment on delivery of each individual pic.

While the Yugoslavs will do their own black-and-white printing from dupe negatives provided by the MPEA, they're ordering color prints in the U. S. and paying for them.

MPEA's deal originally was with Croatia Films. As it turned out, however, the local outfit couldn't get Belgrade okay on exchange arrangement and the pact was never consummated. It then became clear that the Yugoslav government wouldn't allow anyone but Yugoslavia Film to make foreign importation deals.

duction of the entire film in Phenix City "although it might not be too safe for us there." Film is about the vice capital and conditions surrounding death of Phenix City lawyer Patterson who won the state nomination equivalent to election in the Alabama Democratic primary. He was out to clean up.

Director Phil Karlson said he planned to use "fresh faces you may have seen on the U. S. Steel Hour" if the film is made in Phenix City. Karlson said he would head to New York for the casting if the producers decide not to film it in Hollywood.

Diamond and Karlson gave a buffet luncheon for the several dozen members of the press, radio and tv covering the Patterson murder trial now ending its second week. Both explained the purpose of the picture—to show Phenix City as a city with one industry—vice—and to show Albert Patterson "as a man who died a martyr's death." Honor guest was John Patterson, son of Albert Patterson who was later elected attorney-general. He will be the main character in the film.

Noting that the Michele Morgan film may end up as a Franco-Italian coproduction, Poire said one of the effects of this collaboration had been an increase in French production costs due to the high Italo player salaries. He observed, too, that the success of Italian releases in France had been spotty.

Poire said he expected to return to the U. S. within a few months for a more detailed study of French distribution problems. One of the solutions may be, he commented, for a group of French producers to get together and acquire a string of showcases in the major American keys. He said that, with French film budgets way up, it was get about 50% of his revenue on a big picture from abroad.

Inside Stuff—Pictures

In a review of the motion picture industry published in the London Financial Times (the British opposite of the Wall Street Journal) the upswing in attendances is attributed mainly to new widescreen techniques and notably the development of CinemaScope. The paper estimates that of Britain's 4,500 picture theatres about 1,500, representing 75% of the country's entire seating capacity, are now either fitted for anamorphic exhibition or other widescreen processes. The 20th-Fox system, says the London sheet, has now established a commanding lead over its rivals.

In addition to the three major circuits it is reported that 664 independent theatres have been retooled for CinemaScope and this total will rise to 861 by the end of March and to 986 by the end of June. As a result of the new techniques the journal reports that the industry is now confident it can weather the approaching competition from commercial television and also the eventual introduction of color tv.

Harper's mag in its March issue gives the lowdown on the real monickers of 43 Hollywood thesps. Included in the list, by aliases (and the genuine article), are: Doris Kapplehoff (Doris Day); Bernard Schwartz (Tony Curtis); Mladen Sekulovich (Karl Malden); Marie Tomlinson Krebs (Marjorie Main); Arthur Gelien (Tab Hunter); Virginia McMath (Ginger Rogers); Claudette Chauchoin (Claudette Colbert); Ethel Zimmerman (Ethel Merman); Vito Farinola (Vic Damone); Tula Finklea (Cyd Charisse); Judy Tuvim (Judy Holliday); Aldo Da Re (Aldo Ray, naturally); Gwyllyn Ford (Glenn Ford); Frederick Bickel (Frederick March); Issur Danielovitch (Kirk Douglas) Ella Geisman (June Allyson); David Kaminsky (Danny Kaye); Jimmy Stewart (Stewart Granger, and that's a novel twist—now tradesters are guessing what Jimmy Stewart's true tag is); Archibald Alexander Leach (Cary Grant); and also included was the Harry Lillis (of Bing) Crosby. Harper's also listed Brian deLacy Aherne (for Brian Aherne).

Alex Barris, Toronto Globe and Mail's film critic, ended a rave review of "Carmen Jones" last week with this criticism:

"Despite the general high level of the picture, there is one lapse into questionable taste that I can't fail to mention because it seems to be an important one. I will never understand why Mr. Preminger and the others associated with this production should have found it necessary (or even desirable) to perpetuate the stupid notion that every time a Negro opens his mouth to sing he automatically changes 'I am' to 'I'se' and 'this' and 'that' to 'dis' and 'dat.' I know Hammerstei wrote it that way, but this is not enough of an excuse for Mr. Preminger. As to Hammerstein, there IS no excuse."

(Actually, Oscar Hammerstein, as a former member of the Writers War Board, has been a leader against racial stereotyping, has modified some of his old "Show Boat" lyrics—Editor).

Disclosure by Gulfport, Miss, police of a suicide attempt by Larry Cowen, former manager of Proctor's Theatre in Troy, before he was to be extradited to the Collar City to face charges of forgery and larceny, respectively, filed by his wife and his mother, was the latest chapter in his tangled affairs since disappearing last September.

Cowen, who served as lieutenant commander in charge of Naval Intelligence for the Albany zone during World War II, took an overdose of sleeping pills in his jail cell at Gulfport, authorities said. He left a note blaming the act on distress over publicity about his disappearance. After hospital treatment, Cowen was transferred to the Gay Clinic at Biloxi, Miss.

A Troy detective went there to pick up the ex-theatreman.

Harry C. Arthur Jr., prez of Fanchon & Marco in St. Louis, and head of the St. Louis Amusement Co., has agreed to contribute to the support of a 13-year old Greek girl as part of the program of the Foster Parents' Plan for War Children. Last week Arthur pledged to pay $15 per month to the girl's family that was impoverished as a result of the Nazi occupation and civil war. Her father was executed in 1948 during internal strife in 1948. The family lives in a two room hut and the family income is derived from the sale of farm produce and goat's milk.

Actor William Holden follows reviews closely but admits he's a "poor judge" of films in which he appears. "I get too emotionally involved," he told interviewers at a Honolulu press party hosted by Herman Rosen of Royal Amusements. "So I have to leave it up to audience reaction." Star had lavish praise for talents of Audrey Hepburn and Grace Kelly, noting that these two gals "have tremendous powers of concentration." Mr. and Mrs. Holden will return to Honolulu for 10 weeks this summer while he films exteriors for "Magnificent Devils," he said.

Emerging as the food page star of "Cinerama Holiday," is a Swiss dish known as cheese fondue. It's cheese melted with flour and butter and spiced with white wine and the Swiss cherry brandy Kirschwasser. Cheese fondue ritual is part of the Swiss Alps ski sequence of the new Cinerama picture. Publicist Lynn Farnol has latched on to the angle. A press party for food editors to plug a motion picture is an unusual departure, but it paid off with beaucoup space throughout the country. The recipe for the dish is also listed in the theatre program.

Responding to last week's VARIETY story, showing a 28% drop in the amount spent by film companies for ads in Sunday newspaper supplements, Parade has piped up with its own version; and it doesn't jive with that of the Publishers Information Bureau. Parade boasts that it led the entire Sunday supplement field in film ads, showing an impressive 72% rise in 1954 over 1953. PIB figures, while indicating a drop in film coin for the supplements, at the same time showed a 19% rise in coin outlay for mag ads.

For allowing "Princeton '55," the educational weekly tv program over WRCA-TV, to show scenes from "Mourning Becomes Electra," RKO's film version of the Eugene O'Neill play made several years ago, the film company received a plug for a current production. Recipient of the mention on the highbrow program was "Underwater," the Howard Hughes production starring Jane Russell.

Ohio's Education Director's statement that some cases of juvenile delinquency were directly attributable to ideas received from the films drew a heated denial from the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio. ITOO denied there was any correlation between juvenile delinquency and motion pictures, inasmuch as Ohio had had censorship for 40 years (ending only last December) which was thought to combat delinquency.

The White House News Photographers Assn., will install one newsreeler as its president and two more as members of its executive board at the organization's annual dinner for President Eisenhower on March 19. Going in as president of the association will be Anthony Muto, of Fox Movietone. Elected to the board last week were Clarence Ellis, of Warner-Pathe News, and Hugo Johnson, of Paramount News.

Shades of the past will flutter over the Great Northern saloon scenes in Universal's re-make of "The Spoilers." Framed photographs of William Farnum and Tom Santschi, who appeared in the original version of the Rex Beach yarn, have been hung on the walls, to bring back cherished memories to anyone who saw the nine-reel 1915 edition. Jeff Chandler and Rory Calhoun enact the respective roles now.

Film Industry's Current Relations With Provincial Press Now Dandy

The film industry hasn't had it so good in years on the press relations front. Papers aeross the country have jumped on the bandwagon with editorial plugs for the picture business. Some dailies have gone into trade angles, such as exhibitor complaints about a shortage of supply, and others have considered the significance of the widescreens. But for the most part the papers have taken note of the trade's economie upbeat and ascribe it primarily to improved produetion quality.

Mot'on Pieture Assn. of America's clipping serviee has been cutting new editorials about the business regularly for well over the past three months. A few examples.

The S. Joseph, Mo., News-Press comments: "St. Joseph is getting bigger and better pietures than ever before. And we are getting them currently with eities many times our population. Indeed, the motion pieture business has come ahead by leaps and bounds in the last few years. It has aecepted the challenge of competing entertainment in elegant fashion."

The Bluefield, W. Va., Telegraph: "Current phenomenal improvement in the movie business is partly due to deep-perception films, and to the cut in the federal admission tax. But we believe it is primarily due to better movies. The studios are turning out bigger and better shows than ever."

San Francisco Examiner: "The glum in Hollywood predicted a few years ago that tv would relegate the motion pieture industry to the role of tv supplier, a sort of handmaiden to the new video giant. Instead, the industry overhauled itself, met the competition and is enjoying a boom."

Detroit Times: "In the years just past, the exhibitor has been hard pressed to keep up with new technical developments in the industry. Here in Detroit he has done a good job eonverting to bigger screen, greater sound fidelity and more general comfort."

VARIETY inspired some editorializing and reporting. A widely-used AP dispateh from Hollywood quoted boxoffiee figures picked up from this trade week.)

The Cincinnati Enquirer, in an editorial piece on highbrow entertainment in pix, led off with this: "Does Culture—with a eapital C—have boxoffice appeal. This is the absorbing problem that commands special editorial comment in the current issue of VARIETY, one of the most interesting foreign-language (sic) journals in the country."

Bavaria Rejects Germany's 3% Relief to U. S.

Frankfurt, Mareh 8.

Despite the fact that an "approval" by the German Board of Censorship makes a U. S. film released in West Germany eligible for a speeial 3% reduction of the amusement tax, the Bavarian government (one of the nine states of West Germany) has refused to allow this tax reduetion.

Bavaria is refusing to recognize the judgment of the Censorship Board, and so is including the amusement tax among the other taxes levied on U. S. pictures in its territory.

The Board, in designating "approved" features, tends to favor German films. In the period from Sept. '53 through Aug. '54, it gave the okay to 211 German pietures and just 30 Yank films. Recently, it at first refused the approved-seal to two outstanding foreign films, "On the Waterfront" (Col) and "Romeo and Juliet" (Rank), but on seeond application, issued the tax reduetion for this pair. Even on these two releases, however, the Bavarians are not letting go of the extra tax bite.

Military Posts 14 Days Behind Nearby Towns

Washington, March 8.

Virtual Pentagon approval of a one-year trial of the proposal to elliminate pre-release showings in some military post theatres has been reaehed here. The plan, pushed by film industry spokesmen, is to help town theatres in some areas with large Army, Navy or Air Force bases.

Request for relief was first asked in December and a specific plan, naming the towns and military posts, was submitted to the Pentagon at a meeting on Feb. 17. Last Thursday (3), at another meeting, the one-year trial was approved, subject to a final okay by the Seeretary of Defense and the Secretaries of the Army, Navy and Air Foree. This is expected to be forhcoming.

Approval was threatened, several days earlier, when several military officials objeeted that the plan would nibble away another prerogative of the men in uniform who have been losing many fringe benefits since the end of World War II. It was asserted that military morale and reenlistments of key personnel were suffering as a result.

However, the okay was finally worked out. It provides that theatres in towns near the specified bases will reeeive a 14-dav clearance ahead of the post theatres.

However, if eommereial theatres do not play the films within 30 days of their first showings by key theatres in their exchange distriet, then the pix will beeome immediately available for the post theatres.

Present at he Pentagon meeting for the industry were: for the distributors — Kenneth Clark, viee president of the Motion Picture Association, and Mauriee Goldstein, of United Artists, chairman of the sales managers' committee; for the exhibitors—Ed Martin, president of TOA; Walter Reade, Jr., chairman of the TOA board; Robert O'Donnell, head of the Interstate Circuit in Texas; and A. Julian Brylawski, of Stanley-Warner.

YORK (LAST RUN) SUES MAJORS IN NEW YORK

Idaman Amus. Co'p., operators of the York Theatre on New York's upper eastside, filed a $600,000 treble damage antitrust suit in N. Y. Federal Court Monday (7) against the eight majors, American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, National Theatres, RKO Theatres and Loew's Theatres.

Objeeting to the Loew's-RKO "split" in the N. Y. metropolitan area, Idaman claims that the defendants caused the York "great financial damages" through conspiring to maintain a system of unreasonable runs and clearances. A last-run house, the York seeks first or second runs.

Pete Wentworth's Duties

Roehester, March 8.

Paul R. (Pete) Wentworth has been named media buyer for Eastman Kodak. For the past year he was assistant manager of the ad department's package design division and prior to this was on special assignment investigating tv as an ad medium.

W. B. Potter, EK's ad director, said Wentworth will be in charge of market and media selection in trade papers, newspapers, general magazines and tv.

Sound Local's New Faces

Hollywood, March 8.

New president of Sound Technicians Local 695, IATSE, is A. Houston Barnet, with Thomas A. Carman as new business agent.

Other officers named in the national were Fred Echwald and John Stack, veepees; Fred McAlphin, secretary; and E. Weldon Coe, treasurer. New board members are John Stransky, William Thompson, Dean Spaneer and Gordon Day.

Elephants, Geishas and Indians

Chicago, March 8.

Old-time bally is coming into its own in Chicago as theatre operators and p.a.'s compete strenuously for the amusement buck. As part of the advance for "Jupiter's Darling," Metro had an elephant, appropriately named Jupiter, register at the Sherman Hotel here; Metro is also seeking a mate for Jupiter, a bull pachyderm, to be his "darling."

For the opening of "Gate of Hell," last week, six kimono-garbed Geisha dancers, accompanied by a samisen trio held forth in the lobby of the Loop Theatre here demonstrating the latest in Nip terp stylings, as an empty and unattended (no coolie union in Chi) jinrikisha waited outside.

Soon Chicago will play host to Ben American Horse, 81-year-old cousin of Chief Crazy Horse, and his granddaughter, Princess Darlene Rooks, runner-up Indian beauty contest winner. Redskin visitors will be here to help whoop it up for Universal's "Chief Crazy Horse."

Brooks Randell Guilty as Gyp Film Producer

Pasadena, March 8.

Brooks Randell, self-asserted film producer, was found guilty in Superior Court on charges of swindling investors out of $54,000 under pretense of producing a picture based on the "Black Dahlia" murder of 1947.

Defendant, who admitted he spent $50,000 in high living, pleaded guilty to felony counts of grand theft and conspiring to violate state corporate security laws. He will be sentenced April 13 by Judge Kenneth C. Howell.

New Frequency Filter By Cinema Engineering Co.

Hollywood, March 8.

New variable high-and-low frequency filter designed to eliminate unnecessary noises in sound reproduction has been developed by the Cinema Engineering Co. of Burbank.

Production has already started on the device which is equipped with a four-stage amplifier and an R-C interstage coupling network.

INDUSTRY EXHIBIT UP BEFORE COUNCIL

Hollywood, March 8.

Setup of Motion Picture Exhibition, planned as a permanent industry exhibit, will be explained by E. L. DePatie at the next meeting of the Hollywood AFL Film Council. All studio unions and guilds will be urged to take part in the new venture.

Screen Story Analysts, Local 854, joined the Council, with Kay Lenard named as delegate and Leroy M. Linick as alternate.

Swiss Pitch

Group of Swiss organizations have banded together to sponsor a public relations film made in New York but promoting tourism in Switzerland. Film was shot at the Swiss Center in N.Y., which houses the Swiss National Travel Office, Swissair and the Swiss Bank Corp., with Murial Williams narrating the pic, which detailed highlights of winter sports in Switzerland and travel and fashion designs. Pic was produced by Edward Kenner and Audrey Leeds, with Swissair, Swiss National Travel Office, Swiss Bank, Watchmakers of Switzerland and Specialty Importers bankrolling the pic.

Mail offer of the pic has resulted in applications by over 100 stations, according to Miss Leeds.

NO FLINCHING LYNCHING

Columbia to Retain Grim Theme Of Arthur Gordon Novel

Columbia will pull a switch in picturizing "Reprisal," Arthur Gordon novel which Col purchased for the screen last week. Arthur Gardner and Jules Levy have been assigned to produce.

Gordon's book, which is about racial intolerance and one man's fight against lynch laws, had the modern south as background. Screenplay being shaped by David Harmon will be laid in the Oklahome Territory circa 1890. The controversial nature of the story will be retained, however, according to Col.

Film is to be lensed in CinemaScope and location shooting has been pencilled in for late April or early May.

Same Tricks At Venice Festival

Regulations of the Venice International Film Festival, duplicating conditions for the Cannes fest, allow one feature entry per country plus a second for nations with large production. In addition, festival authorities are free to invite six additional entries over and above the number of films being shown.

Thus, as in Cannes, the American industry has to content itself with a setup under which its own official entries have been reduced, with local officials free to make their own choice as to additional features. Extension of this policy almost brought about withdrawal of the U.S. from Venice following the 1953 competition.

The Venice festival starts Aug. 25. Jury of seven will hand out a grand gold prize, four silver prizes and cups for best performances. Number of U.S. pix to be included in the six "invited" entries has not been determined.

False Boxoffice Reports on Increase; Snaper Argues That Distribs Create Resentment Among Theatre Men

Schine Case Ends

Buffalo, March 8.

After 13 weeks of intermittent litigation in Federal Court here, the contempt proceedings brought by the U. S. Dept. of Justice against the Schine Theatrical Enterprises and its officers came to an end on Wednesday (2).

Judge John Knight reserved decision indicating that a final ruling would not be forthcoming for at least two months during which attorneys for both sides are to submit briefs.

Rumors of a stepup in false boxoffice reporting among exhibitors, a condition that is not to be condoned, is nevertheless understandable, according to Wilbur Snaper, prexy of the Allied Theatre Owners of New Jersey and former National Allied topper. If there's an increase in presenting phony wicket figures, Snaper contends, it's due to the squeeze the distributors are putting on the small theatreowner. "When a man's livelihood is threatened and his family's security endangered by the willful practices of a few men, he will fight with every means at his command," Snaper asserts.

Snaper's comment is contained i a bulletin to Jersey Allied members. It rehashes many of the charges Allied has made in past against the distribution companies, noting that the film rental policies of the major distribs "might prove to be a death blow to many small independents." Snaper declares that it is to be hoped that the film companies realize "the fallacies of their sales policies before it is too late."

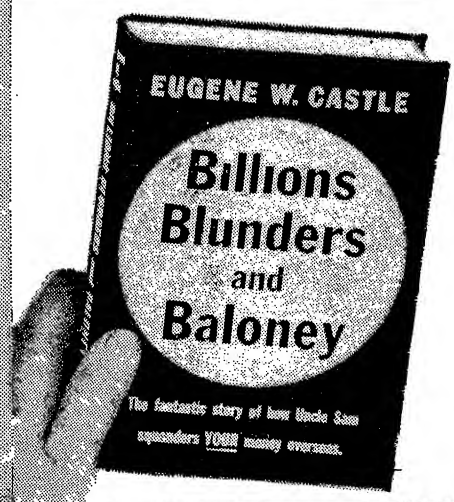
Noting that it has been to no avail to reason with the sales managers, Snaper says it might be wise to speak to each company president "wherever he might be, and discuss the welfare of his customers. If distribution does not see the storm clouds ahead, they are being blinded by the brilliance of their own sales policies." There seems to be a contest, he says, as to which company can demand the highest terms.

In advising exhibs how to meet the rental demands, Snaper notes: "Don't roll over and play dead. If this is a fight for survival, which it seems to be, make sure your enemy does not get off unscathed.

American Dubbing In Paris, Rome

American Dubbing Co., headed by Peter Riethof, is setting up subsidiary companies in Rome and Paris. Riethof recently returned from abroad after organizing the overseas operations.

The Rome studio, already in operation, will be employed mainly for the dubbing of Italo films into English for the U.S. tv market. The Paris branch will be for both tv and theatrical films involving French producers who pay off in francs. Pix involved in the Rome work are usually those owned by U.S. distribs of tv films.



Riethof's American studio will continue to dub feature films scheduled for theatrical release in the U.S.

Theatre Operators Alert to Angles

New Interest in Business Sessions, Concession Novelties at Metro K.C. Ticket Workshop

By JOHN W. QUINN

Kansas City, March 8.

Record turnout of 441 exhibitors and wives made the ninth ticket selling workshop held by Metro at the Hotel Continental here last Thursday (3) probably the most successful one to date.

Keen exhib interest was in evidence throughout the day-long meeting, conducted by Mike Simons of the Metro New York office, which put emphasis on promotion and exploitation measures for the small town exhib.

Many of exhibs were on hand for the annual Kansas-Missouri Theatre Assn. spring convention on Wednesday, where much of the emphasis was on drive-in operation and getting profits out of concessions.

Members of the Allied Independent Theatre Owners of Kansas and Missouri met on Friday, as did some circuit manager groups, to put the finishing touches on the three-day convention here. It's doubtful if the town has even seen as many film theatre operators on hand at one time.

Interest in the ticket-selling workshops is believed indicative of a growing realization that profits are to be had only for the striving. Circuit chief Bob Shelton of Commonwealth, Dick Durwood representing Durwood circuit, managers from Dickinson and a host of home office men and managers from Fox Midwest gave the workshop undivided attention, as did independents like George Baker, of Baker Enterprises, Ernie Block from Sabetha, Kans.; Clara Bullard from Arkansas City, Kans., and exhibs from hamlets all over Kansas and Missouri.

Not so long ago attendance was waning at nearly all exhib meetings here.

Out of the raft of ideas, some old and some new, one which drew a lot of inte est is a jumbo-size 30c drink at the concession stand. This is thought to be popular because (1) it gives the patron enough liquid to keep him through much of the feature, or (2) it quenches more than one member of the party. King-size swig started in the southwest.

An individual exhib's idea that drew attention here is that of Tom Edwards, veteran out-state Missouri operator. He recently had small stamps printed up reading "Have You Attended a Movie Lately.?" attaches them to every check he sends out in payment for theatre supplies or services. It is very effective in lifting the prestige of the theatre in the local community and consequently boosting biz.

Other ideas were injected by the score—hamburger sales can be made to equal or pass those of hot dogs, the stalwart of the concession stand; grocery night with the grocer giving a theatre ticket with every $10 grocery purchase is effective; generous use of 6-sheet and 24-sheet displays at drive-ins where the space is plentiful boosts biz, to name a few.

Oughta Have Water Tower Or Face Surcharge On Airconditioning-Argument

St. Louis, March 8.

The Missouri Public Service Commission has been petitioned by the St. Louis County Water Co. to hike rates for water used in air-conditioning systems without cooling towers throughout the state and many motion picture houses may be affected. The company would make the surcharge sufficiently high to justify conversion to the cooling tower system.

Should the request be okayed by the Commission it is felt that privately owned water companies throughout the state will jump onto the band wagon. The company would make the surcharge for a five-ton system $147.32 per year and $97.33 for a three-ton unit.

50 DATES LINED UP FOR GARBO'S 'CAMILLE'

On the basis of the test engagements of the reissue of Greta Garbo's "Camille," currently in the fifth week at the Normandie, N. Y., Metro has snared 50 additional bookings for the film. In addition to the N. Y. exposure, film was also tested in Philadelphia and Miami, where the film is chalking up better than average business.

Majority of the new bookings are in art situations which Metro is hitting before trying for circuit dates. Film company is furnishing theatres with a complete new campaign for selling the film.

METRO RETIRES SIX

9 of 10 Drive-Ins Share Same Bill

Chicago, March 8.

Ten of the Chicago's area's drive-in theatres opened for the season last week. Theatre patrons had a rather limited choice of attractions, however, since, of the 10 opening ozoners, nine were showing "The Bridges at Toko-ri," generally paired with "The Cattle Queen of Montana." Only ozoner not showing "Bridges" was the North Avenue drive-in, owned by the Essaness theatre chain, where "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" was featured. Thus, with 10 drive-ins open, theatre patrons had a choice of only two recent top features, both of which are also saturating the nabes.

CONFIRM LUBIN

Harriman Nominee Well Known to Motion Picture Industry

Albany, March 8.

Dr. Isador Lubin, who served as U.S. Commissioner of Labor Statistics during the Roosevelt administration and who later for a time, headed Confidential Reports, Inc., checking organization for the major motion picture distributors, has been confirmed by the Senate, 51 to 7, as New York State Industrial Commissioner. The position pays a salary of $18,500 annually.

Governor Averell Harriman, who submitted the nomination in early January, expressed gratification over the Senate's action.

U.S. Won't Bar 'Secondary' Film Actors

Screen Guild Gets No Encouragement of Embargo Idea Against Foreign Players Under $1,500 Wkly.

Hollywood, March 8.

The U. S. Immigration Dept. here has rebuffed the Screen Actors Guild, which had asked for tightening up on restrictions on alien actors coming here to work. Department informed SAG if a foreign actor meets certain requirements, he cannot be denied entry. When SAG learned of these views via VARIETY, a spokesman first said the guild had not received any answer as yet from Immigration authorities; then he said a crackdown was in process as a result of the guild plea, it had been told by the Immigration Dept.

SAG made the pitch on grounds entry of featured and lesser billed players was making a dent on employment in Hollywood, complaining vociferously that this was unfair to actors here, and that only foreign actors of star stature should be allowed in. Guild then went on to suggest alien actors earning $1,500 a week or more might be permitted, but not those making less than that.

Guild had addressed its plea to Herman Landon, then head of the Immigration Office here. Albert Del Guercio, now in charge of that office in L. A., said SAG had been informed "there is nothing we can do about it. If an actor meets all the requirements of the law we can't arbitrarily deny him a working permit. It would take an act of Congress to change the Immigration Service regulations. We don't make the laws—we admi ister them."

"If the actor applying for a temporary permit is, in our opinion, of distinguished merit and ability and is coming here to perform a specialized skill, we cannot under the law reject his application. We have turned down many applications from actors whom we felt did not meet these specifications," Del Guerico said, citing the case of Simone Silva, whose application was nixed on grounds she did not have "distinguished merit and ability." Miss Silva, a British citizen, is appealing verdict of the Immigration Department.

Immigration chief made it clear that while he was sympathetic with the problems of the Screen Actors Guild, the bureau must and will be guided by the immigration laws as legislated by Congress.

Police Censor Data

Chicago, March 8.

The Chicago Police Censor Board reviewed 88 films in February 1955, of which 21 were foreign products. Of the 88 films reviewed one foreign import was rejected and one domestic film was tabbed for adults only.

A total of 21 cuts were made in pictures passed on by the board.

BERGER'S WAILING WALL

'If Your Theatre's Worth Anything, You Should Sell!'

Minneapolis, March 8.

Bennie Berger, North Central Allied president, is telling the territory's independent exhibitors they'd be better off if they could liquidate their theatres and realize enough from the sales for sizable investments in film company stocks.

While the small theatres are struggling desperately "to keep alive," the film companies' earnings continue to skyrocket, Berger is pointing out in a special communication to the exhibitors. He quotes from current and recent earnings statements.

Moreover, Berger says he believes that such film companies' earnings will remain at a high level, regardless of the demise of many small theatres that now, in his opinion, impends.

But the trouble is that the value of most of these small towns and subsequent run theatres has shrunk to nearly nil and nobody wants to buy them, Berger points out.

Accordingly, this proposed solution to small exhibitors present woes is impractical and the only way these exhibitors can be helped still is to enable them to buy the "good" pictures at prices they can afford to pay and still make a profit, he concludes.

Says Milwaukee Practices Censorship By Threat, Advocates the Ashcan

Milwaukee, March 8.

A proposal to abolish the Milwaukee Motion Picture Commission (local censor group) and the Milwaukee County Literary Commission was made by attorney Edward R. Snyder at the regular weekly meeting here of Milwaukee Democrats.

Research he personally conducted, said Snyder, indicated that both commissions are to function as advisers only but there's a threat of punishment when either unit's suggestions are not heeded. This sort of operation, he said, denies proper legal processes to individuals or companies rapped by either Commission and presents the danger that "the influence of dictators of conscience and morals will be insidiously extended."

Snyder suggested procedures in which a controversial film or book would be made subject to argument in the courts.

Carter Estate's Antitrust Case Now Before Court

Kansas City, March 8.

Damages of $1,500,000 are being sought in an antitrust violation suit brought against eight major film distribs in United States District Court of Judge Albert A. Ridge here.

Gilbert C. Carter, Nevada, Mo., plaintiff acting for the estate of Mrs. Mabel K. Carter, Sedalia, Mo., seeks damages of $500,000, alleging that the film companies conspired to monopolize distribution of films and agreed that only the Fox theatres in Sedalia, Mo., would receive first run films.

Defendants are 20th Century-Fox, Loew's, RKO, Warners, Paramount, United Artists, Universal and Columbia. The suit is being heard before Judge Ridge.

Early issue in testimony was the rental of the Liberty theatre which Fox Midwest operated in the early 1930's. At one time the rent was $1,800 per month, but later was reduced to $1,350 by Mrs. Carter. When denied further reductions, Fox declared it would build a theatre that would receive all the first-run product, according to William G. Boatright, plaintiff attorney. He is serving with Nick Spanos as the legal team for the plaintiff.

Attorneys for the defense are Thomas E. Deacy, Joseph Kelly, James C. Wilson and David R. Hardy.

It Figures

Burlington, Vt., March 8.

Sociology students at Cathedral High School conducted their own survey and came up with this conclusion:

The only people who oppose the Sunday film matinee bill now before the State Legislature are projectionists and cashiers who will have to work extra time.

The high school interviewers quoted Mrs. James Gamache, cashier at the State theatre, as saying "Sunday is a day to spend with the family and not working at movies or watching them."

Gerald Allard, projectionist, said, "Sunday is the only day I have to spend at home with my wife and children."

Allied Lighting Press Bonfires Versus Distribs

Minneapolis, March 8.

North Central Allied hopes to use the power of the press to help it whip film companies into a "live and let live" film sales policy. It has set wheels in motion to line up the press on the side of those who now are advocating federal legislation to regulate industry practices, including picture rentals.

"We hope to have an organized newspaper campaign throughout the territory in the struggle for film rental relief for small independent exhibitors," announces Bennie Berger, NCA president.

It's pointed out that in recent weeks a number of small town newspapers, suddenly awakened to the increasing danger that their communities may lose their own film theatres because of unprofitable operations, have embarked on individual drives to enlist better support and patronage for the showhouses so that the latter will not have to shutter.

The development has occurred almost simultaneously and spontaneously without any concerted or joint organizing. It's due to a realization that the most unfavorable weather conditions in years have intensified tv's encroachments on the boxoffice to such an extent that the exhibitors are near the end of their ropes.

Editorials and front page appeals have been appearing urging the public to rally to the theatres' support in better fashion. They point out how the showhouses are an asset to the communities and what a loss their closings would be. They ask for more frequent theatre attendance.

But North Central Allied is now making clear to the newspapers that decreased patronage is only one factor in the present "deplorable" situation.

The best way the newspapers can accomplish the purpose of keeping the theatres alive, they're being told by NCA, is to help Allied force the film companies to sell their important pictures to the towns' theatres at a price the latter can afford to pay and still earn a profit.

TOA's N. Y. Clean Sweep

For reasons not explained by its leadership, Theatre Owners of America is making a clean sweep of its New York office staff. In the wake of the dropping of public relations director Dick Pitts and service coordinator Howard Bryant, the TOA broom has extended to Alice Margolis, the exhib org's Girl Friday for the past nine years. Apparently every vestige of the previous housekeeping group is being eliminated. New staff is being headed by Joseph P. Alterman, as office manager and presumably public relations director, and George Gaughan, field representative. TOA, however, has given no indication of the duties of the new staff members.

The exhib org's housecleaning has assumed two aspects—axing of all previous employees and a complete overhaul of the physical surroundings of its Paramount Building office. Latter involves a complete paint job, wall-to-wall carpeting, new steel desks and other office furniture.

Projectionists Defend Their Walkout

Biberman Suit Seeks Damages Against IA Members' Boycott of 'Salt of the Earth'

Chicago, March 8.

Two Chicago motion picture projectionists, Louis Cleppe and Dudley Howell, have answered a suit filed against them in U. S. District Court here, charging them with alleged failure to show "Salt of the Earth," controversial labor film, at the Cinema Annex theatre here last summer.

The suit filed by Independent Production Corp., Inc., headed by Herbert Biberman, against Cleppe, Howell and officials of the Chicago Motion Picture Operators Union, Local 110 (AFL) asks $316,500 treble damages. The suit alleges Cleppe quit his job at the Cinema Annex, refusing to show "Salt of the Earth"; Howell replaced him and also allegedly refused to show the film, the suit charges. According to Clarence Jalas, secretary-treasurer of Local 110, the union pulled Cleppe off the job for his refusal and replaced him with Howell. According to Cleppe, he quit his job at the theatre because "it appeared to be a place for dissemination of Communist propaganda," and Howell said he would not help the cause of a picture which he believed fostered Communist aims.

Daniel Carmell, attorney for the operators union, filed an answer charging the film was written and produced by Communists and followed the party line. He has filed 150 interrogatories to be answered by officials of IPC, designed to show that these officials allegedly are members of the CP and that "Salt of the Earth" was produced with Communist funds. In addition, the answer, which seeks dismissal of the suit, contains the contention that the two operators had a legal right to quit as individuals and that therefore they are not actionable.

Loew's Illinois Drive-In

Chicago, March 8.

Launching its diversification program into the ozoner field, Loew's Theatres officially took over operation of the Twin Drive-In Theatres in Oak Lawn, Ill., a Chicago suburb, Friday (4). Theatre company, which is under consent decree restrictions, received permission from the Dept. of Justice to make the purchase.

"20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" was the inaugural attraction on the South screen, and "Bridges at Toko-Ri" on the North. Operation will be managed by Frank Arena, manager of Loew's Penn Theatre in Pittsburgh until its divesture by Loew's, and supervised by Frank Murphy, Loew's Great Lakes division manager.

Noman Kassel will be pess contact. Ernie Emerling and Jim Shanahan of Loew's homeoffice handled the opening campaign.

Deglin-Lewisohn's New Approach To FM for N.Y.; 35-Word Comm'ls

As everyone else either leaves the field of frequency modulation (FM) or at least cuts back programming because it doesn't pay off, a N. Y. publicist and his partner have practically closed a deal for an FM station of their own, which they intend to keep on the air 18 hours daily. Publicist Ted Deglin teamed with Frederick Lewisohn (of the N. Y. Central board, among other posts) to buy out Ira Hirschmann's inoperative WABF in order to air a complete lineup of show music and light classics. Deglin's objective is to use music from his slowly accumulated tape library while trying to minimize costs in other directions as well, and to make profit by only slotting advertising at the quarter-hour breaks.

The transaction between Deglin and Hirschmann has intriguing business aspects. It's said that WABF's sale must wait on a decision by the United Nations in N. Y. whether to take Hirschmann up on a gratis offer of the FM outlet. Should the international agency accept Hirschmann's philanthropy, Deglin will still get the station's FM equipment (list priced at about $60,000) and space, but the UN will get the frequency plus a second and free transmitter from the donor. (Deglin and Lewisohn will have the existing transmitter atop the Hotel Pierre, in any event, it's said.) If the UN offer is consummated, Deglin will have to apply for a second frequency to the FCC. In either case, he'll change the call letters from WABF, which has been almost entirely associated with longhair music. The Hirschmann office would offer no confirmation of the arrangement details.

Deglin said that there is a wide market in N. Y. for lightweight music on FM. He points to the relative success of WPAT, Paterson, which has for the last several months concentrated on this "background" music pattern in the evening. However, the FM'er will do it throughout the program day. The only commercials will be allowed at the station breaks, and will be 35 words long. Deglin said that a number of listeners have begun attaching FM sets to their hi-fi speakers.

Deglin, who's been searching out a N. Y. FM station for about a year, originally began negotiating with WMGM-FM, the Loew's station, which recently turned back its license to the FCC. He said he switched to WABF when he found that it was available, because WMGM-FM's transmitter location, in New Jersey, provided maintenance and distance problems that would have proved too costly to fit into his low-budget plan.

The Nag Season

Just as this past season has emerged as a "dog's year," what with "Lassie" and "Rin Tin Tin" making their telepix appearances, next fall's major animal preoccupation will be with horses. There's two series announced as in the works for the fall, 20th-Fox's "My Friend Flicka" entry and Ziv Television Programs' "Black Beauty."

Ziv has acquired rights to the Anna Sewell horse story and has assigned John Warren Adams to develop the screenplay for a pilot. Meanwhile, it's planning story outlines and studying casting for an entire series to be shot later in the year at its Coast studios. 20th-has tapped "Flicka" as one of its early telepix entries.

WOR Shows How 'Movie', Baseball Can Live Together

WOR-TV, the General Teleradio station in N. Y., has developed a method whereby it has its cake and can eat it, too, insofar as "Million Dollar Movie" advertising arrangements during the baseball season are concerned. Figuring that night telecasts of the Dodger games will average about two a week throughout the season, the station is proportionately decreasing costs on each bankroller. Currently, on the first 30 films in the "MD" skein, each sponsor is shelling out $4,175 for an eighth share in 16 exposures weekly. With the number of times available during the lucrative ball season being decreased to a 12 to 13-weekly average, the price will be adjusted closer to the $3,000 mark.

Actually, the station missed by a hair the necessity of making a decision of this sort with regard to the 30 Bank of America feature films, generally felt to be the highest priced feature pix in the country and for which station adver-

'Janet Dean' Axed For Ziv's 'Science'

Emerson Drug, which for the past year has constituted Motion Pictures for Television and UM&M's only major client on the "Janet Dean" telepix series, has dropped the show to pick up Ziv's "Science Fiction Theatre" in 20 major markets, including New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Detroit, St. Louis, Washington and Baltimore. Emerson, it's understood, had wanted out on its "Janet Dean" deal earlier, but was bound by a 52-week pact. Switchover is effective the first week in April.

Emerson's buy, along with a second major deal with PictSweet Foods, boosts the "Science" market total to 58 in only a couple of weeks of selling. PictSweet has taken the show on in 11 western markets, some of them jointly with Olympia brewing. Other regionals on the series were a deal for Cincinnati, Dayton and Columbus with Serutan and an expansion of Olympia's market list from seven to 16. Lennen & Newell, which repped Emerson, also picked up two other Ziv segments for three more markets for Emerson. "Eddie Cantor Comedy Theatre" will be sponsored by the drug outfit in Portland, and "I Led Three Lives" in Los Angeles and San Francisco. All three are markets in which "Science" was already sold.

MAIZLISH, PARTNERS BUY TUCSON TV'ER

Tucson, March 8.

Harry Maizlish and his partners in KFWB, Hollywood, purchased KVOA and KVOA-TV here for more than $500,000 last week. Outlet was purchased from John J. Louis, Chi businessman who makes Phoenix his winter home and who owns controlling interests in KTAR in Phoenix; KYCA, Prescott, and KYUM, Yuma.

Present personnel of the stations will be retained, according to KVOA manager R. B. (Bud) Williams, who made the announcement on behalf of Maizlish and Frank Oxarart and Mort Sidley, his partners. New sales manager for radio was appointed, however. He's Wayne Sanders, who up to last fall had been manager of KCNA here for several years.

Miner on a Major Key

Hollywood, March 8.

Three new series for NBC-TV are planned for early production by Worthington Miner Productions.

Miner, exec producer of "Medic," plans "Frontier," described as an adult oater series; "Briefcase," based on legal profession's work, and "Challenge," being produced with cooperation of the Fund for the Republic, headed by Mr. Robert Hutchins and operating under a grant from the Ford Foundation. Series all are repped by the Ashley-Steiner agency.

D.of J. Probing UAW Use of Dues On AM-TV Shows

Detroit, March 8.

The U. S. Justice Department is studying charges that the UAW (CIO) is misusing dues by promoting partisan television and radio programs.

District Attorney Fred W. Kaess said he has turned the facts over to Attorney General Herbert Brownell. The charges were made by John Feikens, Michigan Republican chairman, who objects to the UAW-sponsored tv and radio programs of Guy and Nunn over WJBK-TV and CKLW, respectively.

"These programs shrug off any code of ethics as well as the Corrupt Practices Act governing political contributions," Feikens said. "The union is forcing its members to contribute to television and radio programs which are political

Y&R NAMES BRADSHAW AS RADIO-TV MANAGER

David Y. Bradshaw has been made manager of the radio-video department at Young & Rubicam. The move may be a prelude to Nat Wolff's request to quit as head of the department next year. Wolff, agency broadcast-telecast factotum, said he wants to have the increasing pressures of departmental helming taken off his shoulders so he can move to the Coast at least six months of the year in order to be closer to the writer-producer-director creative facets of the biz.

Elsewhere in Y&R, veepee (Brig. Gen.) Ken R. Dyke, has been named Deputy Chief in the Office of the Chief of Information for the Department of the Army. It is a mobilization assignment under which, as a reservist, Dyke can be called up in an emergency.

Pinky In; Felton Out In NBC-TV's Sat. Status Quo

Exit of "Happy Felton's Spotlight Gang" doesn't upset the NBC-TV Saturday morning lineup of kid shows. Pinky Lee has gone into the 10 o'clock slot to extend his show to six days (Mon.-thru-Fri. at 5 p. m.).

The web's moppet span starts at 7 with Herb Sheldon and rides through to noontime with "Children's Theatre" films, the Pinky Lee kines, Paul Winchell & Jerry Mahoney, Jimmy Weldon's "Funny Boners" and "Tom Corbett, Space Cadet."

TV's '$64,000 Question'

The granddaddy of the popular radio quiz shows is becoming the end-all of the tv quizzers—and mark it up to the high cost of living, or more specifically, the high cost of network television. Louis G. Cowan has acquired the rights to the old "Take It Or Leave It" show and has increased that old $64 prize a thousandfold. Revlon has picked up the package, complete with the new title of "The $64,000 Question."

Plan is to give away a maximum prize of $64,000 to a contestant staying the four-week course, with the "take it or leave it" pitch being applied between shows. After the first week, he can take his winnings of up to $8,000 or decide to go on for the next three weeks in hopes of winning the total. Contestants will come out of the audience after "stringent screening."

Revlon and the William Weintraub agency haven't selected a time slot yet. Understood the agency is trying to get CBS-TV Thursdays at 10, where it shares time with Philip Morris on "Public Defender." If the ciggie firm is unwilling to go along, it would probably negotiate for a new time slot. Emcee hasn't been chosen, but Steve Carlin's been tapped for the post of exec producer. Cowan bought the rights to the show from Eversharp, which owned the radio version.

The Day That Jascha Heifetz Enlightened Pinky's Audience

By MANNIE MANHEIM

A new word has entered the mystic language of television. The word is "enlightenment" and was recently introduced by NBC president Pat Weaver, who said that "it is not enough that the American people shall be superbly entertained. They must be kept informed. This is not someone else's job. It is ours."

The NBC president explained his theory by suggesting that if Jascha Heifetz, as an example, were to appear on the Pinky Lee show to explai the violin to youngsters, the kids would enjoy Heifetz and learn something at the same time.

As there is no logical argument against any form of enlightenment, we thought of that day when Mr. Heifetz would appear on Mr. Pinky Lee's program—and as we gazed into our 21-inch screen something like this appeared:

It is Pinky Lee time and the studio is filled with little children and their parents. There is uncontrolled, almost nervous excitement as Mr. Lee makes his entrance. As he greets his childish audience he dances as he speaks. His dance isn't a tap or a clog—but a short kick and slide affair—so as he speaks he slides and kicks—

Pinky Lee (to his audience)

Now kids, we gotta a big treat for you today. I'm so excited I could cry. We gotta a famous guest—who do you think he is, kids?

Kids (from audience)

Captain Video?
Sheriff John?
Davy Crockett?

Pinky Lee

(as he dances) No—you're on the wrong track—I'm gonna give you a hint—it comes under the new enlightenment program. This means the boss of this company is making a deliberate effort to employ informational, instructional, cultural and inspirational material without vitiating the entertainment power of our shows—(gasps) those are awful big words for a little fella like me—(stops dancing for a moment apparently to catch his breath)

So I feel very lucky as my show has been picked as one of the first to be honored—and we got for our guest—none other than the greatest violin player in the world—Mr. Jascha Heifetz.

(The dignified Mr. Heifetz enters, carrying his violin)
(Mr. Lee resumes his dance as he greets Mr. Heifetz)

Pinky Lee (to Heifetz)

Welcome to the Pinky Lee show, Mr. Heifetz—
(Mr. Lee tries to have Heifetz join him in his dance, but Heifetz shies away)

Heifetz (sort of bewildered)

I'm happy to be here, Mr. Lee.

Pinky Lee (to kids)

Come on, kids, give a big hand to Mr. Jascha Heifetz—
(kids respond with loud applause)

Pinky Lee (as he dances) (to Heifetz)

See—the kids love you. And I wanna say, Mr. Heifetz, this is a great honor to have you—such a big time fiddle player to come on my show.

Heifetz
(to Lee)

Thank you, Mr. Lee. I hope that the experiment to provide enlightenment will be successful.

Lee

Kids love music—and you know something, Mr. Heifetz—kids like good music.

(to audience)

How many kids like good music?
(all raise their hands)

See.

(to Heifetz)

You'll excuse me for being inquisitive, Mr. Heifetz—but do your children watch my show?

Heifetz

I'm sure they do.

Lee

See, kids, Mr. Heifetz' children are the same as you—they watch our show every day—where are your kids today, Mr. Heifetz? (hopefully)

Heifetz

They're away to college.

Lee (as he dances)

Pulling my leg, huh? Just to get 'em even. (laughs) Okay, kids, what do you want to hear Mr. Heifetz play?

A Kid

Papa Loves Mambo?

Lee (to Heifetz)

I'm sorry, Mr. Heifetz—I forgot you're gonna play a piece of high class music. (to kids) Pay attention, kids, Mr. Heifetz is going to do the enlightenment bit—go ahead Mr. Heifetz.

Heifetz

Our plan was for me to play something classical—

Lee (as he dances)

I know the one (sings Humoresque as he dances around Heifetz. Kids laugh. Heifetz tunes fiddle)

Heifetz

(Waits for Pinky Lee to light, then speaks to audience of children) (holds up his violin)
This is a violin—

Kid (from audience)

No kidding—

Lee
(admonishes kid)

No interruptions, please, kids—just as soon as Mr. Heifetz finishes we're all gonna play games—so pay attention—(to Heifetz) I'm sorry, sir, go right ahead—

Heifetz

I think everyone has heard of Mendelssohn's Concerto for Violin—

Lee

Maybe you oughtta play a chorus so they'd recognize it.

Heifetz (bewildered and baffled)

A chorus of Mendelssohn?

Lee

You know—just so the kids will be hep—

Heifetz (baffled and bewildered)

Hep to Mendelssohn? (to kids) Before I play the co, erto for you, I think you might be interested in knowing that the man who wrote this piece was not a violinist—but a pianist—

Lee
(trying to help out)

Isn't that interesting, kids? Think of it—the fella who wrote the tune Mr. Heifetz is gonna play never played the fiddle

TV'S SPONSOR KETTLE BOILS

Robbing Peter to Pay 'Pan'

No tv event of the season occasioned so much social festivity and hoopla as did "Peter Pan" on Monday night (7), with the original $250,000 cost of the show probably being anted to a sizable sum by the network, agency and sponsors allied with the presentation.

Kenyon & Eckhardt, agency on the sponsoring Ford and RCA accounts, practically took over the plush "21" surroundings in N. Y. to party several hundred bigwigs associated with the bankrollers, the network and the stars.

Concurrently Jaffe & Jaffe, the theatrical lawyers closely identified with "Producers Showcase" (which served as the framework for "Peter Pan") had a shindig of its own running, with a dovetailing and shuttling of personalities from one party to the other. "Little parties" were going on in various departments at NBC.

Other "Peter Pan" highlights:

Some kids had a double picnic Monday night. On promise they'd look in on "Peter Pan," they drew a "no homework" assignment from teachers.

A couple of women's clubs in Westchester (N. Y. county) cancelled their traditional Monday clambakes to do an at-home with Martin (Mary) & Barrie (Sir James).

There was a record demand for seating room at the color monitors in the RCA Bldg.—and the RCA service dept. reported a peak in "rush repairs" of monochrome sets.

Syd Eiges, NBC press v.p., found himself in Columbus that night addressing the Ad Club of the Chamber of Commerce on color tv—but wondered how he could follow the two-hour specola and still retain the audience.

Cost-Per-Thousand: 10c

WABC-TV, Erwin Wasey Agency Package A Low-Cost Weather Show

In the face of television's growing high costs, WABC-TV, New York, and the Erwin, Wasey agency have worked out a package that boils down to an incredible cost-per-thousand of 10c. per commercial minute per 1,000 homes. Package is a group of 10 weather shows weekly featuring Scotty Scott in a humorous format, set by the agency on behalf of two clients, Consolidated Cigar and Barbasol. Series kicks off Monday (14).

Consolidated Cigar and Barbasol are reportedly getting the package at a weekly time-and-talent tag of less than $3,000, or a per-show price of under $300. Current American Research Bureau figures for the time periods, 6:55 p.m. and 11:30 p.m. cross-the-board, show a cumulative rating for the 10 periods of 30. Commercial time cost comes to a cost-per-thousand figure of 10c, less than an equivalent buy on New York radio. Besides the straight show, the two sponsors are getting hitchhikes on their alternating segments and five free run-of-station spots thrown in in the bargain.

Format will have Miss Scott conferring with a "weatherbird," operated out of a cutout and smoking a cigar. It'll be a humorous segment, with Miss Scott also handling the commercials. Gal has been handling weather segments for the station over the past two years. Glenn Riggs will do the voice of the bird. Unusual aspect of the setup is that Miss Scott will be pitching men's products.

Michael Levin, v.p. and director

Reynolds Mulls 'Peepers' Axing

Reynolds Metals is considering dropping its longtime identity with "Mr. Peepers" at the end of the current season. Final decision hasn't been reached yet, but the thinking at the Russel Seeds agency in Chicago is that there's little in the way of hopes for improvement in the way the Wally Cox starrer's ratings have been nosediving this season in the face of the Jack Benny-Ann Sothern opposition on CBS-TV. The Benny shift to an every-other-week basis is believed the key factor in the "Peepers" decline, and Benny is considering going every week next season, a move that doesn't make Reynolds optimistic about "Peepers."

NBC-TV hasn't decided whether it will drop "Peepers" in the event of a Reynolds cancellation or will try a new show in the time slot next fall.

OUT OF THE BLUE

Girl Spieler Makes Good As Life-Saver

Charles Carambeles, an engineer in the CBS-TV master control room in N. Y., inadvertently touched an open wire last week and was kayoed. One of two other technicians present at the time tried unsuccessfully to revive him; the other put in a rush call to Studio 41 asking if anyone knew how to administer artificial respiration. Bettina Thayer, on duty, rushed into the breach. A former nurse's aide, she passed up artificial respiration in favor of application of cold rags and a spiritous drink. These brought Carambeles around.

That achieved, Miss Thayer went about her business, calmly doing the commercials for Blue Cross and Blue Shield on the Bill Leonard segment of WCBS-TV's "Six O'Clock Report."

Quaker Oats In $10,000,000 3-Yr. Deal for Telepix

Chicago, March 8.

Quaker Oats is staking out a major claim in the telepix field in a deal closed with the Trendle-Campbell-Meurer packaging firm in Detroit for a celluloid version of "Sergeant Preston of the Yukon." Quaker reportedly is shelling out close to $10,000,000 for three-year rights for the half-hour adventure films.

Series is slated to preem in October on ABC-TV with the Saturday night 6:30 (CST) spot tentatively earmarked. Since the filmer will be targeted at the adult audience as well moppets, the Wherry, Baker & Tilden agency handling for Quaker, had been shopping around for an evening slot.

"Preston" will be lensed in color by the Charles E. Skinner firm in New York. Auditions are still underway for the lead role under the supervision of George Trendle who launched the original radio package still running on Mutual under Quaker's banner. Sale was made off the pilot with subsequent shooting to get underway shortly.

Cereal firm, meanwhile, is expected to decide within the next few weeks whether it will continue its longtime association with NBC-TV's Sunday afternoon "Zoo Parade."

GODFREY, 'LUCY' IN GRAB BAG

The tv sponsor kettle's been boiling these past few days—a preview of the drastic changes on tap in client-programming shuffling by the time the curtain goes up on the '55-'56 season.

New developments:

(1). Lipton Tea, one of Arthur Godfrey's oldest clients dating back to his emergence as a major CBS personality, is giving up half of its Monday night "Talent Scouts" sponsorship. The scheduled move-in of CBS-Columbia, the set manufacturing adjunct, as co-sponsor, is seen as the initial big push by CBS to get rolling on color television and sale of CBS-Columbia sets, with the network utilizing its star salesman, Godfrey, for the big sell.

(2). For the first time in tv's history, a sponsor is walking away from the medium's No. 1 show. The client is Philip Morris. The show is "I Love Lucy." Reason: a conflict between Desilu and the sponsor-agency. Effective next October, Procter & Gamble will share the toprated tv entry with General Foods. (Only recently P & G bought a half-interest in the Desilu property as an alternate-week sponsor under its new "cost no object" policy of seeking mass circulation through grabbing off established properties as co-sponsor, which also gave the soap manufacturer a 50% hold on "This Is Your Life" and "My Favorite Husband.")

Who Gets Wed. at 10?

(3). Don't be surprised, goes the report, if P & G also winds up inheriting the Wednesday night at 10 NBC-TV slot ("This Is Your Life") into which it bought this season by shelling out most of the show's production costs, giving Raymond Spector and Hazel Bishop practically an alternate-week free ride. The latter move is more or less in the hush-hush realm, with no one willing to confirm it, but it's understood that an eventual P & G inheritance of Wednesday at 10 ties in with the NBC-Spector feelings generated by Spector's downbeat attitude toward the Sunday spectaculars, into which Spector bought—and of his own admission, regrettably so.

Just what precipitated the break between Philip Morris and its Biow agency and Desilu isn't quite clear, although it's known that differences of opinion came up with the ciggie outfit finally notifying the Lucille Ball-Desi Arnaz Desilu partnership that it was calling it quits as of next season.

It will mean the loss of the lucrative Monday 9 to 9:30 CBS-TV billings for the Biow agency, which has added up to a tidy sum ever since, "Lucy" hit the tv jackpot. Young & Rubicam gets credit on the P & G alternate-week billings. What agency gets the GF billings is still to be determined,

STU ERWIN GETS AXE, 'MR. CITIZEN' SUBBED

Liggett & Myers has brought the axe down on the Stu Erwin show and is planning to put in a live documentary - interview segment, "Mr. Citizen," into the post-"Disneyland" Wednesday at 8:30 ABC-TV slot in "The Erwins'" place. Changeover takes place April 20, with the 26-week Erwin cycle running out the 13th.

Format on "Mr. Citizen" features people who've done outstanding deeds of heroism, community work, or other things to rate an award as "Mr. Citizen." Weekly winner will be flown in, his exploits dramatized, then he will be interviewed, awarded a plaque and $1,000. Show is a Cunningham & Walsh package, with Ed Byron slated to produce and Matt Harlib direct, Lee Cooley shot the original kine. Emcee hasn't been set yet.

Who Takes the Coin Rap For 'Show Wagon' That Didn't Show?

Chicago, March 8.

Bookkeepers will be kept busy for days trying to figure out who pays for what and why after Horace Heidt's NBC-TV "Swift Show Wagon" telecast from Ft. Lauderdale failed to get on the air Saturday night. Although the Heidt roadshow package, starring Judy Canova and the Vagabonds and costing some $35,000, played as scheduled at Memorial Auditorium, it never reached the web when the telephone company's temporary equipment set up to microrelay the signal from the auditorium to Miami end of the co-ax conked out.

To further complicate the financial accounting, the bankroller did get a complete show on the network when a standby kine of Heidt's initial Swift telecast was tossed into the breach from New York at the last minute. So it's not only a question of who stands the rap for the live show that didn't get on, but who pays the repeat talent fees for the emergency kine.

Adding further embarrassment to the fiasco was the fact the remote was highly-touted locally in Ft. Lauderdale as WGBS-TV first network originating with Chamber of Commerce tie-ins and much hoopla. WGBS-TV execs were plenty burned over the foulup and voiced initial reaction that a "friendly" lawsuit should be filed to clarify AT&T's and web's contractual responsibility for getting a show delivered.

It's Still 'Lucy'

The first February Nielsen again restores "I Love Lucy" to its No. 1 video perch. Jackie Gleason drops to fifth place, with Bob Hope taking over as No. 2. The standings:

Love Lucy (CBS-P&G)	55.1
Bob Hope (NBC)	54.7
Toast of Town (CBS)	53.8
Love Lucy (CBS-P.M.)	53.7
Jackie Gleason (CBS)	53.1
Disneyland (ABC)	50.3
Academy Award Nominations (NBC)	48.4
Jack Benny (CGS)	47.7
Dragnet (NBC)	46.0
Bet Your Life (NBC)	45.4

N. Y. Stations Set 7-Point Program On 'Bait & Switch'

N. Y. radio-tv station execs, after several weeks under fire for "bait" and "switch" advertising, have evolved a seven-point program of minimum advertising standards in conjunction with the N. Y. Better Business Bureau. The station men themselves indicate little doubt that each of the city's 22 radio and video outlets will follow the plan to the letter in view of possible FCC repercussions.

Until joint sanction by the N. Y. daily newspapers could be arranged, the station men intended withholding official announcement of the safeguard plan. Since the day Brooklyn D. A. Edward Silver brought the situation to public attention, the broadcasters have maintained that the same malpractices exist in papers; the plan, it's said, will be valueless without newspaper support.

The seven-point program is seen as a thorough means to end "bait" and "switch," with every dodge reported to D. A. Silver and other law enforcement agencies taken into account.

The preamble to the program reads: "This is a proposed minimum standard for copy acceptance by all advertising media from companies offering to demonstrate or sell products or services in the home," point by point, it reads:

(1) Advertising shall not create a misleading impression even though any and all statements taken separately may be true.

(2) All advertising statements shall clearly disclose the corporation or registered trademark of a company. (This is also required by FCC, but has sometimes been disregarded, according to reports.)

(3) All advertising or prospective advertising shall provide upon request data concerning the company and its principles and proof of its ability to sell and deliver.

'Omnibus' to Ride Another Season

It's understood that the TV-Radio Workshop of the Ford Foundation last week acted on a renewal of "Omnibus" to send the CBS-TV Sunday show into a fourth season in 1955-56. (Coincidentally, the show grabbed the merged educational-cultural-religioso kudos from the Television Academy (Emmy Awards) this week.) There's been some question on resumption, hinging largely on availability of funds, but this comes up annually.

"Omnibus" is getting its highest ratings this season with an average 25 on the Nielsens, about 20% ahead, and has also annexed larger markets in its station hike via the four-sponsor setup. Current 26-week cycle ends with the April 10 show.

Liebman's New 5-Year NBC Pact

Max Liebman, who will have brought in 20 color specs for NBC-TV by season's end, has negotiated a new contract with the web. Only a few minor details remain to be worked out that would give him a firm five-year deal, without options, with an identical financial stake per annum. Agreement for the producer's exclusive services, both on specolas and other related functions, is about to be wrapped up with v.p. Tom McAvity, who only recently was elevated to head the NBC television sphere, up from his program chieftain's status.

Liebman's present pact was to run to June, but the five-year paper scraps that.

TED MACK TV SHOW TO PREEM APRIL 2

NBC-TV has finalized its pact with Ted Mack whereby the latter moves into the 3 to 3:30 p.m. cross-the-board slot starting April 4. Being shifted and axed are the brace of quarter-hour soapers, "Greatest Gift" and "Golden Windows," with "Gift" moving to 3:30 to replace "One Man's Family." Mack show will originate out of N. Y. It'll be separate and distinct from his "Original Amateur Hour" (now off the air), but with negotiations also on for its resumption as an added starter via MCA's agenting.

Factor behind the Mack unbeat at NBC is the merchandising plusses over and above the show itself, which have given Mack a close sponsor identification and association on previous commercials.

MBS' Sleep-Eze Coin

A product called Sleep-Eze gave Mutual radio coffers a jolt in the arm last week. The San Francisco advertiser pacted for two network shows starting April 1.

Pact calls for bankrolling the first quarter-hour of the 11:30 to noon "Queen for a Day" airer on Fridays. Making it a real "blackink Friday," the drug manufacturer has also pencilled for participation in the radio web's Friday night segment ("Counterspy") of the "multi-message" setup.

Hearst Gets Okay on M'waukee V But Still Faces a Court Battle

Washington, March 8.

Hearst Corp. finally broke through the legal barriers it has been fighting for seven years and got itself a VHF station in Milwaukee last week when the FCC okayed its $2,000,000 purchase of WTVW. But the company is still facing a court battle against the deal by theatre operator L. F. Gran, who held 38% of WTVW but was outvoted when he objected to the sale. Transfer of the station is subject to outcome of the court fight.

Ironically, Hearst obtained through purchase the channel (12) it preferred not to apply for when it decided three years ago to fight it out before the FCC and the courts for channel 10 which the Commission set aside for education when it lifted the freeze. Hearst had an application pending for the channel in 1948 when it had commercial status.

After losing out on channel 10, Hearst succeeded in getting the Commission to assign channel 6 in suburban Whitefish Bay. There was opposition to this assignment by ultra high stations and applicants but the Commission allowed it. However, Hearst's bid for the channel was opposed by other applicants and was drawn into hearings.

Hearst's pullout from the channel 6 contest leaves two applicants in the race for a facility whose value has substantially deteriorated since the lift-freeze allocation plan of 1952 which assigned two VHF and three UHF channels for commercial use in Milwaukee. With CBS operating a UHF station, the Milwaukee Journal's WTMJ in possession of the NBC affiliation, and Hearst with ABC and DuMont, the best the channel 6 winner can get is DuMont. Whether Milwaukee can support four stations is a question being asked here.

It's understood, however, that the applicants are counting on future developments, including toll tv, which may raise the value of the channel.

The applicants are Cream City Broadcasting Co., controlled by Gene Posner, an attorney, and Independent Television, Inc., headed by Jack Kahn, hosiery manufacturer. Among Independent's stockholders are New York publisher Robert K. Straus of Omnibook, Inc., and Blair Moody Jr., who holds a 10% interest left by his late father, Sen. Blair Moody.

Meanwhile, the Commission approved sale of radio station WCAN in Milwaukee, owned by Lou Poller, to Milwaukee Broadcasting Co., headed by A. M. Spheeris, for $250,000. Poller had previously sold studio facilities of his UHF station, WCAN-TV to CBS. He has turned in the UHF permit and is planning to move to Washington.

Demise of WCAN-TV leaves two UHF channels begging in Milwaukee.

9 'ROAD COMPANIES' FOR 'JR. CHAMPIONS'

Gerry Gross and Norman Baer, of the packaging team, have just returned to N. Y. after setting up nine "road companies" of the sports-for-kids exposure "Junior Champions," which is now aired over WRCA-TV, N. Y. The producers have conferred with w.k. sports figures in each of the cities about a summertime start.

Gross-Baer says it has lined up as local emcees Bob Cousy in Boston; Stan Musial and Ed McCauley in St. Louis; Jesse Owens, Chicago; Robin Roberts, Philadelphia; Elroy Hirsch in L.A.; Tommy Henrich in Cincinnati; Otto Graham in Cleveland; George Mikan in Minneapolis-St. Paul, and Ed Mathews in Milwaukee.

WABC Goes Late Again

WABC, New York, an off-again, on-again in the late-night sphere, lights up again in the midnight to 3 a.m. period Sunday (13) with a disk-and-interview segment featuring Bill Silbert. Segment, titled "Basically Sound," will be a studio origination and will run seven nights weekly.

Deal won't affect Silbert's WMGM shows.

Pegeen Fitzgerald As 'Stork Club' Sponsor

With Pegeen (Ed &) Fitzgerald buying the entire first 15 minutes of Sherman Billingsley's "Stork Club" show, with its shiftover to Sunday nights starting this week (13), it makes it an ABC-TV "family package" deal, in some respects. The Fitzgeralds are ABC radio regulars, and have been for many years, but the distaff end of the team is currently marketing a Trim-10 mail order weight-reducing preparation.

She figured that the first quarter of an hour, following Walter Winchell, of the new Billingsley time (expanded to 45 minutes) will give further impetus to her straight newspaper advertising. Trim-10 is her own private enterprise, and off to a surprisingly strong public reaction.

Woolworth's 15G CBS Radio Hour

F. W. Woolworth Co. is on the verge of a splurge in radio, marking its initial splash into the medium. The five-and-dime outfit in the last two or three years has bought one-shot "tv specials" for its first advertising foray, having up to that time shared with Hershey Chocolates the distinction—considered dubious in agency circles, of course—of foregoing time and space representation in its generations in the business. However, a new administrative regime now masterminds the "red & gold" chain emporium, with Lynn C. Baker the agency.

The Woolworth show, for an outlay of about $15,000 in time and talent, has wound up in CBS' lap after other networks had a crack at shaping a format. It's designed as a full-hour stanza for Sunday afternoon slotting at 1 o'clock and will be billed "What's New in Music." Among the chief components are Percy Faith's 35-piece orch plus a chorus under his direction, Macdonald Carey as the emcee and a guestar policy, with Billy Daniels having cut an audition record last week as the first of such bookings. Howard Barnes has been assigned by program v.p. Lester Gottlieb as producer-director with Charles Monroe on the script.

Donovan's Tonsil Stint

Mike Donovan, doorman at CBS N. Y. hq., will "world preem" as a pro singer on St. Patrick's Day, when he'll make with "Galway Bay" on Robert Q. Lewis' daytime tv show. Donovan is also noted as a maker of miniature furniture.

That week, incidentally, will mark colorcasting cross-the-board for Robert Q. and troupe, but it won't be until Wednesday (15) that "Over the Ranbow" gets an airing by Earl Wrightson and Lois Hunt.

Elinor Lee Quits

Washington, March 8.

Elinor Lee, capital femmecaster for past 19 years, resigned from WTOP past week to devote full time to her duties as Food and Homemaking editor of the Washington Post & Times Herald.

Mrs. Lee, one of town's most popular personalities in both broadcasting and newspaper fields, left station with her two daily shows sponsored to the hilt and with both at top of the daytime rating scale.

PARK & TILFORD CAPSULES

Park & Tilford distillery has moved into the radio sponsorship field, but there's nothing illegal about it. Liquor firm has bought three five-minute capsules weekly on ABC Radio for its Tintex, a fabric dye. Capsules, skedded on Monday, Wednesday and Friday at 2:25-2:30, feature Bess Myerson in a women's fashions and household hints format titled "Bess Myerson's Almanac."

Storm & Klein agency placed the business.

WMGM's Banner Feb.

N. Y. radio indie WMGM had its biggest February in four years, with a 25% gross increase over the same month in '54. Right along with the continued trend of lots of spot radio for N. Y. indies, the Loew's station reports it did most of its February biz in that area.

The station came under the aegis of Art Tolchin five months ago, when Bert Lebhar ankled and then took up as sales boss of the WAAT-WATV operation in Newark.

Indict Recanter In Lamb Case; Now Faces Trial

Washington, March 8.

With the indictment for perjury of Mrs. Marie Natvig by a grand jury yesterday (Mon.) it is expected that the recanting witness at the FCC hearings on the Edward Lamb case will be tried before the U. S. District Court here in about a month. Mrs. Natvig will be arraigned as soon as a warrant for her arrest can be served.

The indictment apparently will have little bearing on the outcome of the Lamb hearings as examiner Herbert Sharfman has declared he will not give credence to her testimony. However, it completely exonerates former FCC Attorney Walter Powell of charges that he coerced Mrs. Natvig into testifying falsely against Lamb. Powell is now with the legal staff of the National Assn. of Radio and TV Broadcasters. A heart condition prevented him from taking the stand to deny charges.

Mrs. Natvig was indicated for perjury on nine counts. In one of these, the Grand Jury found that her testimony before the FCC last month that she had never told FBI Agent Edward J. Powers in Miami that she knew Lamb as a member of Communist Party was "false and untrue." Mrs. Natvig "well knew," the indictment charged, that she told Powers last September that she knew Lamb as a party member from 1934 to 1936 and that during this period she "consorted with and associated with" him at business and social meetings."

Murphy & Cowles In DesM Teamup

Des Moines, March 8.

An agreement signed here by Cowles Broadcasting Co. and the Murphy Broadcasting Co. by which the two will merge their tv interests, clears the way for operation of a new VHF television station on channel 8, and it is anticipated the new station will be on the air in about four months.

Cowles operates radio station KRNT and the Murphy Co. operates radio station KSO. Both had applied for permission to operate a tv station on channel 8, with applications pending before the FCC. Under terms of the agreement the Murphy Co. will withdraw application for the permit, leaving the Cowles Co. unopposed, with Cowles to organize a new company to be known as KRNT-TV. The FCC usually grants a permit without further hearing to a sole remaining applicant in such cases.

Original financing of the KRNT-TV company, according to the agreement will be by the Cowles Broadcasting Co., because by FCC policy Murphy Broadcasting Co. will be required to dispose of radio station KSO before acquiring an interest in the television operation.

Cowles Co. would provide original $200,000 capital stock and would lend the new corporation up to $800,000. Murphy Co. would then have a year in which to dispose of KSO and buy a 40% interest in the new corporation.

KENKEL, STISSER UPPED

Fred H. Kenkel and Frank Stisser were upped to v.p.'s in the radio division of C. E. Hooper, the rating coverage firm. Since the accidental death of C. E. Hooper a few months ago, the rating reins have been held by James Knipe, new prez.

There's No Biz Like Drug Biz

Columbus, March 8.

Elmore Hayes apparently is out $1.85 but the price was worth a chuckle and involved a self-styled celebrity.

Hayes, who operates a drug store in Reynoldsburg, was preparing to close up shop Tuesday night when a customer walked in and identified himself as Sid Caesar, television comic.

"He certainly looked like the real Caesar," attested Hayes and Mrs. Bert Ebright, an employe.

The "dead-ringer" for the television star said he was driving through but had run out of cash. He asked Hayes if he would trust him for a long-distance phone call to Bing Crosby who would wire the alleged comic some money.

Hayes said the man made the call which cost the proprietor $1.85. The "customer" said Bing was to wire him money to the Western Union office in Columbus. Neither customer nor the cash arrived at the office.

"Caesar" then wrote a check on the First National Bank of Canton, Ohio, explaining his father lived in Canton. He signed the check Sid Caesar and Edwin R. Billeter.

Hayes, who said the Caesar double was driving a car with a Texas license, admitted there was some doubt in his mind as to the man's story.

But, he says, it cost him only $1.85 and it was a good story.

Cleve. Radio Strikes Oil Gusher In Dept. Store and Auto Parlay

By SANFORD MARKEY

Cleveland, March 8.

Heavy department store and automotive agency time purchases have given radio outlets a major hoopla in this area's sales parade.

Outside the immediate financial take, the picture glows with added brightness since department store entry, with large time purchases on WTAM, WERE and WHK, marks the first major move into radio by the downtown mercantile interests in the city's broadcasting history.

Automotive-wise, car dealers, stimulated to some extent by new model offerings, are pouring large coin into news, disk jockey shows and spot purchases. What's more, dealers are able to point to attractive sales results from radio ballyhoo, and broadcasters report January time purchases by automotive accounts indicate this year may well surpass the record 1954 biz in that field.

Although Higbee Co. was the first major store to move into radio, with a WERE Bill Randle disk pitch to hypo the store's record shop (Randle has switched to WCBS, N. Y.), Halle Bros. has moved to the foreground with two major time commitments. Store picked up the hour-long Sunday WTAM Wayne Mack "Good Music" disk show, and then latched onto a 15-hour-weekly WHK offering via a cross-the-board disk-news stanza at 10 p.m., with Tom Brown doing the three-hour job. Also, Halle's has taken a half-hour daily Louise Winslow chitchat at 10 a.m. from the store's tearoom.

At Higbee's, which started its radio venture with a short time purchase in 1953 and then latched onto a daily quarter-hour plus a full Sunday hour, Henry Alexander reported results have been good; that radio is a specific asset i bringing customers to the company's 10th floor record shop.

Other department stores, watching the Higbee-Halle success story, are said to be interested, and, instead of a major spot-saturation for special occasion, there's likelihood of program sponsorship.

But, if the department store is the newest radio bonanza, automotive time has given broadcasters a new avenue of life. Recently, when Sohio dropped its WTAM 6:15 p.m. cross-the-board newscast, LaRiche

OF's 2-Ply Europe Sale

Official Films has set its first European deal, a two-ply sale to all the French-speaking countries. Some 250 of its "Music Hall Varieties," the three-minute musical telescriptions, have been sold to Roger Weil, a Swiss distributor who'll peddle them to French-speaking television stations, while a bundle of "Felix the Cat" and "The Little King" cartoons have been set with a distrib in France.

Deals were made through International Radio & TV Programs, the foreign sales reps.

CBS-TV Gets Pitt Setback on O&O

Washington, March 8.

CBS plans for an owned and operated VHF station in Pittsburgh, via purchase and relocation of WSTV-TV in Steubenville, O., were given a setback last week when the FCC advised the network that a hearing is indicated on the proposal. The web's deal to buy the station is contingent on FCC approval of the transmitter move.

Significance was attached to the Commission's action by its timing, which was simultaneous with issuance of proposed rules to limit transmitter sites to within five miles of the city to which a channel is assigned. Adoption of this rule, which the Commission favors, would appear to preclude the Steubenville move.

Agency, it was learned, informed the network most emphatically that it could not find its proposal in the public interest. Noting opposition claims that the purpose of the CBS application to move the Steubenville station to Florence, Pa., is to serve Pittsburgh, the Commission advised the web its rules could not be used as "a bridge" to establish a station designed to serve a city located more than 15 miles from the community in which the channel is assigned.

In proposing to locate its transmitter 3½ miles from Pittsburgh, the Commission further advised the network, CBS is apparently attempting to establish a station in a manner which is inconsistent with the purpose for which the channel was assigned — the Steubenville-Wheeling area.

Shuler, Oliver Tapped

Motion Picture Advertising Service and United Film Service, the two corporations who with Minot TV make up UM&M, the distribution outlet for Motion Pictures for Television syndicated product, have set two key execs as managers for their television activities. MPAS has named Don Shuler its tv manager, while UFS has tapped Neale Oliver for the same post. Firms, which specialize in production and sales of screen advertising, are new to telepix distribution, having entered into cooperation with Minot only about a year ago.

Shuler and Oliver will work directly under UM&M prexy Charles Amory and MPTV veep Ed Madden.

Como & Co. to Durham For 'Preview of Spring'

Bruno Zirato Jr., CBS Radio producer-director, returns to Duke U. in Durham, N. C., of which he's an alumnus, to arrange a special "Preview of Spring" half-hour airing featuring Perry Como and troupe (Jaye P. Morgan, Leo De Lyon, Mitchell Ayres orch, Ray Charles Singers). It's a St. Patrick's Day (17) promotion at 10 p. m. in the highlight of an all-day entertainment binge backed by the Durham Merchants Assn. It will mark the fourth year that Como has participated in the fete.

Durham just happens to be the home base of Chesterfield, Como's radio-tv sponsor as well as underwriter of the radio web's dual broadcasts of "Gunsmoke."

AT&T GIVES RADIO AN 'OUT'

Watch Your TeleP's & Q's

In a day and age of electronic show biz when the TelePrompter has become standard equipment at the major networks and wherever bigtime tv shows originate, there would appear to be little excuse for the kind of fluffing and carelessness in treatment of lines that characterize some of the coast-to-coast programs. It's particularly applicable to daytime shows, where the five-times-a-week exposure before the cameras, notably on the serials, is bound to invite some mental hazards in memorizing of lines.

Unlike radio, where it's just a question of bringing the correct nuances and delivery to prepared scripts, the "show biz in a hurry" pertaining to five-times-a-week video presentation can't but help induce a certain measure of sloppiness. Which is all the more reason why the "hidden" electronic factor can loom so all-important. Within the past few weeks, for example, some of the cross-the-board boys and gals on both NBC-TV and CBS-TV have been letting their P's and Q's get away from them, sometimes embarrassingly so.

It isn't quite that apparent on the nighttime entries where at least the bigtime personalities, with trained reflexes, at least know how to adlib their way out of a transgression.

'Listen While You Work-a-Day'

CBS' Eight-Week Campaign Designed to Promote Daytime Dialing

With the NBC radio network lately concerned, programatically, with setting up a round-the-clock weekend marathon to beat the rap on the declining aural sphere, CBS goes another way, promotionally, by hanging up the paper for daytime broadcasting. It's launching a "Listen While You Work" campaign to be spread over the next eight weeks, supported by newspaper advertising for the web's daytime schedule that will run on four successive days in U. S. markets.

As explained by a CBS spokesman, the "give a listen" push is aimed primarily at the housewife and is designed to promote daytime dialing in general. Under way this week were mailing of promotion kits to the affiliates' program promotion chiefs. Kit's central feature is a display piece styled in the form of a house and intended for counter and window display in local radio shops and department stores. Drawings in the display piece illustrate the hausfrau bending an ear to the radio set as she goes about her chores.

O'Connor, Texaco To Call It Quits

Hollywood, March 8.

Donald O'Connor and Texaco have agreed to disagree when his television contract expires late in August. According to Myron Kirk, veepee in charge of video operations for the Kudner agency, explained that the actor had asked to be relieved of the pact because of a difference of opinion over the number of shows next season.

Currently Kirk is talking a deal with the William Morris agency for 30 half-hour programs starring Jimmy Durante, some of which will be on film. Deal for Bob Hope to alternate with Durante has been temporarily stymied, but Bob has promised Kirk first call on his services in case he decides to increase his tv activity beyond occasional guest shots next season.

'Droodles' Summer Coin

A sponsor—name under wraps—has reportedly optioned Roger Price and his "Droodles" for a summertime reprise. Last year the Price paneler was on NBC-TV for the hiatus period, but got a "live and kine" kicking around on two separate nights, Monday and Tuesday in the 8 p. m. slot. Not known whether NBC or CBC will figure in "Droodles" this time.

Meantime, Price has been making hay with "Droodles" via a book, column syndication, Lucky Strike ads, beer jackets and other merchandise gimmicks.

'Norby' Live April 6

That "Norby" film-to-live shift has been definitely set for April 6, and with it has come a switch in the production reins of the David Wayne starrer. J. Walter Thompson agency has named Delbert Mann producer to succeed David Swift, who still retains his ownership in the package. Mann presumably was brought in by Fred Coe, for whom he worked as a director when Coe headed up the "Philco-Goodyear Playhouse" operation. Coe is consultant to the agency on the series.

Director hasn't been pacted yet.

CBS-TV Hatching Sun. Egghead Span Sans Sponsor Coin

CBS-TV is in the midst of setting its Sunday afternoon public affairs house in order against the day (April 10) when "Omnibus" will have wound up its 26-week session under the TV-Radio Workshop of the Ford Foundation. For the first couple of weeks after exit of the 5 to 6:30 "Omnibus" it'll be an egghead lineup from 2:30 to 6 with no coin attached. The first money comes in at 6 with reruns of "I Love Lucy" bearing the Lehn & Fink cosmetic stamp. Up to that point, the lineup will be "Face the Nation," Dr. Frank Baxter's "Now and Then," a kid show, "American Week," "The Search" and "Adventure."

The moppet slanter is headed for 3:30 as a live showcase (with "Let's Go See" as the working tag) with pickups from various places around the country. On May 1 the 2:30-3:30 slot will be under the auspices of the Anti-Defamation League which will kinnie Reginald Rose's "An Almanac of Liberty," originally given this season on "Studio One." "Face the Nation" will drop down to 4:30 to preempt "The Search," latter apparently taking a rest with its destiny unknown as far as next season is concerned although reruns are in prospect.

As the hot weather approaches,

WABC-TV's '3 Girls'

WABC-TV, New York flagship of ABC-TV, and the Gross-Baer packaging outfit are dickering a once-weekly live situation comedy which would star Sloan Simpson. Details haven't been finalized, but the show, "Three Girls," would occupy the Sunday at 1 p. m. slot starting March 27.

Jeannie Johnson and Barbara Gaylord would be featured. Sandy Sheldon and Howard Rubin are scripting.

NEW CABLE FEE CUE FOR WEBS

American Telephone & Telegraph has provided the radio networks with a logical reason for curtailing service or shutting down at night entirely. The phone company's long lines division has instituted a cut in the minimum daily cable contract hours, from 16 to eight. The cut, which takes effect April 1, would give those networks who've been considering a curtailment of service the wherewithal to do so, especially in cases where the only reason the webs had continued was that they had to pay for 16 hours daily of cable regardless of the number of hours they actually used.

Reduction of minimum contract hours comes at a time when the radio pot is boiling, especially at NBC, where a major reshuffle has been in the works and where there's talk of a taped network. Such a cut would enable NBC, for example, to continue as a live network during the daytime, which is the more lucrative period, while sending out tapes of its nighttime shows and thus eliminating those excess cable charges. Situation's no different at the other webs, for that matter, what with all of them getting the lion's share of their billings from the daytime shows. Under the new AT&T arrangement, a network could start service at 10 a.m., use its eight minimum hours by 6 p.m., and remain in service for two additional hours till 8 p.m. at a cable savings of about 17% of the previous charges.

Way the new AT&T arrangement works is this: The charge for the new minimum of eight hours is $4.50 per mile. Each additional hour for the next three hours is 25c per mile more, while all hourly surcharge thereafter is 13c per. Effect of the sliding scale is to bring the charge back up to $6 per mile for 16-hour use, which is the old figure. In other words, though AT&T has cut the minimum contract hours in half, it hasn't done so for the price, but has so prorated it as to maintain the old minimum price if the web chooses to continue on a 16-hour basis. Consequently, a network choosing to use only eight hours daily can save 25% of his old charges, 10 hours can save 17%, 12 hours about 10%, 14 hours about 5% and 16 hours nothing at all. AT&T said it was cutting the minimum to allow the webs greater flexibility. The eight-hour minimum is still a consecutive-hours arrangement.

WGA Powwows On TV Demands

The first negotiations by the Writers Guild of America with the networks, packagers and ad agencies take place tomorrow (Thurs.) at NBC. The initial powwow will concern video only. Radio demands have been served on employers but no date for meeting has been firmed.

The television writers branch of WGA will be repped by an 11-man negotiating committee headed by John Duff Stradley. Since the bargaining sessions are for both WGA East and West, two Coast scribes will fly to New York to aid N. Y. counsels, Richard Jablow and Evelyn Burkey. Two radio writers branch members will sit in with the 11 tv scribes on the web-producer-agency meetings this week, with the numerical situation reversed when radio demands are discussed later on. For the video meetings, to be held at NBC, WGA is using the two-year-old National Television Committee plan as the basis for its demands. The NTC plan called for a minimum of $525 for a half-hour stanza and $950 for an hour, but WGA will raise the minimum, it's reported.

In the meantime, WGA East finds it now is "necessary for us to reevaluate" the radio-or-tv or both status of each member.

Categorically Speaking, Emmy's Just A Mixed Up Kid on Annual TV Kudos

By LEONARD TRAUBE

The Academy of Television Arts & Sciences was a real mixed up kid Monday night (7) in the seventh annual ritual out of Hollywood and the first networked showcaser, with NBC taking the spread and Charles Antell and Maybelline supplying the bread and butter for the first hour of the 90-minuter kicking off at 11:30 a.m. eastern time.

Emmy committee with some 750 membership under prexy Don DeFore pulled a series of rockolas. It equated live and film of various lengths in the same trough; gave the first of two palms to Walt Disney as a "variety" showman; to Danny Thomas as an actor (for which he expressed shock in mock); cited a comparatively obscure oater in the western-adventure sweepstakes (and a syndicated package to boot, the sole such selection against 20 major classes in the network classification); put singers with their own shows against those who are only part of the fray; lumped religious, cultural and educational for an eyebrow-raising catchall; bypassed Jackie Gleason but cited his two chief supports; and subjected the New York pickups at Nino's LaRue to perhaps the biggest brushoff in tv history, often failing to show the winners receiving their trophies from emcee Dave Garroway while giving full play to m.c. Steve Allen and half a dozen name "presenters" dittoing on the Coast out of Frank Sennes' Moulin Rouge cafe.

Daisy Chain of Stars

But the show itself was generally good though failing to achieve the glam and air of expectancy of the older Oscar parade (slotted for March 30 in an NBC simulcast). The six citationers were on their best behavior and armed with some of the top quips in their respective arsenals. Succession kicked off with Jimmy Durante and ran overtime to about 1:05 a.m. in a daisy chain encompassing George Burns, Danny Thomas, Jack Benny, Ralph Edwards and Dr. Frank C. Baxter. The awards themselves were a bit anticlimactic with little speeches

Surefire Segue

Practically every packager in the business has been beating a path to the Compton agency doors ever since it became known that P & G was on the prowl for a replacement for "Fireside Theatre" in the 9 to 9:30 Tuesday night NBC-TV slot.

It's no secret (particularly to anyone following the rating trends) that the Tuesday period is one of the most coveted in all television, for the audience inheritance from the 8 to 9 slot is a surefire guarantee for a 35 to 38 rating on the Nielsens. That's what "Fireside's" been averaging, but it's anticipated that a boffola entry can't miss hitting the high 40s.

TV Playwrights Double in Brass; Got That 'Feel'

The "script mastermind" bug has taken hold of some of tv's dramatic stanzas as playwrights who have made their imprint on the medium turn editors. At the same time, the dramatists continue their writing chores while riding herd on the product of other craftsmen in an attempt at maintaining the qualitative level of the shows involved.

Initial invasion of a major vidramatist into the overseer fold was made early in the season by Robert Alan Aurthur, who for several years has been one of the top suppliers of themes for the Philco-Goodyear "TV Playhouse" series. When Fred Coe stepped out of that Sunday nighter to become script consultant for "Lux Video Theatre" (and having exited that function long before the pact expired, at a reported $40,000 as his fee), Gordon Duff took the reins as producer, up from his "associate" status. In the reshuffle," status. In the reshuffle, Aurthur became the No. 2 man plus script editor.

Two others primed for the editor's uneasy chair are Reginald Rose and Rod Serling. They've been tapped as a team to boss scripts for "The Challenge," half-hour documentary package (out of the Ted Ashley office) produced by Tony Miner, with Sidney Lumet staging, under auspices of the Fund for the Republic (the $15,000,000 outfit, that, for instance, provided the coin for college distribution of the J. Robert Oppenheimer exposure on "See It Now," with an extension to 60 minutes from the Ed Murrow-Fred Friendly tele film arsenal). Rose, who made his mark with "Studio One" and is now under a five-play contract to CBS, and Serling, whose biggest click was the reprised "Patterns" on "Kraft TV Theatre," will also supply the stories.

Hayes Leaving Broke's TV'er for Cafe Dates

First defection in the ranks of Norman Brokenshire's daytime crossboarder on WRCA-TV, N. Y., which was launched a couple of weeks ago, is Bill Hayes. The singer's click in "Ballad of Davey Crockett" on the Cadence label has upped his stock considerably on the nitery circuit and he's been booked for a number of cafe dates. He's also a possibility as a summer replacement for the Sid Caesar show on NBC-TV under the comedian's own production wand.

Hayes will finish up on the Brokenshire stanza in a fortnight with no replacement set as yet.

NARTB Irked As Ike Ain't Sayin'

Washington, March 8.

National Association of Radio-Television Broadcasters, whose annual convention will be held in Washington, May 22-26, is fidgeting uncomfortably while it awaits word from the White House on whether President Eisenhower will address the convention.

Invitation was first extended several weeks ago and the broadcasters have been repeating it through various influential channels since.

What especially irks broadcast industry biggies is that the President, who has never spoken at one of their conventions, has already accepted another invitation to speak to the American Newspaper Publishers Association.

He will address the annual luncheon of the Associated Press on April 25, one of the features of the ANPA convention in New York.

PHIL SILVERS SHOW BOUGHT BY CAMELS

R. J. Reynolds (Camel) has put in an order for the new Phil Silvers telefilm series, with a Sept. 18 starting date as the target. Sale is contingent on CBS-TV finding a good time slot for the show.

Silvers winds up his 13th installment this week and leaves for a five-week vacation soon. He plans to have 26 in the can by the kickoff date in the fall.

THE "EMMY" THAT

WASN'T AWARDED

We are delighted, of course, that six major "Emmies" were awarded Monday night to ABC-TV shows and stars.

What delights us even more is the caliber of all network award winners. It seems to us that the recognition of every one of them was well earned and thoroughly deserved.

But if we had an "Emmy" of our own to present, it would go to television for its dramatic progress in the last year . . . in bold concept, in creative programming, in imaginative production, and for the artistry of its many wonderful performers.

Our sincere appreciation to the Academy of Television Arts and Sciences for our "Emmies":

Best News Reporter or News Commentator: John Daly
Best Actor Starring in a Regular Series: Danny Thomas (Make Room For Daddy)
Best Variety Series, Including Musical Variety: Disneyland
Best Situation Comedy Series: Make Room For Daddy
Best Dramatic Series: United States Steel Hour
Best Individual Program of the Year: "Operation Undersea" (Disneyland)

Our warm congratulations to CBS and NBC for their "Emmies":

Best Cultural, Religious or Educational Program: Omnibus; Best Children's Program: Lassie; Best Daytime Program: Art Linkletter's House Party; Best Actor in a Single Performance: Robert Cummings ("Twelve Angry Men" on Studio One); Best Male Singer: Perry Como; Best Supporting Actor in a Regular Series: Art Carney (The Jackie Gleason Show); Best Supporting Actress in a Regular Series: Audrey Meadows (The Jackie Gleason Show).

Television's Outstanding New Personality: George Gobel; Best Sports Program: Gillette Cavalcade of Sports; Best Guest, Audience Participation or Panel Program: This Is Your Life; Best Actress in a Single Performance: Judith Anderson ("Macbeth" on Hallmark Playhouse); Best Female Singer: Dinah Shore; Best Actress Starring in a Regular Series: Loretta Young; Best Mystery or Intrigue Series: Dragnet.

ABC TELEVISION NETWORK

Television Followup Comment

Color doesn't hurt Jack Benny; especially if there's an amusement park attached; especially if the CBS tinter's on film. Leave it to the headman to give a lot of the laughs to Mr. Kitzell-ne-Artie Auerbach, with latter veteran of the JB radio-tv wars breaking up all and sundry on Sunday's (6) midway strip with his dialectics as he took over a multiple of hawker-barker-gorilla-etcetera roles in "Operation Ubiquitous." Benny had his Bevhills Beaver Patrol moppets (4) on a tour of the Calif. park to give tone to the proceedings via the balloons, riding devices and such—these and other atmospherics, including sideshows and hi-strikers, serving as springboard for a load of fun-on-the-run. Even the Sportsmen foursome got into the act, as "Flying Trapeze" songsters working their way up the Lucky Strike ladder for a boffo plug.

Mahlon Merrick and Ralph Levy brought in a fast one at leisurely pace in the neatest trick of the tv week, with McCadden (Burns & Allen) shooting the sequences. There were half a dozen snappers, mostly good, particularly Benny's capers with a caged lion he presumed to be an Auerbach-encased prop. Over on the radio side half an hour earlier (with Danny Kaye guesting), Benny was putting up the paper for his oncoming tv'er and on latter was plugging his Ann Sothern alternation, with nary a word therein to dial his next week's AM'er. In other words, the sound medium to 24-sheet video but not vice versa. There's a moral here somewhere. Trau.

A behind-the-scenes show biz yarn about a comic-and-crooner team (no relation to Dean Martin & Jerry Lewis) was turned into a sparkling stanza on the NBC-TV "Philco Television Playhouse" Sunday night (6). For the genre, it was a near-perfect model. The drama had color and laughs, a minor degree of pathos and, above all a high degree of credibility.

Scripter David Shaw rates the primary bows for the simple, but neat story framework, the racy dialog and the overall savvy that gave this hour the ring of an authentic show biz saka. Perhaps the actor-agent colloquies were a bit overdrawn, but generally, Shaw's delineation, with the help of VARIETY headline montages, of the accidental formation and the inevitable breakup of a topflight tv team was basically sound and persuasive.

As the comedy half of the duo, Joey Adams' portrayal was a tour de force. Adams, of course, is a comic so his expert handling of the gag lines in the script was not surprising. But he dug far deeper in his characterization of a brash comic with a big mouth and a bigger ego, but likeable nevertheless. Adams' performance was right in every respect, and his impact was so strong that he overturned the basic premise of the script, namely, that the crooner was actually as important to the team as the singer. And if, in the show-within-the-show framework, Adams was supposed to be a stage hog, he did manage to dominate the screen completely by virtue of his bite and vitality.

As the crooner, Johnny Desmond was wholly competent in a role that was destined to be overshadowed. He handled the straight dramatics surely and gave a strong vocal buildup to a new song, "Play Me Hearts and Flowers," which was written especially for this drama. For dramatic purposes, the song was adequate and it's irrelevant whether it becomes an actual hit. It was, however, given enough exposure via the theme backgrounds; several vocal choruses by Desmond and a final plug for the Coral Record. This type of showcasing for a tune may be a songwriter's dream but, fundamentally, the material itself will have to pay off as it did in the pioneer "Let Me Go, Lover" song exploitation on the "Studio One" broadcast a couple of months ago.

The excellent supporting cast in the Philco drama was headed by Luis Van Rooten, as the harried comic's agent, with Ellen Cobb-Hill, Kay Medford as the femme interests. Herm.

The touring "Colgate Comedy Hour" seems to have utilized its latest "on location" stint better as publicity fodder than an aide to programming. After sessions in Miami and New Orleans (for the Mardi Gras), the troubled-by-that-Sullivan-fellah variety show ended up last Sunday (6) on the plush SS. United States.

It was obvious that the producers were pressing extra hard to achieve a continental flavor commensurate with a majestic ocean liner. There was a plethora of accents: the Gabor sisters and mama Jolie were handy as were the three Weire Bros., and even comic Ronnie Graham tested his English accent. The entire effort was a strain, with the hour-long show not surmounting its recent standard of mediocrity. It's going to seem great when somebody doesn't cast the gabby Gabors as gold diggers. They were asked to sing (in the finale) on this one, but that didn't work either.

The Weire Bros. were supercharged in spots but they couldn't sustain laughter throughout their too many appearances. Team of Herbert, Sylvester and Harry Weire show considerable diversity, playing violins, singing and shoeing as they did, but chatter consisted mostly of waste material. One week "Comedy Hour" is too heavy on music, the next it's overboard (on the United States) in comedy; Ronnie Graham was around with a couple of songs about Freud and psychoanalysis that had click lyrics, but he rattled 'em off too rapidly to gain maximum audience support.

Counting emcee Gordon MacRae who was fine in a couple of tunes, particularly "I've Got You Under My Skin," the musical portions were standouts. Jaye P. Morgan manifested charm and pepper in her turns. Her "Takin' A Chance on Love" came across well. Carmen Dragon backstopping was excellent.

The program can blame its chief overall failure to come with anything different, paradoxically, on its almost frantic desire to be different. Here, they had the S.S. United States in all its glorious appointments, and what was shown on the screen could easily have been duplicated, for probably as little or as much cost in a video studio. Atmosphere angle also made scribblers and the rest forget entertainment per se. Moreover, the remote evidently posed technical problems that took away more than any slight measure of "unique" atmosphere offered. For about a minute and a half there, the video screen carried a double image, and the aural went dead—right through part of the commercial too. Art.

Ed Sullivan's show went on a disk-kick on Sunday's (6) edition over CBS-TV. Sullivan showcased Roy Hamilton and the Fontane Sisters from the shellac shops and Lillian Roth who has made good in a multitude of other fields, including the literary since her autobiography "I'll Cry Tomorrow" is still on the topselling lists.

This big batch of singing made the show somewhat one-sided, inasmuch as good routining required alternating a singing act, with a dumb act. This partially took the curse off the vocal surplus.

Miss Roth boffed across a medley of oldies including a pair from "Vagabond King" and hit applause jackpot. She was aided by a pair of lads and some production dancing. The Fontane Sisters hit it off well with a pair of tunes and Roy Hamilton made good with his single, "You'll Never Walk Alone" which he endowed with the values of a spiritual.

The silent turns were given added force by the profusion of tonsil turns. Thus Joe Jackson Jr.'s w.k. pantomimic bicycle act went over excellently and the knockabout acro work of The Romanos (3) also hit a top response. Paul Sydell's dog turn got its message across.

Sullivan has become a collector of Sullivan impressionists. This time he exhibited a Negro who has captured Sullivan's traits remarkably well. It was a good novelty.

Toppers were Mata & Hari in an imaginative and well executed dance in which a pair of display dummies become animated. Two male assistants were required in this choreo and results were excellent. Collier's All-American basketballers took bows. Jose.

Several months ago Jack Carson shed his clown suit to distinguish himself in a dramatic performance on the ABC-TV "U.S. Steel Hour" in "Goodbye . . . But It Doesn't Go Away." Last Tuesday (2) on the same Theatre Guild series the towering gent with the genial puss displayed another facet of his emoting talent, as an easygoing, self-effacing fellow kicked around at the factory — and to a certain extent at home — in a teleplay by Ernest Pendrell called "Man in a Corner."

As the underdog, it was a role bound to elicit sympathy, and his promotion at the slave-driving plant in a stock happy-ender after he had actually quit the job to try for a policeman's post at which he failed, lacked the element of surprise. But under Alex Segal's sensitive direction the play moved along gracefully to reveal some fine characterizations, notably Carson's "good guy" who can blow up at the proper time to win his point on the human element in mass production.

In the overcrowded family phase of the saga, Phyllis Hill stood out as his ever lovin' wife, with capable work also by Harold Vermilyea and Betty Garde as his understanding in-laws. At the factory, the big noise was Ernest Truex as the bombastic owner with a step-on-the-gas mission in life, but not too thick to be unaware of Carson's truths, playing a role ideally suited to him. Some tender scenes were contributed by Claire Kirby as Carson's secretary, and there were realistic bits by Cliff Norton (another clown turned straight) as the foreman and Don Keefer as the production manager. Trau.

Ed Murrow paid a couple of visits to some dedicated people on his "Person to Person" last Friday (4). First was to the Roy Rogers family on the Coast, the second to Alicia Markova. The Rogers clan, for all their professional success, appear to be dedicated to humanity, and by way of striking contrast, Miss Markova appeared dedicated to one thing, her dancing. Aside from the warmth and interest in both sessions, the program provided some interesting philosophical food for thought on the way people choose to lead their lives.

The Rogers family (Dale Evans and the flock of adopted kids) seemed all humanity and all heart. Murrow didn't have to elicit any warmth from the parents and children—it was all there, with no phony patronizing of the kiddies by proud papa that's so often an element on the "Personcasts." The Rogers at play was an intimate and unembarrassed glance at a happy family, and in Rogers and Miss Evans the public got a good look at a couple of people who've gone out of the orbit of the everyday couple to put their money and energies to work in an effort to help others.

Miss Markova provided another type of dedication, the dedication of the artist to her art. By way of startling contrast, she seemed lonely in comparison to the Rogers. Interview took place in her two-room hotel suite in New York, between tours. An unpacked trunk in the middle of the room set the mood, and Miss Markova, generally acceeded to be one of the all-time greats of the ballet, fortified the impressions. She was a charming, voluble and intelligent guest and her descriptions, reminiscences and words of advice made good viewing and good sense.

This, whether by intent or indirection, was one of the most penetrating of the "Personcasts." In mood and in direction, it went beyond the customary "this is our playroom" bit and provided a little bit of insight into the real makings of people. Chan.

Walt Disney packaged three of his Academy-award-winning shorts for incorporation in this "Fantasyland" ABC-TV offering which he sub-tags, "From Aesop to Hans Christian Andersen." Tracing the age of fables and their writers down through the ages, Disney dishes up an animated treat for dialers of all ages here, making use also of other past theatrically released cartoons.

Trio of Oscar grabbers include "The Tortoise and the Hare," "The Country Cousin" and "The Ugly Duckling," drawn, respectively, from the tales of Aesop, Jean de la Fontaine and the Danish Andersen. They still carry all the charm of the originals, and Disney has pointed up each of their authors by brief animated descriptions. Overall subject is further enlightened by Disney's commentary on how fable writers always inserted some simple truth or moral, then goes on to prove it via selected cartoons.

One of the most charming highlights of the hour show was taken from the Grimm Bros. "Brave Little Tailor," after Disney dwelt briefly on his feature cartoon hit, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs." Clip from "The Frog and the Ox" were also shown. Disney artists have patterned their descriptive animation of the various writers to the spirit of the times. Whit.

Julius LaRosa is in the same relaxed groove as Perry Como, so he won't disturb peace and tranquility of the tri-weekly CBS-TV Chesterfield sweepstakes as the fixture works in a fortnight's vacation. Whether 7:30 or 7:45, NBC or CBS, it's a revelation how the late dinnertime chanters manage to work up high rating steam with such operators as Eddie Fisher, Dinah Shore and Tony Martin in non-competing (actually cross-dialing segues) song-a-blocks with Como, Jane Froman and Jo Stafford on the other side of the fence. NBC follows with the J. C. Swayze news and CBS precedes its song paraders with Douglas Edwards' recap of the day's events, and hence the rivalry is tunes versus topicals in all the slots.

LaRosa looks like a real nice youngster in his pinchhitting chore (also on the AM ramparts for Como), making sure in the patter that he's merely keeping the spot warm until the "quiet one" returns. Last Friday (4) in his finale of the first week, the ex-Godfreyite proved a handyandy at "Teach Me Tonight" and "The Gal (meaning the "Man," of course, in the original Harold Arlen-Judy Garland "Star Is Born" sexual context) "That Got Away" with looker Terry Stevens guesting. Ray Charles Singers and Mitchell Ayres orch were in there with their infectious licks and LaRosa spouted for the ciggie even though he doesn't have the smoker's aura about him. Trau.

As sort of a birthday present marking the start of its fifth year, Don Herbert's "Watch Mr. Wizard" has been moved up from its former Saturday afternoon NBC-TV berth into the web's Saturday morning moppet spectrum. Since it bowed on 14 stations back in 1951 as a joint NBC-TV-Cereal Institute venture, the youngster-angled video science demonstration has become one of the network's most prized educational showpieces with over 140 affiliates now on the string.

The edition reevaluated (5) evidenced anew the conscientious craftmanship of Herbert and cohorts, producer Jules Power, director Don Meier and the behind-the-scenes workshop staff. Headman's relaxed, easy manner before the cameras and his sincere "big brother" relationship with his young foils, this time Bruce Podewell who alternates with Susan Levine, have been well documented. Less frequently commented on is the obvious amount of careful planning and preparation that goes into making the scientifically complex both simple and understandable.

The principle of the lever and mechanical advantage was outlined on this outing and although it was told and visualized in terms the kids could dig, it also added up to a meaty refresher course for the adults who may have forgotten their high school science or college physics. Therein probably lies "Wizard's" success: the simplicity breakdown never does violence to the basic scientific laws so the most hardboiled laboratory egghead can watch the show without grunting in dismay.

Institutional blurbs on the benefits of a good breakfast were neatly woven in through the use of one of the specially built contraptions demonstrating the lever principle. All in all, it was a fine example of entertaining instruction with young Master Podewell contributing an excellent supporting performance. Dave.

Leave it to a longhair to make baseball seem like a dull game. That's just what composer William Schuman, with an assist from librettist Jeremy Gury, did to the national pasttime, when they pitched an operatic version of Ernest Thayer's "Casey at the Bat" on CBS-TV's "Omnibus" Sunday (6).

The hour-long one-act opera, retagged for some obscure reason, "The Mighty Casey," went wide of the plate musically and lyrically. Schuman's score was heavy-handed lacking the bright and breezy quality that usually goes with the game. His style is quasi-modern but it just doesn't blend with the Thayer poem or the Gury additions. De Wolfe Hopper's rendition had more swing to it.

"Omnibus" assembled a large cast to belt in the opus but the principals and chorus were hampered by the score, which seemed too tough to sing. They didn't get much help from Gury, either. Among the principals were Danny Scholl, Elise Rhodes, Rufus Smith and Nathaniel Frey. They were in their pitching but Schumann and Gury should have been sent to the showers.

Stanza opened with a half-hour tour through Harry Winston's diamond-land in midtown Manhattan. Alistair Cook guided the tour in an informative manner but the 30 minutes lacked lustre. Gros.

Through four generations the Kimballs and the Sawyers have been shooting up each other and the countryside in the fashion of the more publicized Hatfields and McCoys. Fifty years later they were finally caught up with for the public prints and last week's "TV Readers Digest" segment was an account of their exploits. As a documented telepic it carries a fairly good wallop and holds up through all the feudin' and fussin' despite that these backwoodsy folk don't move too fast.

When it dawns on the musket pumpers that "'tis better to heal than to kill" the sharpshooters start reachin' for Grey's Anatomy, which is a book of larnin' for premedics. Most of the action flashes back a half century to give the sequel its proper buildup. One of the young 'uns ain't much for shooting up his neighbors and wants to be a sawbones. When the story picks up 50 years later he's the one with the scalpel and taking the cut is a grandson of one of the old feuders. He pulls him through and a handshake ends the back country bickerin'.

Christian Nyby strikes a note of realism with his direction of the characters like a Van Buren cartoon from Esquire. Minor Watson and Bobby Driscoll are, man and boy, the chief motivators and keep the piece moving with able help from the lesser practitioners. Helm.

"Star Tonight," the Brillo-sponsored ABC-TV'er which stars comparative unknowns, backing them with established supporting players, came up with a beaut Thursday night (3) in Patricia Englund and "Zone of Quiet." Teleplay was based on Ring Lardner's hospital yarn about the guy who comes in for a rest and is driven nuts by the nurse. As adapted by David Shaw, it came off in ribtickling fashion, and Miss Englund (who must get it from father Ken) emerged as a fine young comedienne.

Miss Englund, natch, was the talky nurse whose all-encompassing chatter also went into the matter of the love affair between a sister nurse and the guy's doctor. And this subplot got the full treatment via some broad comedy scenes with the doctor (and patient) caught between the two gals. Four-actor cast was tops, with Miss Englund and Nita Talbot turning in hilarious performances as the nurses, Biff McGuire properly scatterbrained as the doc and Larry Blyden the picture of frustrated agony as the patient.

Shaw's script caught the full Lardner flavor, and Alan Anderson's direction started things moving immediately and didn't let up the pace. Harry Herrmann's J. Walter Thompson production staff turned out the entire segment with their customary professional flair. As the VARIETY review put it when "Star Tonight" bowed a couple of months ago, no youngster is going to make it on the show unless the script is right. JWT and Shaw (Lardner too) did right by Miss Englund. Chan.

Rakov's Hub Shift

Boston, March 8.

Avner Rakov, WBZ-WBZA program manager, will resign his post effective March 14 in order to become associated with the Master Picture Co. of Boston, producers of tv and industrial films. He will assume the posts of executive and production director of the pic company.

Prior to taking over as WBZ program manager, he served for many years as musical director for the station. In addition, he has been on the teaching staff of Boston U. School of Music and the New England Conservatory of Music.

TV On An Antiquity Kick

A large chunk of tv's dramatic stanzas in the last seven or eight days had the look of "Old Home Week"—with some of mortgages waiting for a taker. Each of the three major networks fronted classics of other generations. On CBS, Westinghouse's "Best of Broadway" series starred Claudette Colbert and Franchot Tone in Molnar's "The Guardsman," a 30-year-old Lunt-Fontanne legiter reworked into a film for them nearly a quarter century ago. It got a general drubbing from the critics.

Next night, "Pond's Theatre" on ABC revived Eugene O'Neill's "Anna Christie" with a bally aura that hinted at a "tv first" despite the fact that Alex Segal brought this in a couple of years back on the old "Celanese Theatre" with June Havoc in the name role. Last week's "Anna" seemed the better interpretation with Constance Ford, Everett Sloane, James Daly and Grace Valentine.

Same night, NBC's "Lux Video Theatre," as a four-week leadup to Academy Awards on tv, brought back a live "Casablanca" from its wartime celluloid trough in a glossy but pretentious performance headed by Paul Douglas, Arlene Dahl and Hoagy Carmichael—the latter as the cafe pianist in a puzzler, since the role was created for the film by the late Dooley Wilson, a Negro who boffed "As Time Goes By" into a tune clicker. (As host James Mason told Carmichael in the "admiration" afterpiece, "maybe next time you canplay your own songs," in an apparent stab at out-of-script realism to square the "unoriginal" casting.)

Preceding the threesome were "Donovan's Brain" on Westinghouse-CBS' "Studio One"—from Curt Siodmak's two-time film; and "Medic," which initiated a long-ago biographical documentary since up to now the Dow Chemical clinical operation has tackled up-to-date subjects.

Even a couple of the half-hour telepix dramas got into the vintage act. Last Friday, "Schlitz Playhouse of Stars" on CBS went on an antiquity kick. Up ahead (Thursday), a solid scorer against the Luxes, Ponds and Westinghouse was a delightful little farce based on Ring Lardner's "Zone of Quiet" which gave Patricia Englund opportunity for a talkathon terrif on ABC-Brillo's "Star Tonight" skein. Trau.

Billy Graham's '3 For God': N.Y. Garden SRO; Stumps In Ike Church; Meets 'Press'

"Meet the Press" departed from the political arena for perhaps the first time Sunday (6) with a plunge into religion, or more specifically, evangelism. Guest was Billy Graham, and producer-panelist Lawrence Spivak, operating under the theory that names make news and news makes a "Press" guest, was certainly justified in his offbeat choice. Hitting Page 1 of the New York Times twice within four days (Friday (4) after filling Madison Square Garden the night before and Monday (7) after preaching before President Eisenhower in Washington's National Presbyterian Church, is probably as good an average as anybody the show has ever had from politics.

Graham, as one of the modern-day phenoms (in the sense of a showman as well as a preacher—that's a trait that all great American evangelists appear to have possessed) must have shaped as a must for most viewers. He's had telexposure before, but strictly on an on-camera, on-film basis, via his erstwhile "Hour of Decision" films. But to see him operate on an off-the-cuff, spontaneous basis, is another thing, and the opportunity to see a spellbinder appear publicly in a casual, off-duty manner must have raised "Press" audience considerably.

When an evangelist becomes an attraction, as Graham indisputably has, the inevitable question is, What has the guy got? Is he just a skillful showman, is he a natural leader, a fanatic, or what? Graham's "Press" appearance should have settled the matter for most who saw it—he's a combination of a topnotch salesman who knows the value of publicity and exploitation, a consummate showman, a very handsome guy who has the looks to command the attention of women and the virility to command the respect of men, and a leader type with the poise and sureness that project him to the top and keep him there.

The opportunity to look Graham over firsthand gave the show more impact than the actual discussion provoked. In the way of news, Graham tactfully declared himself opposed to racial segregation, said that New York was sinful but not more so than most cities, said he'd like to come to Gotham for a conversion campaign but was awaiting an invitation from the city's ministers, claimed that there is a great hunger for religion in Russia, justified his frequent trips to Europe, defended his rate of conversions and the permanence of conversions and frankly admitted his penchant for salesmanship and publicity as a bona fide means of indoctrination. Questions from the NBC panel, comprising Spivak, columnist Marquis Childs, Time mag's George Harris and Religious News Service's Glenn D. Everett, were provocative.

Reported desire of several sponsors to put Graham on tele on a commercial basis in a format comparable to Bishop Fulton J. Sheen's ought to have gotten considerable impetus from the "Press" stint. Chan.

CELEBRITY PARADE
With Joseph McCaffrey, Drew Pearson
Producer: Milton Hammer
30 Mins., Sun., 2 p.m.
RETAIL CLERKS INTERNATIONAL ASSN.
WMAL-TV, Washington

This interesting combo of two-shows-in-one debuted on local ABC outlet with one eye frankly focussed on a web spot. Combining the news gathering technique of reported Joseph McCaffrey, ex-Mutual newscaster and currently a Capitol Hill radio-tv freelancer, and analyst Drew Pearson, show has a much faster and more varied pace than many of its older competitors in the Sunday afternoon tv forum sweepstakes.

McCaffrey, a veteran of Congressional interviewing, and an unusually photogenic newscaster, handles all commercials with a public service flavor, lending a dignity and news touch to them. Principal chore is a straight interview for first half of show, specializing in political figures, but with an occasional local civic, educational or showbiz figure.

At show caught, House Minority Leader Charles Halleck (R., Ind.) made an able sparring partner for newsman McCaffrey and provided an unusually newsworthy quarter hour. News breaks, the bread-and-butter of all interview and forum shows, depend equally on skill of interrogator and hep repsonses of guest. The Halleck-McCaffrey team ran the gamut of a second term for Ike; the Congressional pay raise; and the tax bill. Effect was that somewhere there should be a headline for someone.

Second segment of show is a revised version of Drew Pearson's "Washington Merry-Go-Round" telefilm. Accenting the usual "exclusive" feature of all Pearson broadcasts, new version also carries a strong human interest angle and a more leisurely review of the subject tackled. On past Sunday's (6) show, Pearson spent entire time analyzing the imprisonment and release of Herman and Noel Field and their families. Capitalizing on the cloak-and-dagger atmosphere around the disappearance of "an entire family" behind the Iron Curtain, word picture, pointed up with stills, was an exciting and skillful analysis, albeit with little new angles added, to one of the year's more intriguing news stories. Pearson appears more relaxed than in the past. His voice is pitched lower, and his manner has lost much of the stoccato effect which marked his tv work in the past. The columnist may have learned by trial-and-error or the new expanded format may have eliminated much of the need for breathlessness. At any rate, it is a defi ite improvement over previous Pearson efforts.

Combo of the two types of news presentation in a single show, making for variety and faster pace, plus the authoritative, but different styles of both men, make this a half-hour worth watching. Flor.

Too bad that the late Ferenc Molnar's "The Guardsman" was on tap as the "Best of Broadway" entry at the time when "Studio One" producer Felix Jackson and director Paul Nickell were called in to take over the once-a-month series. Not that the comedy turned out badly, but it was somewhat lightweight material, and with more meaty stuff to work with, Jackson might have been able to make his bow on the series more auspicious. "The Guardsman" was nicely turned out, but on the inauspicious side.

The Molnar comedy, adapted for tele by Reginald Lawrence, is all situation—no characterization, no dialog, nothing but plot. It's a toughie for the actors and directors (despite its 1924 Broadway success), and it's to the credit of Claudette Colbert that she made a charming creature out of the coquettish wife and of Franchot Tone that he got the right note of comic despair as the hubby. Credit Nickell also for getting the whimsy moving after a somewhat awkward start. Add some extra plusses for Edith King, called in at the last minute as a replacement for Mary Boland, for turning an amusing job as the bogus mother; for Reginald Gardiner as the straightfaced friend, and for Mary Grace Canfield and Margaret Hamilton in minor roles.

"The Guardsman" is paper-thin throughout, and the entire weight of the play falls on the husband's dilemma in making love to his wife in disguise. While it's a rewarding-enough premise, it's not enough to carry the entire play, not even in an hour-long televersion. But Miss Colbert and Tone made the best of it, and provided some pleasant if not inspired televiewing. Chan.

With "The Lone Wolf" vidpix series ending its run for Chevrolet, NBC's N.Y. flagship has slotted "Fame" (ex-"The Greatest Drama") in the post-11 p.m. Saturday sweepstakes. Rerun syndicated package out of a Movietone News-General Teleradio co-op subsidiary is picked up by National Gypsum in the New York market. "Fame" is a biopic quickie highlighting American greats, with initialer recapping the significant events in the life of Henry Ford. It's largely a succession of newsreel clips—in this case some of vintage quality—and is reasonably interesting considering the hackneyed, panegyrical method of reporting. Narration is by Raymond Edward Johnson, who never lets up on the pitch, apparently because the pictures cannot tell the whole story.

Good opportunity is furnished to bring in other bigwigs—in this case former President Hoover, Thomas A. Edison and the other et als who crossed the late auto magnate's path in his more than 60 years on the industrial scene. Coming up are Admiral Byrd, Bernard Baruch, Edison, Eddie Rickenbacker, Babe Ruth and General MacArthur. They're not playing with any but the world headliners on this one. Trau.

WPTZ, Philadelphia

Joe Grady and Ed Hurst, hosts of one of first and longest-running disk sessions (the "950 Club") are trained in the school that keeps things moving. They showcased a half dozen guests on the preem of their new half-hour tv stanza. This doesn't leave the boys much time to project their own locally esteemed personalities. There is none of the current style of the reflective emcee who seemingly plans program while on. "Showroom" is fast, varied and without a lag.

Setting is a cafe and seated at tables are invited reps of the Plymouth organization. The ringsiders should be briefed on their ad-libs. One of the primary aims of "Showroom" is to spotlight new talent. Neophyte on opener was Bob Sweeney, local singer who has

'Peter Pan' A Major TV Triumph In Mary Martin's '1-Niter U.S.A.'

By GEORGE ROSEN

Television went after the kids on Monday night (7) and came off with one of its standout contributions, hitting a high mark in entertainment and superlative production.

The occasion, of course, was the "Producers Showcase" presentation of the musicalized version of Barrie's "Peter Pan" starring Mary Martin—the same full length production that had ended its Broadway run at the Winter Garden only nine days before. As encompassed within the two-hour (7:30 to 9:30) Monday night span, the tv one-shot originating out of NBC's color studios in Brooklyn registered as a major triumph in the wedding of show biz and the video spectrum.

When the final Nielsens are posted on this one it'll probably reveal (thanks to some terrific preshow promotion and bally) one of the largest audiences in tv annals to witness a single production (perhaps one out of every two or three persons in the U.S.). Certainly a justifiable reward for NBC's plunking down in excess of $250,000 for the package (only $150,000 of which was recapturable under the Ford-RCA "Showcase" sponsorship), not to mention an additional $100,000 spent by the web on aboye-package costs.

As it "played" on Monday for the home audiences, "Peter Pan" was a sheer delight. If the answer to the perfect or near-perfect spec lies in giving productions a pre-tv run on Broadway, the fact remains that much of the credit for the stunning success of Monday's presentation lies in the flawlessness with which all concerned hurdled the technical hazards in "Peter's" transference to video. It was designed as a "front row-center" spectacle for the vast audience, and that's how it played.

Since "Peter" was brought over to tv intact from its Broadway run, including principals, featured performers, singers, dancers, scenery, costumes, music, lyrics, libretto and full orchestra, it wasn't surprising that the video audience was witnessing a polished, finished performance. Yet the dovetailing of the "legit package" entrepreneurs with the tv technicians, cameramen and other creative factors from tv was so expertly achieved that the video accomplishment was lost in the smoothness of the finished production.

Thus, to the casual viewer, it was difficult to determine where the Jerome Robbins staging-directing-choreography contribution left off and the tv-minded Fred Coe and Clark Jones (NBC's director and producer, respectively) began. What mattered was that it added up to a brilliant mating of talents. As a superlative plus (but unfortunately "hidden" asset), the NBC-RCA compatible color was the final magic touch that completed the transformation. Everything was right—lighting, tint tones and hues, with no variation or loss by switching of cameras.

Over and above the unqualified triumph of "Peter Pan" as seen on Monday, the virtual overnight Broadway-to-tv transition of a costly show has major significance to show biz, since it (1) establishes for the first time the pattern of shooting for a one-night audience (in this instance in the area of 70,000,000) and thus eliminating an arduous road tour; and (2) resolving the economics attending Broadway boxoffice losses (as in the case of "Peter") by recouping coin in one fell tv swoop.

Even to those adults who find Barrie's whimsy not precisely their dish of tea, this musical version of "Peter" had much pure entertainment to offer. The songs and incidental music; the simple yet delightful humor; the attendent horseplay of the pirates and the Indians; the animals and the fantasy world; the charming and well integrated choreography were all vested with an unadulterated charm that bore well and did not become cloying or precious. Utterly devoid of sophistication or wordliness, it stood up as adult fare (until the last act portions when the viewer had to tarry with the sentimental Barrie).

That Mary Martin was a gem beyond reproach wasn't particularly surprising. Her magnetic personality, her stylized vocalizing, her lovely grace, per poignant smile—all this was "Peter Pan," the elusive character that wouldn't grow up. Her charming "I've Got to Crow" duet with her daughter, Heller Halliday, playing Liza the maid, should have been enough to inspire an even lesser talent. Her effortless flying was a merging of grace and technical achievement.

Cyril Ritchard as Captain Hook was the ideal pirate of Neverland, fantastically comic as the "creepiest creep in the world." Also standout was Kathy Nolan as Wendy, as sweet and charming a "mother" as Peter Pan could wish. For that matter, all the tried-and-true "Peter" troupers of the Broadway engagement made as good Indians, pirates and lost boys on tv.

It's not exactly a revelation at this point to say the Carolyn Leigh lyrics and Mark Charlap music (with Julie Styne's additional music and the Betty Comden-Adolph Green additional lyrics) complemented the theme and structure of the play by retaining its simple fantasy. This was also true of Albert Sendry's arrangements. And not the least of it was Harry Sosnik's tip top musical supervision of the augmented orchestra and Louis Adrian's conducting.

Even the commercials were on the plus side this time up, with both Ford and RCA wrapping up some entertaining "capsule productions." The teaming up of Ernest Truex and Sylvia Field and Ernie Kovacs and Edith Evans for the entertaining Ford "sells" and the mock trial whereby Vaughn Monroe faces a court rap for some bum RCA commercials were keyed to the evening as a whole.

The television spectacle has come a long way since "Satins and Spurs."

QUIZ CLUB
With Jay Grayson, Brent Gunts
Producer: Brent Gunts
Director: John Frankenfield
30 Mins.; Mon.-thru-Sat., 1 p.m.
WBAL-TV, Baltimore

Quick, glib mcing by Jay Grayson and Brent Gunts lifts this show from stale status of every day quiz format to plus entertainment values for midday femme viewers. Format is regular quiz show questions and answers leading to audience indentification of "mystery personality" including usual write in-phone call gimmick. Format is improved because producers have been able to snare unusually good and valuable prizes for an out-of-NY program.

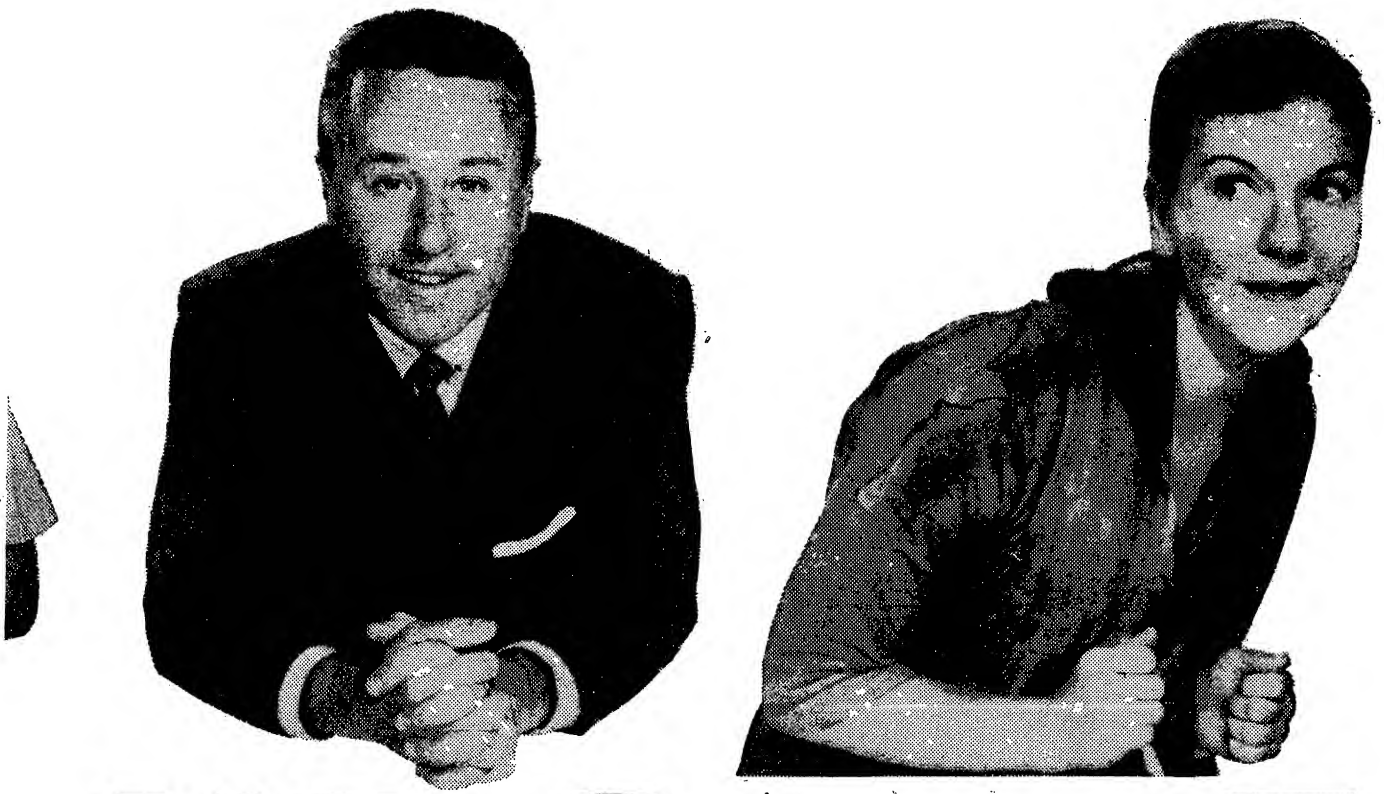
Seen last week (3), the lively tv show remoted from Baltimore's Stanley Theatre with a packed audience of 3,700. One announcement on a previous telecast caused gals to start forming lines at 7:30 a.m. Judging from the live audience, the women are devotedly loyal to the co-mcs, Grayson and Gunts, both w.k. to local audiences from a background of deejaying and audience participating shows.

John Frankenfield adroitly directed the particular show reviewed with a multitude of technical difficulties caused by remoting it from a theatre ill equipped for tv productions. In spite of difficulties, camera work was superior and smooth. Shots were well thought out and good direction resulted in quick, easy takes on exact cues.

Uninteresting sets and usual difficulties of playing to intelligence level of audience with small production budget were more than compensated for by the abilities of Grayson and Gunts working in good balance to one another and obviously developing live (and home) audience loyalty and high enthusiasm. Commercial portions of show were competently handled with effective video and audio sales pitch. WBAL-TV's staff deserve praise for intelligent, well planned production techniques. Marsh.

FUTURE

Exciting things are happening on NBC Television—and exciting things are going to keep right on happening.



Last year, NBC pioneered new patterns of network television programming. Here are a few achievements of this pioneering:

THE SPECTACULARS. These 90-minute, full color extravaganzas have become national talkpieces. Example—2 LIFE covers. They have succeeded in reaching on the average an audience of more than 11,000,000 homes. Nine Spectaculars have won Top Ten ratings.

THE GEORGE GOBEL SHOW. The search for fresh new talent brought George Gobel to NBC Television. Before the season was half over, this young man with the new style had become one of America's top comedians; his turns-of-phrase a part of the language.

MEDIC. These authentic dramas of the world of medicine have won for the program award after award, as well as the flattery of industry-wide imitation and national recognition.

TONIGHT. The last hours of the day were revitalized by Steve Allen. For sponsors, the program offers an opportunity to talk to vast, adult, Class A audiences at Class C rates, for the last impression that lasts.

INDICATIVE

This season the average NBC nighttime program has delivered over 500,000 more homes than the next network.

NBC Television is now pressing ahead with plans for next season. Last year's originality will be continued and extended, and there are dozens of new ideas, all designed to move television forward in pace, originality, liveliness – excitement!

We don't say "wait till next year," because you don't have to wait – sponsors can become part of this new, living television today. Meanwhile, tomorrow's planning is in full swing. For the wise advertiser, NBC's present is imperative – and indicative of the future.

Kegler TV Show Isn't Down Bowling Congress Alley; 75 Face Expulsion

Minneapolis, March 8.

Because of their affiliation with a weekly Sunday WCCO-TV kegler show, "Bowlerama," 75 Minnesota bowling alley proprietors are on the American Bowling Congress carpet and face possible expulsion.

They're charged with violation of ABC rule pertaining to restrictions on use of league bowling scores, the main object being to protect against use in any supplementary contest where gain would be involved.

Program in question includes bowling matches before the tv camera for valuable prizes. Participants in these contests are those who have racked up the highest scores during the week in the various 75 alleys.

Contesting the ABC order to desist further participation in the show, the bowling alley proprietors claim they have legal opinion backing their contention no violation of Rule 35 is now occurring.

Norm Vinitsky, member of Gruber Associates, the advertising agency that stages "Bowlerama" here and in other cities, contends that the rule in question is "indefinite, vague and difficult of precise interpretation."

Also, it has been pointed out to ABC that "the proprietors are not violating the rule as they receive no material gain except through increase in the number of games bowled."

It develops that the difference of opinions between proprietors and ABC has existed for weeks and that the proprietors, because of the dispute, recently changed the original "Bowlerama" rule which gave a bowler a small trophy as high man among the 50 qualifiers for the tv show at an establishment.

They also offered to turn back two-thirds of the gross collected in 50c entry fees to a recognized charity, but this was refused by ABC.

ABC, a strict guardian of bowlers' rights, previously had suggested that Minnesota proprietors submit to an amendment to Rule 35 to be voted upon at the Fort Wayne, Ind., April meeting, but no copy of the amendment has been received here, Vinitsky says.

As the proprietors' spokesman, Vinitsky asserts 55 of the 75 interested proprietors recently met here and voted to notify Frank Baker, ABC secretary, of their views that no rule violation is occurring. This was after receipt of a legal opinion to that effect, he explains. It represents the final move to date.

"Bowlerama" has been on the air for four months and has attracted a sizable WCCO-TV audience. It has always been sponsored.

Pitt Theatre Managers Latch Onto Acad Hoopla, Buy Own TV Precede

Pittsburgh, March 8.

Downtown Theatre Managers Assn. will pick up the tab for a quarter-hour warm-up on KDKA-TV March 30 immediately preceding the Academy Awards. Program will feature the city's three movie-drama critics, with Harold V. Cohen, Post-Gazette and VARIETY mugg here and winner of 1954 Screen Directors Guild "Critic of the Year" award, as moderator and Karl Krug, of Sun-Telegraph, and Kap Monahan, of Press, on panel.

Idea originated in sales department of KDKA-TV, and they only had to make one pitch for a sale. DTMA was first prospective sponsor approached and they grabbed it. A couple of years ago, Cohen, Krug and Monahan were on WDTV, predecessor of KDKA-TV, in a quizzer called Sho-Biz-Quiz. It was first sponsored by Plymouth-DeSoto Dealers and later Camel cigarets.

WPIX's 22% Biz Hike

WPIX, the N. Y. Daily News video station, has had a solid increase in business for the first two months of the year.

The Jan.-Feb. overall increase has been 22% over '54, with the latter month alone up 27%—the best February in station history.

Rating: Radio 2; TV, 0

They took two radios but ignored the tv set.

Red Sox Trim TV As Gate Suffers

Boston, March 8.

Discouraged by the drastic drop in home game attendance last season, Red Sox officials have decided to curtail the number of games to be televised this season to include only the Saturday game and the first game of a Sunday doubeheader. However, they will allow the televising of 12 night games, nine from Fenway Park and three away contests. While all local games have been televised for several seasons, last year was the first that the away games were piped in and it was also the first year in many that local attendance at the local ballyard dipped below 1,000,000, the baseball "break even" number.

However, radio coverage will, as usual, be complete with sportscasters Curt Gowdy and Bob Murphy airing the games via WHDH. The same pair will alternate in handling the tv descriptions which are beamed over WNAC-TV and WBZ-TV on an alternate basis. Games are bankrolled by the Narragansett Brewing Co., Liggett & Myers and the Atlantic Refining Co.

Rin Tin Tin Looms As Year's Sleeper; Nears Top 10 Status for ABC

Sleeper of the year candidate on tele is Rin Tin Tin, which by all present indications looks to give ABC-TV a second Top 10 Nielsen spot for the first time in the web's history. The Screen Gems' vidpixer bounced to a whopping 43.9 in the latest Nielsen wrapup, not enough to place in the Top 10 (10th place rating was a 45.0), but enough of an indication of its climbing powers to indicate that it may soon be up there with the rest. With "Disneyland" pulling a 50.3 in the same rating week, ABC is beginning to flex its muscles.

Amazing climb of the show, which premiered in the fall, has some Ripley aspects. It's on Fridays at 7:30, a time slot when sets-in-use ordinarily don't reach those Top 10 proportions. It's bucking such established NBC shows as Eddie Fisher and the "Camel News Caravan" and CBS personalities on the form of Doug Edwards and his news segment and Perry Como. To top it off, it was a late starter, having bowed on the web in November after General Mills yanked "Willy", from the time and Nabisco stepped in with "Rinny." It's currently ABC's second highest-rated show, first being "Disneyland," of course.

CHI FACES LOSS OF 'WELCOME TRAVELERS'

Chicago, March 8.

Windy City is faced with the loss of another network tv entry with Procter & Gamble mulling a shift of its "Welcome Travelers" CBS-TV daytime strip to either New York or the Coast. P&G spokesman would say only that "changes are contemplated" and refused to confirm reports that if the show is moved the format might be revamped with Tommy Bartlett and Bob Cunningham being replaced as interviewers. It's understood Mary Healy and Peter Lind Hayes are being considered as new co-hosts.

"Travelers" bowed on NBC radio back in 1949 with the tele version added in 1952. P&G switched the tv show to CBS-TV last July and dropped the NBC radio side last September. Bartlett has emceed the show since its inception.

RUTH LYONS STILL THE BIG CINCY NOISE

Cincinnati, March 8.

Looks like Ruth Lyons will continue as top-salaried ace draw of Crosley tv stations through 1957, increasing her present stretch of nine years.

Her weekday 50-50 Club participating hour show is sold solid to the end of '57, retaining limited capacity audience attendance at the originating point from inception. Program is on at high noon with a luncheon spread at $1.50 per head, with studio walls the limit for sitters. It's strictly for modern homemakers. Sponsors also are in line. More than 30 are cared for each week and two dozen are on the waiting list.

Groups of visiting housewives come from a 300-mile radius in several states, always by reservation.

Prockter Bullish On Theatricals; 'Big Story,' Too

Bernard J. Prockter, who's already put a theatrical version of his "Treasury Men in Action" in the works, is now planning a second theatrical venture based on one of his television properties, "The Big Story." He's started work on a script for "Big Story," which he hopes to have before the cameras a year from now. Meanwhile, though, his "T-Men" script has been completed and he planed to the Coast last week to discuss financing-releasing arrangements with a number of major studios who have expressed interest in the project.

Second phase of his Coast trip will be to get at least three pilots on six new properties he's planning this year underway. Now that he's relieved himself of operating a studio (American National, of which he was president before selling his share to Ziv, who bought out the other interests at the same time), Prockter's readying an expansion of his television activities as well as launching the theatrical projects. He'll work out final details for shooting the three pilots at 20th-Fox's Western lot, where Conne-Stephens, who do his physical production, are now located.

Theatrical version of "T-Men," script of which has been nine months in the writing, will be filmed both on the Coast and in Europe, where much of the action takes place. Reason for the length of preparation time for both the "T-Men" and "Big Story" scripts, Prockter said, is that "he wants to be sure" before moving in on theatrical production. If the first two go right, he said, he's contemplating a third property for theatrical production.

NBC PICKS CLIFFORD AS PREXY OF KAGRAN

J. M. Clifford, administrative v.p. of NBC, has been named prexy of the Kagran Corp., acquired by the web recently from Lehman Bros., the banking institution of which Kagran was a subsidiary. Clifford gets the berth originally offered to Ted Cott, who nixed it as being "alien to broadcasting" with the radio operations veepee exiting his post at the network.

Clifford will do double duty, retaining his administrative status. A few other officers are still to be named, but meanwhile among the principals are Edward L. Justin, Mitchell Benson (latter to exploit NBC properties other than those Kagran-owned) and Sid Rubin, manager of licensing.

TV 'Macbeth' Into Schools

Maurice Evans' two-hour television of "Macbeth," done in late November on "Hallmark Hall of Fame," is getting the free-prints-for-schools treatment, a la his earlier "King Richard II." NBC-TV is supplying the kinescope from which Hallmark Cards will finance prints and distribution of 16m kinnies of the show.

Association Films is handling the distribution, with the NBC Film Division coordinating the entire setup.

Tucson: Where Hope Springs Eternal

Tucson, March 8.

Tucson was jumpin' the past week. Bob Hope breezed into town from the Coast for some golf and to camp up with his Cleveland Indians in spring training here—arriving day and date with the Arizona Broadcasters' Assn. for its annual powwow. It was a "Hope Springs Eternal" two-way mating for both the Indians and radio, with the latter's conclave sparked by the visitation of the BMI "package entourage" of AM clinic drumbeaters, whose session was integrated with the State Assn. meet.

Of the two "trade shows" (baseball and radio), with Hope bestowing his blessings on both, the latter impresarioed by Jim Cox, BMI's West Coast field rep, was a stunning success. It demonstrated anew that, of all the inter-industry attempts and gropings to find a suitable "format" in which to present the case of radio to the radio broadcasters these BMI program clinics have no rival (and that goes for the NARTB, too). They're strictly on a meat-and-potatoes level, a realistic sounding board as the AM broadcasters come to grips with the problems besetting them in the face of the tough competition from tv. (A series of parallel clinics are running concurrently for tv broadcasters). There's no question that it paid off in Tucson, just as it paid off two days earlier in Los Angeles and two days prior to that in Frisco.

The BMI "package entourage" was comprised strictly of "I believe" spokesmen, among them, in addition to Cox, such representative broadcasters as Margaret Hood, public relations chieftain and commentator for CKY in Winnipeg; Jack Knell, director of news and special events for WBT in Charlotte; Franklin Sisson, program director of WOOD, Grand Rapids, with local broadcasters added to the agenda on the three-city swing, and George Rosen, radio-tv editor of VARIETY, as a "bonus" speaker. Charles H. Garland, general manager of KOOL, Phoenix, who as prexy of the Arizona Broadcasters Assn. helmed the ABA meet, and Merle H. Tucker, general manager of KGAR, Gallup, N.M., were also on the Tucson agenda.

These BMI clinics are the real thing because, particularly in the bull sessions, everyone lets his hair down. It gets down to fundamentals in a sincere bid to upgrade program operations. Radio's big stuff out here—and they want it treated with respect.

BMI's Carl Haverlin, Glenn Dolberg & Co. rate a bow for perpetuating these clinics year after year.

'Don't Sell FM Short': Lee

FCC Commissioner Sees Service Making 'Very Significant Progress'

Washington, March 8.

New hope for FM was held out by FCC Comr. Robert E. Lee in an address here Saturday (5) at the Capital's second annual Hi Fidelity Fair, sponsored by radio station WGMS.

With nearly 550 commercial stations on the air and a growing interest in good music and hi-fi reception, Comr. Lee found the FM service "vigorous" and making "very significant progress." It is "truly a superior service," he added, "and if more people heard it I believe there would be a real public demand."

Pointing to increasing congestion in the AM band, Lee thought it "conceivable" that "some day FM will be the only way to get satisfactory transmission." This is already true in Western Germany, he pointed out, as a result of preemption of the AM service after the war by Germany's neighbors. "Thus today," he said, "Western Germany is substantially converted to FM and all reports indicate that it is working very well."

Lee said that Great Britain is also working on plans to convert most of its domestic system to FM because of the "growing AM jumble" in Europe. "These developments," he asserted, "are bound to have an influence in all countries, including our own."

With radio network revenues declining, Lee suggested that established AM'ers "might want to take another look at the economics of FM" as a means of reducing operating expenses. With only a single tower required on a small area, or sharing space with a tv operation, an FM station, he said, might look more attractive than a multiple tower AM array taking up acres of expensive real estate.

While this is not an "immediate" problem or one likely to be faced in the near future, Comr. Lee offered it as "a further practical reason for approaching with extreme caution" any proposals for diverting any part of the FM band from broadcasting use.

"The radio industry and the people of the U. S.," he said, "have a vital stake in the future of FM, and it is the Commission's not always easy job to protect both. This, I assure you, the Commission will attempt to do to the best of its ability."

FM Auto Sets

Washington, March 8.

Automobile radios operating on FM are now on the market, FCC Comr. Robert E. Lee revealed in a speech here before the Washington Hi Fidelity Fair. With an FM car set, he said, reception is not interrupted while driving through a tunnel or affected by high power electric lines.

Lee had reference to an FM tuner for car radios which is being produced by Hastings Products, Inc., Boston. The Hastings tuner, which is mounted under the dashboard, operates with a windshield antenna made of transparent plastic. Company also offers a complete FM car radio.

AM-TV Shuffles For Miles Labs

Chicago, March 8.

In sort of a spring house cleaning, Miles Labs is doing some switching on its radio-tv properties. As of April 6, drug firm will have a three-way daytime stretch Wednesdays on NBC-TV with quarter-hour slices of "Ding Dong School," "Wonderful World of Mr. Sweeney" and the Tennessee Ernie Ford show. Being dropped are the Thursday rides on the "Modern Romances" and "Concerning Miss Marlowe" NBC-TV soapers.

On the radio side, Miles axes on March 25 Mutual's repeat airing of "Break the Bank," but has renewed the original of the cross-boarder on NBC. Also inked in for another season are NBC's "News of the World," and "Just Plain Bill." Morgan Beatty's televersion of "News" on DuMont is being dropped April 1.

Miles billings are handled by the Geoffrey Wade agency.

Mahalia's Chi Tandem

Chicago, March 8.

Gospel singer Mahalia Jackson has been logged in for two weekly tele stints on WBBM-TV. She debuts a Thursday night half-hour next week for National Credit Clothing and the following week starts a Sunday night quarter-hour at 10:15.

Working with Miss Jackson will be pianist Mildred Falls and organist Ralph Jones.

Looks Like Nothing'll Happen For Long Time on Multiple Ownership

Washington, March 8.

The first step to an appeal to the Supreme Court to uphold FCC's authority to set limits on multiple ownership of radio and tv stations was taken by the Department of Justice Friday (11) in a request to the Court of Appeals of the D. C. Circuit to stay effectiveness of its decision on the Storer Broadcasting Co. case. The stay was requested to give the Department time to apply for review of the decision. It will in all probability be granted.

The stay will serve to hold the line on FCC ownership ceilings and will prevent Storer or any other broadcaster from seeking a sixth VHF station and demanding a hearing on the application—at least until the Supreme Court settles the issue. The Department has 90 days to petition the high tribunal for review but regardless of how soon it acts there is little prospect that the case will be heard before next fall.

The move to appeal appears to eliminate the possibility that the Commission will soon ask Congress to rescue it from the Court of Appeals ruling. It's understood agency lawyers advised the commissioners at their regular meeting last week that prospects are good for reversal by the Supreme Court of the lower court decision. They were able to cite as precedence the high tribunal's decision upholding the FCC chain broadcasting regulations which precluded one company from operating more than one radio network.

Whether Congress will take the initiative toward legislation to curb station ownership is still to be determined but it is likely that the Court of Appeals ruling will receive attention when the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee holds hearings on its network-UHF inquiry around April 1.

It is unlikely that the Supreme Court will be sitting when the Justice Dept. files its petition for review. That would mean that the petition would not be acted on until the October term of the Courts. If the Court should then deny review, that would settle the issue and the Commission's only recourse would be legislation. If review is granted, arguments would probably be held late this year or early next.

The motion for a stay order was filed by Charles H. Weston, special assistant to the Attorney General. Joining in the request were FCC general counsel Warren Baker and assistant general counsel J. Smith Henley.

Such stays are issued for 30 days but can be extended if necessary.

Sam Lawrence Says He Invented 'Marriage,' Sues for $1,600,000

Los Angeles, March 8.

Samuel Lawrence, who claims he originated the idea of "Radio Marriage," filed two suits in Federal Court asking total damages amounting to $1,600,000. Named as defendants in the first suit are ABC, KABC-TV, Donn B. Tatum, Jack Rourke, Bertram Wheeler, Doe Bread Co., Budget Finance Corp., Muntz TV, Kaiser Korner Automobile Co. and Lucky Lager Brewing Co.

Plaintiff says he discussed the idea with Rourke and Wheeler in 1949 when they were both with ABC. Four years later, he contends, ABC broke out with an "I Want to Get Married" program based on his own idea.

Second suit, charging infringement of copyright, involved the "Bride and Groom" program on NBC. In addition to NBC, the defendants named in this case are CBS, ABC, KNXT-TV, KMTR Radio Corp., KLAC-TV, KNBH-TV, John Nelson, Masterson, Reddy and Nelson and numerous John Does.

Lawrence declares the tv broadcasting was "illegal and fraudulent." He asks damages of $1,100,000 in the first suit and $500,000 in the second.

WCBS-TV's Kidpix

"Buffalo Bill Jr.," new oater pix series, will be launched March 26 on WCBS-TV, N. Y., to give the CBS flagship a 90-minute strip of syndicated films Saturday afternoon. The Flying A Productions package starring Dick Jones will be backed by Milky Way Candy, via Leo Burnett, in the 5 o'clock slot, between "Amos 'n' Andy" (currently 5 p. m.) and "Annie Oakley." There's half-hour gap between the high-rated "Oakley" and "Man Behind the Badge."

Jones' other Flying A vidpixer is "Range Rider," costarring Jack Mahoney.

UNESCO Round-The-Globe Telepic Series on Agenda For April Meet in Paris

An international vidfilm series may yet become a reality. The plan laid out by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization last fall is slated to go before a multination meeting in April. The proposition, devised by UNESCO tele adviser Henry Cassirer, will bring together every nation possessing video to jointly produce of a half-hour monthly film skein.

The powwow has been set for Paris during the third week in April, and approximately 10 countries are expected to attend. The show is tentatively titled "Screen Magazine," and UNESCO officials plan to take five-minute allied segments from five of the member countries once a month, and tie them into a 27½-minute film for international exposure.

The U. S. is expected to be the major block to the all-over-the-world telepic, since UNESCO cannot work with just one video source; there are four networks which must be considered. However, when Cassirer first disclosed his plan, he said that protocol will be followed, and all four webs approached to participate. It was to be made clear to the telenets, though, that only one of them could air the series, unless they wished to rotate.

Metzler Exits 20th For NBC Film Div. on Coast

Robert F. Metzler has left 20th-Fox on the Coast as head of its location department to become Coast production supervisor for the NBC Film Division. He'll report to Film Division production manager Stanton Osgood, who previously shuttled between New York and the Coast when an NBC package was in production there. Metzler's first assignment is supervision over Jack Chertok's "Steve Donovan, Western Marshal," currently shooting at the General Service Studios and on location.

Metzler had been with 20th since 1951, when he joined the location department. He was made its chief in 1953.

'Omni's' Welch Segment

Joseph N. Welch, the Boston attorney who "laid 'em in the aisles" in the Army-McCarthy tv hearings, has been interviewed on film by Alistair Cooke, conferencier of CBS-TV's "Omnibus." It will show up as a segment on the show next Sunday (13) as one of a series of "Childhood" memories of bigwigs in an attempt at self-analysis. Other such sizeups are in the making.

Another major phase of next week's stanza will be an experimental play, "The Different Drummer," by Gene McKinney, originally given at Baylor U. in Waco, Tex. Included in the lineup will be Jack Dempsey, playing himself, and Martha Scott.

Mutual Goes On A Radio Space Spree

Aware that it probably has more at stake in "radio only" than any other network, Mutual has begun an intensive drive for editorial space among major market daily newspapers in an effort to take at least part of the promotion play away from video. So far the audio web seems to have faired allright: Out of an initial correspondence to about 200 dailies, in a few weeks it has gotten returns from about 80, and only six of them rejected editorial matter on ratio personalities. Mutual has got promises of editorial cooperation from papers in 19 of the 20 top markets in the country, with the 20th Kansas City, in abeyance since the web is trying to firm an affiliate deal there.

Lure offered by Mutual to the "majors" are bylined articles by any of its several network personalities, including Johnny Olson, Ted Steele, Eddie Fisher, Bill Cullen, Arlene Francis, etc.—possessing "enough name appeal" to occasionally elicit a byline followed by a "heard on Mutual" plug, it's hoped by web press chief Frank Zuzulo. Zuzulo's scribbler department has spent eight years catering to only "boilerplate" papers (that service continues) before offering a regular press service to bigtown sheets.

TAP MARC DANIELS TO MEG 'GOLDBERGS'

Looks like Marc Daniels will direct the telefilm version of "The Goldbergs," which is scheduled to get underway next Monday (14) at Lou Klotz's Biltmore Studios in downtown New York. Daniels and Guild Films, which is financing, producing and distributing the series, off the air since fall, are on the verge of wrapping up a deal. Guild, meanwhile, has brought in William Berke, its Coast production chief, to act as production supervisor on the show, while Gertrude Berg will probably get the producer's niche.

Guild plans to have the series ready for a Sept. 1 airdate. Firm will attempt to sell the show nationally, for exposure over the Vitapix stations, but if it fails to cook up a deal, will put the series into syndication.

UHF's 5-Mile Rule

Washington, March 8.

Indications of concrete action by the FCC to do something for ultra high television—to the limits of what can be done at this time—are coming out of the agency. The first positive step to hold the UHF fort against further attack by VHF stations was taken last week with a move to keep transmitters within five miles of the city to be served by an assigned channel. It was also reported that the Commission is planning to "deintermix" channels in some communities to prevent further aggravation of UHF problems, as recommended in the recent Senate Interstate Commerce Committee staff report by Harry Plotkin.

While these moves are regarded by UHF interests as somewhat anticlimactic (like calling the fire engine after the barn is in ruins, as one source put it), they are considered encouraging in that they show a change of climate at the FCC in approaching tv problems. One reason suggested is that the agency is no longer under the pressure (by members of Congress as well as broadcasters) of getting stations (VHF stations) on the air.

It's also likely that Senatorial rumblings (as manifested, particularly, at hearings on FCC Chairman George C. McConnaughey) and court actions against Commission decisions have combined to affect the agency's thinking as to its responsibility for promoting a competitive tv system, with as many stations as possible.

In proposing the five-mile rule, the Commission has shown that it is departing from an area concept of a tv station to a community concept. This, said one source, is the biggest thing the agency has done toward adherence to its channel allocation plan and toward protecting UHF.

But at this stage in the UHF situation, with VHF stations firmly established in most areas and virtually guaranteed by heights and powers and network affiliation advantages, it appears that the Commission can do little more than salvage what's left of UHF and make possible an additional 30 or 40 stations. With 111 ultra highs on the air, or about one-third of the outstanding UHF permits, it's doubted here that there will be more than 200 UHF stations in operation in the next few years, unless some major development, such as toll tv, drastically improves the prospects for the service.

Major Webs, NABET Can't Get Together on Resolving Film Issue

Entire question of jurisdiction of film at the major networks is once again up in the air and with it the question of a settlement of labor troubles on the engineers and technicians front. Membership of the National Assn. of Broadcast Engineers & Technicians, representing personnel at NBC and ABC, turned down the terms of the contracts worked out with the networks a few weeks ago by what was termed a "substantial majority." Vote on the mail ballot was compiled last week.

Though George Meaher, exec secretary of the union, told NBC and ABC not to worry about a strike "pending a resolution of the matter," the webs nonetheless have cause for concern. They had both negotiated a surrender by NABET over jurisdiction of filming by the networks—a contract provision which would have enabled the webs to do their own filming with their own personnel and equipment instead of contracting network-owned film properties out for production. NBC and ABC had argued that the recent CBS-IBEW contract allowed CBS to do just that, and as a competitive necessity, NABET would have to do the same.

It was this provision of the contract, a longtime sorespot, that apparently resulted in the membership veto of the three-year pacts. In the case of NBC, this appears to be the only reason, since a pay increase was granted and NABET personnel are already covered by the RCA pension plan. In the case of ABC, no doubt the key reason was the failure to include a pension plan for ABC personnel. Network successfully made the argument that if it instituted a plan for its technicians, it would not only have to extend the benefits for all network personnel but would have to set up a pension fund for all personnel within the parent company, American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres. This, it argued, was prohibitive in term of cost.

"Resolution of the matter" apparently means that the NABET leadership will poll the rank-and-file on their contract demands and then return to the webs for renegotiation of the pacts. While a strike was very much feared in the first negotiations, Meaher has assured them that at least for the time being there's no thought of a walkout. Official statement declared that "pending a resolution of the matter, nothing will occur to disrupt the regular program services at the networks."

Tillstrom's Got a New Shingle: 'Available For Holidays'—& It Pays Off

Chicago, March 8.

Burr Tillstrom, mentor of the "Kukla, Fran & Ollie" menage, has apparently been given the ABC-TV nod as its holiday specialist. Web is currently pitching an Easter half-hour package being assembled by Tillstrom which will star his Fletcher Rabbit KFO cast member. Show will be aired either the previous Saturday night or Easter Sunday.

Puppeteer did the ABC Xmas honors with his version of James Thurber's "Many Moons" and the network brass is thinking in terms of making similar one-shots a standard holiday fixture.

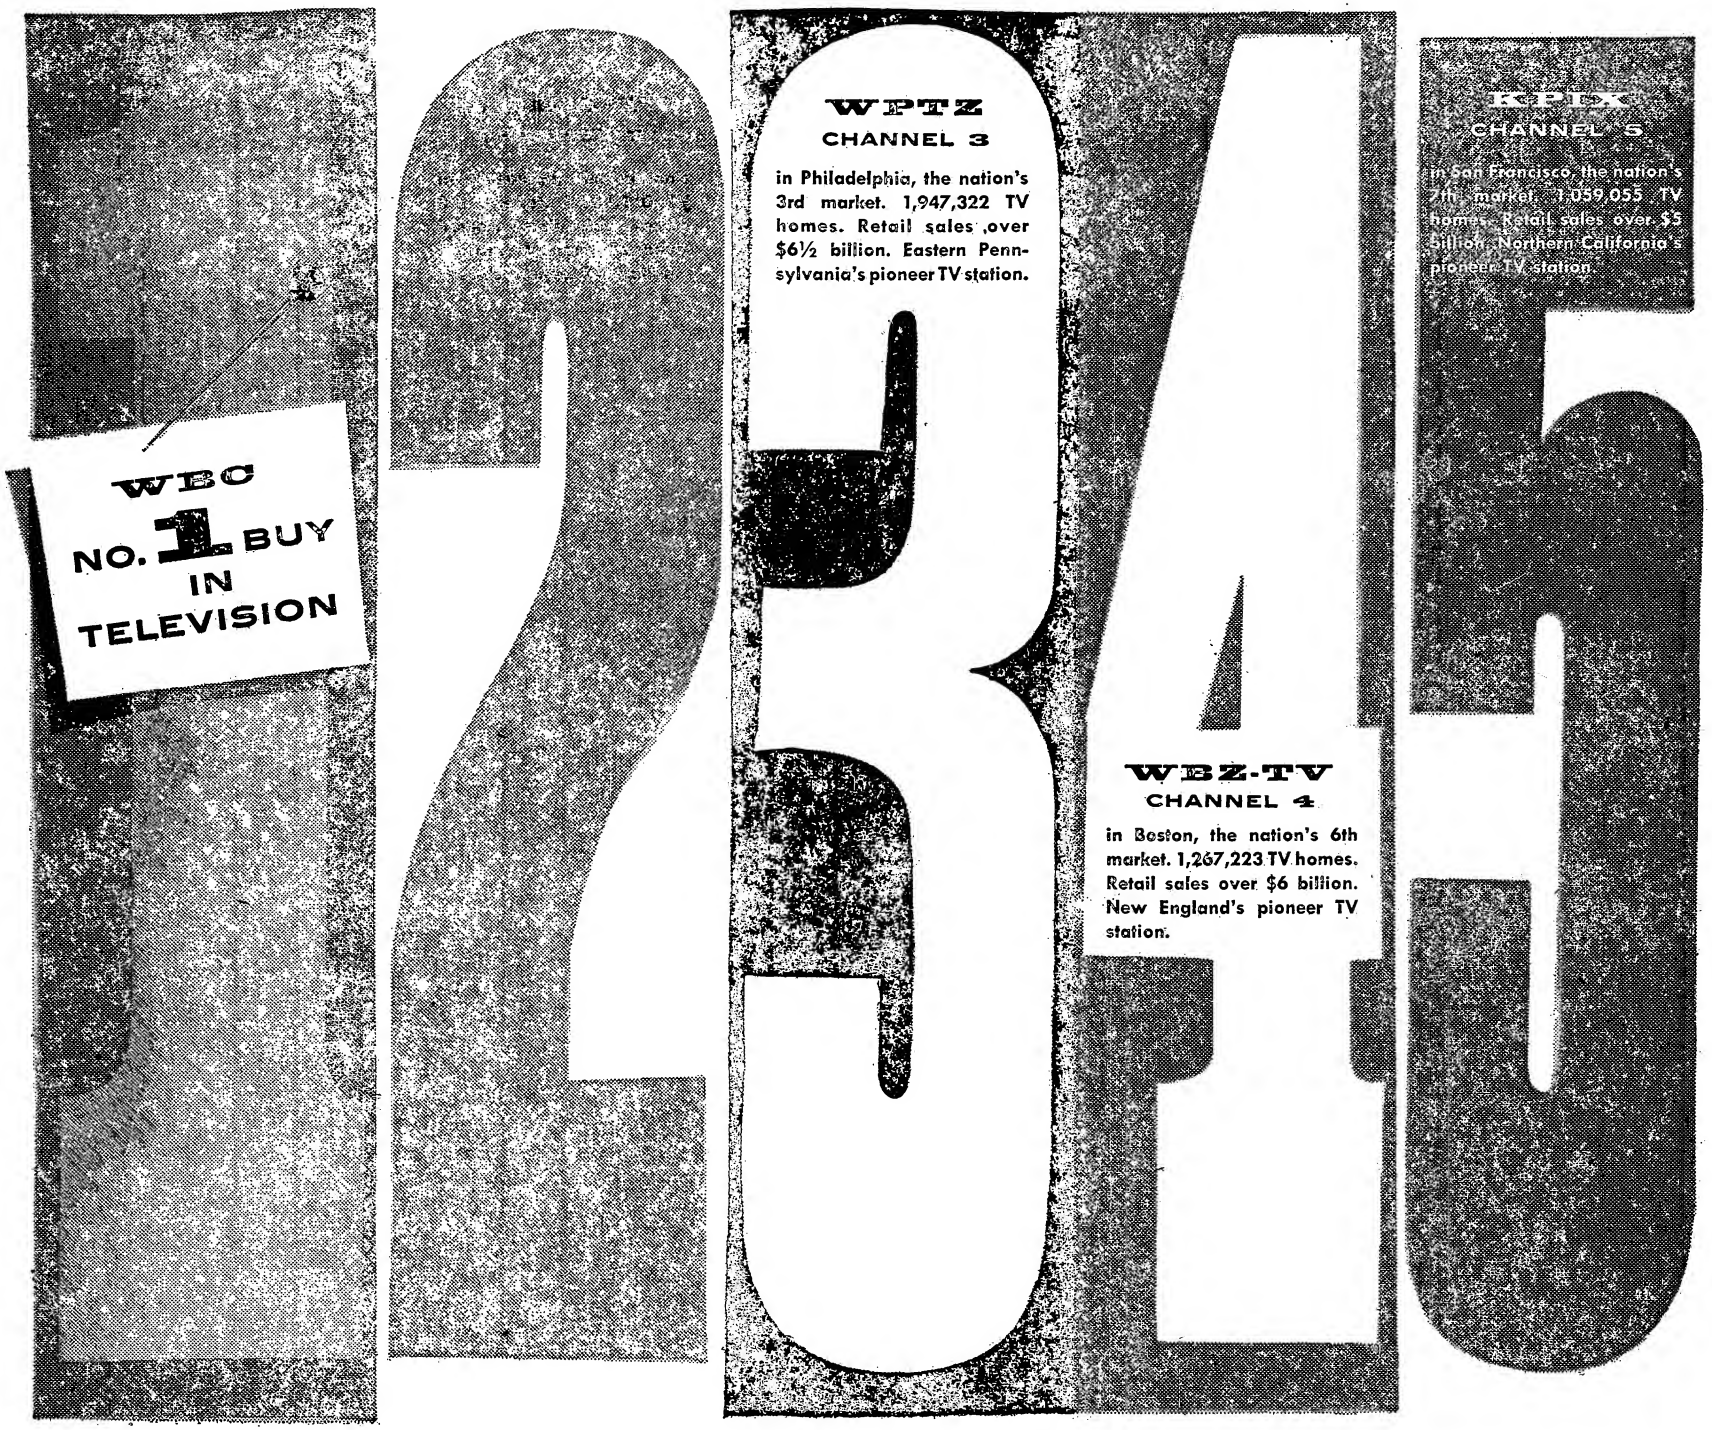
Tillstrom, who's been operating under a "handshake" deal with ABC veeps John Mitchell and Sterling (Red) Quinlan since last fall when he moved over at the expiration of his NBC-TV pact, has signed a memo of agreement for exclusive ABC identity through September, 1957.

WABC UPS WEISENBERG

Joseph Weisenberg has been upped to acting sales manager at WABC, the ABC Radio New York flagship. He succeeds Mike Renault, who several months ago was named acting general manager of the outlet when v.p. Ted Oberfelder moved over to WABC-TV.

Weisenberg joined the station in 1952 as a salesman.

Part 2: TV's 'Get Out of Town'



NBC-TV's "go away, you bother me—get out of town and bother the customers" will go into high gear again with an invasion of Detroit next month by "Today"—giving the Motor City the first full-week treatment as an origination point. The two-hour cross-the-board wake 'em up fixture gets a dating of April 18-33, smack in the middle of the "guaranteed annual wage" negotiations between the UAW union and the auto industry. A sort of dual spectacular.

It's a colossal logistics chore; it means moving the "home base" of the show each day, creating what amounts to an RCA Exhibit Hall in a different location — "changing lots" as they say in the circus. And it'll be up to affiliate WWJ-TV to turn backbreaker by setting up a studio each night and dismantling it the following day—also reminiscent of the world of sawdust and spangles as the foremost of the one-nighter extravaganzas.

In addition to the five anchorages, the show will do a daily remote. The week will be divvied into one "neutral" location; on opening day, for instance, from the top of the new Vets Memorial Center and then single-o from hq of the Big 4 motor companies (Chrysler, from showroom and plant; Studebaker-Packard, from showroom; General Motors, from exhibit room in GM Bldg.; Ford Rotunda, in Dearborn). Among the remotes rounded up are Greenfield Village; the river, for a look at the budding St. Lawrence Seaway and tomorrow's world trade; GM's $25,000,000 technical center; suburban Northland, model shopping vortex; Ford's River Rouge plant, where they'll build a car for "Today" during each three hours of airing.

The hoopla phase will be sprung via closed-circuit press conference, with Dave Garroway, Frank Blair, Jack Lescoulie and the chimps doing the CC to WWJ where the town's radio-tv fourth estaters will gather along with auto, entertainment and financial editors plus p.r. reps of the auto outfits in advance of the April date for a question-answer session.

NBC sales operatives will be pitching at the car companies as well as the by-products such as manufacturers and suppliers who don't reach the consumers. Detroit figures to be one of six cities to be visited this year as Richard Krolik joins the "Today" staff as special projects supervisor. He and producer Bob Bendick move into the motor town this week, with director Jac Hein also on the spot to survey sites and facilities. Writers, fashion editors and others will follow at intervals. WWJ-TV's Ed Wheeler, Don De Groot and Jim Schiavone gave realization to the hegira out of New York by making available the station's mobile unit as well as studio setup.

Your National Spot Campaign Is Not Complete Without The Westinghouse Stations

WBC's magic numbers work sales magic for advertisers. Maximum power, low channel numbers mean better coverage. Big and growing numbers of TV homes mean huge markets. VARIETY - ARB City-By-City Syndicated and National Spot Film Chart

VARIETY'S weekly chart of city-by-city ratings of syndicated and national spot film covers 40 to 60 cities reported by American Research Bureau on a monthly basis. Cities will be rotated each week, with the 10 top-rated film shows listed in each case, and their competition shown opposite. All ratings are furnished by ARB, based on the latest reports.

This VARIETY chart represents a gathering of all pertinent information about film in each market, which can be used by distributors, agencies, stations and clients as an aid in determining the effectiveness of a filmed show in the specific market. Attention should be paid to time — day and time factors, since sets-in-use and audience composition vary according to time slot, i.e., a Saturday afternoon children's show, with a low rating, may have a large share and an audience composed largely of children, with corresponding results for the sponsor aiming at the children's market. Abbreviations and symbols are as follows: (Adv.), adventure; (Ch), children's; (Co), comedy; (Dr), drama; (Doc), documentary; (Mus), musical; (Myst), mystery; (Q), quiz; (Sp), sports; (W), western; (Wom), women's. Numbered symbols next to station call letters represent the station's channel; all channels above 13 are UHF. Those ad agencies listed as distributors rep the national spot sponsor for whom the film is aired.

Cole, Savage Named To Key Guild Posts

Guild Films filled two key posts last week, signing on John J. Cole as western division sales chief and upping station relations chief Dave Savage to the post of assistant to prexy Reub Kaufman. Cole moves over to Guild from Motion Pictures for Television, with whom he headed the Coast office in the feature film division. With Guild, he'll operate in both features and syndication, working out of Los Angeles.

Savage, who moved over to Guild from NBC last fall when Guild set its Vitapix arrangement, will continue as head of station relations with the Vitapix outlets. As assistant to Kaufman, he'll coordinate the various departments at Guild.

On U.S. Vs. British 'Freedom of Air'

Eric Sevareid on his CBS broadcast last week:

"Radio and television have become integral parts of the political life of both the American and the British people. But London dispatches reveal again the sharp contrast in operations of the electronics media and in the philosophies behind them.

"Broadcasting in Britain is a quasi-governmental monopoly. Generally it is handled with sufficient skill and freedom so that people are hardly aware of the ultimate hand of government. This week the British people are keenly aware of it; they have suddenly discovered that political leaders have so arranged things that they may not hear, on tv or radio, panel discussions of vital public matters within two weeks preceding debate on the specific matter by the British Parliament. This was revealed by an angry moderator, forbidden to discuss the hydrogen bomb. Churchill endorses this general prohibition. He believes public debate would impair the prestige and power of the Parliament he loves.

"Exactly why is a little hard to see. These matters are debated, searchingly and constantly in the British press, any time the press chooses; and the actual parliamentary debates—never broadcast—are read in detail by about as small a proportion of the public as read the Congressional Record here in America. One would think that broadcast debate, by authorities from private as well as political life, would not only enrich the public's understanding but infinitely enrich and sharpen the debate when it reaches the Parliament. That is constantly occurring here in Washington.

"Given the government's control, the BBC cannot fight its own battles publicly. So the London press is challenging the government either to impose this gag by law, or to remove it. The real story of the gag is a revelation of the dangerous distortions to which government monopoly can lead, for it has been imposed in actuality, by private agreement between the political party leaders, both those in and those out of government. And the critics argue that they are not so much concerned with the prestige of Parliament as they are with control of their particular party. In the party's interest, they are trying to control the manner in which public issues are presented, and by which party personalities. One of the results of this political interference with what the people shall hear is that British broadcasting presents only those political debaters selected for it by the two party leaderships.

"It is a fashion for some intellectuals who deplore the wide and sometimes wild intellectual variety of American broadcasting to express preference for the British system, where all is so neat, highminded and orderly. If they are not disturbed by this arrogation of control over the British mind, then surely they have forgotten the basic relationship between freedom and order. Each depends upon the other, but order so imposed as this can lead only to disorder.

"This is not to say that America has no disorder in its broadcast discussions of public issues; it does indeed, but it comes, happily, not because of political control but because of the very freedom, the very variety to be found in our broadcast spectrum in any given week. The number of discussion programs has grown at a rate much greater than has the supply of political figures worth listening to; so we tend to hear the same personalities over and over again on the best level, and second-rate personalities on various other levels.

"This is a serious problem, hard to solve; but its solution does not depend upon secret agreements between those who hold the political power. And for any democracy, the problem imposed by informational wealth is a safer problem than that of poverty imposed."

LaRiche has also picked up two 15-minute Sunday newscasts on WJW with Bob Neal. Same station has a 15-minute Ford newscast cross-the-board. Jack Kelly, general manager, said program and spot automotive business was up approximately 25% in January against a year ago.

LaRiche also picked up the tab for a half-hour Sunday morning on WGAR's Bob Smiley's "Journey into Melody." That station also recently pacted a West Side Dodge cross-the-boarder of the 5 p.m. news; and inked Jaguar Motors of Cleveland to time purchases on Henry Pildner's FM-high-fidelity stanza.

At WSRS, January automotive sales were reported up by at least 40% compared to a year ago. Although spot sales were heavy, program commitments include two daily 15-minute Plymouth newscasts and a five-minute cross-the-board sports stint.

WDOK has auto sponsorship of a five-minute morning newscast and two evening combo news and music stanzas, plus a heavy spot sales program with Hudson Motors taking a 60-spot-a-week February hypo.

Perhaps one of the longest and most successful automotive stories comes from WTAM-WNBK, where Central Cadillac has been sponsoring the 11 p.m. simulcast Monday-through-Friday. Figures are not available, but company spokesmen admit that through their tracer system of "what brings you in," the combo radio-tv score takes top honors, particularly in selling used cars.

WTAM also has a 5:30 p.m. news crossboarder by Central Chevrolet. Reflecting Central Chevrolet's results through the use of broadcasting, Fuller & Smith & Ross agency said within three days after a new car drive was launched, Central sold 55 new cars. Cost, including two newspaper ads, totalled $1,500 for a $137,000 gross.

At WHK, a major 1955 time sale went to the local Dodge Dealers group with a five-weekly hour music-chitchat package.

'UN Today' Axed, Set New Format

One of the old standby daily shows produced by the United Nations Radio Division, "UN Today," has been axed, and is being replaced by a fresh program that will employ the technique of "News Coverage in Depth," it was announced by the chief of the UN Radio's English Language Section, Michael Hayward.

The new stanza, titled "United Nations Radio Review," will employ features and dramatizations in addition to straight news, Hayward said. On tap among stars who will do the dramatizations are Claudette Colbert, Kirk Douglas, Ava Gardner, Audrey Hepburn, Greer Garson, John Hodiak, Celeste Holm, Deborah Kerr, Jeanette McDonald, Thomas Mitchell, Lloyd Nolan, Basil Rathbone and Will Rogers Jr. In addition to using the stars to "humanize" aspects of UN work, the show will also do interviews with heads of big non-governmental organizations and with delegates.

Irving Berenson will act as executive producer of "Review," with Oscar Rose and Brian Meredith as producers. Preeming next Monday (14), the stanza will air every night, Monday-Friday, over Mutual, 11:15 to 11:30 p. m. In New York, however, Mutual's outlet, WOR, will not take the show which, instead, will go out over WINS, WWRL, and WNYC-FM, 10:45-11 p. m.

Rosenthal, Loewenthan Exit Prockter to Form New Live-Film TV Shop

Everett Rosenthal and Leonard Loewenthan, both longtime v.p.'s of the Bernard Prockter packaging organization, have struck out on their own with a new packaging firm, Pyramid Productions. New outfit, of which Rosenthal will be prexy and Loewenthan exec v.p. and general counsel, will produce live and filmed television shows for network and syndication and will also help in the development and financing of outside properties.

Rosenthal has been with Prockter for the past eight years as an exec producer, most recently on "Big Story." He'll be replaced as producer by Robert Lewis Shayon, who turned out the erstwhile "The Mail Story" for Prockter on ABC-TV this past fall. Replacing Loewenthan as general counsel for Prockter is the law firm of Phillips, Nizer, Benjamin Krim, which will handle financing as well as the legal end. Firm includes the principal stockholders and officers in United Artists, as well as repping UA and Paramount legally.

Peter Pan

(WINTER GARDEN, N. Y.)

No question about it, the management should have opened this musical edition of "Peter Pan" with a Saturday matinee. With the house peppered with moppets, the Mary Martin-starrer would have gotten raves—even more ecstatic than it actually drew after the exciting adults-only premiere.

One other thing, somehow or other the record album of the show should have been distributed to the critics, so the songs could have become familiar and thereby received their due, and not been given what amounted to a brush-off. It's a lovely score, but as with all music, takes several hearings to be properly appreciated.

A kid audience adds immeasurably to "Peter Pan." With those blissfully shiny-eyed, squealing urchins out front, Peter and the three Darling children obviously don't need the almost-invisible wires, but soar out the window and off to Neverland on only Barrie's fairy dust and beautiful thoughts. The whole show is a wow with the youngsters, and Miss Martin makes an especial triumph (and a memorable scene) of the final curtain call.

To a record-educated playgoer, it is almost incredible that the music by Mark Charlap and lyrics by Carolyn Leigh, with additional tunes by Jule Styne and additional lyrics by Betty Comden and Adolph Green, could have originally seemed disappointing. Th whole score is not only melodious and the lyrics engaging, but almost every song seems remarkably appropriate. As originally, the Jerome Robbins staging is brilliant.

A repeat visit under these infectiously uproarious circumstances reinforces the original evaluation that this musicalization, at least with Miss Martin and Cyril Ritchard, is "Peter Pan" at its best. It's great theatre, but as appeared likely at the premiere, is economically too heavy. An ordinary musical would have been a money-maker at such grosses, but this "Peter" hasn't been able to earn back its production nut, and will close next Saturday (26) deep in the red. Hobe.

P. S.—

and Thank You

NBC, from N. Y.

NBC News' series of "Biographies In Sound" continues to hold to its high artistic and entertainment levels. The same imagination, wit and taste, for instance, that went into its recent 55-minute segment on the late Gertrude Lawrence, was evidenced again last Sunday (6), when the web did a fullscale analysis of that strange, baffling creature—the actor.

Authorities from all avenues of show biz were called on for the appraisal. Different facets of the life and career of a thesp were discussed to explain what he is and why he is. Cleverly chosen and edited, this made not only a solid, comprehensive survey but a very entertaining program to boot.

Taped airer wasn't a tribute as such, a cavalcade of names or name-dropping, in recitations and readings, but a factual and critical probing, light and serious, into the makeup of an actor. What emerged was authoritative, sound, interesting info.

Program started off racily, breezily, with Tallulah Bankhead and Hy Gardner in glib, slick versions of what makes an actor. Airer hit a highspot early in a hilarious bit by Rocky Graziano, explaining how Marlon Brando had sent him to see "Streetcar Named Desire." Then came the serious side, in Arthur Miller's estimate of an actor and his responsibilities and Uta Hagen's lucid, interesting discussion of talent. Another highpoint was Jackie Cooper's description of the trials of being a child actor, the difficulties of bridging the gap to manhood (in the theatre world)—very pertinent stuff that had the added zing of a poignant interchange of conversation between him and the late Lionel Barrymore.

Another fine bit was the interview Barbara Ashley had with Gant Gaither for a singing role in a show (and an excellent rendition of "From This Moment On"), followed by a reading from a play. Laurence Olivier's speech to the players, from "Hamlet," and Peter Ustinov's impression of acting (and the caste system) in Hollywood, were both good. Anthropologist Dr. Hortense Powdermaker gave her views on what actors were like, and Alfred Hitchcock discussed the actor's temperament and paid him quite a tribute.

A fine thought was the inclusion of the late John Barrymore's remarks on his first role, the late Lionel Barrymore's bit about his first break in the theatre, and Ethel Barrymore's talk on fleeting time. Jose Ferrer delivered the apotheosis to the nose, from "Cyrano," and Helen Hayes a bit as the old queen from "Victoria Regina." Psychoanalyst John Gustin spoke of acting as a healthy outlet for people, an outlet for a cramped ego, and Ralph Richardson expressed the actor's passionate love for his craft. Leonard Lyons gave his picture of what constitutes an actor, and pressagent Richard Maney waxed a little eloquent on his favorite client, the actor—"a dedicated person, a little deranged."

Ralph Bellamy, as Actors Equity head, spoke on what the union had done for the actor and how that benefitted the theatre generally. N.Y. Herald Tribune critic Walter F. Kerr made a lot of sense in his discussion of acting and criticism. Newspaper reviewers are too kind to actors, he feels, doing them a disservice. Morgan Beatty was an efficient, if slightly blurby emcee.

THE LUCKY ONE
With Bill Schwarz
Producer: Schwarz
Director: Grady Edney
Writers: Edney, Schwarz and Mark Olds
60 Mins.; Sun. 4 p.m.
KYW, Philadelphia

In preparation two and a half months by director Bill Schwarz and assembled from 27 hours of recorded interviews, with "Bob—the Lucky One" and 14 hours of talk with the family and others close to the case, this first session of a series of documentaries adds up to a realistic and moving account of the "coming of age" of a young delinquent and the "calculated risk" of his rehabilitation.

In contrast to most taped interviews on similar subjects, the new stanza had an unscripted veracity and any faltering was a groping for thought and not a misreading of lines. The young subject of this case history came through appealingly and with a sincerity which later became doubtful. A friend at one of the institutions to which he had been committed described him as "no different from anybody else—he built forts, went sledding and played tag."

Although his alcoholic father disappeared, he was not deserted by his mother or sister and had a fairly normal home life. Mother, school, the Big Brothers Society, case workers and psychiatrists tried to help—but his brushes with the law were constant. The problem of where to place the blame was shown to be difficult. From the now-shuttered House of Detention (poor condition described) Bob was sent to the youth study Center. This latter had an attractive exterior, but the boy objected to "being in the same place with murderers and burglarers."

Removed to the semi-confinement of the cottages run by the Association for Jewish Children, which he felt "was like a camp," his misdemeanors were still continuous. The final decision of the workers on the case, made with some misgivings, was to send Bob back to his family. He was also accepted in a trade school and at the finale is listed as "a lucky one." Program was produced in cooperation with the Association for Jewish Children. It provided a top-level documentary because of the solid research and authenticity of its presentation. Gagh.

FIVE BY FIVE
With Al Ross, Jay Grayson, Lee Case, Galen Fromme, Martin Edwards
Producer-Director: Kent Redgrave
30 Mins.; Mon-thru-Fri., 7 p.m.
WBAL, Baltimore

Baltimore's WBAL has developed a highly novel and appealing format for a radio show at 7 p.m. period locked in by local and network news broadcasts. Station has taken its five popular deejays and scheduled one for each day of five-day week.

Each deejay runs "Five By Five" show in his own style and selects his own disks except that all five deejays select "pick-of-the-week" tunes they believe will hit bigtime. Each day, program is opened and closed by individual deejay's own theme.

Cross plugging on AM and natural audience preferences add up to create listener interest to an unusual degree for a deejay show without other gimmicks. Guesters are used when available and disks seem to be carefully selected to fit in with accepted listener patterns.

Since each announcer has its own style and his own following, it is pointless to compare them because the individual listener comparison is the strength of the show. Effect is to make listeners feel that all these five deejays are "nice guys" working together and really admiring each other. Title might suggest that "Five By Five" gives a square result but opposite is true. Ratings should be high on this particular half-hour slot across WBAL's board. Marsh.

POINTS OF VIEW
12 Mins.; Mon.-Fri.; 2 p.m.
Sustaining
CBC, from Vancouver

"Points of View" is a regular portion of Canadian Broadcasting Corp.'s (Trans-Canada Network) hour-long "Trans-Canada Matinee," the sections of which originate daily in various cities. Talks, music and readings take up the rest of the hour, which has a large audience built up over several years.

"Mixed Marriages" was the topic caught, with participants Mrs. Muriel Pandia, an Anglo-Saxon married to an East Indian scholar and living in Vancouver; Mrs. Joan Grant, a sociologist from Capetown, South Africa, now at the U. of British Columbia; and Dr. William Black of the Canadian Citizenship Branch (Federal Gov't.).

Mrs. Grant said the widespread frown against mixed marriages is a vestigial remnant of primitive times, when intermarriage between tribes was taboo.

Dr. Black—after pointing out that "race doesn't necessarily mean a certain grouping of characteristics, which always overlap greatly regardless of ancestry" — said, "The basic consideration in so-called mixed marriages is the parents' attitude. If they think in term of the child's future they're prepared for difficult situations and will be able to ride them out . . . Democracy in environment is vital, and that means not condescension but normal acceptance."

The discussion was almost a model of enlightenment, while lacking the fireworks that would have resulted from the participation of a racialist. But the problems weren't glossed over, and the result was a lively, meaty workover of a subject which needs light instead of heat. Gara.

DISK JOCKEY PARADE
120 Mins., Tues. (1), 10 a.m.
Nine stations, Honolulu

Twenty-three local jocks got together for this one-shot musical quiz show, with the jocks, for once, making with the answers instead of the yocks.

Red Cross benefit show, broadcast live from Fort DeRussy, Waikiki, called upon jocks to identify singers, bands and titles of new recordings. As each contestant failed, he was eliminated and his spot at the mike taken over by a rival from another station.

Short talks by public officials and fund drive spokesmen kept the Red Cross theme in mind, with show emerging as a coordinated effort that worked to the benefit of all nine participating stations. Those that didn't pick it up live taped the show for subsequent airing "at this more convenient time."

Unique format, incidentally, could be vamped into a weekly stanza by some hep jock-laden station. Walt.

Salt Lake City, Kay W. Richins, radio vet here, has resigned as program director of KALL, flagship of the Intermountain Network, to take over as manager of City Lines Transit Advertising Co., on March 15. Richins replaces Fred H. Barlow who has leased advertising rights from the Denver Tramway Co.

at all—just goes to show what you can do when you have will power, doesn't it, Mr. Heifetz?

Heifetz

(ignoring Lee) Mr. Mendelssohn started playing piano at the age of nine—that is, he actually played concerts at that age.

Lee

Isn't that wonderful, children? That should be a lesson for all of you to practice diligently. Go right ahead, Mr. Heifetz (claps his hands) Gee, I think this is exciting.

(to kids)

Don't forget, kids, right after Mr. Heifetz, we play games and plenty of goodies for everyone.

Heifetz

(baffled, but continues) In preparing this explanation of the Concerto, I thought you might like to know Mendelssohn's full name—here it Jakob Ludwig Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy—

Lee (moving in to help enlighten) (to kids)

How many kids have a name as long as that?

Kid (in front row raises his hand)

Lee

You got a big name like that?

Kid

No sir—

Lee

Then what did you raise your hand for?

Kid

I don't like violins because their strings come from dead cats and I love cats. My father told me so.

Lee (to Heifetz)

Isn't that cute? Go right ahead, Mr. Heifetz

Heifetz

I thought you might like to know that Mendelssohn was born in the year 1809—on Feb. 3rd—

Lee (to kids)

How many kids born on February 3rd?

Kid (from audience)

Me.

Lee (to kid)

That's fine—you'll always remember Mendelssohn because you were born on the same day.

Kid

I was born Feb. 3, 1946—

Lee (trying to explain)

I didn't mean you was born the same year as this fella Mendelssohn—he was born in 1809—that's over (tries to figure)—that's a long time ago.

(to Heifetz)

I think the kids are loving this, don't you?

Heifetz

(ignoring Lee) A violin concerto is generally divided in four movements—this one of Mendelssohn's—and in my opinion, one of the great masterpieces—the first movement is called allegro molto appassionato; the second movement andante; the third allegretto non troppo and the last allegro molto vivace—

(laughter from audience)

Lee (admonishing kids)

No laughing, please, children. Mr. Heifetz was talking Italian—and we must all learn not to make fun of foreign languages.

(to Heifetz)

I think this has been a wonderful day for the Pinky Lee Show, Mr. Heifetz—and I wanna thank you for honoring us with a visit from such a famous man as you—

Heifetz (still bewildered)

I'm supposed to play the Concerto and explain it to the children—

Lee (starts dancing)

I'm sorry sir, but our time is running short—we gotta play games and eat the goodies—

(to kids)

How about a big hand for Mr. Jascha Heifetz who was good enough to come down here today and tell us all about that fella Mendelssohn. (kids applaud.)

(Heifetz exits, bewildered)

(Lee dances)

Lee

And now, kids—it's time for—

With Tom Armstrong, Al Keiselbach
210 Mins.; Mon-thru-Sat.
Participating
WGAR, Cleveland

Amiable Tom Armstrong, host at the WGAR morning-long turntable, projects a pleasant, easy-to-listen approach for the day-starters. His tie-in to participating commercials is brief and not offensive, and his plentiful weather and time announcements should be welcome to drivers to work as well as home listeners. Except for five breaks, one for farm, four for news, Armstrong handles entire 210 minutes starting at 6 a.m. with occasional verbal assist from engineer Al Keiselbach.

Armstrong also is city's only automotive spieler with two five-minute stints on cars, plus a Saturday 15-minute stanza in the morning. Mark.

Sarnoff Carries Torch for Radio

Minneapolis, March 8.

The fact that radio sets sales last year exceeded those of tv sets substantially and that surveys show audio continues to have a vast morning and afternoon audience under video's guns indicate it's here to stay and is highly encouraging, according to Robert W. Sarnoff, NBC executive veepee.

Addressing the Minneapolis Sales Executive Club, Sarnoff said that, actually, radio has been increasing its daytime audience and still maintains its lead in musical and some other types of programming. This, he declared, induced optimism over its future.

More important, in Sarnoff's opinion, is that radio is developing into a new and increasingly accepted low-cost advertising medium for an army of advertisers who can's afford tv and who were priced out of the old style radio market. As audio is emerging in the face of video competition in somewhat different clothes, new broadcasting ideas and techniques evolve to strengthen its position, he pointed out. Listening habit changes will bring programming changes, he believes.

Sarnoff touched only lightly in his talk about the impending new type of network service that will be initiated, including a continuous 48-hour program schedule on Saturdays and Sundays. The impression gained from his references to the matter was that the network will copy local stations' technique to a considerable extent and that a glorified disk jockey program is in the cards with spot announcements expected to comprise a considerable advertising bulk.

CHEVALIER VIDEO FILMS AS 'RISK WORTH TAKING'

French Gaumont production outfit has in the works a series of Maurice Chevalier starrers pitched for U. S. tv consumption, Alaine Poire, director of production and distribution for Societe Nouvelles des Establissment Gaumont, disclosed in N. Y. last week.

Films, made at a cost of about 9,000,000 fr. ($25,000) each, go under the title "Rendezvous with Chevalier." General theme is one of Paris After Dark, with Chevalier making dates with French femme stars and taking them out on the town. Locations may range all the way from the Louvre to a little French bistro and the Montmartre. In each film he'll do a couple of numbers of his own.

First three of the half-hour pix are already in the can and the rest will be shot in May, Poire said. They're being lensed in English and and French. He plans to discuss the Chevalier series soon with NBC toppers. If it pans out, Gaumont may undertake to make another 13 stanzas.

Poire said the Chevalier pix had been undertaken without a prior releasing commitment. "We thought it would be worthwhile taking the risk," he commented. Chevalier has been on American tv once before when he did a filmed show with Bob Hope in London.

TV Playwrights

ed his full attention to video with half a dozen of his works being processed for various dramatic fixtures, will double as an editor. His "Devil's Theatre," half-hour creation for ABC-Theatre Guild, will be under his script supervision and he's writing several of the episodes.

It's figured that these, among tv's foremost writers, are best able to infuse outside works with the ingredients that have paid off for them when they were actively engaged as playwrights for the medium. In the case of Aurthur, he's been obliged to remain more or less inactive as a byliner, and hence it remains to be seen how much the Roses, Serlings and Vidals will be able to put out on their own in their dual capacities. Unless, of course, they'll be going back to their files of "unfinished or previously rejected symphonies."

GUILD'S QUICK 300G ON WB CARTOONS

Guild Films has racked up some $300,000 in sales on its newly-acquired Warner Bros. package of 191 cartoons in the little more than a week that prints have been out on the shorts. Firm is confident that it will have $1,000,000 in contracts on the package within 30 days, thus nearly getting it off the hook on the deal. While all the details of the deal aren't known, Guild is reported to have plunked down in the neighborhood of $650,000 for the cartoons, with Guild and Warners splitting the take. On the basis of projected sales, the first couple of months ought to take care of the down payment, with Guild still having to recoup print and distribution costs from future revenues.

Big gun in the sales thus far was a deal with KTLA in Los Angeles under which the outlet purchased the pix for a reported $160,000. Guild has racked up some eight other major station sales thus far on a two-year library basis, thus accounting for the remainder of the coin.

Hal March Soldier Show May Cue Exit As a Coca Regular

Imogene Coca may fall victim to television's GI sweepstakes. Having finally found a permanent male support in Hal March for her NBC Saturday nighter—just as Sid Caesar, her ex-pard, has established Nanette Fabray as his regular femme vis-a-vis—Miss Coca may lose him to his set piece, "The Soldiers." Latter has been an insert in Colgate's "Comedy Hour" with Tom D'Andrea as March's partner. The act is being pitched for the Wednesday night slot being vacated by Joan Davis for General Electric, with GE relinquishing the "I Married Joan" NBC time. "Soldiers" would be a live show, whereas Phil Silvers' GI series, "You'll Never Get Rich," is a celluloid package for which CBS is aiming at a prime slot.

Miss Coca had half a dozen stags on her show in succession before latching on to March, who got permanent berthing after two-in-a-row bookings in January.

WOR-TV Movies & Baseball

tisers are charged commensurately. WOR-TV started the run on these 30 in mid-September so that they'll end just shortly before the night ballcast roll in mid-April. Difficulty is expected in satisfying sponsors of the pix in other markets where they were distribbed later and where baseball telecasts will interfere. Costs being very high, it's anticipated that bankrollers will ask for compensation either in additional spots or satisfactory reshuffling of the program sked. Such concessions by stations over feature films will be unique, since heretofore such product has been sloughed off without thought in preference for better paying ballcasts.

Come the start of night ball on WOR-TV, the station will have started on the Associated Artists pix purchased a few months back. A station spokesman insists that no decrease per pic will be made because the Bank of America 30 will be over. He broke it down this way: over 23 weeks the station would normally have exposed the pix about 350 times, but with night ball interfering there'll actually be regular 247 showings. Where possible, WOR-TV will relocate the pix at 6:30 p.m. on weekends and after night games beginning at 8 p.m. Plans, it was explained, are subject to change.

of appreciation and even depreciation (though George Gobel wouldn't let out a peep and, as indicated, the Gotham winners went virtually unheard).

Dual winner Disney chided the ATAS saying he'd be "spoiled" since he's only in his preem season. Comic Thomas did a double take on his being salaamed as an actor, but his "Make Room for Daddy" also was cited and he gracefully let tv wife Jean Hagen accept the symbol of triumph after doing an elaborate "Allah" on the ramp. Art Linkletter, kudosed for the cross-the-board "House Party," made an observation that daytime tv is less killing ("we don't get into the hospital" like some of the nighttime worker-outers).

The non-Emmy sidebars included two production numbers from the Moulin Rouge floorshow which served as stage-waits. Apparently there was pressure from the eatery to exploit a part of its show. The Antell and Maybelline commercials were well spaced and easy to take.

Judith Anderson's 'Macbeth'

Judith Anderson, ribboned for "Macbeth," was still the classy kid as she did her thank you with extract from a Robinson Jeffers poem. Some of the kine or film excerpts from nominees' pieces de resistance did not come off too well in quickie reprise.

Rundown of the 21 major categories gave CBS and NBC seven each (whether shows or individuals), with ABC's six making it as close as it could come, the 21st being the westerner series, "Stories of the Century." Of the group, the breakdown is 12 live, 8 film and one mixed ("Omnibus"), with 12 shows originating from or made on the Coast and nine from N.Y.; live from Hollywood, four; from Gotham, eight, plus "Omnibus." Eight shows or personalities figured in stanzas of 60 minutes or more and there were four citations for first-season exposures in George Gobel (who previously was a summertime comic), the "Lassie" telepix series and Disney's double win.

Dramatic and comedy writers were relegated to off-the-air citations unlike Oscardom's considerable stress on originals. Same went for direction (for these and other credits see separate story).

List of Winners

The winners:
New Personality—George Gobel (NBC); cultural-religious-educational—"Omnibus" (CBS); sports—"Gillette Cavalcade of Sports" (NBC); children's—"Lassie" (pix) (CBS); daytime, Art Linkletter's "House Party" (CBS); western or adventure—"Stories of the Century" (syndicated pix, Studio TV Productions, subsidiary of Republic Pictures); news reporter or commentator—John Daly (ABC); audience guest participation or paneller—"This Is Your Life" (NBC); actor in single performance—Robert Cummings in "Twelve Angry Men" ("Studio One" on CBS); actress in single performance—Judith Anderson in "Macbeth" (Hallmark show on NBC); male singer—Perry Como (CBS); female singer—Dinah Shore (NBC); supporting actor in regular series—Art Carney (Jackie Gleason show on CBS); supporting actress in regular series—Audrey Meadows (Gleason show); actor in regular series—Danny Thomas ("Make Room for Daddy" pix on ABC); actress in regular series—Loretta Young ("Loretta Young Show" pix on NBC); mystery or intrigue—"Dragnet" (pix) (NBC); variety series including musical varieties—"Disneyland" pix on ABC; situation comedy—"Make Room for Daddy" pix on ABC; dramatic—Theatre Guild-U. S. Steel Hour (ABC); individual program of the year—Walt Disney's "Operation Undersea" pix (ABC).

Show was produced by William Kayden, directed by William Bennington (with Hudson Fausett handling the N. Y. pickups), and scripted by Charles Isaacs and Glenn Wheaton. Gordon Jenkins handled the baton.

Other Awards

Hollywood, March 8.

Additional Television Academy Awards: Art director of live show—Bob Markell, "You Are There" (CBS). Art director of Telefilm—Ralph Berger and Albert Pyke, "Christmas Carol" on "Shower of Stars" (CBS); cameraman on Telefilm — Lester Shoor, "Medic" (NBC); dramatic material—Reginald Rose, "Twelve Angry Men" on "Studio One" (CBS); comedy material—Hal Kanter, Jack Douglas, J. Allordice, H. Winkler, "George Gobel Show" (NBC); technical achievements—NBC, in recognition of its color tv policy and its color plant at Burbank. Engineering effects—four quadrant screen used by NBC and its 1954 national election coverage (screen showed live images of four reporters in different parts of the nation on single television home screen); audio editing—George Nicholson, "Dragnet" (NBC); Film editing—Grant Smith and Lyn Harrison. "Operation Underseas" on "Disneyland" (ABC); director Franklin Schaffner, "Twelve Angry Men," on "Studio One" (CBS). Original music for TV—Walter Schumann, "Dragnet" (NBC); scoring of dramatic or variety program—Victor Young, "Diamond Jubilee of Light" (four networks); choreographer—June Taylor, Jackie Gleason show (CBS).

Local Hollywood achievement awards for shows seen in Los Angeles area only: Best Entertainment, Program channel 9, "Movie Theatre," KHJ-TV; Cultural, religious or educational — Paul Coates, "Confidential File" (KTTV); news—George Putnam, (KTTV); sports—Baseball of Los Angeles-Hollywood games (KHJ-TV); children show—Eleanor Hempel's "Little School House" (KTTV); male personality—Paul Cotes, (KTTV); female personality—Eleanor Powell (KRCA). Special station achievement award went to KNXT.

depending on the products to be plugged. Initially, GF moves into the Monday 9 to 9:30 period by sponsoring the summer replacement for "Lucy"—the Desilu-produced "Girls in Greasepaint" starring Rose Marie.

Even though it's in its fourth year, "Lucy" is still the kingpin (although a few weeks back it looked like Jackie Gleason would take over the leadership). The last two Nielsens restored "Lucy" to its No. 1 perch. Although Blow and PM originally complained that the "Lucy" showcase wasn't selling its product (a couple years back, in fact, PM made a direct appeal to the viewing audience to support the sponsor weed), the payoff has been considerable, it's understood, since Philip Morris followed the trend into kingsize.

The PM checkout is a major victory for P & G, since it was a "johnny-come-lately" in the "Lucy" picture by lend-leasing half the show from Philip Morris.

Philip Morris says that after the "Lucy" defection it intends launching an intensive tv spot campaign. Also under way are plans for the ciggie outfit's biggest print media advertising push in its 22-year history.

Better known guests, recruited from local cafes, included Dave Appell and his Applejacks, musical bar combo; Jack E. Leonard, and singer Vince Carson. Accompanying the girls and on for a separate intro was their manager, songwriter Bob Merrill, also a Philly product.

Leonard, currently appearing at the Celebrity Room, furnished the sock laugh moments handing out his amusing insults to everyone within reach. Sponsor got plenty plugs, starting with showy introduction of talent who rode up to studio, Hollywood style, along floodlighted Walnut St. Production values were good and the setting, though simple, was serviceable. of television at the agency, refused to discuss the figures involved but did admit that the package was a new way of achieving extensive exposure for clients. Levin declared that agencies must find ways of serving sponsors with non-network packages where the the agencies can keep costs down and maintain responsibility over the show. On a spot basis, he said, a client can't achieve sufficient exposure to make any considerable impact with only one or two shows on any one station. Answer must be multiple exposure of the type involved in the weather segment, with some 15 exposures weekly that will build cumulatively and with impact. Such a package, achieved at low cost and with agency control, is the answer, he said.

in nature. The worker, whose dues may be paid by checkoff, may be a member of the Republican Party. But, part of his dues is used to promote candidates he might oppose.

"And," continued Feikens, "what makes the UAW programs more offensive is that the membership dues which support them are deductible from the income tax. But ordinary contributions to a political party are not deductible, which puts the Government in the unique position of supporting Democrats."

The UAW (CIO) programs have put local stations on the FCC's hot seat in the November elections and the primary just completed. Because the UAW (CIO) and the Democratic Party are so closely allied in Michigan, only Democratic candidates appear on union-sponsored programs. For that reason, stations have had to grant free time for Republican and Socialist candidates.

Nunn shrugged off Feiken's complaints by saying: "If John wants to draft a new code governing contributions, I'm sure he will find more support from the CIO than from General Motors, Ford and his Board of Commerce pals."

Nunn added that Republicans had repeatedly declined invitations to appear on his tv show.

Omaha—WOW-TV Program Director Bill McBride last week announced the appointment of Bob Froemming as production manager. Froemming previously was a director on production staff.

Inside Stuff—Radio-TV

High-definition electronic picture-making, developed over the past couple of years in Great Britain, will be introduced into the U. S. within the next few months, The electronic filming process, which its proponents claim will cut telepix production costs in half, will be licensed in the U. S. under the name "Electronoscope" by Gordon W. Levoy and Allan A. Buckhantz, who've acquired American rights from High-Definition Films Ltd., developer and owner of the process.

System operates with an electronic camera and a video recorder. It employs the socalled "slave" system, with the director working in a control room off a series of monitors for each camera. Director can cut, switch and dissolve from one camera to another just as in a live show. Resultant film, however, isn't a kinescope, it's claimed, but is a finished negative delivered from a specially-designed video recorder that's equivalent in quality to the best 35m negatives today. Camera and recorder can produce a 35m and a 16m negative simultaneously, with a specially-built setup for tape when that's available.

Henry Pleasants, European music correspondent of the N.Y. Times, will defend his attack of modern music as intermission guest of James Fassett on the N.Y. Philharmonic broadcast on CBS Radio Sunday (13). Pleasants is author of "The Agony of Modern Music," a Simon & Schuster entry for March 21, in which he uses such expletives as scurrilous, unfair, specious and destructive to describe his pet peeve. Arrayed against him will be Jay Harrison, music editor of the music attacked in the book.

Three winners from radio and television were included in this year's George Polk Memorial Awards for outstanding journalism. Picked by the journalism faculty of Long Island U. were Eric Sevareid for radio-tv reporting; NBC public affairs for a special award, and WNYC, the N.Y. municipally-owned radio station for community service.

Sevareid, from among a total of 12 other Memorial Award recipients, got the nod for weekly Washington coverage and for his CBS-TV "The American Week." NBC public affairs won via the atomic power documentary, "Three, Two, One—Zero." WNYC's award indicated "for public service broadcasting."

Atomic scientist Dr. Vannevar Bush has been tapped as initial guest on the new ABC-TV format of the erstwhile "Johns Hopkins Science Review." New title of the show, which is pitched at the younger generation in hopes of getting them into the field of science, is "Tomorrow," and the show is slated to start on ABC March 26 in the Saturday at 7 post. Dr. Bush will point up the need for young people to choose the sciences as a career.

Guarantee of 200 television showings within a year is part of a new package offer being made by Victor Kayfetz Productions, the Gotham-based industrial pix production outfit. "Golden Snowball" package, as it's called, includes guaranteed showings of a pic as part of the overall production price. Sponsor, under the plan, can pre-select areas he wants covered, with Kayfetz then guaranteeing he'll get at least 200 plays of the pic within a year in those areas.

"Italian Feature Film Theatre," the packaged Italian-language setup which adman Erberto Landi has extended to some dozen cities since he founded it in New York, celebrates its fifth anni in 13 weeks, and Landi has set up a $5,000-in-prizes contest in N.Y. to commemorate the event. For the next 13 weeks, the show will feature clips of familiar Italian actors and actresses, which the WABC-TV audience must identify by mail. Contest will be scored on a cumulative basis over the entire 13-week period, with the winners getting such prizes as a trip to Italy.

Awarding of the prizes will coincide with the 5th anni of the show.

Eugenio Soler-Alonso, for seven years head of the Latin American section in the Radio Division at United Nations, has been upped to Chief of Central Services in the same division. He succeeds Hugh Williams, who has left for Australia to head up the United Nations Information Center down-under.

Soler, with Joseph Nichols as his deputy, is thus in charge of those services of greater concern to networks, indie stations and broadcasters planning broadcasts from or tie-ins with the UN. Succeeding Soler as chief of the Latin American broadcast services is his former assistant, Gonzalo Bueno.

McGowan Productions, which tried its hand with color in the experimental "Big Team Rolls" for its "Death Valley Days" series, won't make any of the 20 subjects remaining on this year's slate in tints, according to director Stuart McGowan. Reason, he said, is "not enough color sets," despite fact color tv is here insofar as production savvy is concerned. McGowans were highly satisfied with results of "Team," especially the "terrific definition" of the natural backgrounds. Color ups cost of a telepic subject 25 to 40%, according to McGowan, "but it will be worth it—when the market warrants."

WHO MUST DO THE CLEANUP?

LEER-ICS, PART III

If nothing else is accomplished, at least the music business has been made aware of the leer-ics.

What started as an intra-trade exposition has become widely picked up, although, in all immodesty, this is no surprise.. VARIETY in its 50 years of trade news dissemination well knows the chain-reaction impact through the dailies, the amusement desks, the radio-tv editors, columnists and broadcast commentators' readership.

The next step is serious self-examination because already the temptation is asserting itself that "if you can't fight it, let's join it." This refers to many of the responsible major publishers who, if they are not in the rock 'n' roll or rhythm & blues idiom, for the moment at least, seem struck by Tin Pan Alley inertia.

In an extensive radio discussion by Larry Finley over KFWB, Hollywood, Decca's Milt Gabler and ASCAP's L. Wolfe Gilbert, Joan Whitney and Alex Kramer kicked the gong around on VARIETY's first editorial on Leer-ics. Vet deejay Finley wanted to know, "Where should it be curtailed? At the source? Or should disk jockeys set themselves up as perforce voluntary or involuntary censors?" He thought the problem should be resolved before it gets to the deejays, meaning the pipeline to the public. Decca's a&r man Gabler acquiesced and volunteered how he edits the rock 'n' roll stuff before being put into wax, but Finley volunteered that, apart from Decca and/or other major diskers' responsible attitude, he had to kill six platters within the last few days.

RCA Victor's Manie Sacks writes: "Because Radio Corp. of America occupies an eminent position in American life and industry we consider any compromise with good taste and propriety unthinkable. Any...RCA insignia (product)...must be free from any taint which may be construed as affecting adversely even the smallest segment of society. The Record Dept. will never sacrifice the principles set for the entire company in any effort to gain profit or financial advantage. For this reason I applaud and concur in the sentiments expressed so vigorously in your editorial. It was an eloquent statement and should be widely supported."

Without intent, even with the sketchiest sampling of cross-section opinion, to make this followup comment appear a self-commercial for the VARIETY editorial, the N. Y. World-Telegram Sun's columnist Frank Farrell, when making reference to "Leer-ics, Part I," received an extraordinary flock of mail commending his paper's initial pickup of the story, and his personal followup, as well as a nod to the basic source. Lay reaction, as result of the wire services' pickup, has resulted in an unusual amount of vox pop mail direct to this paper, which accents anew that the Music Biz is faced not only with a conscionable responsibility, but may also have to face the weight of public opinion if not properly regulated and controlled from withi

Maybe it is coincidence that Cole Porter's "All Of You" plug song, out of his new smash "Silk Stockings," is now heard over the radio as, "The sweet and the pure of you" instead of its original "I'd like to make a tour of you" ("the north and the south of you," etc.) This is in line with songsmith Al Stillman's observations (in fuller detail herewith) that "Even as ethereal an ode as Hammerstein's 'All The Things You Are' ('that moment divine when all the things you are are mine') is a refined 'All Of You'...Actually, the object of all leer-ists...has always been to get as close to the Main Subject (capitals his) as possible, without stating it and/or 'cleaning it up' by marrying 'em off in the last line. The current crop of rock 'n' rollers is not beating around the bush, but, without condoning 'em, it's at least a less hypocritical approach." Songsmith Jimmy Kennedy's views herewith are on another tack.

There is no more realistic a business than show biz, and by the nature of the topical appeal of a nation's song output the music business moves with atomic speed. That the songs invariably reflect the moods and mores of the people is now academic, and nobody asks the music biz to lose its realism in the approach of fashioning its words and tempos in tune with the times. Johann Strauss-spoke for the people of Vienna, as Gershwin and Berlin, Porter and Rodgers are symbolic of America. In turn, each nationalistic approach has splinter manifestations; over the years, it segued from ragtime to jazz, from the blues to swing, from hot to cool, from the cycles of the polka and the tango to the samba, the rumba and the mambo. In between, of late, cropped up the country & western (c&w) cycle, which some regarded as perhaps the true manifestation of American folk music, and now the rhythm & blues (r&b), with its rock 'n' roll sidelights.

Hillbilly music, for a time, flourished on its sheer charm, until as Pat Ballard pointed out last week it too started to put a little too much hey-hey into its haystack atmospherics. And so, too, the r&r leer in the r&b accents has become something for judicious self-examination. Abel.

Detroit Jocks Widen Scope to Include Nix On Cuffos for Legiters

Detroit, March 8.

The 16 disk jockeys, who have formed the Detroit Disk Jockey Assn. as a result of the hassle over payola and distributor ownership, have agreed to nix interviews with show biz personalities who are tub-thumping for shows in town which aren't buying wave-length advertising.

The jocks are particularly aroused about tactics of legit flacks in sending them a couple of tickets, then coming around with a "babe from the chorus—or one of the principals, for that matter"—and expecting to get them on the air for some free publicity. The show, meanwhile, is paying for its publicity in newspapers and other media, the jocks point out.

Several of the jocks stated that from now on they will show the flacks a rate card.

BMI V.P. BURTON POSES R&B QUIZ

By ABEL GREEN

Whose responsibility is what? Where shall there be control in the rhythm & blues stuff? What yardstick of measurement should apply? If recorded, allegedly for home consumption, does it perforce mean it shouldn't be broadcast? Is a daytime deejay's programming uniform with the type of stuff a post-midnight deejay broadcasts?

These are some of the queries advanced by Robert J. Burton, vice-president of Broadcast Music Inc., who has undertaken a soul-searching, self-examination of the flock of r&b stuff which BMI licenses. Unlike ASCAP, however, BMI also undertakes the task of inspection before registration and subsequent licensing. The American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers limits its services to registration and licensing.

In effect, BMI is undertaking a screening process, as close to the source as possible, and will achieve that, it hopes, via a team of three representative intra-company groups of five, or 15 in all.

It's a self-policing system, in effect, whereby mixed committees of old and young folks, churchgoers and the so-called adolescent and juvenile group, college graduates and those with elementary educa-

RCA Preps Drive On 'Yankees' Album

RCA Victor is prepping a major drive in behalf of its original cast album of the legit musical, "Damn Yankees," which is slated to open on Broadway May 4. Joe Carlton, diskery's artists & repertoire chief, is scheduling top names on his roster to cut singles from the show prior to the recording of the cast album around May 8. Score is by Jerry Ross and Dick Adler, who clicked with their score for "Pajama Game."

One tune from the show, "Whatever Lola Wants," will be kicked off by Dinah Shore on an NBC-TV spectacular, March 27. Her disk of the number will be available in the stores the following day. Other songs in the show will be sliced by Eddie Fisher, Perry Como and Kay Starr. The cast album will be released in a special de luxe package.

Victor's snaring of the album rights to the show was a surprising coup in view of Columbia Records' click merchandising of the cast album to the earlier Ross-Adler "Pajama Game."

WINS Sez Teenagers 'Hate' Haymes For His WCBS Pan of R&B Music

A war between N. Y. radio indie WINS and Bob Haymes, songwriter and WCBS deejay, has ended in the "unofficial" banning of Haymes' compositions on WINS. WINS chieftain Bob Leder accused Haymes of "making wanton and capricious attacks about teenagers who listen to rhythm & blues," which is a favored brand of music on the audio indie.

While denying that he would take any retaliatory steps with regard to Haymes' attack on r&b, he did say that "we feel that our audience will feel quite violent about Bob Haymes hereafter." The implication was that while WINS would not ban Haymes-cleffed songs as a vendetta, it would be imprudent to air material by a man who had gained the wrath of WINS listeners, a great portion of whom, Leder says, are from the teenage ranks.

Leder said that Haymes, on his WCBS stanzas, has taken pot shots at r&b. The WINS staple also came in for a Haymes rap, said Leder, in a letter to Nick Kenny on Feb. 16 in the N. Y. Daily Mirror. Leder said that a great number of teenage listeners had voiced complaints about Haymes' attitude. Haymes also stated that he had received about 100 of what he called "drop dead" letters from listeners of Alan (Rock 'n' Roll) Freed,

Everybody's 'Do'-ing It

Once the music business latches on to a word, it virtually refuses to let go. The disk deluge is now on the word "do."

Current crop of "do" songs on the market include "I Do," "I Do, I Do," "Do You?" and "Do, Do, Do."

ASCAP Lobbies Membership For Copyright Bill

In a move to counter the mounting jukebox opposition to the proposed Kilgore amendment to the Copyright Act, the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers is marshalling its membership in behalf of the bill. The Kilgore bill, introduced in the Senate recently, would remove the jukebox exemption from the Copyright Act and would make the coin machine operators subject to licensing from performing rights societies.

Since the Kilgore bill was introduced under the joint auspices of 10 Senators, proponents of the bill are more optimistic about the chances for a Copyright Act revision than at anytime previously. They know, however, that there's still tough hoeing ahead both in the Senate and in the House, where Rep. Frank J. Thompson Jr. introduced two bills on the matter. Thompson calls for the setting

Hill & Range Sues Pierce, Forrest to Injunct Name, Photo Use on Song Folio

Hill & Range filed suit in N. Y. Supreme Court last week against Forrest Music and hillbilly crooner Webb Pierce for an injunction to stop the use of Pierce's name and photo on a song folio published by Forrest.

H&R claims that it made a three-year deal with Pierce in August, 1952, for the exclusive use of his name and likeness on its folio, "Wandering Boy." Plaintiff alleges that Forrest has jumped the gun before the expiration of the pact by using Pierce for its folio, "Hits of Today and Yesterday." H&R also is asking for an accounting of profits.

Fears U. S. Will Make Negative Global Impression Via R&B Tunes

By JIMMY KENNEDY
(Vet Songsmith)

The most astonishing thing about the current craze for r & b records and their accompanying leer-ics is that it was ever permitted to happen. The primrose path has always been the easiest, and at the moment the line of least resistance is the gold-dust trail to quick disk sales irrespective of the quality of the product. There is adequate machinery for screening these numbers at several stages before they reach the public, namely, at publisher, artist, a & r, trade and broadcasting levels, all of which may impose restrictions, cleanup or ban on any material that is not up to acceptance standard or is in doubtful taste, or carries an improper or ambiguous implication.

So who is to blame for it all? As the creators, in the first place, the writers come in for blame; it will be noticed, however, that the names on the more dubious of these items are not those of known or regular writers nor are they nommes de plume; they are by "new boys," not yet songwriters who think that smut is smart and who lack judgment, good taste, literacy and as far as can be seen talent.

From these "Johnny-come-latelies" this material reaches record companies mainly by direct approach; the publishers, many of them also in the newcomer class, only get into the picture at a later stage when a record has been cut and a deal for the publication rights can be arranged. These freshmen to Tin Pan Alley have only one criticism in producing a piece of recording material for the r & b market and that appears to be its appeal to the baser instincts. Their leerical concoctions belong in the more dim-lit honkytonks and should never be heard on the

Col Distribs Setup Shifted in Keys

In a move to spark sales on its platter and phonograph lines, Columbia Records last week reshuffled its distributor lineup in key territories.

The Roskin Distributing Co. will take over the Col line for the Hartford area. Territory previously was handled by the Stern company. Joe Broderick was named sales manager of the Roskin setup.

In Cleveland, the line was shifted to Seaway Distributing from Col's factory-owned operation. Sanborn Music takes over in Pittsburgh from the Danforth Corp. and Tracy-Mitchell will represent Col's photo line in upstate New York, operating out of Buffalo. Faysan Distributing will continue to handle the Col disks in that territory.

Durante Pub Dusting Off Slew of Copyrights

Hollywood, March 8.

Jimmy Durante Publishing Co., formed seven years ago to handle special material for The Schnoz, is dusting off its 300-odd copyrights to get back into the business in all branches of the industry. Many of the numbers were composed by Durante.

Some of the songs were lyricked by such names as Irving Caesar, Walter Winchell, Sid Skolsky, Al Bernard, Harry Harris, Jackie Barnett, Jimmy Monaco, Harry Akst, Jules Buffano and Harry Crane. Company, licensed by ASCAP, has several current tunes, among them "One in a Million," "A World Full of Durantes," "Getting Lucky," "Who Cares?" and "I'm Building a Bungalow for Baby."

Welk Coast One-Niter Pulls 15G for Red Cross

Hollywood, March 8.

In spite of the downbeat in attendance for Coast dance bands, Lawrence Welk's one-niter on March 1, at the Long Beach auditorium for the American Red Cross Charity Ball, drew 7,300 paid admishes for a total sum of $15,000, with tickets scaled at $3 down.

Welk donated his entire salary of $750 to charity.

Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By HERM SCHOENFELD

Margaret Whiting: "Stowaway"-"Allah Be Prais'd" (Capitol). "Stowaway" is one of those pretty ballads that are always in season, no matter what the current fads happen to be. It's Maggie Whiting's best piece of material in some time and her lucid rendition, aided by a lilting Nelson Riddle background, should help get this side plenty of attention. Reverse is a highly clever piece of material which, however, won't help this country's diplomatic efforts in the Near East.

De John Sisters: "A Present For Bob"-"D'ja Hear What I Say" (Epic). One of the hot sister teams now around, the De John Sisters turn up with consistently good material, most of which they write themselves. "A Present For Bob" is a swinging item with a cute tag line and the trio slice it with a humorous flair. Reverse is a bouncing entry in ragtime tempo. Among other strong releases by sister teams are the DeMarco Sisters' slice of the r&b tune, "Two Hearts," for Decca and the Paulette Sisters' workover of "Dreamboat" for Capitol.

David Whitfield: "Open Your Heart"-"Beyond The Stars" (London). David Whitfield continues to impress with his ultra-legit tenor pipes. On this disk, the British singer handles two class ballads in superb style and jocks who want a change-of-pace from the r&b cycle, could program this one with solid results. "Open Your Heart" is the more likely side for the U. S. pop market.

Georgia Gibbs: "Dance With Harry"-"Ballin' The Jack" (Mercury). Still riding the rock 'n' roll tide with click version of "Tweedle Dee," Georgia Gibbs now covers another tune which was launched by Etta James on an indie label under the title of "Wallflower." Miss Gibbs belts it with the appropriate lowdown inflection. It's a typical r&b lyric, the repetitive use of "rock" and "roll," over an insistent beat, achieving the impact. Lee Winters has a more "authentic" version of this tune for Crown Records. On the Mercury flip, Miss Gibbs excells on one of her standards, "Ballin' The Jack."

Johnny Desmond: "Play Me Hearts And Flowers"-"I'm So Ashamed" (Coral). "Hearts and Flowers" is another attempt to make a tune via a concentrated plug on tv. In this case, it was the title song of the "Philco Playhouse" stanza on NBC-TV Sunday night (6) with Johnny Desmond also doing the vocal. It's a good song but whether it will come near duplicating the impact of "Let Me Go, Lover" is dubious. "I'm So Ashamed" is a routine ballad.

Georgie Shaw: "The Water Tumbler Tune"-"I'll Step Aside" (Decca). "The Water Tumbler Tune," which Henri Rene sliced as an instrumental for RCA Victor, now gets a firstrate vocal rendition by Georgie Shaw. It's a lovely class tune with a charming idea that's fully projected by Shaw and the Jack Pleis orch with the Dave Lambert chorus. Reverse is in a contrasting groove, a bluesy number with a torch lyric.

Eileen Barton: "How-Ja, Do, How-Ja Do"-"Fujiyama Mama" (Coral). The idea of turning Eileen Barton's 1950 hit, "If I Knew You Were Coming, I'd Baked a Cake," into a rhythm & blues tune must have looked great on paper. But it doesn't come off under the title of "How-Ja Do," the whole thing sounding very mechanical. "Fujiyama Mama" is an r&b tune that's more like the real mccoy and Miss Barton socks it home.

Dick Jacobs Orch: "My Dear"-"Play Me Hearts And Flowers" (Coral). The oldie, "My Dear," gets the type of instrumental and choral workover by Dick Jacobs' orch that could bring it back big. It's in the same class as "Melody of Love," which is the No. 1 song today despite the rhythm & blues kick. The tv-inspired tune on the flip also gets a neat slice.

Wiernaut Bros.: "Lost And Found"-"Gotta Have You" (Forecast). The Wiernaut Bros. are a rhythm combo with a smooth style that could make it in the present market climate. "Lost And Found" is a good swinging number with "Gotta Have You" also in the same genre.

Allan Copeland & The Hotrodders: "Crack The Whip"-"Rock Candy Baby" (Arwin). The negative social influence of the r&b cycle is epitomized on this disk. "Crack The Whip," which has already net the ire of some disk jockeys, who have banned it because of its allegedly "sadistic" theme, is in the same class with some of the more irresponsible horror comic strips. "Rock Candy Baby" exploits the usual r&b lyric themes in a fairly obvious way.

Rosalind Paige: "I Think I'll Cry Again"-"(I Found You Out) When I Found You In Somebody Else's Arms" (MGM). Rosalind Paige should make noise with her initial MGM slice, "I Think I'll Cry Again." She's a mannered song stylist but she packs a lot of punch and the tune gives her plenty of opportunity to display her dramatic attack. Reverse is run-of-the-mill material with an okay reading.

Joan Regan: "Danger, Heartbreak Ahead"-"Don't Be Afraid of Love" (London). English thrush has one of her best chances to make the hit lists with "Danger, Heartbreak Ahead." It's a neatly-knit ballad right up her line. "Don't Be Afraid of Love" is just a fair slice.

Album Reviews

Carol Channing-David Wayne-Eddie Bracken: "archy and mehitabel"-"echoes of archy" (Columbia). From the stories of the late Don Marquis, composer George Kleinsinger and librettist Joe Darion have fashioned a jazz opera that abounds in gaiety and charm. It's a natural for an important slot in musical Americana. (The opera, "archy and mehitabel," already has scored on the concert stage and several pic companies now are bidding for cartoon rights). On shellac, it's a knockout. Columbia has done an expert job in putting it into the groove.

Cast for solid marquee values, the disk stars David Wayne as narrator, Eddie Bracken as archy, the cockroach, and Carol Channing as mehitabel, the cat. Miss Channing runs away with the show. Her mehitabel is a delightful creation, "toujours gai," raucous, rowdy and completely winning. Wayne and Bracken come off okay but both play it a bit too pathetic. It's a matter of interpretation, of course, but archy and his creator seemed to have more spirit in print.

Kleinsinger's score is breezy and exciting and Darion performed a neat editing job on Marquis' material. On the back side of this 12-inch LP, David Wayne solos on "echoes of archy," a potpourri of some other of Marquis' stories. Wayne is in top form here and his treatment of the vignet in which a "theatre cat" complains that today's thesps "don't have it here" is a classic. Kleinsinger has set a tip-top musical mood for the narration.

Dave Brubeck Quartet: "Brubeck Time" (Columbia). Having clicked with several other packages with the Dave Brubeck combo, Columbia Records has now packaged the first studio set cut by the modern jazz unit. Previous albums were taken from tapes made during live concerts and nitery stands. In this LP, the group maintains the same quality of musicianship and imaginativeness that have made it the most successful group in the field. Once again, Paul Desmond's lyrical sax and Brubeck's driving piano solos are the distinctive features. The album cover and title is pegged onto the recent Time mag feature piece on Brubeck.

Ralph Burns: "Bijou" (Period). Another in the Period label's jazz releases, this set showcases Ralph Burns on a group of his own compositions plus one standard, "Lover Come Back To Me." Although better known as a band arranger, Burns proves himself to be a crackerjack jazz keyboard artist on wax. He has a richly textured style that has color and rhythm, especially on the swing tunes. Burns gets expert rhythm backing.

Lecuona Plays Lecuona (RCA Victor). Ernesto Lecuona's ranking place among the top tunesmiths of the world is completely underlined in this longplay set. Lecuona also happens to be a firstrate pianist and he shows excellent form in this rundown of his own compositions. Among the Latin standards played by the Cuban are "Malaguena," "Siboney," "La Comparsa," "Andulucia," "La Habanera," plus about a dozen others equally melodic. It adds up to a standout musical package.

NEW TERPS GET HOT-CHA CHA

Joe Krug's Arrest Marks Precedent In Drive Vs. Piracy by Major Pubs

Publishers' agent Harry Fox and his attorney, Julian T. Abeles (& Bernstein), established the most important legal precedent in their all out drive to stamp out the manufacture and marketing of bootleg phonograph platters. This is the initial step in an attempt to make the consequences of piracy too drastic for the gain.

For the first time in the history of such litigation, an order of arrest was granted by the court, and the principal offender was lodged by the U. S. Marshal in the Federal house of detention in N. Y. It was heretofore assumed, that because criminal proceedings are not available under the Copyright Act, that the copyright proprietor's only remedy was by way of a money judgment.

However, Abeles caused the arrest of Joseph Krug, doing business as A.F.N. Record Co., under Civil Rule 12 of the U. S. Southern District Court. The arrest was made in the action instituted by the widow of Glenn Miller as co-plaintiff with Shapiro-Bernstein, Gershwin Pub. Corp., Edward B. Marks Music, Miller Music, Lewis Music and Mutual Music against

There's no getting away from disk pluggers. Al Trilling, record librarian at WNEW, N.Y., thought he was due for a respite when he got a call for jury duty two weeks ago, but found out differently when he was assigned to the same jury box as Arnold Meyers, platter promotion man for Mercury Records.

Meyers was able to get in his pitches without any opposition from rival pluggers.

Col Brass Blow Hot As Pitchmen on New 'CR' Platter for Dealers

A hot-shot salesman joins Columbia Records this week. The pitchman is a 12-inch LP tagged "Columbia Retailer."

The platter is an offbeat promotion to let the Col dealers in on what the boys in the homeoffice are doing. A new edition of "CR" will be cut every month for dealer consumption.

If the kickoff platter is a sample of what's to come, the dealers are in for a lot of fun. Disk features pitches for upcoming releases, spiels from Col artists and brass and a musical fillip by a newly-formed jazz combo called the Columbia Hot Masters.

The etching is emceed by label's prexy, James B. Conkling, who intros on the purpose of "CR" and promises to discuss the effect of the new price schedules on next month's edition. Other Col bigwigs in on the "sell" are veepees Goddard Lieberson and Paul J. Wexler; new sales chief Hal B. Cook; pop a&r topper Mitch Miller; masterworks boss Dave Oppenheim; and pop album head George Avakian. Guesting on the first edition are Eugene Ormandy, E. Power Biggs, George Kleinsinger, Joe Darion and Andre Kostelanetz.

The Hot Masters, however, steal the show. Combo belts out "If You Can't Play Good, Play Loud Blues" and "Ja Da" with inspiration and abandon. (The band breaks down at one point and falls into an ad lib bit. If you listen closely, you can pick up a Miller crack about Eddie Fisher, an RCA Victor crooner.)

It's a lively crew and the boys should go far. The sidemen are Col execs Jim Conkling, trumpet; Mitch Miller, oboe; Percy Faith, piano; Dave Oppenheim, baritone sax; Irv Townsend, clarinet; Gene Becker, valve trombone; Howard Scott, celeste; George Avakian, clarinet; Art Schwartz, drums, and Al Ham, bass. Debbie Ishlon, Col's publicity topper, contributes a vocal riff on "Ja Da!" She delivers with a cool verve.

Jacket sleeve is lined with plenty of info on the diskery's doings but the push is more effective in the groove. Gros.

ASCAP Sets Annual Feed

ASCAP has set its spring membership meeting and annual banquet in New York for March 29 at the Waldorf-Astoria, N. Y.

As per custom, the membership meet will be held in the afternoon for a general report on the Society's progress through the year, with the banquet and show following in the evening.

Webb Forms Pub; 'Questions' First

Hollywood, March 8.

Mark VII Music Corp., a tune-publishing company, has been formed by Jack Webb. First song, ASCAP, is "Any Questions?" cleffed by Arthur Hamilton and chirped by Peggy King on a recent "Dragnet" telefilm.

Webb has also inked the 25-year-old Hamilton to write the original numbers for "Pete Kelly's Blues," which the firm will publish and now is being lensed in New Orleans, for Warners release. Matty Matlock, clarinetist and arranger, has joined Webb's company as musical arranger on the picture.

Joint co-owners with Webb in the enterprise are J. D. Rodgers and Seymour P. Steinberg.

DECCA BACK IN ALBUM SWEEPS WITH 'ANKLES'

Decca Records jumped back into the original cast album sweepstakes this week with the pacting of "Ankles Aweigh." Tuner, skedded for an April bow on Broadway, stars Betty & Jane Kean. Score was penned by Sammy Fain and Dan Shapiro.

Decca's only other cast album plunge this season was with the revival of "On Your Toes." RCA Victor is way ahead of the field this season on legituner albums. Diskery tagged "Peter Pan," "Fanny," "The Boy Friend," "Mrs. Patterson," "Silk Stockings" and the upcoming "Damn Yankees." Label also tagged the Gean-Carlo Menotti opera, "The Saint of Bleecker Street."

Other diskeries in the 1954-55 legituner act are Columbia with "House of Flowers" and Capitol with "Plain and Fancy."

RCA Victor put Gian-Carlo Menotti's opera, "The Saint of Bleecker Street," into the groove last week. The original cast set, which covers two 12-inch LPs, will not be released, however, until October. George Marek, label's a&r head, figures it's best to wait out the summer slump before putting it on the market.

New New Orleans Disk Firm Makes Its Bow

New Orleans, March 8.

Carnival Record Co., recently organized here, bowed in the disk field with two releases Thursday (3). They are a Cajun mambo, "Let's Go," and ballad, "The Lady From New Orleans." Molly Duncan does the vocals, with Frankie Mann's Carnival band, augmented by pianist Armand Hug and trombonist Santo Pecora, two of New Orleans' top jazzmen, providing the background.

The new diskery was organized by Joe Buccola, local businessman, and plans cuttings in all fields of music, including country, rhythm and blues, dixieland and pop.

Nationwide distribution will be handed from Los Angeles by Research Craft, with exception of Louisiana, where Cosimo Matassa will be distributor.

ORCHS, DISKERS WATCH TREND

Hoofology is in a state of transition. While the kids have been flocking to the rhythm & blues beat with such dance styles as the Fish, mambo cultists have been forming splinter groups with new chile terp fashions.

The Latino styles, which have gone from tango, rumba and samba, is now undergoing another evolution with such stepping designs as the Cha-Cha-Cha and the Merengue. Latter dance is an import from the Dominican Republic, while the former is a refinement of the mambo.

Orch leaders and recording men are watching the ballrooms and dance floors closely to see which of the Latino or r&b dances take hold. Last year the Creep, imported from England, never got off the ground.

The Merengue, sometimes called the Dominican One Step, consists of spot turns and hip-controlled steps while the Cha-Cha-Cha is slower version of the mambo. The Cha-Cha-Cha has taken the lead in the Latino field, especially in such big Spanish communities as New York, Chicago and San Francisco. The Americans are still clinging to the mambo but they have been known to follow the Latinos.

Perez Prado, south-of-the-border orch leader who was effective in spreading the mambo gospel in the U. S. last year, has switched to the Cha-Cha-Cha kick. He's dubbing it with La Culeta, however, but it's basically the same thing. Prado has added four strings to his band and has softened his arrangements for the Cha-Cha-Cha addicts. According to Herman Diaz, RCA Victor's international division chief who cut several sides with Prado on the Coast recently, the Cha-Cha-Cha is less vulgar musically than the mambo. The new Prado will bow on wax shortly.

On the r&b end, the Fish has spread out into such other forms as the Rub and the Scrape. However, it's strictly a coke-set craze.

De Sylva Estate Sells 80,000 Capitol Shares To EMI for $1,400,000

Hollywood, March 8.

Los Angeles Superior Court has okayed the sale of 80,025 shares of common stock in Capitol Records held by the estate of George G. (Buddy) De Sylva. Electric & Musical Industries (EMI), the British company which recently negotiated for a buyout of the majority stock interest in Capitol, is picking up the stock for $1,400,437. The petition to sell was filed before the court by Mrs. Marie De Sylva, wife of the late songwriter who was one of the co-founders of the diskery.

Mrs. De Sylva's petition revealed that Glenn Wallichs, Capitol prexy, sold 49,050 shares to EMI while songwriter Johnny Mercer, another of the original investors in the wax works, sold 100,000 shares. Selling price to EMI was $17.50 a share for 248,435 shares, or more than half of the total Capitol stock issue of 476,230.

Capitol's stock upbeat is underlined by the fact that in 1950, when De Sylva died, the stock was appraised at $3.50. More recently, it was selling for $13. EMI agreed to buy at the $17.50 price with the understanding it would get a controlling interest in Capitol.

Anita Gordon to Decca

Decca Records has inked songstress Anita Gordon to an exclusive pact after picking up two masters from Stuart Hamblen on which she was featured as vocalist.

Tunes, "His Hands" and "Lonesome Like Nobody Knows," were both cleffed by Hamblen. Miss Gordon has performed on KTLA-TV in Los Angeles.

Cap Sales Leveled Off in '54 to 5% Below Alltime High; Net is 733G

Rock, Rolls & Cakes

Now oldies are being dusted off for the rhythm & blues treatment. Bob Thiele, Coral Records artists & repertoire chief, has come up with the r&b version of the 1950 hit, "If I Knew You Were Comin' I'da Baked Cake," with Eileen Barton, who clicked on the original, cutting this one too.

Songwriters Al Hoffman and Bob Merrill and publisher Bobby Mellin okayed the switch. The title of the song was changed to "How-ja-Do, How-ja-Do, How-ja-Do" in order to avoid confusion with the original.

Copyright Revise Sought in Canada

Ottawa, March 8.

On the grounds that Canada's copyright laws help build monopolies that tend to exploit the general public without much benefit to composers, and that practically all the millions of dollars collected in Canada for performances of copyrighted musical works goes out of the country, a complete overhaul of Canada's copyright legislation was called for by the Canadian Assn. of Radio & Television Broadcasters. CARTB, which represents the majority of Canada's private broadcasters (125 radio, 17 tele stations), made its demand in a brief presented to the Royal Commission investigating the copyright, patents, trade marks and industrial design laws of this country.

CARTB said private broadcasters alone paid more than $3,000,000 to the Composers, Authors & Publishers Assn. of Canada between 1941 and 1954 and it was safe to assume the bulk of this money found its way directly or indirectly into the pockets of authors, composers and publishers abroad.

With virtually all composers required to pay the cost of publishing a song in return for a 5% royalty and, sometimes, revenue from fees charged for public performances, the system resulted in monopolies by publishing firms, CARTB claimed.

CARTB also requested a "broadcasting right" whereby radio and tv stations would have exclusive rights to their productions. This would prohibit unauthorized pickup and rebroadcasting.

Zaentz Set as Sales Mgr. for Frisco Indie

San Francisco, March 8.

Saul Zaentz has been made national sales manager for the local indie jazz and folk music line, Fantasy. Zaentz, for the past year, was eastern promotion man for Clef and Norgran and prior to that served in a similar position with Mercury.

In his new setup with Fantasy, Zaentz will not only be in charge of national sales, but will also head up promotion, including relations with disk jockies.

Flynn Sings With Wife On His First Platter

London, March 8.

Errol Flynn's first disk, recorded by Philips in London, is to be issued in America on the Columbia label.

The disk is a souvenir of Flynn's first song and dance film, "Lilacs in the Spring," which he made for Herbert Wilcox last year. He sings "Lily of Laguna," and the record is backed by his wife, Patrice Wymore, with the film's theme tune, "We'll Gather Lilacs."

Hollywood, March 8.

Sales which have been rising steadily for almost five years, leveled off in 1954 at a point about 5% below the alltime high, Glenn E. Wallichs, prexy of Capitol Records Inc., reported in a letter to shareholders.

In 1954, the net income for Capitol Records Inc. and its U. S. subsidiaries was higher than in the preceding year, despite a slight decline in sales. Total sales for the year was $16,044,780, compared with $16,941,230 in 1953. Diskery's net income in 1954, after all the charges, amounted to $733,718, compared with $690,154 in 1953.

Although the profits before Federal taxes in '54 were less than in '53, lower taxes and tax adjustments brought the amount to $1.53 per common share, against $1.43 in the preceding year. The number of outstanding common shares both years was 476,230.

Net worth of the company at the end of December, 1954 totaled $5,006,244, which was equal to $10.26 per common share after allowing for preferred stock at par. The net worth of Cap increased $394,104 during that year. On March 2, Cap declared the regular quarterly dividend of 15c per share on common stock, payable March 31 to record of March 21. Also declared was the regular Cap quarterly dividend of 65c a share on the $2.60 cummulative convertible preferred stock, payable April 1 to record of March 15.

Company is presently prepping its annual stockholder report which will highlight some of the activities of the past year. The report will include a mention of their new building currently under construction in Hollywood and the establishment of Capitol's new wholly-owned Canadian distributing company. The report mentioned nothing anent the recent EMI merger with Capitol.

Be It Mambo or R&B, Reg Connelly Has 'Em But He Bets on Ballad

London music publisher Reg Connelly and his wife, Olive, arrived last Friday (4) on the S.S. United States, their first time on an American ship, and leave this weekend for Hollywood on combined business and pleasure. "What a wonderful country this is," observes Connelly. "When I I was here in September everything was mambo and now it's rhythm & blues. Luckily we seem to straddle both."

Connelly recounts that "Mambo Italiano" was a click in Britain and by coincidence he acquired "Shake, Rattle and Roll" from Atlantic Records' firm, Progressive Music, and also has "Let Me Go, Lover." However, despite the rock 'n' roll vogue in the U. S., he sees "'Melody of Love' in 1955 will be what 'Song from Moulin Rouge' was in 1953."

Another coincidence: when in the U. S. last September he raved so much about Agatha Christie's "Witness for the Prosecution" as a good Broadway bet that he was literally "dared" to invest in the U. S. production. Result: he has a hit there of another sort.

Waring Group Pulls Big $13,000 on Coast

Berkeley, Cal., March 8.

Fred Waring's touring "Pleasure Time" show pulled a big $13,000 here over the weekend in two performances, at a $3.30 top.

Playing at the Berkeley Community Theatre, with a 3,500-capacity, he grossed $8,500 Saturday night (5), with $4,600 pulled in a repeat performance the following afternoon.

Trust Fund Disk Take Off to 756G In First Half '54; Vidpic Bite Is Up

The disk industry's contributions to the Music Performance Trust Fund during the first half of last year fell off to $756,000, a sharp drop from the $915,000 shelled out by during the same half-year period of 1953. Fall in Fund's income came in face of a new agreement with the American Federation of Musicians, which called for a slightly higher scale of contributions.

However, contributions from the telepix industry rose to the Music Performance Trust Fund No. 2, a fund set up by the vidpix companies but administered by Samuel R. Rosenbaum jointly with the disk industry fund. During the first half of 1954, the vidpix producers paid $398,000 to the Fund, compared with $357,000 for the corresponding period of the previous year.

The Funds were set up by the disk and vidpix makers under terms of their pacts with the AFM. In cooperation with the AFM locals, Rosenbaum allocated coin for various free concerts in parks, hospitals, auditoriums, etc., to provide jobs for musicians over the country. Last year the Fund disbursed $1,900,000 from the disk take and about $600,000 from the vidpix take for alleviating the unemployment situation.

From 1948, when the modern funds were set up to the end of last year, Rosenbaum has administered total cash receipts of $9,926,415 from the disk and electrical transcription companies. Over $8,200,000 was spent during that period on salaries for musical performances.

According to the Fund figures on disk sales since 1950, the industry's gross has moved steadily upwards. In 1950, there were 184,000,000 disks sold at a retail value of $151,000,000; in 1951, 169,500,000 at a value of $156,400,000; in 1952, 175,800,000 disks at a value of $163,800,000; and in 1953, 183,000,000 disks at a value of $172,000,000. Sales during 1954 will not be available until June of this year.

Lavern Baker Longtermer

Atlantic Records has repacted Lavern Baker to a new longterm pact. Deal was wrapped up by Al Green, thrush's manager and owner of The Flame Bar, Detroit nitery.

Warbler hit the bigtime several months ago with her etching of "Tweedlee Dee."

Deutch, Lutz to Divvy Peer Prof. Mgr. Duties

The professional manager duties at Peer International have been divvied up between Irving Deutch and Herbert Lutz. Latter moved in last week to take over Peer's ASCAP firm, Southern Music.

Deutch will handle firm's BMI operation. He had been managing the whole Peer setup for the past couple of years. Deutch took over when Ben Selvin exited for a spot with RCA Victor's custom record division.

Lutz had been heading up his own company and at one time was associated with Fred Raphael on the Coast.

Julie Wilson to Cut Two Sets for Victor

Legit actress Julie Wilson has been inked by RCA Victor to cut two EP albums, with Hugo Winterhalter backing.

Set will be sliced before Miss Wilson hits the road with the musical, "Kismet," May 1.

Leon Navara's $1,000,000 Song Suit Vs. WB-Witmark

A complaint was filed in N.Y. Supreme Court yesterday (Tues.) by Leon Navara, veteran band performer, leader, and composer, seeking $1,000,000 damages against "Oscar" nominees Dimitri Tiomkin and Ned Washington as well as M. Witmark & Sons and Warner Bros. for alleged plagiarism of the song, "The High and the Mighty," pic title tune.

Navara complains that in 1949 he composed an original melody similar to "High and Mighty"; that in 1950 he worked with Washington, who submitted lyrics for that melody; and that in 1951 Washington released to Navara all rights in the melody with the exception of the lyrics.

Navara alleges that Tiomkin had knowledge of the fact that Navara composed the music.

In a seperate cause of action against Washington, Navara claims that he entered into an agreement wherein Washington agreed to write proposed lyrics for plaintiff's song. A third cause of action against Witmark claims that in 1949 Navara submitted and performed the musical composition for Witmar with the understanding that if the melody were used, he would be paid for it. Emil K. Ellis represents the plaintiff in his action.

Pye, Polygon In Platter Tieup

London, March 1.

Pye Radio firm, of Cambridge, whose interest in the record business has long been a matter of speculation, announced last week a tieup with the Polygon Record Co. They do not propose to market a Pye label at this stage, but may do so when they can acquire an American catalog to support their British artists.

The Polygon roster includes Eric Winstone and his orch, singers Petula Clark, Dorothy Squires and Johnny Brandon, film-actor Anthony Steel, the Radio Revellers, etc. Trumpet-star Kenny Baker is to do some special sessions for the label.

Alan Freeman, chief of the Polygon company, is now conducting the business of the Polygon Record Co. (1954), Ltd., under the Pye merger, and the straight music catalog of the Nixa Record Co. (previously acquired by Pye) also comes under his aegis.

Coral Records' musical director Dick Jacobs is hitting the road this week on a disk jockey tour of the east in behalf of his latest slice, "My Dear."

Col Names Greenspon For Technical Setup; Bachman Heads Labs

Herbert M. Greenspon has been named director of manufacturing and technical operations at Columbia Records. He'll head up all of Col's recording activities and order service functions. He'll also be responsible for the company's entire disk manufacturing operation in domestic and foreign factories.

Greenspon has been with the label for the past 20 years. He started in the disk biz in 1935 with the American Record Corp., predecessor to Columbia.

Columbia has also appointed William S. Bachman as director of engineering research and development. He'll be responsible for development of new products and recording techniques. At Col's main plant in Bridgeport, Conn., Bachman will direct product engineering involving the establishment and control of manufacturing standards for records and phonographs. He's been with Col since 1946.

ASK ASCAP TO SET UP MORE USO CAMP UNITS

The first USO Camp Shows unit of songwriters organized by ASCAP registered a click in its tour of European Armed Forces bases, with the result that similar music biz troupes may take the same route shortly. Maj. Fred Gerken, chief of the European Armed Services Entertainment Division, has already asked ASCAP to set up additional songwriter units for USO assignments.

Meantime, the first ASCAP-USO unit is due back to the U. S. in time for the Society's annual banquet at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, N. Y., March 29. The troupe consists of Mack Gordon, Abel Baer, Rube Bloom, Gerald Marks, Johnny Redmond, Lou Handman, Florrie LeVere and Bee Walker, with songstresses Fran Russell, Gogi Grant and Marion Spellman assisting.

VARIETY DISK JOCKEY POLL

This compilation is designed to indicate those records rising in popularity as well as those on top. Ratings are computed on the basis of ten points for a No. 1 mention, nine for a No. 2, and so on down to one point. Wherever possible, only records with two or more mentions are listed, even though their total points are less in some cases than those which receive only one mention. Cities and jockeys will vary from week to week to present a comprehensive picture of all sectors of the country regionally.

Arrest Marks Precedent

Krug and a group of distributors and retail dealers.

The publishers had sued Krug for infringement of their musical copyrights by the allegedly illegal manufacture and marketing of records, made from off-the-air recordings of propaganda broadcasts of the Glenn Miller orch in England during the last world war, when he was a major in the U. S. Army. The court had granted a prior application, made by Abeles on behalf of the publishers, for summary judgment against Krug, for an injunction, and for the impounding of all masters, mothers, tapes, disks and other matter for making the infringing records.

Miller Broadcasts

Krug had contended that as he could at any time serve notice under the compulsory license provision of the Copyright Act of his intention to manufacture such records under the authority thereof, that the application to impound such masters, etc., should be denied. The court, however, established the legal precedent that the masters, etc., should be impounded by the court until the payment by Krug of any money judgment which might be subsequently rendered against him. The court likewise directed Krug to produce, before a special master appointed by the court, all books and records relating to the manufacture and sale of such illegal platters in order that the publishers might be enabled to pursue their case against all concerned in the operation.

Krug failed to produce either the masters or the books and records, claiming that they were not in his possession. Upon the application of Abeles the court then granted the order of arrest. This had the desired effect and gave the publishers even more than under the original order of the court. The masters were delivered up for immediate destruction, instead of being impounded pending payment of the judgment. Krug likewise produced the essential data from which the publishers ascertained the names and addresses of all persons concerned in the illegal operation, including the designers and printers of the labels and jackets, the manufacturers of the matrices, mothers, tapes and stampers and the manufacturers, distributors and retail sellers of the records.

It is Abeles' position that while under the Copyright Act the liability of the actual manufacturers of the records may be limited to 8c a record and costs and attorneys' fees, all the other parties involved including the manufacturers of the matrices, etc., and the distributors and retail dealers are liable for the damages sustained by the plaintiffs through the sale of such illegal records. Abeles will now join all others concerned in the illegal operation as defendants. A claim will then be offered by the plaintiffs that the sale of these records, which are greatly inferior to the legitimate records and sold at a substantial reduction in price, has seriously affected the sale of the legitimate records; that the purchasers of the illegal records are led to believe that all of the off-the-air recordings of Glenn Miller are of the same inferior quality; and that this discourages the purchase thereof both of the original purchasers and by other prospective purchasers who ascertain the inferior quality of the illegal records.

Judgment of up to $50,000 will be demanded against each of these parties besides costs and attorneys' and special master's fees, regardless of the number of records manufactured or sold by each. Fox feels that this should thoroughly discourage future operations of this nature, as no distributor, retail dealer or anyone else concerned will chance the profit involved when they must face a subsequent judgment against them greatly out of proportion to any such profit.

Sock $8,900 'Birdland' Gross in Columbus

Columbus, March 8.

"Birdland 1955" grossed hugely when 3,461 persons paid $8,900 to see and hear the quadruple-starred outfit at Memorial Hall here last Wednesday (2). Promoter Ben Cowall estimates between 400 and 500 customers were turned away. "Birdland" outfit includes George Shearing, Sarah Vaughan, Count Basie and Errol Garner.

Next for Cowall is Louis Armstrong and His All-Stars, booked into Memorial Hall March 30.

M-G Etting Pic Drive for A&Rs, Jockeys, Jukes

Hollywood, March 8.

As one of its major plugging channels for the upcoming pic, "Love Me or Leave Me," the Ruth Etting biog, the Metro studios are directing its campaign to the music biz's artists & repertoire chiefs, disk jockeys and jukeboxes. Drive was opened today (Tues.), four months in advance of the pic's release, with the screening of a rough cut of the pic for a&r reps of Capitol, Columbia, RCA Victor, MGM, Decca and Coral labels.

Majority of the songs in the film score are standards and the studio expects to spark some revivals with the help of the diskery's support. Among the featured numbers are "It All Depends On You," "You Made Me Love You," "Stay On The Right Side Of The Road," "Mean To Me," "Everybody Loves My Baby," "Sam, The Old Accordion Man," "Shaking The Blues Away," "Love Me Or Leave Me," "Ten Cents A Dance," "Sing, Sing, Sing," "At Sundown," "I Cried For You," "My Blue Heaven" and "Sunday." Two new songs were written by Nicholas Brodszky and Sammy Cahn.

Doris Day, star of the pic, will have a soundtrack album of the tunes under the Columbia Records imprint.

HEATH BAND OFF ON TOUR OF AUSTRALIA

London, March 8.

The Ted Heath band left London Sunday (6) for a tour of Australia and New Zealand, the longest journey ever undertaken by a British orchestra. On eve of the flight, trombonist Jimmy Coombes was taken ill with a severe attack of influenza.

The Australian tour will open on March 11 at Sydney, followed by Brisbane, Melbourne and Adelaide. In New Zealand concerts will be given in Auckland, Hamilton, Wellington and Christchurch.

On the way home the band will visit the United States—but not to play.

Feyer's Coast 'Echoes'

Nitery pianist George Feyer is recording "Echoes of Hollywood" for Vox Productions this week. Disk will consist of a number of tunes from Coast pix, including "Easter Parade," "American in Paris," "Last Time I Saw Paris," etc. It will be released in April.

Last Feyer release was "More Paris Echoes," last Xmas.

RCA SETS SPEED MARK IN 'STOCKINGS' ALBUM

RCA Victor set a speed record over the weekend in getting its original cast album of "Silk Stockings" off the presses and to the dealers. Album was cut Sunday (6) over a 12-hour span and was distributed to dealers in less than 24 hours.

Session, supervised by Joe Carlton, label's artists & repertoire chief, and musical director Hugo Winterhalter, was cut at Victor's 24th Street studio in N. Y., where they were edited and lacquers produced. The lacquers were then sent to Victor's N. Y. and Rockaway, N. J. plants and flown to company plants in Indianapolis and Hollywood.

Tuner, which opened on Broadway Feb. 24, has a score by Cole Porter and stars Don Ameche and Hiledgarde Neff.

Playing Tags

Tony Travis, recent RCA Victor pactee, once went under the name of Travis Kent when he played the juvenile lead in the "Cisco Kid" film series.

His real name is Travis Kleefeld, which he uses in operating a construction company in Los Angeles.

Leahy Quits Majar A&R Berth; Diamond on Sales

The artists and repertoire chief picture, which had been comparatively quiet for the past year, was shaken up last week when Joe Leahy ankled the a&r berth at Majar Records. Diskery's sales manager Stan Borden also moved out in the reshuffling.

Majar topper Connie De Marria currently is interviewing candidates for the a&r spot. He expects to name the new chief before the end of the week. Taking over the sales spot will be Morris Diamond, who'll also handle company's promotion.

U.S. Platter Hit Boosting Pic In W. Germany

Frankfurt, March 1.

In an unusual pre-film record promotion, the Don Cornell disk of "Hold My Hand" from the RKO film, "Susan Slept Here," has become one of the top U.S. records in West Germany. Platter, recorded by Coral in the States, has been released here by Polydor (an affiliate of Deutsche Gramophone). It is used mostly for home playing, since there are few jukeboxes in West Germany.

Record has had an outstanding success here, partly due to intensive playing on American Forces Network disk jockey shows and much playing on the German radio stations, where it has become a pop request number.

"Susan Slept Here" will be an RKO release at the end of March in Germany, and has increased bookings due to the popularity of the song.

Merc Brass Back to Chi After Distrib Briefing

Mercury Records brass, prexy Irving B. Green, and sales chief Morry Price, returned to their Chicago headquarters this week after a 21-day trek visting distributors in key territories. Merc toppers briefed distribs on upcoming product and gabbed about the new price schedule.

Joe Martin, newly-appointed eastern manager for the label, joined the duo on the last leg of the trip. Martin returned to his New York desk Monday (7).

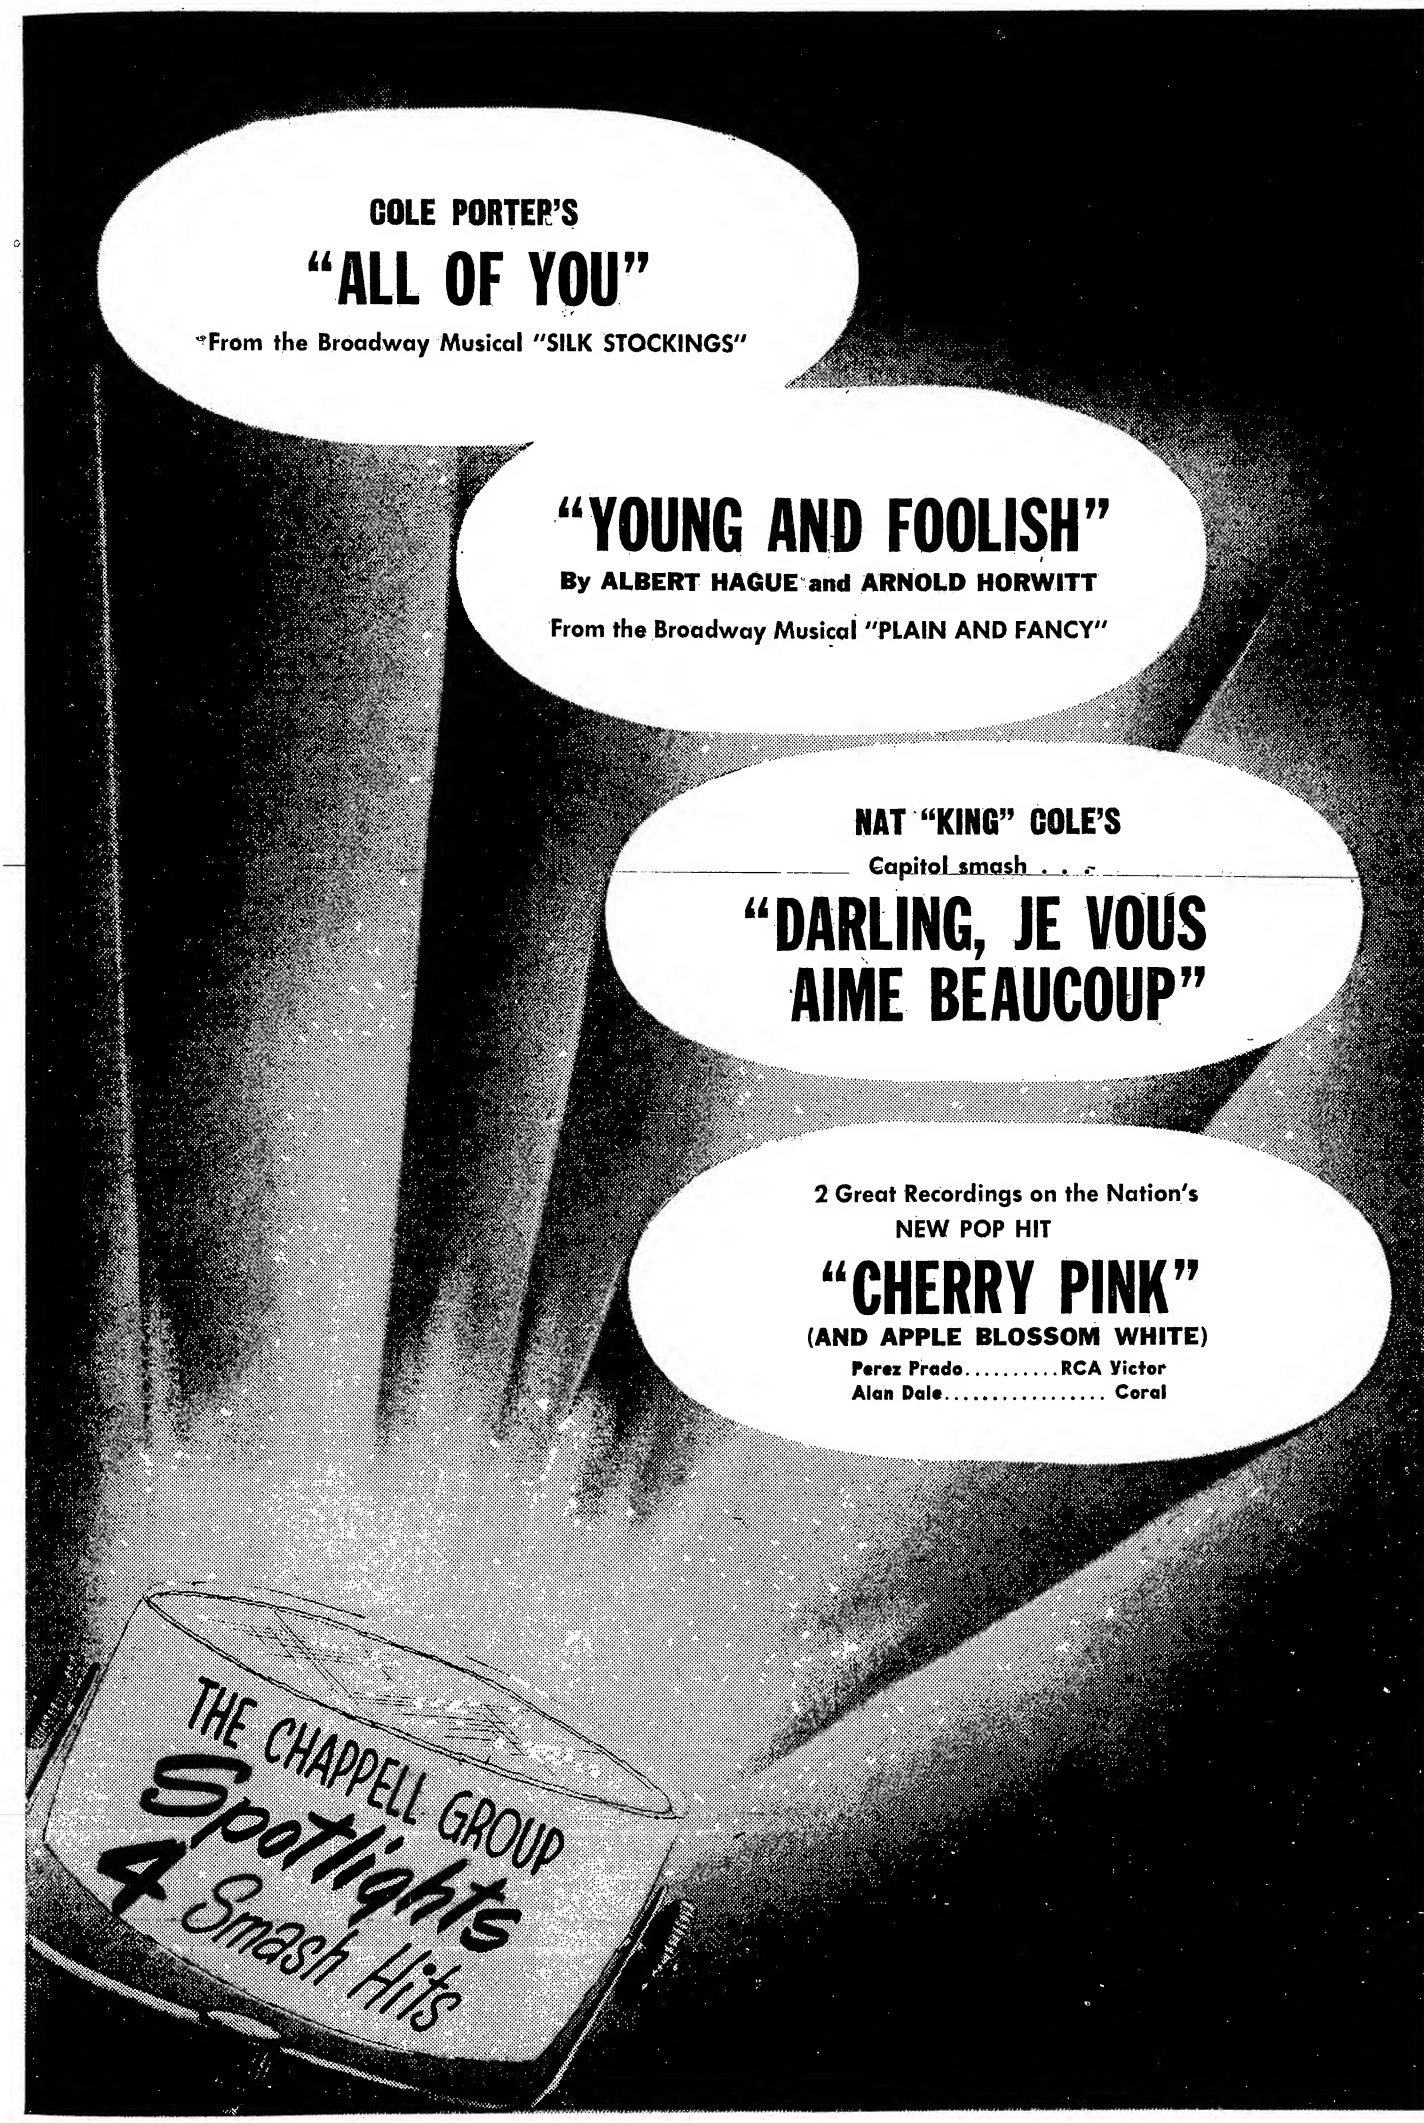
up of a fact-finding commission to study the whole Copyright Act question and, at the same time, he's asking the House to support the Kilgore amendment. Supporters of the Kilgore bill are frankly not happy over the proposal to set up a fact-finding commission, since they fear it would involve a long delay for any concrete legislation.



ASCAP, meantime, is urging its membership to buttonhole their Congressmen in order to get action on the Kilgore bill. For the past few years, the Society has been laying down a heavy barrage against the jukebox exemption, pointing out that the coin machines are the only users of music for a profit who do not have to pay licensing fees.

air. Artistic merit just does not come into it. And most amazingly, the more frequently-given justification offered for the production of this rubbish is that such stuff is demanded by the market-dominating teenagers. The spectacle of a multi-million dollar business predicating its policies and actions on the preference of a merely clamorous element of the public is very sad—such a tail should never be allowed to wag this multi-million dog.

Noise-Makers

Juveniles are a noise-making group and their claims may, in a limited sense be argued in the case of certain areas. There is, however, a fallacy in arguing that because certain teenagers go for lewd lyrics, ergo all teenagers must be fed lewd lyrics. This type of argument might be expected from the wilder dime-crazy operators, but intelligent DJ's know better. On this basis it could equally well be argued that because certain teenagers are juvenile delinquents therefore all teenagers are JD's. It must be clear to anyone that there are millions of decent kids throughout the U. S.

There is another aspect to it all and one of national importance: records made in the U. S. have a vast distribution all over the world and it reflects no honor or credit on this country, and indeed gives a very false and damaging picture of America in countries whose only knowledge of the United States comes from the quick impression gained through a record or a film. As the present time when vast sums of taxpayers' money are being expended in making known the American way of life to the uninformed in distant lands whose friendship may be needed, the dissemination of such low-grade "art" is deplorable and contrary to the best interests of this country and democracy.

The responsibility for this state of affairs must fall on the recording company which permits its business to be fouled by marketing filth. It also falls equally heavily on the DJ who is actually the liaison or link between the record company and the public. There has always been a clear impression that disk jockeys are "engaged in salesmanship with entertainment as audience bait, their main function being the selling of merchandise such as refrigerators, household appliances, tv sets, furniture, and general domestic goods and their pitch has invariably been to the home-owner and the housewife with money to spend. Surely it has occurred to them that by playing this "rock 'n roll" stuff they may lose out on their market? And surely the kids credited with demanding these numbers do not constitute the market the DJ is aiming at?

Sponsor Checks

Sponsors who detect a falling-off in the pulling-power of their radio advertising should check the material offered on their programs. It could be that the real people whose spending power they are trying to reach are not listening even though the DJ may have hundreds of requests for something or other. Disk jockeys are now so influential that they can create a taste for better words and music instead of breezing along on any trend that shows; they can be moulders of taste instead of fauning on their public in the synchronic manner that some adopt. Even now the record companies are issuing many beautiful records that are sent out to DJ's but never played and there is the vast field of recorded music already available.

It is therefore up to the broadcasting authorities, networks and independent stations to curb the playing of these dubious records. Otherwise public opinion may do so and once public opinion is aroused its action could be so drastic as to impose onerous conditions, as for instance possible tying-in censorship on disk material with local vice laws which could make it very difficult for jukebox operators and record companies to do business in such areas. The jukebox operators who purchase thousands of records for their circuits have a big responsibility, too, not only to the music business but to the youth of America and what is bad for the youth of America is also bad for the youth of England and other countries where English is spoken or sung.

Sez R&B Not Dirtier, Only Less Hypocritical

New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

I enjoyed your "leer-ical" dissertation, but take portable on lap to register protest.

It seems to me that, as far as I can remember, practically all lyrics, except "Barney Google," have been dirty, with the carriage trade practitioners—Porter, Hart, etc.— contributing their share.

What, unless you're innocent-minded, could be dirtier than: "You Took Advantage of Me," "Heat Wave," "All of You" (or, for that matter, "All of Me), "I've Got You Under My Skin," "Temptation," "We Kiss in the Shadows" (elegant equivalent of "Slippin' Around), "The Night Is Young and You're So Beautiful" (as open a proposition as I ever heard), "Let's Do It," "Body and Soul," "Love for Sale," "Dancing in the Dark" ("we're waltzing in the wonder of why we're here"), "I Said No," "Small Hotel" (it says "bridal suite" but the presumption is merely that he intended to register as Mr. and Mrs.), "Everything I Have Is Yours," "Night and Day" ("under the hide of me"), "Paradise," and "Baby, It's Cold Outside," to name just a few.

Even as ethereal an ode as Oscar Hammerstein's "All The Things You Are" ("that moment divine when all the things you are are mine"), is a refined "All of You" ("the north and south of you").

Actually, the object of all leerists, outside of Gilbert, has always been to get as close to the Main Subject as possible, without stating it and/or "cleaning it up" by marrying 'em o in the last line.

The current crop of rock-'n'-rollers are not beating around the bush, but without condoning 'em, it's at least a less hypocritical approach. Al Stillman.

WINS

chief WINS r&b exponent.

Bob Smith, program topper for WINS, explained separately that his station was not barring any records from the station. He said that two recent Haymes songs (published by Peer International and etched by Julius LaRosa for Cadence) would be monitored, and rejected only if they weren't up to snuff. "I single out no station or personality," Smith stated.

Haymes declared that Freed told young listeners that the former had called them "juvenile delinquents." Smith, speaking for Freed, said that this was untrue, but that Freed had read the Haymes-to-Kenny letter on the air, and the kids reacted without interpretation of this sort by Freed.

Though the Mirror note was aimed directly at r&b, Haymes said that on his WCBS shows he did not single out any radio station or emphasize the faults of r&b over any other type of "bad music." The letter to Kenny called r&b "poor music, badly recorded, with lyrics that are at best in poor taste . . . and at worst obscene . . . This trend in music (and I apologize for calling it 'music') is affecting the ideas and the lives of our children . . . Kids are pretty hep. I know that they can be taught to develop a discerning ear." He explained that every Saturday he planned to "compare good recordings with bad."

tions will screen the "nervous" songs; i.e., those whose lyric content may be in doubt. One blackball will bring it to a final top echelon committee. This panel screening, of course, is on top of the normal clearance proceedings presided over by BMI music editor Milton Rettenberg and his aide, Al Feilich, who pass only on the lyrics.

Burton, however, looks upon this technique as a test proposition of dubious values. "A lead sheet is a cold thing at best," he observes, "and what a dirty interpretation can do to the most innocuous wordage is something VARIETY has discussed at length. What would you say with a song like 'John and Marsha?' When we got it, it was just an instrumental, submitted by Capitol Records' own Beechwood Music firm. But let's say it even had the two title names in the lead-sheet—how could we conceive that it would get the interpretation that it did?"

Burton thinks that the rock 'n' roll stuff is the problem also of two other show biz agencies—the Record Industry Assn. of America and the National Assn. of Radio & Television Broadcasters. If the RIAA can't police the diskery firms on what to wax and what not to record, then the NARTB should alert its local station-members that the deejays, program managers, et al. have the obligation of not broadcasting dubious material.

This brings him to what yardstick should obtain because the midnight deejay is obviously more rhythm-minded than the a.m. or early evening platter chatterer.

Burton goes into it still more with songs like "Love for Sale" and "Doing What Comes Naturally" which might now be considered "standards," hence cleared. Or even the current pops (ASCAP-licensed, he points up) such as "Teach Me Tonight" ("the ABC and the XYZ of it") and "Make Yourself Comfortable, Baby" ("take off your shoesies, dear, and loosen up your tie").

BMI, in all events, has undertaken a self-policing system, "but all we can clear," says Burton, "are the new things. While BMI is assuming this responsibility I'm not sure that it's not the problem of the stations disseminating these platters on the local level and the responsibility lies with the disk jockeys." (This was in answer to the Larry Finley—Station KFWB, Hollywood—statement that the responsibility was with the diskeries; see Editorial.)

Burton goes further, that a trombone or a hot sax lick, with a certain word accent, could give even an inocuous and "okayed" lyric a different connotation.

In fact, he adds, such as the shifting clues of slanguage and public attitudes that "dig me later," "in the groove," "schmo" and kindred wordage might be tabu, in another era, but under present standards are accepted as part of the American idiom.

Chi Branch Demands Sweeping AGVA Changes; More Local Powers Sought

Chicago, March 8.

Members of the American Guild of Variety Artists' Chicago branch executive committee have organized themselves into a group called AGVA Re-Vamping Committee and are proposing sweeping changes in the existing AGVA constitution. Proposed changes are designed to secure greater degree of self-government for local branches, including election of their regional director, and increasing number of delegates to national conventions. Also, it's proposed that the office of national administrative secretary be an elective one.

It appears that the proposed constitutional changes originate with local partisans of Ernie Fast, Midwest regional director, whose tenure here seems somewhat shaky as result of recent national AGVA changes which saw the ousting of administrative secretary Jack Irving.

Newly-formed committee is presently circulating a petition detailing proposed constitutional amendments among local membership, and soliciting support from other branches throughout the country. Strategy is to get the proposals considered at the national AGVA convention in June.

Local Autonomy

One amendment would have each branch elect its own officers, including branch manager, president, recording secretary, financial secretary, treasurer, three trustees, and not less than five members who together with officers would constitute the branch executive committee. Presently the branch manager is appointed by the national board and branch members elect an executive committee. Under this amendment each branch would collect dues and remit sum of $3.60 per member quarterly to the national office. Dues in the Chicago area are currently $9 per quarter. It is assumed the $5.40 per member remaining under local control would be used to operate the local branch. Same amendment would have membership of local branches elect the regional directors for a four-year term.

Another proposal would give each area office one convention delegate for every 200 members or major portion thereof. Also, regional directors would possess one convention vote as ex-officio delegate, and each geographical area office would have one other convention delegate in addition to regional director.

Election of the national administrative secretary, now appointed by the national board, would be by ballot of the entire AGVA membership, according to another amendment. Each candidate would be nominated by a petition signed by at least 100 members.

ALL-SEPIA REVUE SET FOR DOWN UNDER TOUR

Hollywood, March 8.

An all-sepia revue is being packaged by Dave Gould for a tour of Australia over the Celebrity Circuit come May. Troupe will tee off the safari May 21 at the Palladium in Sydney for eight weeks.

Eight weeks at Princess Theatre, in Melbourne; four weeks, Majestic, Adelaide, and 12 weeks through New Zealand follow.

Heidt's Hefty 45G In 6-Day Roadshow Tour

Chicago, March 8.

Horace Heidt's roadshow tour through Dixie cities, in conjunction with his Swift & Co. NBC telecast, "Show Wagon," racked up a hefty $45,261 for six days in Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi towns.

Here's how the six-day gross breaks down: New Orleans, Feb. 26, $11,500; Baton Rouge (27), $4,193; Longview, Tex. (28), $8,098.60; Shreveport, March 1, $7,156.80; Monroe, La. (2), $6,292.80; Jackson, Miss. (3), $8,032.60.

Heidt also played a benefit, netting $20,000, for the Houston Blue Bird Circle Children's Clinic Feb. 23.

Pitt Nitery Inks Comics To Wholesale Booking

Pittsburgh, March 8.

Fisher & Marks, nitery comedians, have struck gold here at the Vogue Terrace. On strength of a recent week-end showing at the 1,100-seat theatre-restaurant on outskirts of town, team has been signed by Tom McCune, who owns the big room, for four two-week engagements over the next year, the first of them beginning the end of April.

Comics have played Vogue Terrace before on several occasions, but never clicked the way they did on their last visit. That prompted McCune to put a noose on them. Deal was set for Fisher & Marks through George Claire, who books the spot.

Berg As Interim AGVA Counsel

Harold F. Berg, who handles legal affairs for the Associated Actors & Artistes of America, has been named counsel for the American Guild of Variety Artists. Appointment, on a temporary basis, was made last week by the interim committee handling the union's affairs since the resignation of Jack Irving. Appointment is to be ratified by the convention, which will take place in New York in June.

The interim committee, comprising Tom Melody, Joe Campo and Dewey Barto, is still studying the union situation, but has not yet made any findings public. They are looking into most facets of the operation.

Each member of the interim committee has already made a declaration that they are not candidates for the post of national administrative secretary. So far, no candidates have been unearthed. There have been some reports of internal bickering on the committee, with attempt by one member to show himself strong man in the situation. However, this has been denied, as all decisions are being made by the committee instead of by an individual.

Name Acts Jack Up Take For Rural Conn. Eatery

Wright's Theatre Restaurant, Plainville, Ct., which has been, on a name diet for the past month, has jacked up grosses considerably. Spot, located about 12 miles outside of Hartford, has pacted Christine Jorgensen to open tonight (Wed.), The Gaylords, March 16; Bill Haley and the Comets, April 20, and Louis Armstrong (tentatively pencilled in) April 27.

Nitery has talent four days a week.

Guesters Help Kaycee To Record Auto Show

Kansas City, March 8.

Nearly 200,000 persons turned out for the annual Auto Show which closed a nine-day run in the Exhibition Hall of Municipal Auditorium Sunday (6). Vaude talent included songstress Mindy Carson, Victoria Sherry and orch leader Roland Fiore, with long list of guest p.a.'s including Jack Carson, Groucho Marx, Bert Parks, William Lundigan, Julia Meade, Betty Skelton and others.

Customers paid $1 top, with a 75c matinee charge highest rates charged at any auto show or exhibition in recent years. Record attendance is explained by the big list of guest names, plus unusual run of hoopla given to show by Kansas City Star.

Line Renaud's Coast Bow

Hollywood, March 8.

Gus Lampe, director of entertainment at the Ambassador Hotel, has inked Line Renaud, French chirp currently at the Waldorf-Astoria, N. Y., to headline a three-week engagement beginning March 23, at the Cocoanut Grove.

Date marks Miss Renaud's Coast debut.

Legiters Moving Into N. Y. Eatery Mgt. Field

The restaurant business is enlisting legit personnel. In recent months a producing duo, a theatrical agent and an actor-singer have moved into the eatery field, all strictly on a class basis. They're all operating dining spots in New York's plush eastside.

Latest to get in on the cuisine kick is Ray Shaw, who appeared in "Wish You Were Here" on Broadway and toured with "Guys and Dolls." He's now getting menu billing instead of program credits, with an eatery in his name located opposite the Copacabana. Restaurant was previously run by the Latino bandleader, Pancho.

Several weeks ago talent agent Kenneth Later opened the Patio and prior to that, Broadway producers Rita Allen and Archie Thomson took over the defunct Gogi's LaRue, changing its tag to Nino's LaRue. All three places offer entertainment.

Nino's provides dance music, while the Patio has Gleb Yellin and his roaming violins playing for dinner and alternating later in the evening with La Fronton Rhumbas Shaw's entertainment includes song deliveries by himself and Joe Costa, plus music by songwriter-pianist Benny Martini. Spot also has Carole Bennett at the keyboard on Monday nights.

Cobra Death Rare In Snakedancers

Princess Naja (Mrs. Frieda Hoxter), 25, died Sunday (6) as a result of a snakebite from one of the two cobras she used in her dance act. She was bitten during her performance Friday night in a Baltimore nitery, Billie's Club.

Mrs. Hoxter, who was born in Germany, was placed in an iron lung in St. Joseph's Hospital in that city. Poison had affected her respiratory system and had she lived, she might have had to spend the rest of her life in an iron lung. Police ordered her snakes sent to the zoo.

Generally, most reptiles used by snakedancers are fixed. Bulk of them are obtained from the Snake King, Brownsville, Tex., and are ready for action since the poison has been extracted from their system. It's possible that the cobras used by Mrs. Hoxter were imported from Germany and hadn't been fixed.

Many snakedancers have been bitten from time to time, but aside from the immediate pain of being penetrated by the fangs, no permanent effects are suffered. Occasionally, the American Guild of Variety Artists is called upon to adjudicate a case involving snakedancers. There's the record of a Dallas nitery being put on the carpet by a terper, whose reptile died after three days in the cafe.

Operator paid off the snakedancer for the three days, but the terper felt that she should get the full week, since it was no fault of hers that the slithering performer had died during the run. Union board ruled that it wasn't the fault of the operator, either, and besides, she hadn't trained an understudy to replace the snake in the event of a mishap to the animal. Consequently, the three days' pay was sufficient, union ruled.

Sole Milwaukee Burley House Under Bulldozer

Milwaukee, March 8.

The town's sole burley house bows to the demolition squad this week, to be replaced by a parking lot. Charley Fox, Empress operator, and a burlesque theatre man here for 40 years, is reported angling for another spot, though certain industry folk seee the death of burley in Milwaukee with the Empress shuttering.

The Empress has featured the bulk of the top strippers, including Gypsy Rose Lee, Lili St. Cyr and Margie Hart. Most of the better comics worked the Empress once, including Jack Pearl, Bert Lahr, Leon Errol, Abbott & Costello and Fanny Brice.

Other flesh houses in the burley heyday here were the Gayety and the Star.

Nevada, Riviera Get State OKs As Gamblers Vamp; Thunderbird On Spot

By BOB CLEMENS

Las Vegas, March 8.

The State Tax Commission last week okayed three of the plush new hotels on the Strip in Las Vegas—one of the licenses granted is provisional—and all three hotels declared they plan gala openings within 30 days.

Approved by the Commission were the Royal Nevada and Riviera Hotels. The Desert Spa, in gaining provisional sanction, may actually open sooner than the other pair of hotels, if it can meet financial conditions laid down by the Commission. The Spa must reach agreement with its creditors, provide a $200,000 bankroll and pay off the interests of Sol Gershenhorn and Fred Weichman, Los Angeles men who were found unacceptable by the Commission for Nevada gambling licenses. The Spa has been ready to open since Dec. 15, when the structure was completed.

The Royal Nevada partners laid down their own conditions which the Commission accepted. They agreed to repay $200,000 to Los Angeles hotelman Frank Fishman over a 21-month period. The Commission earlier had ordered removal of Fishman and Florida gamblers Herbert Manheim and Sam Miller from the license application. Miller and Manheim thereupon sold their interests to the remaining partners, who are Albert B. Moss and Roberta Mae Simon, both of St. Louis; Herman E. Kohen, Miami attorney; Barnett Rosenthal and Joe Liebman, Miami businessmen.

Licensed for the Riviera were David and Myer Gensberg, of Beverly Hills; R. H. Bailey of New York City; Arthur (Harpo) Marx and Gummo Marx of Beverly Hills; Jack Goldman and Murray Saul of Miami Beach, and Harry Robbins of Beverly Hills.

Announcing approval of licenses for these hotels, the Commission also warned new ops that its enforcement staff has been ordered to pay close attention to the men who will be hired as casino executives.

New Frontier Snarl

In other action by the state tax body: The new Flamingo partners okayed included Tony Martin and Dr. Stanley Immerman of Beverly Hills. Actor George Raft has been deferred.

Last month's lengthy hearing into alleged undisclosed interests in the Last Frontier was shelved when it was disclosed all of the partners with the exception of 20% owner Beldon Katleman are selling out. The agency deferred action on a license application from the proposed new owners—Irving J. Leff, Maurice H. Friedman and Stanley S. Leeds. This group seeks a license to permit the opening of the New Frontier under their aegis

N. Y. Staffers Buttress Chi Wm. Morris Office

Chicago, March 8.

Local office of the William Morris Agency has added two new staffers sent out from New York, Howard Riley and Frank Greenfield. Riley will handle teevee sales and service national ad agencies headquartered in Chicago. Prior to his association with William Morris, Riley had headed the television department at J. Walter Thompson in New York.

Greenfield will deal in diversified acts, concentrating on club dates and expanding the Morris agency's local coverage in this field.

It's Curtains Now For Pitt Carousel

Pittsburgh, March 8.

Curtain dropped here last week on what was once one of Pittsburgh's most successful night club operations, the Carousel. Jackie Heller and his brothers, Sol and Bill Heller, originally opened the room shortly after the end of World War II, and it was an immediate click. Things started to go downhill a couple of years ago, however, and last summer the Carousel was converted into a straight eatery called My Brothers Place.

In the meantime, Sol Heller had become the sole operator, with Jackie's departure for New York to work for Alan Gale at latter's nitery in the Capitol Hotel; Bill's decision to enter the bakery and delicatessen business for himself and the withdrawal of a cousin and part-owner, Monty Jacobson, to go into hotel management. After a good start, trade began to fall off at My Brothers Place, creditors moved in, and a bankruptcy sale notice was posted.

Nobody knows anything about the future of the room, but it isn't very likely to become another nitery, and Sol Heller's plans are up in the air, too.

Tom Fletcher's Book On 'The Negro in Show Biz'

One of the most intensive and resourceful research jobs on the history of the Negro in the entertainment world has been turned out by Tom Fletcher in his "100 Years of the Negro in Show Business" (Burdge, $4). Unfortunately, Fletcher died Oct. 13, 1954, at 82, just before the book came out but his work done, he can rest in peace with a posthumus record of achievement behind him. There are many pearls of memorabilia in these 337 pages of which there are 106 devoted to photos of stars, posters, minstrel shows, their programs that in days gone by were a sign of first-class entertainment.

Among the items that are outstanding are the incidents telling of the White Rats; the Stealaway, where the first minstrel shows were given; the Clef Club, first Negro orchestra to play Carnegie Hall (N. Y.) at the turn of the century; the Bert Williams and Bill Robinson chapters, particularly the latter, who got his name of "Bojangles" from a bartender. Other chapters include "The Cake Walk," Ernest Hogan; "Ragtime and Coon Songs," Florence Mills, W. C. Handy, "The Kids Grow Up," particularly as it relates to ASCAP; and "From Then—Until Now."

In the chapter on James Bland it is interesting to note that he, and not Stephen Foster, wrote "Carry Me Back to Old Virginia." There are many interesting facets about the colored composers who have not been given their due credits over the years and which this book establishes correctly for the record.

Unfortunately, the book could be edited and tightened considerably. There are words without music which have lost their charm, and where references such as "at this writing" dates the book. All in all, however, it is a monumental task that makes for an invaluable addition to books on show business.

BMI NIXES REBATE ON ALL-ASCAP 'FOLLIES'

The current edition of "Ice Follies," arena operators discovered, had an all-ASCAP score and none from the competitive BMI. As a result, they made inquiry to BMI for a rebate on its annual fee.

However, the licensing society nixed the idea. It was explained to various auditorium managers that the payment to the organization is a licensing fee permitting them to use any and all BMI music during the term of the license. Fact that they don't avail themselves of that privilege, it said, doesn't entitle them to any refund.

Ontario Aud. Owners Elect Way as Prez

J. W. Way, operator of The Highlands, Galt, Ont., has been named president of the Auditorium Owners and Operators Assn. of Ontario. O. Button of the Wondergrove, Hamilton, was named veepee.

Elected as directors of the group were J. M. Anderson, Brant Inn, Burlington; H. Law, Arena, London; W. Laidlaw, Top Hat, Toronto; Gerald Dunn, Dunn's Pavillion, Bala; William White, Palace Pier, Toronto, and S. G. Simpson, Masonic Auditorium, Toronto.

Industrial Shows at Factory, Away From Mid-City, Newest Gimmick

The field of industrial shows has become more than just a club date or a one-nighter. With the blue-chip firms spending tremendous amounts on conventions, upon which are pegged the sales campaigns for an entire year, industrialists are consulting show bizites in increasingly greater numbers.

The business world is spending greater amounts on talent, music and scenic effects. In most cases the results have paid off handsomely for the business firm.

One of the more unusual assignments in this field came two weeks ago when the Masback Hardware Co. in New York decided to shy away from centre-city hotels and stage the show at its own downtown warehouse. Purpose, according to Ralph Langson, firm's veepee, was to show the representatives and buyers its own facilities, and at the same time to create sufficient interest for buyers to remain in that area during the entire convention.

Beguiling the Femmes

Harry A. Gourfain, who formerly produced the stageshows at the Strand Theatre, N. Y., was called in by Herman Fialkoff, who was booking the talent. Problems involved were to steer clear of the liquor department, of the buyers, provide interest for the ladies so that they wouldn't drag the husbands away from business for a shopping spree, and still create activity. Consequently, Gourfain created restaurant facilities, which in the evening became a night club, and staged shows in that spot.

In order to keep the femmes interested during the day so that they wouldn't be bored with the proceedings, a no-man's land was created with femme entertainers like strolling players, palm-readers, tealeaf experts and the like purveying their wares in various booths. Maneuver was singularly successful and this diverted the wives long enough to permit their husbands to transact their business with minimum interference from the distaff side.

Thinking by some industrial firms in this direction is to hold conventions and salesmeetings away from centre-city hotels, according to Gourfain. Some oldline companies feel that the expense of midtown facilities is too much. Parking costs are sometimes too high to explain to the homeoffices. Consequently, they'd like to have the hotels used as a lodging place only and get the buyers and sales staff away from the midtown area where most deals can be consummated at a minimum cost.

Petrillo Sees Cafe Tax Lift Bringing U. S. More Coin; Seeks UN Orch

Washington, March 8.

Relief from the 20% bite on nitery tabs and creation of a United Nations Orchestra were recommended to President Eisenhower Friday (5) by James C. Petrillo.

The AFM prexy told the U. S. prexy that elimination of the night club tax would promote greater employment among musicians, entertainers, etc., and would bring the Government more revenue than it now receives from the tax.

Purpose of the orchestra, he explained, is to counteract Russian propaganda that we are "merely gum-chewing salesmen intent only in pursuit of the dollar."

Petrillo would not disclose the President's reaction to the tax cut bid, but he told newsmen Mr. Eisenhower sounded very interested in the proposal for a United Nations Orchestra. There was no explanation of how the group would be recruited—whether it would be international, or would be an American orchestra carrying an international title.

12th Floor Nitery in New $2,000,000 Hotel

Honolulu, March 1.

Waikiki Biltmore hotel, a $2,000,000 investment, formally was opened for business last week with Hawaiian ceremonies although it's been housing guests for several weeks. Hotel is owned by Belle Haven Realty Co., a holding firm of Joseph Greenbach Sr. & Sons, who also operate hotels and resorts in California.

From a nitery standpoint, Biltmore's major innovation is a 12th-story spot called Top of the Isle, which seats 200. Eddie Lani Spencer and his Top of the Islanders head the first bill, with Spencer in on a one-year contract.

LOMBARDO'S 'NIGHTS' TO TOUR 35 ARENAS IN FALL

Hollywood, March 8.

Tour of 35 arenas starting September has been set for Guy Lombardo's production of "Arabian Nights," which played Jones Beach, N. Y., last summer and repeats this summer, according to Sol Shapiro, of the William Morris Agency, who returned east after lining up dates throughout the country.

Takeoff will be at the Civic Arena, Rochester, N. Y., Sept. 13. Leon Leonidoff again will stage and direct the show, which will carry a cast around 75. The George Marion Jr. book and Carmen Lombardo and John Jacob Loeb songs of last summer will be updated for the '55 production.

Proser to Handle Shows For Vegas Interracial

Hollywood, March 8.

Monte Proser has signed as floor-show producer and talent buyer for the Moulin Rouge. Las Vegas' first large hotel aiming at interracial patronage. Shows will be all-Negro.

Rouge, proprietors expect the Nevada State Tax Commission to hold a hearing within two weeks on spot's application for a gambling license, and once that hurdle is cleared, plans are to open soon afterwards.

Heat's On Heavy in Calumet But Chi's Beset By Dearth of Peelers

Chicago, March 8.

Chicago, for years a stripper's haven, is now seriously beset by a dearth of peelers. The local American Guild of Variety Artists office receives from eight to 10 calls a day from strip ops scraping the barrel for peeling talent. It's estimated that the town and environs could easily employ another 100 strippers.

Calumet City, a South Side suburb, specializes in skin joints and represents the gals' richest sources of work. Biz there has been hard hit by a two-year feud between the joint owners and AGVA, just ended, and the primitive beginnings of law enforcement. Last week, sheriff's police raided two spots in Cal City and pinched two girls and three men for disorderly conduct, a blanket charge intended to cover a multitude of sins. The recently-elected Cook County sheriff, Joseph Lohman, ex-U. of Chicago criminology prof, sounds and acts like he means to enforce the law and has directed regular raids on gambling joints and stripperies, closing a couple in a few instances. The AGVA feud, stricter police supervision and the long trip from Chicago to Cal City tend to keep the girls away. There has been a migration to livelier joints in Milwaukee and Hurley, Wis.

Clark Street Blues

In the Windy City itself, most peeler parlors are concentrated on North Clark St. There's been a downbeat on the stem the past several years, with Mayor Marti Kennelly holding the wild life somewhat in check. Things got so bad in the past two months, an upshot of a political feud between the mayor and the Democratic machine, that four peeleries closed down.

Now that the machine candidate, Dick Daley, has won the primary, however, the four joints re-opened on the strength of the operators' opinion that Daley is as good as in and will run a wide-open town. This may be the case; if so, Chicago may win back the peelers' favor and North Clark will once again resound with the delicately muted sounds of snapping G-strings.

Govt. Tax Compromise Points Up Depression In Buffalo Nitery Biz

Buffalo, March 8.

If anyone doubts depression in local night club biz, they can now point to the Internal Revenue Service for final proof. In accepting a compromise of $12,000 against an assessment of $40,261 involving taxes, interest and penalties for the years 1944 through 1947 assessed against Mrs. Lillian M. Bain, operator of McVan's nitery, the Internal Revenue report stated that the $12,000 offer made by Mrs. Bain was "the best that could be had under the circumstances," and pointed out that she owned only the furnishings and equipment valued at $4,500.

"Business has not been good," the report continued, "and there is no sign that it will get better." An agent who visited the club one week night reported that there were "more entertainers than customers" present. Part of the $12,000 settlement was contributed by Mrs. Bain's sister and the remainder by her attorney, who was unidentified but described as "an old friend."

Chicago, Chi

"Joyce Bryant, sheath-gowned sepia thrush with slinky curves, displays pleasing pipes and adroitly uses her obvious charms to showcase same. Relying heavily on the faves for a filmery audience, femme opens with "Everything I've Got Belongs to You," to get things off to a bouncy start. Following with "You Made Me Love You," Miss Bryant almost whispers the tune in a bid for hushed audience attention. She alternates the uptunes with slower numbers regularly. Gal goes off to a good mitt.

JOYCE BRYANT
Chicago Theatre, Chicago

The action-packed voice of Joyce Bryant took the footlights of the Chicago Theatre this week and *proceeded to start what might be another Chicago fire. There's no doubt about it, this gal has an appealing act, her voice and her method of selling a song are dynamite-packed. Several males in the audience, unable to control their zest, shouted loudly as they "received the message."

Colony, London

London, Feb. 22.

Eugenie Baird, Felix King & Don Carlos Orchs; $5 minimum.

The booking of Eugenie Baird for her cabaret bow in London is the first fruit of the recent talent prowl undertaken by Colony operator Harry Morris. He's picked well. She's a highly presentable girl, quite a looker, nicely turned out and has a wide variety of acceptable material. Unless the arctic weather which has come to London keeps customers at home, she should build by word of mouth.

Like most newcomers to London, the chanteuse is baffled by the language differences. She has written a song about it and this serves as a very good opener to a well-paced routine. Changing style and tempo with easy facility, Miss Baird's powerful voice serves her equally well for light pops and dramatic ballads. Ringside response is consistently enthusiastic until the chirp tries her luck with an audience participation number; the customers won't play.

But in other respects she qualifies for a boffo reception, notably for her medley of songs which have become synonymous with the Palace. Myro.

Black Orchid, Chi

Chicago, March 2.

Josh White, Helen Boice, Lauri Ames (with Joe Oliver), Rudy Kerr pays Duo; $4 minimum.

If widely diversified appeal is the key to b.o. success, the current bill at this Windy City intimery should lure some coin that rarely sees the dim lights of night. With Josh White pulling the devotees of the longhair, social significance folksong, Helen Boice beckoning to lovers of the antique, "Who-was-that-lady-I-saw-you-with-last-night?" style of humor, and Lauri by Miss Boice, who comes through in the lusty trouper style of oldtime vaudeville. Miss Boice's brand of song and patter is ushered in by "Yak It Up," sung as the opener and foreshadowing a broad comedy routine. Comedienne's material is certainly not new, but she manages to keep people laughing steadily throughout her stint. Her "Things Used To Be Better" bit goes over big. Gabe.

Le Cupidon, N. Y.

Greta Keller (with Fred Spielman); Ernie Warren (3); $5 minimum.

Le Cupidon is a slick little boite on East 58th, off Madison, next door to the Plaza Theatre, formerly known as the Queen Mary and a couple of other tags. It's the kind of intimery which has a good chance to connect with the right attraction. It's located in a good offbeat locale that could make for an automatic draw once it gets rolling. But it needs some impetus, and Greta Keller's American comeback may be that. The Viennese songstress certainly appeared to have drawn them out on her last Thursday (3) premiere.

She has been away from the U.S. over five years, last caught at the Hotel Delmonico, N.Y., when it essayed a supper club policy in one of its main rooms, an idea never achieved, incidentally, including an abortive try with deejay Barry Gray. Chez Greta has been a St. Moritz winter staple with the fashionable international ski crowd since her U.S. semester, and in between Miss Keller has played in variety and revue in London, Paris and middle-Europe.

Thrush's metier is her Viennese repertoire which she interlards with Yank musicomedy and kindred ballads, especially of the international hit parade calibre (viz., "These Things Remind Me Of You", etc.), but her strongest forte are the melodic ditties in German, with punctuations of a French chanson plus the pops. She is a warm personality, sufficiently offbeat as a cafe chantoosey type, projecting her ballads with charm and appeal.

For the preem, Viennese songsmith Fred (Fritz) Spielman, now an ASCAPer, officiated at the ivories in lieu of Ernie Warren, who heads the regular trio (piano, bass and guitar). Tommy Dowling officiates as conferencier—he along with Jack Szell and Fred Jacobs head Le Cupidon's operation. Vet maitre d' Jack Casanova is at the door. Room is an attractive layout, two flights down; first lower level is a balcony effect, with bar, coatroom, etc., and another short flight descends to the boite. It reminds much of the Cafe de Paris (London) layout, and like the London nitery, where the unkempt, unwashed and undressed (slang for no black-tie) sit upstairs, there are tables also on this level for the overflow. But the main floor and seating is below. The staircase, incidentally, can make for a dramatic entrance into the club and while Miss Keller utlized it a bit it could be employed to greater advantage as a sort of podium. True, there is the risk of eclipsing a certain segment of the room. Another thought occurs—that of moving the trio to the balcony, playing down towards the dancers, since the floor itself is so small fundamentally. Abel.

El Rancho, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, March 2.

Lili St. Cyr, Myron Cohen, Crew-Cuts (4), El Rancho Girls (8), Ted Fio Rito Orch (11); no cover; no minimum.

Lili St. Cyr is behaving herself this trip, anointing her act with a balm of such cleanness, that for her six stanzas here the local clergy could be invited without qualms. This isn't to say that the lissome blonde is not her curvacious, sexy self. This she is in spades. And she undrapes her slick chassis at the sound of a whistle in the audience. But Miss St. Cyr proves that sex can be purveyed without resorting to lascivious motions and when it comes to parading herself about the stage in a state of undress, the long-limbed beautiful blonde star is an artist. She poses and she walks and that's all this glamazon need do to win her audience.

But that's not all. The star rates an A for artistic effort during her main 10-minute stint when she's discovered sitting on her piazza in a tropical climate. Behind the scrim are disclosed two rooms, one, a tawdry bedroom with the words "Swamp Hotel" on the wall. The familiar divestment routine is accomplished here with eclat, while in the adjoining bathroom she partakes of her homemade, out-of-a-pitcher shower and bath in a manner that has long been a source of pleasure to bathing devotees in the audience. Actually the sets are well designed and would do justice to a legit vehicle. Miss St. Cyr returns in the Bird of Paradise finale to score in a solid sexy bit with the stuffed bird fondled lovingly in her arms.

The rest of the show is okay fare as Myron Cohen, wily dialect storyteller, a dependable laugh-getter, proves that his oldies are still his best material. His banalities anent New Yorkers in Florida or the garment centre habitues are solid standouts in this pleasing little show presented by LeRoy Prinz.

Although lacking a little in stage presence, the Crew-Cuts blend their four voices pleasingly in harmonies familiar to Mercury disk buyers. They offer fine listening to the responsive audience as they whack out their big shellac sellers like "Ko Ko Mo," "Sh-Boom" and "Earth Angel," "Crazy About You, Baby," the first record to bring the quartet notice, is solid and "Stomp And Whistle" is a rhythmic rouser.

The El Rancho Girls move cutely in a Northwest Mountie number. They are effectively choreod in the St. Cyr jungle finale and earn a warm response. Ted Fio Rito, back to helm the house band, leads his orch with a sure touch. Bob.

Lido, Paris
(FOLLOWUP)

Paris, March 1.

Though the Borrah Minevitch Rascals (7), the show headliners, are gone, and the solid gimmick of the plane, which came down the runway to disgorge members of the troupe, has been grounded, the Lido spec still rates as probably the most grandiose, plus, offering in any nitery today. Since its inception, last December, club has been playing to SRO and present entry, "Desires," will be kept for two years instead of the announced one-year period.

Plane gimmick was a difficult feat, but when it was held off during press night, and the press still raved, Rene Fraday and Pierre Louis Guerin decided they didn't need this extra touch and are saving this highblown gimmick for the next show. Pulleys, which slid out the plane, now have two girls coming out over the heads of the aud in a statuesque nude pose, and a jane is better than a plane anytime.

Show has fallen into a smooth rep now, and the solid acts, turned up by Fraday and Guerin in their world treks, now shine amidst the lush flurry and spec of the fine Don Arden routines for the Bluebell Girls (16), the classy nudes (8) and the solid dervish dancing of the Paul Steffens Dancers (4). George Matson has brought his disk mime turn to a high point, with addition of new aspects to his act. Sid Krofft does his marionet magic, the Arnaut Bros. (2) delight with their lovebird takeoff, and the Brusellos (2) awe with the back somersault of one carrying a tray loaded with drinks. Not a drop is spilled and nothing is spared to make this show tops, including real fireworks. Mosk.

Birdland, N. Y.

Joe Loco & Kai-Jay Quintets; $2.50 minimum.

The mixture at Birdland this sesh is mambo and modern. The Joe Loco Quintet socks across the chile beat while the young Kai-Jay Quintet displays some neat updated musical techniques. It's a well-balanced layout that pleases the Birdland buffs.

Loco has been here before and he knows what it takes to warm up the house. His formula is to pour on the timbales, bongos and congas with peppery flourishes. And it works. Each number has just the right kind of drive and south-of-the border flavor. Loco helms at the ivories with Louis Kant on conga, Bobby Flash on bongo, Peter Terrace on timbales and Julio Andino on bass. They're all craftsmen and their support of the maestro is topgrade. Stickout numbers in Loco's chilebag are "How High the Moon," "Invitation," "Tremendo Cha Cha" and the "Apollo Blues," a rhythm & blues mambo.

The Kai-Jay Quintet was formed a little more than six months ago by trombonists Kai Winding and J. J. Johnson. The boys have chosen their sidemen with care and have come up with one of the more interesting new jazz groups around. Launching of the outfit was somewhat of an answer to all the jazz activitiy that's been going on at the Coast. According to maestro Winding, the Quintet could be classified as a rep of the "east coast jazz" movement.

The sidemen assisting the trombonist-leaders are Dick Katz, piano; Al Hare, drums; and Gene Wright, bass. Each has a distinctive style, but they work together intelligently to lay down an inventive beat from which Winding and Johnson can take off on their tooting licks.

The group has a good chance to get to the head of the class in the modern jazz school if they continue to come up with such nifty showcasers as "Dinner For One, Please James," 'Peanut Vendor" and "Hip Bones." Gros.

Blue Angel, N. Y.

Patti Moore & Ben Lessy, Charlotte Rae, The Foursome, Jimmy Lyons Trio; $5 minimum.

The Blue Angel has taken a long chance with the booking of Patti Moore & Ben Lessy. This team has made good in the large-seaters catering to the Broadway mob, and this is their first try at a New York intimery, a gathering spot of the chichi and carriage trade. Ordinarily, the rule is that excellent material, delivered forcefully and with showmanship, should be sufficient to bowl over any kind of nitery audience. Apparently it doesn't apply universally.

Miss Moore and Lessy haven't recognized the condition existing in such rooms as this Herbert Jacoby-Max Gordon spot. The audience has to be hit lightly at first, then treated ever so gently, and when a rapport is established, then into the potent material. Even afterwards extreme care must be exercised not to injure, bruise or irritate the genteel set on the right side of Park Ave. That's how Broadway comics would approach or blueprint for the task of battering down the after dark citadel of the ad agency set. One doesn't just go in and start punching. There must be a considerable period of sparring before a comic can be at home here. Moore & Lessy have taken the latter approach, which works ever so well in the mass spots.

The material, which brings yocks in their own bailiwicks, also brings a certain laugh increment in this spot, but it seems to be the kind that's given out of politeness. This crowd is virtually damning with faint praise.

The innate excellence of Patti Moore & Ben Lessy is still there. Lessy, who enacts the role of the pianist on the Danny Thomas tele show, "Make Room for Daddy," is an expert comic in every department. In fact, he's hilarious, but as the Blue Angel set would aver, they're much too physical for the room. Miss Moore is an excellent singer in her right, has a tremendous feel for comedy, but with the use of the direct and forthright approach that wins over mass audiences immediately, it doesn't seem to work here.

Now Charlotte Rae, a comedienne who has been here several times, knows her manners for the Blue Angel set. She puts over a few light ribs of the singers exalted by the operatic set, thus establishing a common bond with her audience, and thence, into a satire on the Gabor girls, a spoof of the Miss America contest winners, and a caricature of a ballad singer. It's smart material well delivered, and she's a solid hit. Miss Rae could probably make it at the Latin Quarter or some other large-seater, but the odds are very heavy against her getting as many encore demands as Moore & Lessy would.

Other act this session is The Foursome, for whom a term paper is delivered under New Acts. The Jimmy Lyons Trio showbacks well as usual. Jose.

usual boff for the payees and several new songs give added impact to overall show-casting. Attractively gowned in one of her own creations (between show dates, Miss Myrtil is a New York dress designer) this Gallic - American chanteuse relies for the most part on special material items which are a change from the routine pops and more important—better suited to her uninhibited personality and easygoing presentation.

An amusing parody based on the tune, "Younger Than Springtime," from "South Pacific," called "Younger Than Pinza," gets show off to a good start, and a new entry, her impresh of Edith Piaf singing "Old Man River," is a highlight of the offering from every angle. Patter between songs eventually leads to the inevitable violin sequences with selections from "Red Mill" (one of her first shows in America), which scores with payees, and a full-out rendering of "Paris Skies" brings her back for an okay encore session.

Frequent engagements in this room have naturally developed a number of standards with the regulars who never seem to tire of the repeaters, but Miss Myrtil wisely avoids the obvious and adds good balance to her routining with the inclusion of new numbers, some which she is trying for the first time on the current stint.

Backing Miss Myrtil's songlog is the able pianoisms of Johnny Gallant with the Joe Settano trio doing dance interludes in capable fashion between shows. Newt.

Latin Quarter, Boston

Boston, Feb. 16.

Joey Bishop, Dolores Hawkins, Delma & Hill, Bob Conrad Line (8), Harry DeAngelis Orch (8), Guy Guarino, Zarde Bros. Trio; $3 minimum.

Although Joey Bishop and Dolores Hawkins are not too well-known hereabouts, their individual turns, plus that of the slick puppeteers Delma & Hill, results in this being one of the better bills of the season. If word-of-mouth means anything, this layout should lure nifty biz before the week is out.

Bishop, one of the few comics to appear here this season who doesn't belie his billing, has been too long away from Hub spots, last playing the Sheraton-Plaza's Oval Room about five years ago. However, during the interim, he's gained plenty of stature, sharpened his delivery and material and in short, blossomed into a first-rate comic suitable for all media. While he relies to a great extent on the throwaway and short-punchy type of gag he's also very adept at taking advantage of any ringside heckling, with the result that the needling usually backfires in the heckler's teeth. Guy's stuff nabs nifty yocks throughout.

Miss Hawkins, a shapely thrush clad in a tight-fitting gown, is one of the pleasant surprises of this season. She sells her songs with knowhow, makes an eye-filling appearances, and is glib in the chit-chat department. At home with all types of songs, she fares equally well with the ballad, "Hey There," "Hernando's Hideaway," in tango tempo, the r&b-tinted "For You My Love," and the uptempoed "Sing You Sinners." As an added gimmick the chirp cons a male ringsider reluctantly onstage to teach him the steps to "Anything Can Happen Mambo." Guys noticeable self-consciousness adds to the general overall effectiveness of the stunt. For a bowoff the singer gives out with her Epic disclick, "George."

Bill gets off to an excellent start with the clever puppeteers, Delma & Hill, pulling the strings while their various figures prance through some amusing antics. Back in business is the Bob Conrad line with a couple of neat production numbers, aided by the vocalizing of emcee Guy Guarino.

Harry DeAngelis and his crew turn in the usual solid accompaniment chore, with the Zarde Bros. trio taking over between sets. Elie.

Seven Seas, Omaha

Omaha, Feb. 25.

Heller & Hayden, Ruth Rogers, Al Lamm Trio; no cover or minimum.

Don Hammond's Seven Seas is rapidly becoming a top showcase for comedy acts in the midwest. At first it was singles, with Lenny Colyer, Paul Gilbert and Shecky Greene packing 'em in. Now the vogue is doubles, with Frisari & Reynolds and Davis & Reese paving the way.

The current duo of Joe Heller and Benny Hayden is on a par with their predecessors, in biz and in talent. Eastern boys, making their first appearance in these parts, are going over big, although they give the aud a little rougher treatment than Omahans are used to.

Best numbers are "Ghost Riders in Sky," and a calypso piece in which Hayden dons a female setup. While most acts here work 30 minutes, then are off like an alarm clock, Heller & Hayden do as long as 50 minutes a set if the aud appears to want it.

Blonde Ruth Rogers (Mrs. Hayden) opens the show with a fine vocal session and later rejoins the boys for a short softshoe routine. Gal has Huttonish antics and a June Christylike voice. She definitely adds to the show.

Al Lamm's Trio cuts the show superbly. Maitre d' Harold Fisher has the ropes out. Trump.

Sahara, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Feb. 22.

Katherine Dunham Co. (24), Dick Shawn, Saharem Dancers (12), Cee Davidson Orch (11); no cover, no minimum.

A more colorful, exciting show has rarely been presented here and with the Katherine Dunham troupe; and Dick Shawn helming the comedy, the three-weeker is well-balanced. The opus ran 90 minutes opening night and a lop-off of some of Shawn's 35 minutes, as well as the innumerable stage waits, will bring it down to par.

Miss Dunham, aided by her dancers, singers and musicians, stars in a kaleidoscopic succession of African, Brazilian and voodoo dances that move swiftly in one of the most effective and intricately-lighted acts ever seen on the Strip. Flamboyant costumes, partitioned drapes and the big, black backdrop are strong optical sides. The African market place scene is an exciting one, with vendors and dancers moving about swiftly, paced by the exotic Miss Dunham. The native sounds by the dancers are a fittingly cacophony to impel excitement and this opener is of such smash caliber as to convince stubholders that the star has rarely been presented better in this area.

Miss Dunham is at her sexiest in the Brazilian Suite and is nimble, padding out the choreography barefooted. Sharing the acclaim is dancer Vanyoe Aikens, who scores heavily as the Nubian and in a barrelhouse number. Frances Taylor, Lucille Ellis, Jacqueline Walcott and Lenwood Morris are others who rate. Miss Dunham is a vocal click in "There's Honey In the Honeycomb."

Shawn, a notoriously slow starter with his special brand of comedics, is off and running quickly, inasmuch as he follows Miss Dunham, to encounter a fully-warmed and attentive audience. His split-personality song and banter routine is clever in its change of pace from the Eddie Albert type of whimsy to Shawn's familiar bellowing, braying and singing. He builds his material more efficiently than on his last round here and in the process gathers plenty of belly laughs. The prizefight skit is okay as always and his fave story of the Old South, as he watches for "Massa Richard to come over the hill leading a million guns" is his laugh-topper. As expected, "Pagliacci" comes in for Shawn's full-bodied vocal treatment and it evokes kudos.

The Saharem Dancers are on briefly and mainly as immobile window dressing for Miss Dunham. Cee Davidson leads the orch behind the dance-star's bongo trio in good style and otherwise cuts a good show. Bob.

Ewige Lampe, Berlin

Berlin, March 1.

Stachelschweine production, "The Ten Was Their Destiny," in 20 numbers, directed by Harald Philips. Features Guenter Pfitzmann, Wolfgang Gruner, Jo Herbst, Achim Strietzel, Inge Wellman, Inge Wolfberg, Klaus Becker.

Cabaret life, for which Berlin was once famous, is—apart from a few exceptions—still not very exciting in this city. Definitely on the plus side, however, is the local Stachelschweine (Porcupines) group, a bunch of talented and mostly young entertainers whose forte is brilliant political farces. Their latest program, also marking the group's fifth anniversary, is "The Ten Was Their Destiny," and refers to Berlin's 10 postwar years.

Presented at the Ewige Lampe, sort of an Existentialist spot, the three-hour program is excellent and probably will emerge as a longrun and topnotch commercial hit, with word-of-mouth and rave press a big help. Its appeal is universal, a treat for fastidious and ordinary cabaret lovers and even for the sophisticates, Berliners and outsiders.

Unlike many other local entertainers, the Porcupines are never short of new gags and witty wordplay and this program, consisting of 20 different numbers which depict the "highlights" of this city's past decade, is without doubt the best ever presented by them. It tees off with 1945, when Amis and Russkis were still friends; brings back the blackmarket era, housing shortage, the butt collectors, all those phoney deals of the early postwar years; pokes fun at the East-West dispute, Russian brutality, the Blockade fraternization, militarism and all the things and personalities that have become the local topic up to 1955.

Program's attitude is clean, objective and decent all through, and never cheap. It's also a good example of German self-kidding, which often isn't carried out here to best advantage by other cabaret groups.

It's chiefly an ensemble achievement, but special honors go to Harald Philips, whose direction keeps the action rolling at full speed. The transition from one number to another is never jumpy, although each of them is of different nature and style. In all, it's local cabaret at its best. Hans.

Top's, San Diego

San Diego, Calif., March 5.

Jack Carson, Connie Towers, Roland Dupree Trio, Billy Green Orch; no cover, minimum.

After a no-entertainment hiatus of six months, boniface Yale Kahn has a crowd-pleaser in Jack Carson, as the tv-film thesp goes the comedy route in good fashion. Before heading on to Las Vegas, however, the Carson act could stand sharper pacing, pruning of the weaker material and a slash in the 40-minute running time.

Shedding the amiable lug characterization that's marked his career until "A Star Is Born," Carson emerges as a capable storyteller. Most of the yarns and one-liners are bluish, although acceptable for niteries, but some have too much mileage to net peak reception.

As a part of the Carson routine, singer Connie Towers, a beauteous blonde, is a standout. She works well in song-waggery with Carson; most effective laugh-getter is a French-to-English "translation" of "Cherie." Equipped with classically trained pipes and gowned exquisitely, Miss Towers scores strongest with the Jack Brooks lyric "Claire de Lune" and a sure-fire medley from "Porgy and Bess." Miss Towers is definitely star material.

The Roland Dupree trio of hoofers starts the show on a happy note with 10 minutes of frenetic terpology.

With Carson's musical director, Roy Chamberlin, at the piano, the Billy Green house crew does nicely at showbacking and for dancing. Don.

Le Carroll's, Paris

Paris, March 8.

Pierre-Jean Vaillard, Perdita Chandler, Syv Lijia & De Ramon, Los Aztecos (4), Line Andres, Miki Michaels, Leopoldo Frances Orch (9); $4.50.

Fancy cellar club, off the Champs-Elysees, is still doing solid biz, with the young snob set, and carioca and Near East visitors, making this a habitat. Show is so-so, at present, with a dearth of headliners, but presenting enough heavyweight fillers, plus fine mambo dance beats, to make this okay in atmospherics. He-she hostesses have been toned down somewhat and club now caters to all.

Pierre-Jean Vaillard is in the chansonnier category and gives a fine display of aloof storytelling with the right amount of blue, sassiness and timing to make this risible for those in on the lingo. Syv Lijia & De Ramon give with a rather sedate strip number that is mixed with acro-dance and tomfoolery to make this a most unresolved item. Man comes out claiming he has lost partner, whisks around a member of the aud, and then gets his partner, a comely, waspish Swedish lass, for much dizzy spinning, etc., and then she strips down in sheer grogginess. Girl's trim, muscular torso is not made for this genre, and act needs a different bent to make this a favorable entry here.

Rest of show is song, with Perdita Chandler, Line Andres and a Mexican group, Los Aztecos (4). Miss Chandler has been chanting for only a year now, and this good-looking U. S. miss displays more musical comedy talent than chantoosy status. She has presence and a way with an aud, but voice is more for book backing, and does not have the nuances for nitery flair. More training, deep projection, with the plus factor of obvious thespic backing, may soon make this girl a good bet for revue material for the U. S. She is getting good experience here in facing international auds.

Line Andres is in the minor belt school, and the well-chassied girl seems more chirper than chantoosy. Voice is big but lacks graduations, and her interp is cold and lacking authority. She is for this type of intime room, but doesn't shape as future individual top material. Los Aztecos are an authentic-looking Mex troupe who give with the looping carioca ballads, with guitar and fiddle accomps, for an okay offbeat entry, but lack the more robust flavor exuded by other Latino groups now playing the circuits. Mosk.

Chez Paree, Chi

Chicago, Feb. 28.

Goofers (5), Helen Forrest, Margaret Sisters & Bruno (3), Brian Farnon Orch; $1.50 cover, $8.75 minimum.

Current bill at this topdrawer Windy City nitery should keep the register pleasantly tinkling despite usual Lenten doldrums. Although customers were not observed to be hanging from the rafters opening night, it was only because one of the acts beat them to it.

The Goofers, upside-down sensation of the nitery belt, wrap up their turn in spectacular fashion with two Goofers succeeding each other on the flying trapeze, hanging by the feet and playing as they swing. Playing the tissue paper comb would be quite an accomplishment under these circumstances, but one of the boys takes the bull fiddle along with him and plays unconcernedly, followed by another Goofer tootling nonchalantly on the trombone as he flies through the air with the greatest of ease, upside-down.

This group has picked at random from the fields of music, the acrobatic dance, comedy, song and gymnastics, dismembered all elements of same, mixed well, and has come up with a howling half-hour of entertainment.

Vocal chores are handled nicely in this layout by Helen Forrest. Gal brings back pleasant memories for the customers who remember her "I Don't Want To Walk Without You" and other clicks of her vocalizing with the Harry James orch in its heyday. Gal has pleasing pipes and is easy on the eyes.

Bill is introed by terp routines of Margaret Sisters & Bruno, European import. Graceful acro-hoofing to music from "Traviata" and "Thais" is followed by rougher apache bit. Bruno whirls around at several points with the two sisters on his shoulders, under his arms, and hanging on for dear life. Group gets a big hand.

Brian Farnon and orch oblige with the usual showmanly backing. Gabe.

Dear Miss Massey:

I thought you would like to know how very pleased we have been with the results of your two-week engagement here in our Vogue Room.

I am sure it will be gratifying for you to hear that you have attracted the very type of clientele we have striven years to maintain.

I feel sure that your fresh and original new type of presentation will find this same spontaneous acceptance on the part of audiences in other cities where you are scheduled to appear, and we will look forward to having you back with us in the not too distant future for an "encore".

Sincerely,

Miami Beach Hotels Jammed But Niteries Still Seeking Late Trade

Miami Beach, March 8.

Closing of Hialeah racetrack, which in former years marked "end-of-height" for the winter season, this time saw a continuing pace, with hotels loaded and restaurants packed to waiting-line proportions. But the night clubs are still fighting for that second show, business wanting all season long, despite the lures offered via triple-star billings.

Withal, cafe operators are still booking the most potent topliners they can buy for the coming weeks. Copa City is offering Jane Powell, Nat (King) Cole and Los Chavales de Espana plus the long-run June Taylor-Benny Davis production. The Beachcomber is currently playing Sophie Tucker, Tony Martin and Jackie Kannon with Betty Hutton and Morey Amsterdam slated to headup the hugery's mid-month revue for three weeks.

The Fontainebleau, with Helen Traubel, Joey Bishop, and Patricia & Capella on hand, is seeking the Ritz Bros. or a like act to come in on the 16th for a 12-day run. Kay Starr has been pacted for an end-month engagement—her first appearance in this area. The Saxony is featuring Tommy and Jimmy Dorsey and their unit through March; a big show entailing production ideas is to follow. Other hotels are also setting acts for the spring they normally would book in February. Of the biggeries, the Latin Quarter is due to close earliest, Lou Walters marking the 20th as the finale. Joe E. Lewis is playing a return date there.

All of it portends a heavy summer booking schedule by the hotel-cafes, once the straight nitery ops decide on their closing dates, although Norman Schuyler may keep his Beachcomber going with Louis Armstrong and his band coming in for a long run. The Vagabonds, also, run their club into late spring and early summer. At any rate, the hopeful bonifaces are all looking for the heavy influx of tourists to continue, based on hotel reservations through the Easter week.

MCA Moves Stacey to Chi To Head Up Fairs Dept.

Chicago, March 8.

Eldred O. Stacey, previously with Music Corp. of America's Dallas office for 10 years, has joined MCA's Chicago staff and will head the agency's fairs department. MCA mulls a largescale invasion of the fairs field on a national basis, the operation to be conducted out of the Chicago office. First step in this direction was MCA's snagging of the grandstand show at the Indiana State Fair.

Stacey had sold to the Oklahoma State Fair, the Tri-State Fair in Amarillo, and other Southwestern fairs while with the Dallas MCA office. He is currently negotiating with buyers for four large fairs.

Unit Review

Edith Piaf Continental Revue

San Francisco, March 8.

Cress Courtney & J. T. Gale presentation of revue. Stars Edith Piaf; features Harry Mimmo, Jacques Peals; with The Rivieras, The Arnauts, Les Marcellis. Scenery by Frank Stevens; musical conductor, Cyrus Trobbe. At Geary, San Francisco, March 7, '55; $4.95 top.

Edith Piaf's Parisian magic proved once again she is a major show business attraction with electric appeal, indomitable projection of spirit and everybody's idea of what a French chanteuse should look and sound like.

She completely captured the opening-night audience at the Geary last night (Mon.). Mainly composed of local French colony, they were sponsors of the premiere as a benefit for the French Hospital. La Piaf kept them enraptured through a dozen selections, and left them begging for more.

She does the entire second half alone on a blank stage backed by a plain drop, and dressed severely in plain black dress sans frills, sans jewelry, sans everything except sock emotional appeal for an audience.

Through the deft use of hands, and occasional pose of the head, the chirp manages to project the impact of her songs even to those who don't parlez vous. If her costumes, presentation and air are pretentiously dowdy, the audience makes it into a virtue and loves her for it, male and female alike. Anything she does is socko a la the good old vaudeville days. Her personal power over her following is unique today.

Her songs range from an English version of "Autumn Leaves" and "If You Love Me, Really Love Me," to French lyrics, for "Bravo Pour Le Clown" and "Padam" and the untoppable finale, "La Vie En Rose."

Whatever language difficulty Miss Piaf encounters in introductions and English lyrics add to her charm and make her piquant appeal even stronger. Her ability to sell to an audience unfamiliar with her language is a tribute to her ability as performer.

But the "Continental Revue" really has two stars. Just slightly less than Miss Piaf in sock appeal is the clever Italian comic Harry Mimmo, who ends the first half of the revue with a half hour that definitely proves him the freshest comic talent to hit U.S. boards in years, and a mimic worthy of comparison to Jimmy Savo. A gifted pantomimist possessed of mobile features and uncanny ability to create an allusion with sharp wit, the comic completely dominates the opening half and is definitely strong enough to carry his own revue. Audience reception at the opener was simply tremendous and Mimmo will boost the box-office no little.

With ample time to work, he does impressions of American tap dancers from Gene Kelly to Bill Robinson and Shirley Temple, capping it with an hilarious takeoff on Fred Astaire. He comes back with an even stronger routine of impressions of various national types, French, English, American, Mexican, etc., capping that with an excellent paesano bit. Mimmo's personal gimmicks and phrases are as contageous as laughter itself and the opening-night audience, despite Miss Piaf's emotional impact, went out aping his routines. His oldtime film bit is surefire yak for any tv viewer. Mimmo's impact is so great in this show, he can end up stealing it and probably will. His humor is unclassifiable but universal and knows no language barriers. He is undoubtedly one of the great comics of our time.

Rest of show presents a series of solid acts. Les Marcellis, in acrobatics and comedy, open strongly with a good turn. The Arnauts cop a heavy mitt for their bird pantomime, with the Rivieras' Apache dance okay in third spot. Jaques Peals ties the show together as emcee for the first half, contributing gags and songs in a personable, pleasing manner.

Wherever it plays this revue looks like solid boxoffice, with the standout variety acts headed by Mimmo added to the surefire draw of Miss Piaf. Rafe.

by April 4. The deferment may hamper them unless they can get sanction before.

The Moulin Rouge, interracial hotel, was deferred, as was the Star Dust Hotel, which is headed by former California gambling ship operator Anthony (Tony Cornero) Stralla. The Star Dust has more than 1,100 stockholders and the Commission ordered its attorney, E. Frandsen Loomis, to prepare a ruling that would limit the number of club owners, for discussion at the next meeting in Carson City.

Income Tax Snafu

The Federal Government stretched its long arm into the Tax Commission hearing last week, involving the Thunderbird Hotel, which must show cause why its license should not be revoked, following charges that Meyer and Jake Lansky were linked to the operation. Income tax returns were provided that showed Jake Lansky and one George Sadlo were paid a total of $96,000 over a period of four years by Thunderbird president Marion Hicks, representing interest on a $160,000 loan. However, former Lt. Governor Clifford Jones, a Thunderbird partner, stated under oath that the Lanskys were never partners in the hotel to his knowledge. Reno attorney William Woodburn, retained by the Thunderbird, asked for time to study the case for the defense, and it comes up again at the next session, probably late this month.

The State Tax Commission, fighting for its political life, in the wake of the gambling control bill just passed by the Assembly at Carson City, which would take gambling control out of the hands of the Commission, thus has lifted its self-imposed ban of granting major licenses while the Legislature is in session. The ban was put into effect early in February out of resentment by the commissioners toward action of the Legislature in imposing a moratorium upon consideration of new gambling licenses while the lawmakers were in session and for 30 days thereafter. This moratorium remains in effect.

Lifting of the Commission's self-imposed ban was done because members declared they did not believe it was fair to penalize persons waiting to go to work at major resort hotels, or persons who have made large investments which might be jeopardized.

The gambling control bill passed by the Assembly now goes to the Senate for consideration. The Assembly bill provides that a three-man board be established to completely govern gambling control matters. A legislative committee would provide the list from which the governor would appoint the men. This means the Tax Commission would be left the job of merely collecting taxes. And as chairman of the Tax Commission the governor would see his major function vanish.

Deferment of a license applicant is not construed as a denial. The Tax Commission never issues statements on why an applicant is deferred. Generally it is to give investigators more time to complete the record, or to give the applicant an opportunity to comply with regulatory demands made by the Tax Commission.

Milwaukeeans Turned Down

Milwaukee, March 8.

Temporarily, the applications of three Milwaukeeans for an investment of approximately $45,000 for a minority interest in the Flamingo Hotel at Las Vegas has been denied by the Nevada Tax Commission.

Milwaukeeans involved are Leonard Glen, chairman of the board of Rhea Mfg. Co. (a dress house), and his wife Adele, and Ethel Glen, wife of Stanley Glen, prez of the Rhea concern. It was reported that the Glens were in a 28-person "purchase syndicate" attempting to buy the Flamingo for $3,000,000. Allegedly, it has been indicated by William Gallagher, chief of the gambling tax division of Nevada Tax Commission, the Glen applications were denied "due to incomplete records and fingerprint reports."

408G HUB 'FOLLIES'

"Ice Follies" wound up with $408,000 during its 18-day run at the Boston Garden, Boston. Run ended Feb. 27.

Take is one of the top scores of an icer in the Hub.

Thefted Material

generally associated with any particular bit by virtue of having been seen first by most people.

Even when a unique piece of material is credited to the performer with origination, the bit soon becomes useless as more people see it. This is especially true in the case of the "Guzzler's Gin" bit credited to Red Skelton. However, this has been done (with credit to Skelton) by several performers. Although Skelton generally gets a free ad with this antic, the bit is by now useless since it has been seen so frequently under the guise of an "impression."

Gag writers are also to blame for the widespread larceny. Some have sold the same gag or routine, with slight variation, to several performers.

In the old days of vaudeville, the development of a routine meant a livelihood for a lifetime. Only slight variations were needed from year to year. The circuit, bookers and the talent agency protected the originator. Performers also relied on Variety's Protected Material Dept. for priority of material, which at best, however, merely attempted to establish a common law right.

Today such procedures are no longer possible. Radio and television have burned up so many routines and gags, as well as performers, that any act of standing has to rely on many writers to stay on the air for any length of time.

Meanwhile, it's become virtually useless to pay for material. Any larcenous lifter with a memory like a tape recorder could assimilate another's routine.

The acts complain that there's nobody to complain to. Sponsors can't be bothered, and neither can network buyers, or nitery operators. Fact that it's been done previously seems to be of small concern.

New Acts

FORREST TUCKER
Songs, patter
20 Mins.
Charley Foy's, L.A.

Unlike most of the filmsters who have turned to the niteries for exposure and scratch, Forrest Tucker assumes an air of humility and disarms his audience by dropping his pose and coming at them as an entertainer with the hope that he'll be liked. He's a better storyteller than singer, but one complements the other to widen the latitude of his performing.

A big, handsome blonde with an easy presence, he's at once remindful of Phil Harris in many of his characteristics. Off on a Harris-type song, "Possibilities," he becomes monologist rest of the way with enough of a "daown south" vocal affection to make it fit his back-country yarns.

He tops off each narrative with a broad grin and that puts him in solid. His own picture career he takes lightly and makes only occasional reference in a gesture of deflation. To further ground himself, he does a takeoff on a circus barker that brings ou the bellowing voice familiar to his villainous roles in pictures.

His material and stories are nitery-proof, enhanced with a knowing knack of snapping a punch line. He'll be coming along as a better boite booking with more experience and confidence. If he can get his act up to his golfing handicap, he'll be winging.
Helm.

DANNY MACHIN
Songs
7 Mins.
Casino Royal, Washington

This is a pleasing young baritone who should improve steadily. Machin comes through in schmalzy but unsensational style with such numbers as "From This Moment On," "Melody of Love" and "A Dollar, Nickel and a Dime," the last of which he has already waxed for 20th Century Records.

At the Casino Royal, he works with both fixed mike and with a mike on a cable which enables him to operate closeup to the ringside tables. He appears to need a gimmick of some kind to provide his act with distinctiveness. Given this, he has sufficient vocal equipment to move ahead on the nitery circuit.

Machin also emcees for the Casino Royal stage show, but will have little to offer in this category until he gets more experience in handling audience. Lowe.

TOMMY ROBERTS QUINTET
Instrumental-Vocal
13 Mins.
Cafe Society, N. Y.

Tommy Roberts Quintet doesn't have the entertainment values necessary for name-club bookings. Act is more suitable for lesser locations. Negro group works at a generally frantic pace, with Roberts vocalling. He's backed by a drum, banjo, sax and piano. Concentrating on a stompin' beat, quintet opens with a number in the rock 'n' roll vein. Instrumentalization on the tune, however, drowns out Robert's lyric delivery.

Crew also works over "Blues in the Night," "Shadrack" and "Rag Mop." Besides the group offerings, saxer and 88er get solo spottings. Roberts' songstering is mostly in the "shout" idiom. Jess.

VIVIAN MARSHALL
Comedienne
18 Mins.
Cafe Society, N.Y.

Vivian Marshall, who's been active on the Coast, opened at Cafe Society last week. She didn't make a very auspicious showing. Miss Marshall accentuates her physical attributes, but that doesn't make up for a dearth material. She tries for laughs via stories and songs, but misses in most cases.

However, bit about getting a fur coat lining, minus skins, from a guy who makes linings, has some risible value. Jess.

JON WHITE
Songs
8 Mins.
Apollo, N.Y.

Jon White is a Negro crooner with a Lanza-lunged delivery. He uses no vocal trickery to get the big notes across, but he tends to diminish overall return by overly dramatic readings and an affected enunciation stress.

His repertoire is made of standard stuff and it goes well with the aud. Among his top efforts are "I Get a Kick Out of You" and "Tenderly." He's a good-looking lad with a pleasant stage demeanor and should do okay in similar vaude spottings. Gros.

THE FOURSOME
Songs
10 Mins.
Blue Angel, N. Y.

The Foursome, comprising two mixed couples, are made-to-order for the town-and-country set. The Brooks Bros. looking boys and the simply clad girls make a good stage appearance, and musically, they seem well-grounded. They are influenced by college glee club harmonics which themselves aren't bad. In trying to get away from stereotyped musical figures, they've taken a long way around. They do considerable posturing and put on an affected facade. A few dates in front of various kinds of audiences will probably put their feet back on the ground.

On night caught, they seemed to relive the '20s with tunes like "Vo-Do-Dee-O" and "Stormy Weather." It's a good novelty move and it gives the impression that they too have discovered F. Scott Fitzgerald. However, these maneuvers limit their horizons.

The contralto in the group is a singer with sincerity and deserves her frequent solos in front of the others. She's a cool and personable kid who provides the outfit with a solid peg.

At this point, it seems that they shall have to compromise their art if they're to get along in this world of commercial material. Jose.

DYLAN TODD
Folksongs
7 Mins.
Cafe Society, N. Y.

Folksinger Dylan Todd pinchhit for pop songstress Sunny Gale at Cafe Society last Thursday (3) night when unable to appear. Nitery didn't announce the substitution until show had progressed to Miss Gale's closing spot. Todd was then introed as her fill-in.

Working in a tux and accompanying himself on a guitar, Todd's song deliveries were pleasant and effective. Numbers included "Colorado Trail," "Edistone Light" and "Dan Tucker." Singer has the necessary qualities for subordinate slotting in intimate locations.
Jess.

LILLIAN HAYES
Songs
10 Mins.
Old Roumanian, N.Y.

Lillian Hayes, a veteran of the USO Camp Shows circuit, is making her nitery bow in New York. She's a likeable newcomer with a pleasant voice and can turn on power when necessary. She's at her best in ballad renditions. She shows a feeling for lyrics and an ease with music which should enable her to hit some of the plushier spots at a future date.

At this point, Miss Hayes' major difficulty is in repertoire. A batch of tunes with an overall design of building up to a climax is her present need. As it is, each tune is nicely done for excellent applause results. A few distinctive numbers would give her added touches to set her off to a greater extent.

Miss Hayes is elegantly gowned, makes a good floor appearance and has a solid sense of projection.
Jose.

SEE HEE TROUPE (4)
Acro
15 Mins.
Bobino, Paris

Chinese acro group displays a finesse, suppleness and grace which makes it a fine entry for that special spot for U.S. vauderies or tv. Three young men do all the work with father standing by to regulate and add the needed props. After some smooth hand-to-handing the trio does its piece de resistance with first one of them balancing on a bench, with three of its legs on glasses, and bending back to pick up a glass and drain its contents. Then all three balance atop each other and free their hands for dish spinning.

This ends in a solid blaze for high aud appreciation. Mosk.

LAURI AMES
(With Joe Oliver)
Songs
15 Min.
Black Orchid, Chi

Warbler, with far-ranging pipes impresses with the depth of her lower register, verging on the bass. Miss Ames projects her vocalizing with almost ear-splitting volume, which she'll have to learn to control for the smaller rooms. When she essays the higher ranges, her voice thins out somewhat and the transitions are not too often smoothly achieved.

Gal opens by belting out "Gonna Live Till I Die," in a startling display of vocal power that has the customers sitting up. Following with "Pennies From Heaven" and "You've Changed," Miss Ames weakens her opening effect by displaying too broad a contrast when she moves to higher ground. Thrush returns to safer territory with "Old Man River," and wraps up with this more apt showcase for a deep voice. Miss Ames is rhythmically backed by drummer Joe Oliver. Gabe.

SMITH BROS. (5)
Songs
30 Mins.
Empire, Glasgow

Five hefty males, garbed in attractive Scot kilts, are a highly pleasing song-harmony team, and score not only in appeal of physique but also in safe choice of pops, current hits and fave oldies. Exit to solid mitting and leave majority of outfronters happy.

Team hails from Tyneside, industrial region of north-east England, and gabs in sturdy Tyneside accents, highly individualistic. It follows a Scot medley with "Hold My Hand," "This Ole House" and "Finger of Suspicion," and a localized ballad, "Blaydon Races," the signing-off tune. They introduce neat injections of comedy business into their act.

Okay for vauderies, and for guestings on tv as representative of sturdier type of English music-hall act. Gord.

THE NOVELLOS (2)
Acro
4 Mins.
Music Hall, N. Y.

The Novellos' act has been pared to the bone in its present version at Radio City Music Hall. In the production sequence, in which it's used, there's a minimum amount of time given this turn. With all extraneous matter out, it's an extremely punchy bit with the single male operator showing his best tricks.

He's an expert balancer on the ladder, being able to climb on top without any support from the bottom and maneuver the woodpile to any part of the stage. His topper is the balancing of a dog atop his dome while standing on the ladder. It's an applause-winning turn. He's assisted by a femme who serves a slight utilitarian purpose in the act. Jose.

BRUCE SIDLINGER
Trampoline
8 Mins.
Music Hall, N. Y.

Bruce Sidlinger has the basis of one of the top comedy trampoline acts. He's got just a few mechanical difficulties to overcome before he hits the proficiency he's striving for. Sidlinger's tricks on the bedsprings are in the standard groove, but his comedy dressing has some outstanding ideas.

He's got a few gimmicks that need just a mite more perfection in timing, and with more polish he'll be able to have virtually any kind of audience under control. Sidlinger has a few oral gags which he'll be able to eliminate once he attains the smoothness in his pantomime. Should be eligible for any visual situation soon. Jose.

levels, running to 529,906,813 feet against 560,550,932 feet in 1953, the peak year.

Last year, the lab had commitments for 88 new features with 92 in Color by Technicolor or with Prints in Technicolor either under contract or in preparation for 1955. Techni's British affiliate, Technicolor Ltd., showed a net of £362,756 last year, an increase of £28,060 over 1953. The British plant remitted $277,379 to the parent company in 1954 when it handled 64 pix. Total of 31 are under contract for 1955.

Kalmus noted Techni's activity in the color tv field and said the lab was continuing active in research having to do with the recording of pix on magnetic tape. "Your management continues to be of the opinion that the commercial distribution of pictures recorded on tape to be electronically projected on theatre screens will not come about for many years."

Said Kalmus of 3-D (with which Techni is connected via a deal with Polaroid to make prints on Vectograph material): "Your management continues to be optimistic that the popularity of 3-D pictures can be revived when suitable conditions have been established." The Vectograph method of 3-D projection combines both eye views on a single print, thus eliminating the necessity of having two projectors linked up to run simultaneously.

House Reviews

Music Hall, N. Y.

Russell Markert presentation, "Spring Rhythms," with Anthony Mordente, Novellos (2), Bruce Sidlinger, Mitchell Gregg, Corps de Ballet (Margaret Sande, choreographer), Glee Club (Raymond Paige, director), Rockettes (Markert, choreographer); sets, James Stewart Morcom; costumes, Frank Spencer; lighting, Eugene Braun; Symphony Orch, directed by Paige; "Hit the Deck" (MG), reviewed in current VARIETY.

Radio City Music Hall may be rushing the season a bit, but its new show, "Spring Rhythms," gives the feeling that the warm weather must be approaching. The session has a light and airy feeling — nothing weighty or heavy, and it has the virtue of providing a relaxing interlude.

The Russell Markert production leads off with a tasteful bit of ballet with music based on Mozart themes. The choreography by Margaret Sande is on the diverting side. There's a lot of movement and easy grace that warrants a good hand. Anthony Mordente entrechats and leaps vigorously to dress up this sequence.

The segment marked "A Country Interlude" is based around a hayride novelty. The Glee Club provides a bucolic mood with a series of country tunes with Patricia Rayney in the solo spot. The punch of this particular session is by The Novellos, comprising a man with a pooch as his chief assistant. More of them in New Acts. A filmed background gives the illusion of motion to the hayride that provides a final punch to this episode.

The finale is by the Rockettes in a Caribbean setting with Mitchell Gregg providing the vocal background. The routine is imaginative and colorful, with the excellent precision work of the Rocks hitting a salvo at the finale.

Other outside act on this occasion is Bruce Sidlinger, further described under New Acts. Raymond Paige conducts the MH symph in a potpourri of tunes from "Faust." Jose.

Bobino, Paris

Paris, March 8.

Philippe Clay, Larry Adler, Richiardi Junior (6), See Hee Troupe (4), Lucie Dolene, Maurice & May, Jean-Claude Darnal, Four Heirolls, Trio Pigall's; $1.25 top.

Headliners are Philippe Clay and Larry Adler. Clay does a fast 30-minute stint of his well-chosen songs, delivered with his inventive mugging and manipulation of his long, emaciated body for aud-pleasing results. Phrasing, diabolical interp of his off-beaters, and an infectious voice and pacing, make this of topper proportions, though he has a tendency to throw away effects by a too self-indulgent nonchalance. More care should give him his rightful niche as one of the top offbeat songsters here.

Adler, in his second house date, displays an ease and warmth that underline his sterling harmonicantics. Perfection of presentation and style produces powerful palming.

Richiardi Junior (6) is a magico with one of the best acts in this genre to be seen here since the war. This Peruvian illusionist carries his stint through in a rousing carioca rhythm and, after a series of excellent passes, does two levitation bits that are thunderously received. His bouncing entourage also helps make this a boff affair.

Acrobatics are well handled by Maurice & May, who do a bicycle bit, with clowning on a breakaway bike. Number is a fine filler for vaude or tv for that offbeat entry for U.S. spots. See Hee Troupe (4) is a flashing Chino-acro group with flash suppleness and fine routines. (See New Acts). Weak point is a rather vulgar entry. Trio Pigall's whose essay of an Apache mayhem interlude is too peppered with the ludicrous and gratuitous for bigtime halls. Four Heirolls add a rhythmic roller-skating interlude to play up the pulchritude of three gals, and the male's precision. A good entry.

Two young singers fill out the program. Jean-Claude Darnal is a young Left Bank type with guitar and self-cleffed tunes. Songs are melodious and good, but his presentation is lacklustre and he is more for intime clubs. Lucie Dolene is a pert, soprano whose inventiveness, bounce and timing make her a solid entry. Mosk.

Palace, N. Y.

Honey Girls (4), Bunny Briggs, Barry Clark & Larry Knight, Courtney & Sonja Van Horne, Joe Morris & Barbara Barry, Alphonse Berge, Gaudsmith Bros. (2), Don Francisco, Jo Lombardi Orch; "Innocents in Paris" (Indie).

A tap dancer and a ballroom team, acrobats and a tightrope walker, two comedy teams, a pair of singing impressionists, a couple of dogs, a dress designer who clothes live models on stage—mix 'em all together and you have this week's Palace bill. It's typical Palace fare and the usual potpourri that spells out vaudeville. Notwithstanding the familiarity of the turns, there apparently are many for whom this type of entertainment holds a fascination. There was a good crowd on hand for Friday's (4) opening show and what they saw seemed to please 'em.

The Honey Girls (4) get the proceedings off quickly with some fast acrobatics. Gals, all lookers, have a well-paced act and vary it nicely with tumbling, hand stands, balancing and other routines in the acro repertoire. Bunny Briggs, a tapster of the Bill Robinson school, scores with his easy, nonchalant terpery. He demonstrates, too, his ability in the more flashy type of tapology.

Barry Clark & Larry Knight, familiar to Elliot Murphy's Aquashow audiences, emerge as the hit of the current session. Lads open with operatic vocalistics, sticking wisely to familiar arias. Then, for a change of pace, they barge into a comedy routine dealing with tv commercials.

Courtney & Sonja Van Horne are a slick ballroom team, executing their routines smoothly and carrying off the lifts and related acro elements to perfection. Joe Morris, the vet vauder who heckles from a box seat, makes a good foil for Barbara Barry. It's familiar stuff which Morris has been doing for years, but it satisfies the pewholders nonetheless. Alphonse Berge, billed as the "The Great Drapo," is a lightning-fast dress designer who performs wonders with bolts of cloth and a couple of pins. Using three live models, who appear in black chemise, Berge creates fashion-wise frocks, taking about 30 seconds for each.

Gaudsmith Bros., more than any other act, appear to be representative of oldtime vaude with their comedy attire, thick Dutch accents and two French poodle assistants. Turn is a combination of slapstick, patter, acrobatics, and trained pooches. Don Francisco, a circus vet, takes time off from the Big Top temporarily for hair-raising exploits in wire walking on the Palace stage. As per usual, Jo Lombardi's pit crew provides the backing without missing a beat. Holl.

Apollo, N. Y.

Ruth Brown, Willis Jackson Orch (13), Jon White, Derby Wilson, Carlos Dancers (6), Stump & Stumpy; "Combat Squad" (Col).

Ruth Brown kicks up a vocal storm when she takes over in the final niche of the current Apollo sesh, and she sends 'em all away happy. Before she moves in with her torrid rhythm & blues attack, bill moves at a breezy pace, mixing up terps, tootling and comedics for an okay score.

Co-headliner Willis Jackson heads up a driving orch of three rhythm, five brass and four reed. Maestro is featured on the sax and whips up plenty of frenzy as he takes his licks on "Blowing Like Hell" and "We'll Be Together Again." Miss Brown is a familiar headliner here and she knocks 'em over with such numbers as "Miss Brown's Back In Town," "Don't Worry About Me" and "Mama, He Treats Your Daughter Mean." Thrush has a forceful style and belts for all she's worth. She's an Apollo amateur night winner and continues as one of the house's fave r&b purveyors.

Stump & Stumpy are no newcomers here, either. Their act is a study in madcappery and though it doesn't change much over the years, it still adds up to a lot of fun. Derby Wilson is as slick as ever as he terps his way to a strong mitt. His style is effortless but his footfull of tap trickery pushes him into the winning circle. The Carlos Dancers, five gals and a guy, are spotted throughout the layout in some interesting if not too exciting choreographic designs. Crooner Jon White is reviewed in New Acts.

Sister Chirpers

the indie Abbott label lit the fuse. Since that time, the Fontane Sisters (Dot) have made it, so have the De John Sisters (Epic) and the McGuire Sisters (Coral), and in their wake have come the Demarco Sisters, (Decca) Burton Sisters (RCA Victor) King Sisters (Jubilee), and the Paulette Sisters (Capitol).

Each of the diskers has to follow suit on the heels of a disclick due to the pressure of the distribs who have been yelling to the home-office: "Give us a sister team and we don't care how offkey it is." In fact, the offbeat harmonies are on the beam and it's one of those ironies of show business that the Bell Sisters, a youthful sister duo with RCA Victor a couple of years ago, were doing the right thing but at the wrong time.

So apparently were the Fontane Sisters, who were on the Victor label for a couple of years, backing Perry Como and cutting their own sides, but without much impact. Then they shifted to the indie Dot label and have been swinging ever since on the crest of the sisterly surge. On the indie Epic label, the De John Sisters have also been mopping up in multiple ways, not only hitting with their platters but writing their own material.

Gambling Tribute

from some 'pewsters' leaving for work around 8:30 or 9. There were at least an estimated 1,000 more turned away by police at the door —in best publicity-fodder tradition —of the cuffo donut-eating affair. WOR, playing it cagey in the best industry fashion, at first wanted the Metopera house for fear of not filling the Garden, but the Met was "unavailable."

With only indie WNEW shunning the fete because of "station policy," Gambling and WOR pulled loads of free publicity from some of his N. Y. rivals. Arthur Godfrey was there, and because of it hobbled in three minutes late for his own CBS stanza where he spent several more minutes lauding Gambling's turn-out as a "tribute" to 30 years of radio. Ed Sullivan was at the Garden, too — with an "I see they've finally legalized Gambling in N. Y."

The whole affair was loaded with puns and pundits. Big leaguers from all the stations showed: Ed and Pegeen Fitzgerald, WABC; Henry Morgan; Norman Brokenshire, WRCA; Mary Margaret McBride, NBC; Jack Barry, DuMont and take your choice; H. V. Kaltenborn, WRCA; Bob and Ray, WINS; Lanny Ross, WCBS; Martin Block, ABC; Gallagher and O'Brien, WMCA; Ted and Rhoda Brown, WMGM. And the pileup continued: Joe Bier, the WOR early-early morning gabber; Dr. William Jansen of the school system; Harry Hershfield; Ray Heatherton; Dorothy (Kilgallen) and Dick (Kollmar); Percy Faith; Alfred and Dora McCann; John Reed King; Thelma Ritter; Martha Deane; Mayor Robert F. Wagner; Allyn Edwards, plus two from the Metopera, ballerina Maria Slavenska and basso Lawrence Davidson.

Chatter before the full house at the Garden, which looked like a 20-to-1 proportion of females, was full of memorabilia, naturally. It was also full of some neat off-the-cuff commentary. Maybe it was a packed gallery of responsive femmes goading them on, but each guest in turn sparked some humorous dialog with Gambling. Most of the radio-video troupe that paraded across the centered speaker's platform seemed to feel it a duty to engage in something more than mutual backslapping (although there was enough of that, too).

In buttering up to the housefrau, the Gambling show planners made it a family affair, too. John A., his son, who fills in many of Gambling's regular broadcasts, was handy. So was father's spouse, Rita, and their grandson. It was a schmaltzy but effective capper to the morning frolic.

An extra-important fillip was a big-coin doorprize routine. Prizes were gifts from some of Gambling's sponsors: $2,500 worth of Axe-Houton Mutual Fund bonds, a $10,000 Plantation Estate in Florida, among the more expensive handouts. They finally got down to 24 bottles of Double Danderine and Fourway Cold Tablets. Dick Jackson, Bob Sullivan and Bob Hoffman, of WOR advertising-promotion-publicity, who were chiefly responsible for the unique session along with station topper Gordon Gray, saw that the "something for nothing" kick was followed through to the very end, with another sponsor, Dugan Bros., supplying 50,000 donuts and Beach-Nut giving out with 1,000 gallons of coffee. Art.

'Peter Pan'

Lucy" faring no better than a 26.1; Arthur Godfrey's "Talent Scouts" fetching a 22.1 and Burns & Allen a 12.6.

A total of 69.4 of all U. S. sets were in use during the 7:30 to 9:30 performance, with "Peter" grabbing off 69.2% of them. Broken down by half-hours, the tallies for "Peter" read:

7:30 to 8: 49.1.
8 to 8:30: 51.1.
8:30 to 9: 45.5.
9 to 9:30: 46.2.

NBC's switchboard would allow only one call to go through to Miss Martin at the web's color studio in Brooklyn—from Ethel Merman in a laudatory greeting from her Denver home. The "Pan" star spent 15 minutes backstage shaking hands with the mobs after the two-hour show. It was observed that she was using her left paw, since the orthodox member was injured in rehearsal the previous day when she cut the webbing between thumb and forefinger.

A bar and grill in Astoria, L. I., closed down shortly before 7:30, when "Pan" kicked off, for a free-for-all for the neighborhood kids who got rounds of Cokes on the house. "I figure these are my future customers," said the boniface.

Fonda Wooed

may be a role in a filmization of Mario Soldati's recent prize novel, "Letters From Capri," due out in English translation this spring, to be followed by a Knopf release in the U. S. later. Titanus is going ahead with plans for "Letters," with a screenplay of the novel to be submitted to Fonda, who has expressed interest. Pic would be shot by Titanus in English, with author Soldati, also a pic megger, handling the direction.

Previously, Fonda had said he would "most probably" return to Broadway this fall. He said he is currently considering several scripts, including one by Robert E. Sherwood and another by George Tabori.

Plush 'Dolls'

represents the show's 40% share of the second installment of the revenue from the $1,000,000 sale of the film rights to Samuel Goldwyn.

A final $100,000 installment, from which the show will also get 40% is due next Jan. 3, in addition to which there will be further income from stock, foreign rights, etc. The Frank Loesser - Jo Swerling - Abe Burrows musical played 1,200 performances on Broadway and a second company toured for about two years. A new touring troupe is currently on the road under the management of Manny Davis.

Crosby's Cracks

I figure that this Vietnamese official was trying to divert attention from his own official deficiencies perhaps when he drew a bead on American cowboy movies.

Hot Controversy

"And the hassling about American films abroad has not been confined to western movies. Charges and counter-charges have been thrown back and forth on unworthy subject matter and harmful propaganda in our flickers." Re this, Crosby quotes MPAA president Eric Johnston as saying such charges are "baseless and they have his dander up because they come at a time when the world is locked in a mortal struggle for the allegiance of mankind."

Crosby further orationed: "A large part of the world is force fed on an uninterrupted diet of propaganda films and the freedom of American movies from blatant distortions of the truth gives them an unmatched authority and authenticity. Our films are believed abroad because they show all sides of America—the good and bad.

"A good many of our diplomats in the Department of State have come to the fore to defend Hollywood from critical broadsides. Stanton Griffis, an ambassador to four countries, has had this to say, 'I have accomplished more with good American pictures than with all of the formal activities and paraphernalia of official diplomacy.' And there's the statement of Loy Henderson, now an Assistant Secretary of State. Says he, 'Feature films are the most valuable medium for giving foreigners a better understanding of the U. S. and the American people.'

"Now when you get the boys in the striped pants and the 'cookie-pushers' coming up with opinions like this it shows that the old 'Celluloid City' is doing pretty well. I know that Hollywood has made a few 'bloopers,' which have made everyone wince. But gosh, even Willie Mays strikes out once in a while. Hollywood's batting average isn't perfect, but it's pretty darned good, I'd say."

Crosby follows with more quotes, from Dag Hammarskjold, Prince Axel of Denmark, a West German newspaper editor and even a Russian directive, all, in effect, identifying Hollywood product as an instrument of good for America.

Then he has one final paragraph (all this in 15 minutes yet) as a wrapup, allowing as how stories of crime and conflict go back to the Stone Age and can be found in the Bible, Mother Goose and Shakespeare and they'll always be with us, on film or otherwise.

trying to determine how much sales dropped. In the Chicago area, b.o. action was lessened by about 20% by "Pan," said circuit ops. But in this territory the weather was colder than the previous week and, of course, there were the week-to-week program changes to be reckoned with.

Wrapping it up, "Pan" was a b.o. adversary of scientifically unmeasurable strength and theatre-owners wouldn't like to cope with airers of this stature too often.

The 14% tax cut is already in effect for earnings in Latin America. Purpose of the proposed new reduction is to encourage American business to invest abroad in friendly nations of Europe.

A bill was offered in the last Congress in connection with the overall revision of the tax laws. However, it did not include the earnings of American film companies in its provisions. The film people fought for inclusion.

When they failed to get it, they helped to block the bill until such time as it will provide for the Public May 'Wait Up for Notices'; Read B'way Legit Reviews on Tele

A huge circulation may soon be "waiting up for the notices" of Broadway legit openings. That's figured likely if late-evening television reviewers continue to react favorably to the reading of show reviews of the first-string New York critics.

Steve Allen, whose NBC-TV show is spread over a 40-station net Monday-through-Friday from 11:30 p.m. to 1:00 a.m., has come up with a new wrinkle in tv legit coverage. He's reading the N. Y. Times and Herald Tribune opening night drama reviews when they're hot off the press. The comedian-commentator has copies of the papers rushed to the studio in the Hudson Theatre, N. Y., and he reads most of the Brooks Atkinson and Walter F. Kerr notices.

Besides the review gimmick, Allen also has performers from the new shows appearing on his program immediately after the openings. So far, the guests have done scenes from their plays, but whether this will continue is questionable. Allen has already covered the openings of "Southwest Corner" and "Bus Stop" that way. Reviews on only the latter show were reported.

Scenes from both plays were done. Representing "Corner," which folded last Saturday (5), were Eva LeGallienne, Parker Fennelly and Enid Markey. Batting for "Bus," which opened last Wednesday (2), were Kim Stanley and Phyllis Love.

Only other N. Y. daily newspaper critic to have his reviews flashed over the air is John Chapman. The Daily News critic's evaluations are boiled down to capsule comments for the 12:30 a.m. news roundup over indie radio station WNEW, N. Y.

Tiny Arena Stage, D.C., Springboard to B'way For Actors, Directors

Washington, March 8.

Arena Stage, local theatre-in-the-round, winding up its 6th season of professional repertory, is merging as a talent springboard to Broadway. Established as part of the capital's show biz scene, and a fave with Embassy Row and official circles, the shoestring operation is becoming a factor in the development of new talent for the big-time.

Outstanding example of "local boy makes good" on Broadway is director Alan Schneider, who came to Arena via Catholic U., whose School of Speech and Drama has long been a training field for professional theatre. His Broadway credits include "Remarkable Mr. Pennypacker," "All Summer Long" and the current "Anastasia" and "Tonight in Samarkand."

"All Summer Long" was also the stepping stone to a professional career for Clay Hall, the juve who played the lead in the show here and then on Broadway. Two other members of the "All Summer Long" cast, both vets of Arena, are currently making Broadway bows, George Grizzard in "The Desperate Hours" and Marian Reardon is in "Tonight in Samarkand," playing opposite another Arena product, Robert Pernell.

Other Arena-ites who have gotten the nod for a try at the big-time include Richard Shepard, featured in the recent "Doctor's Dilemma" revival at the Phoenix Theatre, N. Y., and Elliott Silverstein, who made the jump from directing "The Crucible" in its central staging version to tv directing chores for "Omnibus."

The off-Broadway circuit, also has players who cut their acting teeth at Arena. Frances Sternhagen, daughter of a district judge and another Catholic U. grad, is at Cherry Lane, N. Y., in "Thieves Carnival." Ann Meacham and Michael Higgins, who played guest stints at Arena, have also since crashed New York.

At the moment, the 300-seat Arena is looking for larger quarters as a result of its best b.o. season to date. Averaging six-week runs it is now offering its fifth production of the semester, "The World of Sholom Aleichem."

'Boy Friend' Repays Nut, Has $66,137 Net Profit

"The Boy Friend," Cy Feuer's and Ernest H. Martin's Broadway edition of Sandy Wilson's London musical, made a final $40,000 return of capital last Jan. 21, representing the balance of its $140,000 investment. The show had also earned $66,137 net profit through last Jan. 29, according to an accounting statement sent to the backers.

For the four weeks ended Jan. 29, the vintage musical satire earned $43,722 profit, plus $73 souvenir program royalty, but less $1,436 in N. Y. State unincorporated business tax. The show is currently in its 24th week at the Royale, N. Y.

'Hours' Headstart Towards Payoff

"Desperate Hours," Joseph Hayes melodrama at the Barrymore, N.Y., has a head start toward paying off via an unusual pre-production sale of the film rights. The production, in which the author is partnered with Howard Erskine, is virtually guaranteed a $60,000 return from the picture deal.

The show cost approximately $100,000 to bring to town and can earn about $5,000 a week at capacity. On that basis, it would have to sell out for at least eight weeks to get into the clear—on paper. Actually, it will have to continue the maximum operating net through next June, since it will not receive any of the film revenue until the picture version is released, effective next January.

Under the film deal, Paramount bought the rights to Hayes' original novel, incidentally hiring the author to do the screen treatment. The studio will pay 5% of the film gross (which Paramount figures will be between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000). Since the picture deal was set before the legit production was arranged, the show and its backer are not getting the customary 40% share of the proceeds.

Setup calls for the author and production to split the first $150,000 film revenue on a 60-40 basis. The author will get all of the next $100,000 of screen sale income. Any proceeds over $250,000 will be shared on the usual 60-40 setup.

According to that, the legit production of "Hours" will get a minimum of $60,000 in film revenue (less the usual commissions) and 2% of the film gross over $5,000,000. If and when the show pays off, the backers and the management will divide the profits 50-50.

SAMUEL GRISMAN DEAD; CO-PRODUCED 'ROAD'

Albany, March 8.

Legit producer-theatre operator Samuel H. Grisman, who presented "Tobacco Road" in 1933 in partnership with adaptor Jack Kirkland, died March 1 at the Veterans Administration Hospital here. Death resulted from injuries suffered when Grisman was hit by a truck early that day at the state-operated Mount McGregor rest camp in Saratoga County.

Grisman, who resided in New York, was last represented on Broadway in 1944 by "Dark Hammock," which he co-produced with Meyer Davis. Prior to the production of "Road," his biggest hit, Grisman had sponsored "Talk About Girls" in 1927 and "Deep Harlem" in 1929. With Kirkland, he also co-produced "Bright Honor" and "Forbidden Melody" in 1936 and "Tortilla Flat" in 1938.

In 1938 he also sponsored the Broadway production of "The Cradle Will Rock." Besides his production activities, Grisman had at various times operated five Broadway theatres, the Hudson, Fulton, Forrest, Belasco and Windsor, and had leased other houses in various cities.

His wife, Ruth, survives.

'Fireproof Dahling

Detroit, March 8.

Even the law is scared of Tallulah Bankhead. At the Shubert Theatre here last week, where she was starring in the touring "Dear Charles," a fireman assigned backstage protested to house manager Jimmy Nederlander about the actress smoking in her dressing room.

"Okay," said the wary legiter, "you go ahead and tell her to stop."

"Nothin' doing," flared the fire-fighter, "do you think I want to be chewed up alive?"

'Lunatics' Payoff, Plus $31,640 Net

"Lunatics and Lovers," Sidney Kingsley comedy at the Broadhurst, N.Y., made a $40,000 return of capital last week. That represented the balance of the show's $100,000 investment. As of Feb. 26, the show had made $31,640 net profit, including $14,089 in bonds and deposits, $15,000 cash reserve and $2,551 available for distribution.

According to an accountant's statement accompanying last week's payment, the show earned $38,244 operating profit for the last four-week period, including a final $6,604 of its original production cost. It has been playing to virtual capacity business, but with the end of theatre party bookings the comedy will hereafter be on its own at the boxoffice.

The May Kirschner production is currently in its 13th week on Broadway.

'Hey Rube,' New Musical, Already Set for Coin; Author-Prod. Has Folks

"Hey Rube," musical scheduled for Broadway next fall, isn't sweating out the usual backing auditions. Although the show's book has not yet been completed and the sponsors and writers are new to legit, financing is practically in the bag. All but 20-25% of show's $200,000 capitalization is already on hand, according to Howard Gottfried, attorney for the management.

Investment coin was raised primarily through Russell Ellis, who developed the idea for the musical and composed the tunes. His family, who reside in Illinois and have real estate, coal and oil holdings, put up most of the money, along with several friends.

Ellis, who's 24 years old, will also co-produce the musical, with Gene Cogan and Harold Stern. Cogan has been active in show biz as a pressagent, while Stern, who's working on the book with Pat Kelcey, does a syndicated column for TV Key.

Musical, with a carnival background, is based on the life of George Washington Ferris, inventor of the Ferris Wheel. Current plans are for show to open on the Coast late in the spring and tour east for an October opening. Book is expected to be completed in about two weeks.

French-Canadian Group Invited to Paris Fest

Montreal, March 8.

Le Theatre du Nouveau Monde, local bi-lingual group, has been invited to the second annual Paris Drama Festival this summer. This is first time a Canadian company has been considered by the festival.

If the company makes the trip, it will be in competition with troupes from the U. S., Holland, Spain, Mexico, West Germany, Poland and other countries. The strong U. S. entry will include productions of "Oklahoma," Helen Hayes and Mary Martin in "Skin of Our Teeth" and Judith Anderson in "Medea."

TNM's director, Jean Gascon, estimates it will cost upwards of $20,000 to make the Paris trip, and he hopes for provincial and federal support for necessary funds. If the company accepts the bid, it will offer three one-act plays by Moliere, "Sganarelle," "La Jalousie de Barbouille" and "Le Mariage Force."

Shuberts' Relaxed Booking Stance; Lotsa Hits, But on Thinner Terms

By HOBE MORRISON

Attitude of the Shubert booking office toward Broadway managements seeking theatres on Broadway and the road has apparently relaxed a bit in the last year or so. Feeling in managerial circles is that what's regarded as slightly greater flexibility has come about since the death of Lee Shubert in December, 1953.

It's noted that not only on Broadway, but also out of town, the Shubert office is now willing to agree to more liberal terms than under the old regime. As a consequence, the Shuberts have had marked success in the last year or so in getting the likely hits into their houses, particularly in the case of musicals.

For example, when the booking situation was comparatively loose last season and managements had a choice of theatres, the Shuberts agreed to virtually unprecedented terms to get "Fanny" into the Majestic, N. Y. Similarly, they gave unusually liberal terms to get "Boy Friend" into the Royale, N. Y.

In the case of "Fanny," the show gets the conventional 70% of the first $20,000 gross and 75% of the next $26,000, but has the practically unheard-of arrangement of a cut-off clause giving it 100% over $46,000. Since the musical has been grossing about $66,000 a week, that's a concession of $4,000 a week. It was obviously worth it to the Shuberts to keep the Pagnol-Behrman-Logan-Rome tuner from going to an opposition house.

Deal for "Boy Friend" also has

Try 'Friends' on Coast; Hartford Co-Producer

Pittsburgh, March 8.

The new Charlie Gaynor revue, "Between Friends," which was tested last spring at the Pittsburgh Playhouse, will get a further Coast shakedown before chancing Broadway. Hunting Hartford, who has joined William Eythe and Lon McCallister as co-producer, will present the show this spring at his Huntington Hartford theatre, Hollywood.

The theatre owner-producer put up the remainder of the bankroll for the venture. Revised plan is to take the production to Broadway following the coast run, probably next fall. Gaynor's previous revue, "Lend an Ear," also broke in at the Pittsburgh Playhouse and had a Coast tuneup before getting to New York. Eythe was co-producer of that, too.

'Samarkand' Case Back to Arbiter

Dispute between director Herman Shumlin and "Tonight in Samarkand" producers Bruce Becker and Robert Ellis Miller has been returned to arbitration. The N. Y. Supreme Court tossed out an original arbitration award upholding Shumlin in his claim to directorial billing on the show and full royalties under his contract. Shumlin had been replaced by Alan Schneider as director of the Jacques Deval-Lorenzo Semple Jr. drama during its out-of-town tryout.

Motion to vacate the award was made by L. Arnold Weissberger, attorney for the producers. Weissberger argued that no arbitration hearing was actually held, as he had withdrawn from the proceedings after declining to bring in members of the "Samarkand" company from Washington during show's final tryout week there.

Case was returned to Mrs. Emily Holt, who was the sole arbiter in the hearing. Decision noted "it was improvident for the arbitrator to refuse a short adjournment until after the show's opening."

FINE STOCK PRODUCER ON TAX NON-PAYMENT

Buffalo, March 8.

Charles Michel Turner, 31, producer of the Niagara Falls (Ont.) Theatre, has been fined $987 in Magistrate's Court for failure to remit tax funds to the provincial government in connection with his stock operations. He was given one day to pay the fine or serve three months in jail, in addition to being required to remit $3,146 to the government treasurer as required by the Hospital Tax Act.

Charges of violation of the Criminal Code are also faced by Turner for fraudulently converting tax money it is claimed he collected as agent for the Treasurer of the Province of Ontario. This hearing will be held later.

Receipts from the theatre's production of "White Sheep of the Family," amounting to over $700, were seized by the sheriff. Turner last summer presented an English stock company from Halifax and London at the Niagara Falls spot.

'Lost Colony' Gets 10G Grant from N. Carolina

Greensboro, N. C., March 8.

The "Lost Colony," original North Carolina outdoor drama, which ended the 1954 season with a deficit of $17,987, has been granted a $10,000 allocation by Gov. Luther H. Hodges and the Council of State.

Bad weather was blamed for the show's deficit. The allocation from the state's contingency and emergency fund was approved under a 1945 law which provides that the council of state may make grants of up to $10,000 to the symphonic drama in any year.

Chapel Players 'Tour' Church Circuit With Special Legit Shows

An eastern church circuit for special legit productions is being developed by the Broadway Chapel Players. Group of professional performers was organized last year by actor Bill Penn for the presentation of a series of Sunday vesper productions at New York's Broadway Tabernacle Church, since retagged the Broadway Congregational Church.

Operation has branched out this season. A production of William Alexander Percy's dramatic poem, "In April Once," slated to begin a run of nine weekly performances at the Congregational next Sunday (13), has had what is tantamount to a pre-Broadway tryout. Presentation has played five break-in dates, including four in out-of-town churches.

"April," which is getting its first professional production, proemed last Feb. 13 at St. Paul's Church, Philadelphia. Other bookings were the St. James Church, Lancaster, Pa.; First Reform Church, Reading, Pa.; First Baptist Church, Morristown, N. J.; and the Union Theological Seminary, N. Y. All were Sunday performances except the last, which was a Tuesday booking.

During its preem season, the Chapel Players offered Christopher Fry's "Boy With a Cart" for 11 Sundays at the Congregational, N. Y., plus a special Monday presentation at the St. James, Lancaster. Current semester began Oct. 10, with a 16-Sunday run of Actor Jack Mann Buys Barn at Guthsville, Pa.

Guthsville, Pa., March 8.

The Guthsville Hotel Playhouse has been sold by John Eved to Jack Mann, a former member of the Playhouse cast. The former owner, an Allentown public relations man, had operated strawhat the last two years. Mann was in the cast two years ago and last year appeared in Melody Circle productions in Allentown.

The sale includes physical properties and good will, but not the name "Town and Country Players," as the company was known. Mann, a tv announcer as well as legit actor, will open the spot June 6 with "King of Hearts," and subsequent bills will include "Heaven Can Wait," "Three Is a Family," "Late Love," "The Moon Is Blue," "See How They Run" and "Oh Men, Oh Women."

Show on Broadway

Bus Stop

Robert Whitehead & Roger L Stevens production of comedy-drama in three acts by William Inge. Features Kim Stanley, Anthony Ross, Elaine Stritch, Albert Salmi, Phyllis Love, Patrick McVey, Lou Polan, Crahan Denton. Direction, Harold Clurman; scenery, Boris Aronson; costumes and lighting, Paul Morrison. At Music Box, N.Y., March 2, '55; $5.75-$4.60 top ($6.90 opening).

Elma Duckworth	Phyllis Love
Grace	Elaine Stritch
Will Masters	Lou Polan
Cherie	Kim Stanley
Dr. Gerald Lyman	Anthony Ross
Carl	Patrick McVey
Virgil Blessi	Crahan Denton
Bo Decker	Albert Salmi

William Inge is becoming the playwrights' Feuer & Martin—like the producers, apparently he can't miss. Having rung the bell with his first produced play, "Come Back, Little Sheba," he copped the Pulitzer and Critics' Circle prizes with "Picnic," and has now topped himself with "Bus Stop."

This new comedy-drama is something of a sleeper. Advance scuttlebutt indicated the script wasn't too hot, and the fact that producers Robert Whitehead and Roger L. Stevens varied their standard policy by taking in outside financing for it seemed significant, as did the fact that Robert W. Dowling, their partner in Producers Theatre, didn't participate in the venture. Twentieth-Fox bought the screen rights on a sliding scale price basis, prior to production, but tryout reports from out of town tended to be downbeat.

However, Inge has come through with his best script thus far, and the show is produced with great skill and taste, with a brilliant staging job by Harold Clurman, a generally lovely performance by the cast, plus a properly mood-creating single setting by Boris Aronson. It all adds up to an emphatic boxoffice click, the most promising the Whitehead-Stevens combo has had, and an obvious candidate for prize play honors.

"Bus Stop" has the same fine qualities Inge revealed in "Sheba" and "Picnic," plus better structure and superior technique, and better balanced comedy. Like the author's previous works, it is a "mood piece" in the contemporary fashion, with a commonplace plot idea and fairly familiar characters. These latter aspects are, however, redeemed by the quality of the writing, and Inge's compassion for ordinary people.

The locale is a smalltown diner in Kansas where the bus passengers take refuge for several early-morning hours during a blizzard. The principal characters are a honkytonk "chantoosey" and a rambunctiously naive cowboy who thinks the way to marry a girl is to heave her over his shoulder and lug her to the nearest justice of the peace.

He's athoroughly unhousebroken and pretty unlovable hombre at the start, and the nitery singer is ignorant, somewhat shopworn and not exactly a pin-up dream, either. But both are plausible and understandable, with a sort of innate dignity and, as Inge lets them emerge in the spontaneous-seeming dialog, they presently come through as likeable people whose fate is a matter of real concern.

Clurman's staging has the artful quality of never obtruding in detail, but being unmistakably expressive in substance, recalling in the same way his virtuoso direction several seasons ago of "Member of the Wedding." Aronson's eatery interior setting, with its grubby counter, tables, chairs, etc., and swirling snow visible through a rear wind w, is atmospheric and vastly helpful, and Paul Morrison's costumes and lighting provide valuable assists.

As the harried nitery singer, Kim Stanley gives a beautiful performance, not minimizing the shallowness of the character, but somehow gradually allowing her to develop as a genuine and rather gallant person. It's a portrayal that suggests that the actress shares the author's sympathy and respect for the character.

It's a better part and Miss Stanley's performance is better than her playing of the title role in "Traveling Lady" last fall. It's likely to bring her star billing (she was upped to stardom in "Traveling Lady," but reportedly asked to be featured in "Bus Stop"). Also, the stint rates her as a candidate for best-performance in VARIETY's annual poll of the N.Y. drama critics. The actress does not yet impress as having star magnetism or star personality projection, however. That, like boxoffice draw, may be not long coming, and perhaps the added confidence of this show will hurry the process.

As the rampaging cowpoke who has to be tamed before he realizes that humility and tenderness are more effective than steer bulldogging tactics in winning a girl, Albert Salmi is excellent, and his takeover of the part during the tryout tour appears to be a notable improvement. He has a wonderfully expressive face and a kind of headlong quality, whether in the wildly exultant moments or the moods of sullen incomprehension, that is funny and ingratiating.

Anthony Ross is admirably convincing as a drunken, emotionally disjointed ex-college professor, and Elaine Stritch is eloquently natural as the realistic diner proprietress whose morals, if not her social-financial standing, are approximately the same as those of the show-backer the same actress played in last fall's revival of "On Your Toes."

Phyllis Love is notably appealing as an intense, innocent waitress, although her playing doesn't reveal any more color or depth than in several other rewarding parts in recent seasons. Patrick McVey is acceptable in the uncomplicated role of a bus driver who knows the conversational approcah to eatery proprietresses, Lou Polan is quietly believable as a kindly sheriff and Crahan Denton is effective as the cowboy-hero's observant buddy.

"Bus Stop" could be made into a fine picture. Its thin plot will have to be developed, but the play's offstage preliminary action could probably serve for that. If the studio wants to retain the quality of the original, however, it had better allow Inge to have at least major participation in the screen treatment. Hobe.

Equity Review

High Button Shoes

Equity Library Theatre revival of musical comedy in two acts. Music and lyrics, Jule Styne and Sammy Cahn; book, Stephen Longstreet. Direction, Orville Sherman; musical direction, Jackson Wiley; choreography, Marc Herstens; scenery, Jean Wilhelm; costumes, Vere Roth; lighting, Tom Jordan; assistant musical director, Glenda Hutchinson. At Lenox Hill Playhouse, N.Y., Mar. 4, '55.

Cast: Stephen Gray, William Pierson, Robert Sinclair, Jack Leigh, John Anderson, Michael Mann, Sharon Lee, Georgia Phillips, Mona Tritsch, Stuart Kerns, Sally Brown, George Schroeders, Ronald Alter, Janet Jacobson, Brina Dexter, Florence Michaels, Lisa Jeffreys, Marvin Zeller, Tom Graney, Don Falasco.

Dancers: Jack Anderson, Dorothy D'Hanau, Marilyn D'Hanau, Donald Martin, Elaine Pallie, Robert Sinclair.

Imagination is lacking in ELT's revival of "High Button Shoes." Although it has a slim book, the Styne-Cahn-Longstreet opus racked up 727 main stem performances a few years back, thanks to production and performance magic. Little nostalgia is evoked at Lenox Hill.

Some bad casting, pallid direction and a couple of inferior performances in key spots take a toll. The lion's share of the humor should be carried by the fast-talking con man and his confedera.e. As the shill, William Pierson scores with a quizzical whimsy. Stephen Gray, however, as the senior partner, apparently feels that the theory of being funny is to make the obvious more obvious. Unhappily, the resulting paucity of laughs only seems to egg him on to more flagrant efforts.

Georgia Phillips and John Anderson are the typical American mama and papa circa 1913. Although Anderson is weak in the warbling department, he performs with an amiable relaxation. Miss Phillips makes the show hers by assuming that Lenox Hill is the major league. She does a thoroughly professional job, her duets with Anderson, "Papa Won't You Dance With Me" and "I Still Get Jealous," being the show stoppers, as in the Broadway original.

As the daughter, fetching Sharon Lee displays a good voice modeled on classic lines. Wide-eyed Mona Fritsch is a saucy maid and Michael Mann is mildly Addams-ish as a little boy. Stuart Kerns' Texan athlete is physically suitable, but lacks acting and vocal assets of musical comedy calibre.

Orville Sherman's direction ensures that cues are picked up promptly but that appears to be it. Marc Herstens' choreography is only average, although the dancers do their best to perk things up.

Duo-pianists Jackson Wiley and Glenda Hutchinson have attended to the music with nice regard for its sprightliness. Geor.

Marge's Surgery Forced 'Tonight' Cancellation, Says Gower Champion

Editor, VARIETY:

Hollywood.

In reference to the remarks of Miss Nadine Subotnik, Entertainment Editor of the Cedar Rapids Gazette, anent Marge and Gower Champion being "too tired" to continue their nationwide tour in "Three for Tonight" under the Paul Gregory banner, may I point out that on Feb. 14, the date scheduled to play Cedar Rapids, Marge Champion entered Cedars of Lebanon Hospital for major surgery.

This operation was performed to correct a not-too-serious condition which nonetheless would have been extremely serious if not taken care of. It was, furthermore, a condition which had caused my wife considerable pain and anxiety during the entire latter half of our three month tour—which tour, incidentally, included many towns considerably smaller than Cedar Rapids.

Also, we had to cancel three sold-out performances in St. Louis, a considerably larger town, when Mrs. Champion was hospitalized for this same condition:. (The size of towns concerns us here only because Miss Subotnik has attempted, in her letter, to insinuate a note of the old cry about small towns not being important enough for road shows, which does not coincide with the facts.)

If Miss Subotnik cares, Mrs. Champion is recovering nicely and will resume with the show when it opens in New York the end of March as scheduled.

Gower Champion.

Original Letter

(Miss Subotnik's letter recalled difficulties with a previous Paul Gregory show, "Don Juan in Hell," and reported how Coe College, Cedar Rapids, had been embarrassed by the short-notice cancellation of a "Three for Tonight" performance scheduled for Feb. 14, for which it had sold about 1,000 tickets. The letter mentioned that the Champions had appeared on "Toast of the Town" at about the same time Coe College had taken ads apologizing for the cancelled performance. Incidentally, VARIETY published in the issue of last Dec. 22 a story from Hollywood that "Three for Tonight" would layoff the first two weeks of February for rewrites and re-rehearsal. Ed.)

Milwaukee, March 8.

Local citizens, having put up over $116,000 for the establishment of the Fred Miller Theatre, are now apparently going all out to support the operation. Non-profit venture took in nearly $25,900 on its initial two productions, "Sabrina Fair" and "Cyprienne." Total gross potential for the two offerings was $28,200.

Shows are presented for two-week, 16-performance stands. Theatre got underway last Jan. 25 with "Sabrina," starring Jeffrey Lynn. The Samuel Taylor comedy wound up with nearly $13,900 in the till. Second presentation, Dorothy Monet's "Cyprienne," based on Sardou's "Divorcons," preemed Feb. 8. Comedy, with Uta Hagen and Herbert Berghof starred, took in around $12,000.

"Kind Lady," starring Fay Bainter, wound up as the spot's third entry last Sunday (6), with "Affairs of State," starring Sheppard Strudwick, opening tonight (Tues.). "Shadow and Substance," starring Julie Haydon, is due March 22.

However, instead of producing the revue themselves, they persuaded Hambleton and Houghton to present it at the Phoenix. Show, which will follow the current run of "Master Builder," is slated to open April 19.

Gilbert Miller, who was tentatively set for a leading part in the all-star, all-amateur revival of "Biography" for a week's strawhat engagement next summer to benefit an unselected charity, has withdrawn from the project. He explains that he'll be readying a London production of "The Dazzling Hour" at the time and won't be able to return to the U.S. for the guest acting stint. Besides, he reveals, "Kitty (Mrs. Miller) says if I leave her in England for it, she'll leave me." Others in line for the cast of the charity revival are playwright-novelist Anita Loos, mag publisher Fleur Cowles, the play's author, S. N. Behrman, novelist James Michener and publisher-columnist-lecturer Bennett Cerf. Operation is being presented by Broadway producers Albert Selden and Morton Gottlieb.

Closing of "Mrs. Patterson" last Feb. 26 after 17 weeks on Broadway, not only represented a loss to investors, but also indirectly cost actor Alonzo Bosan $550. Performer, who was dropped from the show during the out-of-town tryout, netted $2,950 from an arbitration award entitling him to his run-of-the-play contract salary. A $3,500 settlement offer by "Patterson" producer Leonard Sillman for 20 weeks payment at $175 per week had been refused by the actor.

Offset against the payments to Bosan, following an okay by Actors Equity, was the rehearsal and regular salary paid the actor for his engagement in the two-week N.Y. City Center revival of "Wisteria Trees" early last month.

A drama teacher at Howard College, Birmingham, will operate a show bus to New York, leaving March 23. Henry Lindsey, the professor-promoter, announces a lineup of five nights of plays for his students as well as seminar sessions with Elmer Rice, Howard Lindsey, Moss Hart, Hume Cronyn, Maurice Evans, Eva La Gallienne, Lemuel Ayres, Jed Harris and Cheryl Crawford.

Group has studied biogs of these individuals and read up on current Broadway plays. George Abbott has also reportedly invited the Southerners to attend a rehearsal of the upcoming musical, "Damn Yankees." College will give one hour credit for the week spent in New York.

"Cat on a Hot Tin Roof," Tennessee Williams play currently trying out in Philly, is not a rewrite of his 1940-41 drama, "Battle of the Angels," as erratumed in last week's issue. It is a completely new script. Playwright has rewritten "Angels" and under the title, "Orpheus Descending," it is a prospect for Broadway production next season. But except for their common authorship, there is no connection between "Cat" and "Angels"-"Orpheus."

Scripter Ken Englund, whose metier has been chiefly Hollywood and radio-tv, has finished a new play, just making the Broadway rounds, titled "So Few For Love." He describes it: sets, 1; length, long; cast, very large; producers, for only the brave ones.

ETHEL LEVEY'S PASSING RECALLS HER 1913 HIT

By JESS FREEMAN

Recent death of Ethel Levey, George M. Cohan's first wife, recalls an episode of 1913 in London, where this writer then served as VARIETY representative. Ned Wayburn had brought over a group of American dancing girls and opened early that year under Albert De Courville's banner. Wayburn was unmercifully panned by the critics and hooted by the British audience and was pretty bitter. But De Courville's confidence in Wayburn remained intact and he pressed him to produce another show, "Hello Ragtime," to open at the London Hippodrome, of which De Courville had just been appointed managing director.

The second try was a bullseye for Wayburn partly due to the presence in the cast and the personal hit of Miss Levey. Gun-shy from his first taste of British heckling and booing, Wayburn had left the Hippodrome that opening night, afraid to face the verdict, and had to be retrieved and informed that his show was a smash.

Another human interest angle of that 1913 occasion concerned Graham White, one of the famous prewar aviators, who was then courting and who later married Ethel Levey. On the night of the dress rehearsal, White was backstage with a group of British swells all standing about in their elegant tails and whiteties. The callboy came along and told them, "On stage for the finale, gentlemen." Needless to say the "gentlemen" retired to the pub next door and waited out the finale there.

Kiviette Joins Brooks

Arthur Kiviette, formerly associated with his mother in a wholesale dress firm, has joined Brooks Costume Co. as production and purchasing executive.

His mother was with Brooks during the 1930s as a staff designer of costumes for Broadway shows. She has just liquidated the dress business and has retired.

Chi Skids; 'Caine' Exits at $28,700, 'Season' $14,200, Bellamy $15,200

Chicago, March 8.

Loop biz dipped last week. Exception was "Caine Mutiny Court Martial," which sprinted its final frame here. There are three openings this week.

Advance bookings include "The Rainmaker," Erlanger, April 11, for three weeks on subscription, and "The Tender Trap," Harris, April 12, for a run.

ESTIMATES FOR LAST WEEK

Caine Mutiny Court Martial, Blackstone (5th wk) ($4.40; 1,385) (Lloyd Nolan, John Hodiak, Barry Sullivan). Nearly $28,700 (previous week, $26,700); exited Saturday (5) to resume tour.

Fifth Season, Erlanger (16th wk) ($4; 1,300) (Chester Morris, Joseph Buloff). Almost $14,200 (previous week, $13,800); exited Saturday (5) for further tour.

King and I, Shubert (15th wk) ($5; 2,100) (Yul Brynner, Patricia Morison). Over $47,300 (previous week, $49,100).

Oh Men, Oh Women, Harris (13th wk) ($5; 1,000) (Ralph Bellamy). Almost $15,200 (previous week, $18,000); folds here March 26.

OPENINGS THIS WEEK

Dear Charles, Erlanger ($5; 1,300) (Tallulah Bankhead). Opened last night (Mon.) to two negative notices (Seymour Raven, Tribune; Glenna Syse, Sun-Times). American and News review tonight (Tues.).

South Pacific, Opera House ($3.30; 3,600) (Iva Withers, Allen Gerrard). Return engagement opened Sunday (6) to four unfavorable notices.

Tea and Sympathy, Blackstone, ($4.50; 1,385) (Deborah Kerr). Opened last night (Mon.) to unanimous critical praise.

'Deborah' $28,300, 'S.P.' 44G, Milw'kee

Milwaukee, March 8.

Town was jumping last week, with two touring shows on tap besides the regular stock entry at the Miller. "Tea and Sympathy," starring Deborah Kerr, was at the Pabst, while "South Pacific," starring Iva Withers and Alan Gerard, played the Palace. Miller show, in its windup second week, was "Kind Lady," starring Fay Bainter.

"Tea" took in a near-capacity $28,300, while "Pacific" nabbed almost $44,000.

Bracken Hefty $25,600 In 4 Southern Stands

Dallas, March 8.

"Seven Year Itch," grossed around $25,600 in a four-way split last week. The Eddie Bracken starrer was at the Texas, San Antonio, Monday (28); the Paramount, Austin, Tuesday (1); the Auditorium, Fort Worth, Wednesday-Thursday (2-3), and the Auditorium here, Friday-Sunday (4-6).

Current week is being split between the Municipal Auditorium, Oklahoma City, today (Tues.), the Municipal Auditorium, Tulsa, tomorrow (Wed.) and the Arcadia, Wichita, Friday-Saturday (11-12).

'Flaminia' $3,400 for 10 At Arena in Rochester

Rochester, N.Y., March 8.

"Girl on the Via Flaminia," second show of the winter-spring season at the Arena Theatre here, grossed a healthy $3,400 at a $2.20 top for 10 performances, due largely to the sellout final three performances closing last Saturday (5).

"Kiss Me Kate," the second musical in the Omar K. Lerman-Dorothy Chernuck theatre-in-the-round's four-year history, opens tonight (Tues.) for a three-week run.

Scheduled N. Y. Openings

(Theatre indicated if set)

Cat on Hot Tin Roof, Morosco (3-24).
Three For Tonight, Plymouth (3-31).
Champagne Complex (wk. 4-4).

Honeys (4-14).
Ankles Aweigh, Hellinger (4-18).
Guys & Dolls, City Center (4-20).
Inherit the Wind, Nat'l (4-21).
South Pacific, City Center (5-4).
Damn Yankees, 46th St. (5-5).
Finian's Rainbow, City Center (5-18).
Seventh Heaven (wk. 5-23).
Pleasure Dome (5-27).

'Rainmaker' $7,800 for 4; Starting Tour, Hartford

Hartford, March 8.

"Rainmaker", starring Geraldine Page, grossed fairish $7,800 in four performances at the Parsons Theatre last Thursday-Saturday (3-5) on first leg of 16-week tour. Top was $3.85.

House returns to pictures pending other legit bookings.

Tallulah $29,000, 'Tops' $15,600, Det.

Detroit, March 8.

Smash $29,000 was grossed by Tallulah Bankhead last week in "Dear Charles" at the 2,050-seat Shubert. House was scaled at $4.40 Friday and Saturday, and $3.85 other nights. Current is "The Fifth Season," in for fortnight at $4.40-$3.85.

"Pajama Tops" grossed $15,600 in second and last week at the 1,482-seat Cass at a $3.50, with twofers. That was a $2,000 jump over the previous stanz. Current is "The Tender Trap" in for two weeks at $3.85 top.

STRATFORD FEST CUTS TOP, CHANGES SEATING

Stratford, Ont., March 8.

Boxoffice top for the Shakespearean Festival here is being reduced from $6 to $5 for the coming season. Cut was prompted by buyer resistance the previous two years to the former top-price seats. Seating arrangement at the theatre-tent has been changed and the stage deepened by two-and-a-half feet.

Productions this season, beginning June 27 and continuing through Aug. 27, will be "Julius Caesar," "Merchant of Venice" and "Oedipus Rex."

'Game' $45,400 in Cleve; See 144G for 3 Weeks

Cleveland, March 8.

Touring "Pajama Game" nearly cleaned out the Hanna's ticket racks last week, nabbing a great $45,400 at $5 top. Except for Wednesday matinee, it was virtually a steady string of sellouts. Musical headed by Fran Warren, Larry Douglas and Buster West is so solidly sold for next two weeks that house looks certain for a gross of $144,000 for the entire run here.

'Cadillac' $30,700, Hub; Town Dark This Week

Boston, Mach 8.

"Solid Gold Cadillac" wound its three weeker at the 1,590-seat Colonial with a slick $30,700 at $4.40 and $3.85 top.

Town is currently without legit fare, but future bookings include "The Honeys," due next Monday (14) at the Plymouth for two weeks on subscription, and "Champagne Complex," opening March 21 at the Wilbur for a fortnight.

'MOON' FOLDS AT $9,400; 'MENDEL' $4,000 IN L.A.

Los Angeles, March 8.

Local legit continued in the doldrums last week. "The Moon Is Blue" closed its two-framer at the Biltmore to comparatively poor returns, and folded its long tour. In the small houses, the American Savoyards did a little better with "Pinafore" in its Gilbert & Sullivan repertoire at Las Palmas. "This Is Your Life, Mendel" continued sellout at Civic Playhouse and "Finian's Rainbow" also beat its nut at the Hollywood Repertory.

Estimates for Last Week

Moon Is Blue, Biltmore (C) (2d wk) ($3.30; 1,636) (Jerome Cowan). F. Hugh Herbert comedy folded to to over $9,400 finale.

Pinafore, Las Palmas (5 days) ($3.30; 400). American Savoyards' fourth repertory offering drew a modest $4,900.

This Is Your Life, Mendel, Civic Playhouse (C) (5th wk) ($3.30; 400) (Leo Fuchs). Capacity $4,000 again.

Finian's Rainbow, Hollywood Repertory (10th wk) ($3.30; 276) (Charles Davis). So-so $1,700.

'Teahouse' $42,470 2d Week, Frisco

San Francisco, March 8.

Racking up its second semester of virtual capacity business, "Teahouse of the August Moon" registered a walloping $42,470 at the Curran last week. The orchestra has been a sellout right along, but now the galleries are going solid for all performances, too.

Show is in for an indefinite run, on Theatre Guild subscription.

Estimate for Last Week

Teahouse of the August Moon, Curran (2d wk) ($4.40; 1,758) (Burgess Meredith, Scott McKay). Terrific $42,470, a boost of more than $1,000 over the great opening stanza; new figure is believed near the local straight play record.

'TRAP' CATCHES $11,200 IN SLOW-MOTION PITT

Pittsburgh, March 8.

"Tender Trap" wasn't so hot last week at Nixon, even with Theatre Guild-ATS subscription help, and finished with only $11,200. Beginning of engagement was very slim, and the comedy failed to improve in the stretch. Tour has just about been breaking even up to last week, but lost money here.

Nixon is currently dark, but "Solid Gold Cadillac" is due next Monday (14), with "Rainmaker" the following week and "Pajama Game" in April 4 for two weeks.

Jean Renoir Goes Legit With Own 'Orvet,' Paris

Paris, Mar. 1.

Film director Jean Renoir goes legit when he stages his own play, "Orvet," at the Theatre Renaissance next month. Show is now in rehearsal, with Leslie Caron in the title role and Raymond Bussieres as leads.

The noted director says that the large screen has eliminated the nuances of film making, notably in the disappearance of the use of the closeup. He now feels that the theatre is a more provocative element than the screen, since the greatest vehicle for sentiments is the unfiltered human voice. He recently completed "French Cancan," with Jean Gabin, Maria Felix and Francoise Arnoul, his first Gallic picture since 1938.

B'way Off; 'Bus' 25G (8), 'Silk' $58,200, 'Dark' $21,300, 'Prosecution' $23,600, 'Desperate' $26,700, 'Lovers' $24,000

Broadway took a seasonal slugging last week. Only the solid smashes held steady, with receipts nosediving for the other shows. Biz dropped as much as $15,000 for one musical and $7,400 for a straight play. Indications are for the slim business to continue this week, too.

There were two closings last week, "Southwest Corner" and "Wayward Saint." Only one show, "Quadrille," is slated to close next Saturday (12).

ESTIMATES FOR LAST WEEK

D'Oyly Carte in Long North American Tour

Toronto, March 8.

Following its 37-performance engagement this summer at Central City, Col., the D'Oyly Carte Opera Co. of London will make one of its most extensive North American tours. Troupe will appear July 2-20 at the old Opera House in the Colorado ghost town.

From there, the Gilbert & Sullivan outfit will visit the Coast for the first time since the season of 1928-29, performing in San Francisco for three weeks and for a similar period in Los Angeles. It will then visit Chicago, Toronto, Montreal, New York, Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia and Boston. Works to be presented ar "The Mikado," "Iolanthe," "Gondoliers," "Pirates of Penzance," "H.M.S. Pinafore," "Ruddigore" and "Trial By Jury." Peter Pratt will sing the leads.

North American representative is Ernest M. Rawley, manager of the Royal Alexandra Theatre here. He was appointed after New York confabs with Frederick Lloyd, D'Oyly Carte g.m., and Bruce Worsley, company manager, both over from London. Gerald Goode will handle press for the tour, with Les Appleby as U.S. company manager.

This may be "art" for the college professors of dramaturgy but it's not entertainment for the generality of theatregoers. Only a scholar could tell what precisely Max Faber has done to "modernize" the Henrik Ibsen script. It plays as if it had never gotten out of 1892, when first composed by the glum Norwegian, an aging man brooding on death and failure.

In effect this remains a play about an architect who is spiritually dead before the curtain goes up and physically dead when the curtain comes down. It is all quite believable and at the same time never particularly dramatic. An understandably neglected work, the play is well acted and staged at the Phoenix and ends up as a technically firstrate invitation to ennui.

Of greatest interest, naturally, is Oscar Homolka's performance in the long role of Halvard Solness. In it he demonstrates himself a rhetorician of great skill. He plays the role "tired" and bittersweet. The weakness, dramatically, lies in his motivations being so private to his own unexpressed thoughts.

This play is replete with cryptic half-statements. It's moot whether a director other than Homolka would have, or could have, paced the show more briskly, but that's almost a contradiction in terms since Ibsen's introspections simply cannot be hurried.

Modern type-casting is offended by the fact that two good-looking girls, played by Muriel Berkson and Joan Tetzel, are snake-charmed by the aging, heavy-set anything-but-sexy builder. If this is father-image stuff, it isn't made clear. The role of Hilda who "tempts" and "challenges" Solness allows Miss Tetzel to have a field day in technique—all shiny-eyed girlishness. An inherent paradox exists in her recognition of, and sensitivity to, the builder's callousness to his young assistant, while remaining callous herself to what her own youthfulness is doing to the older man.

Art Smith, of impeccable diction, Joseph Foley, convincingly the worried doctor, and Margaret Barker as the herself-spiritually-dead-but-still-worried wife, all play with professional distinction. The part of the young man who can't break away from the master builder is tough, since by modern American standards his lack of get-up-and-go is hard to comprehend and in consequence the audience tends to confuse reaction to the part with its playing by Gene Saks.

Here is another play, one of a number this season, where the scene designer "stars." Boris Aronson's gloomy sets are ideal for the purposes of the sombre 1892 story which Ibsen squeezed out of his morose old age.

The big climax at the end of the third act is, of course, where Solness, despite his vertigo, climbs up the scaffolding to pin the garland on the steeple to please the wilful girl from the sticks, and then plunges, off-stage, to his death. If the script had really been "modernized" it could have borrowed some gymnastic gear from Mary Martin's production of "Peter Pan" and dropped Solness into the orchestra pit. Land.

Three By Thurber

St. John Terrell production of three one-act comedies, adapted by Paul Elwood and Terrell from James Thurber's "Mr. and Mrs. Monroe" stories. Features Edward Andrews and Roberta Jonay. Direction, Bertram Yarborough; scenery, lighting and costumes, Kim Swados; incidental music, Sylvan Levin. At Theater de Lys, N.Y., Mar. 7, '55; $3.45 top.

Cast: Edward Andrews, Roberta Jonay, John Call, Dorothy Elder, Bill Story, Dossie Hollingsworth, Joe Hill, Jean Barker, Joseph Elic, Judith Paige.

The transplanting of three of James Thurber's "Mr. and Mrs. Monroe" stories from New Yorker pages to the stage has been accomplished with much affection and skill. The wit being special and sometimes tenuous, the job has not been easy. Due to careful mounting, and skillfully unostentatious acting by the two principals, preconceived notions of the Thurber society have presumably not been violated.

"Three by Thurber" is an intimate show; the Theatre de Lys being ideal for projection of its sly jests. Transposition to a main stem house would have to be handled with care, for while broader playing might get gustier laughs, the brand of humor might be sacrificed, since it is the dash of bitters in the large portion of whimsy that makes the evening palatable.

In "Mr. Monroe Holds the Fort," the he-man husband is left alone at night in a creaking country home. His trepidation as he reacts to flickering lights, a knock on the door by a stray motorist, or as he toys nervously with a revolver are done with sparse strokes. The distaff side gains a clean victory when the little woman returns and vows she doesn't know what she'd do without her brave husband and he blandly agrees.

"The Middle Years" is a one-evening itch. While the wife's away the husband is tempted to play. His conquests are figments of the mind's eye as he fancies a one A.M. rendezvous with a ravishing blonde of cocktail party acquaintance. A reverie of painfully realistic proportions sends him quietly off to his own bed.

In "The Imperturbable Spirit," Mr. Monroe envisions himself as the jaunty cosmopolite. Meeting his returning wife at the pier, he sports a cane and French novel. His urbanity is suspect, even to the baggage man, and it is with relief that he settles down at home to read to his wife.

Each anecdote is fragile, yet replete with recognition. As the hallowed male, Edward Andrews does a masterly job of underplaying, whether he is jumping at a snapping window-shade, helping a seductress on with her furs or conversing with a customs official about smugglers. Roberta Jonay as his pliant and sagacious spouse plays with a knowing acquiescence, wearing a Mona Lisa smile that may seem strangely familiar to many a husband.

Dossie Hollingsworth is appropriately sirenish as the temptress, Joe Hill has a light-hearted bit as a confused motorist, and John Call is farcically verbose as a pseudo-semanticist. The balance of the company are on their toes.

Bertram Yarborough's direction is suitably tongue-in-cheek although he has tended to let the pace lag. Kim Swados' colorful sets are excellent, whether evoking a country house, a city apartment or a North River pier.

This evening of quiet laughter has clearly been a labor of love. Thurberians probably will not be disappointed. For the time being the show is scheduled for Monday evenings only. Geor.

BRITISH EQUITY HITS S. AFRICAN RACE BIAS

London, March 8.

British Equity has just taken official notice of the explosive race situation in South Africa. In line with its policy of "total opposition to race prejudice," the actors' organization has notified its members that they are entitled to seek non-discrimination clauses in contracts for work there.

The action is in the nature of a compromise. It had been proposed that Equity impose a complete cultural boycott of South Africa because of the racial restrictions there. Although deciding that the matter is one of individual conscience, the union took at least the partial step of advising members of their right to seek a contractual clause entitling them to perform before non-European audiences if they wish to do so.

It's pointed out that a number of name artists, notably Yehudi Menuhin, have insisted on appearing before native South Africans as well as white audiences.

O'Casey 'Bonfire' Draws Boos, Cheers in Dublin

Dublin, March 8.

"The Bishop's Bonfire," first Sean O'Casey play to premiere his native Dublin since the Abbey Theatre rejected his "The Silver Tassie" in 1928, drew cheers and boos at its initial performance last Monday night (28) at the Gaiety Theatre here. Drama was presented by Cyril Cusack, who also plays a leading role, and staged by Tyrone Guthrie.

O'Casey has been attacked by certain Irish elements for his allegedly irreligious views. One local newspaper has supported the charge and there were rumors in advance of the "Bishop's Bonfire" opening of a possible anti-O'Casey demonstration. Police were stationed outside the theatre, mainly to keep order in the gallery queues, but there was no disturbance before the show.

Minor interruptions during the last act of the premiere apparently didn't disturb the players, but there were boos and some counter-cheering while Cusack was making a curtain speech. The 75-year-old dramatist did not leave his home in Devon, England, to attend the opening, but his wife, former Abbey actress Eileen Carey, and daughter Shivawn were present.

Also among the notables in the premiere audience was London producer Henry Sherek to gander the first new O'Casey play since "Cock a Doodle Dandy."

Chapel Players

Andrew Obey's "Noah" at the Congregational.

The Chapel Players work under an Actors Equity permit. Each show has to be approved by the union. No salaries are paid, but a collection is taken after each showing, to cover expenses. Any surplus coin goes to community and church activities.

Occasionally, Chapel Players casts include performers appearing in Broadway shows. Don McHenry, who's in "Fanny," also has a part in "April." Florida Friebus has doubled from her "Tea and Sympathy" assignment on Broadway in a Chapel Players production, while Penn and Helen Alexander sandwiched roles in "Cart" in between Sunday matinee and evening performances in "Fifth Season," now touring.

Here We Go Again

(The following is a release issued last week)

Thomas G. Ratcliffe Jr., president, has called a meeting of the Stock Managers Assn. for next Tuesday (15) at the Hotel Woodstock, N. Y., to discuss and act upon steps to be taken against the new Actors Equity regulations for the coming summer theatre season.

Equity has raised the rehearsal play for summer stock from $40 to $55 per week and has added a weekly $1.50 Welfare Fund charge to be paid wholly by the producer for each Equity actor on the payroll. According to SMA, these new rules have been passed by Equity without any prior negotiations with SMA or any other summer theatre producers.

(The following is a supplementary release)

The Stock Managers Assn. has invited Equity to send a representative to the SMA meeting to explain the union's stand on the new regulations. Summer theatre producers would particularly like to know what disposition would be made of $1.50 to be collected weekly for each Equity member on the theatre's payroll. The managers' group contends that the Welfare Fund at Equity is frozen at the present time and it is a legal question whether they could be taxed for monies unassigned.

Cat on a Hot Tin Roof

Philadelphia, March 7.

Playwrights Co. production of drama in three acts, by Tennessee Williams. Stars Barbara Bel Geddes, Burl Ives; features Mildred Dunnock, Ben Gazzara. Direction, Elia Kazan; scenery and lighting, Jo Mielziner; costumes, Lucinda Ballard. At Forrest, Phila., March 7, '55; $4.80 top.

Philly has had its share of big musical first-nights this season, but Tennessee Williams' new play, "Cat On a Hot Tin Roof," at the Forrest, has provided the city not only its most exciting dramatic premiere of the season, but its first really tumultuous after-curtain ovation since Arthur Miller's "Death of a Salesman." The two must share honors with another Williams play, "Streetcar Named Desire," as top audience rousers of the past decade here.

There are a number of remarkable angles about "Cat." The company had been rehearsing here for several days and word spread around that this was to be one of the dirtiest shows ever to bow here. Certain four-letter words, which Williams had indicated might be dropped in actual playing, were kept in until the last minute. Then substitutions were made, and there were no indications that the grim purpose of the drama suffered at all.

"Cat" is still far from nursery fare but, as of now, and despite the profanity allowed the character of Big Daddy, who originally had most of the four-letter words, the play is certainly no more startling than "Streetcar" and stands a good chance as an eventual film prospect.

Another pre-opening rumor about the show's controversial aspects concerned the homosexual angle, but as presented, this is certainly not as predominant as that of Robert Anderson's "Tea and Sympathy," where it is a major element. Williams not only has his male lead deny unequivocably homo charges made against him, but brings in the wife to testify loyally on the character's behalf.

That doesn't mean that "Cat" is a sweetness and light affair. When the charge of sexual abnormality isn't hanging over its characters the threat of malignant cancer is. And, as in the past, most of Williams' characters find themselves beating their heads against a stone wall of reality. There are, however, some compensations that, disregarding artistic standards, might add to the new play's b.o. chances.

Margaret, the heroine, might be called a second cousin of Blanche DuBois, of "Streetcar," but the resemblance is superficial. Margaret is sturdy and resilient; she's madly in love with her indifferent husband and finally seems to have won her battle to entice him back to the marital bed, whereas Blanche was fluttery and weak-spined, a psychotic whose "desire" had become an obsession.

In "Cat," some scenes are heavy, but they are so charged with violent conflict and drama that they never lag except for one brief spot in the third act. And, instead of the ordinary trappings of footlight tragedy at the end, there is the bedtime reunion between the husband and wife which not only holds out a hopeful hint for the future but introduces an almost light note.

Superb direction by Elia Kazan has meant a lot to Williams' new play, as it did to "Streetcar." The two dramas do have much in common and Kazan succeeds in bringing it out, whereas even he was stymied by "Camino Real." Here he has what seems a super-imposed handicap chargeable to, of all people, designer Jo Mielziner. Latter's single set is stunning, but doesn't suggest locals or people, and makes the entrances and exits, despite Kazan's wizardry, sometimes seem labored and artificial.

Playwrights Co. has done itself proud in the casting. Charge up another triumph to Barbara Bel Geddes as the passionately persistent young wife who carries most of the first act on her shapely shoulders. More amazing is her co-star, Burl Ives who, without a folksong in his pack, does a terrific job as Big Daddy. His scene with h's son, comprising a good part of the second act, marks Ives' biggest stage accomplishment to date. Dropping the original four-letter words for others slightly less objectionable but still plenty salty, doesn't seem to cramp Ives' style at all. It's a performance long to be remembered.

As the alcoholic but definitely sympathetic son who is also the young husband accused of being a homosexual, Ben Gazzara does an equally impressive job. He's onstage, foreground or background, most of the evening, generally with a highball glass in his hand, and his use of a crutch (he's supposed to have suffered a broken ankle when drunkenly trying a high-hurdle jump) adds to his dramatic punch.

Mildred Dunnock is the fourth important pivot. She plays Big Mama, originally intended and written by Williams as a heavy, slothful, big bosomed woman, but naturally changed to suit Miss Dunnock's physical proportions. The character may suffer a little from its original conception, but not because of any lack of acting skill by the actress.

Pat Hingle and Madeleine Sherwood do nicely by the less strongly defined roles of the brother-in-law and his wife. The producers have chosen to give the play an elaborate production—over and beyond Mielziner's expansive and oversized set. There are offstage music, scenic effects and chiildren who rush in and out periodically.

The impression is that "Cat" needs no embellishments at all. It's a powerful, free-swinging play of human frustrations that could be done before drapes and still impress as topflight drama.

Summer of Fancy Dress

Dallas, March 5.

Margo Jones production of drama in three acts (five scenes), by Bernard C. Schoenfeld. Features James Field, Maggie Kezer. Direction, Ramsey Burch; technical direction, James Pringle. At Theatre '55, Dallas, Feb. 21; $3 top.

Tom Clark ..... Edward Cullen
Carl Hatton ..... Edwin Whitner
Sylvan Vernon ..... Michael Dolan
Policeman ..... Joe Parker
Erik Hatton ..... James Field
Boy ..... Richard Banks
Edith Hatton ..... Louise Latham
Jerry Mazzioni ..... Harry Bergmann
Rose Mazzioni ..... Maggie Kezer
Linda Dasher ..... Kathleen Phelan
Martin Janeway ..... Charles Braswell

Margo Jones' newest tryout is Bernard C. Schoenfeld's "The Summer of Fancy Dress." Three-acter is an emotional drama with possibilities for films; although no one's happy at the curtain, it's a fine deterrent for doting mothers hellbent for Hollywood with talented moppets.

Author, a radio-tv and pix writer, hews to fine realism in his yarn about a former child star, now coowner of a Coast hamburger emporium, who is backpatted by a wornout fan mag writer. He is flattered into double-crossing his partner and spending the firm's mortgage funds on a neon sign with his name in lights. He loses his wife and biz partner, and at the curtain he and his dipso father are commiserating each other.

James Field makes a sympathetic role of the ex-child star in an excellent portrayal. Maggie Kezer, local radio-tv actress, scores as the young wife. It's her first arena role here, and she proves an ingenue find for Miss Jones. As the defeated father, Edwin Whitner registers strongly and other cast members ably support. Even in the garrulous role of a hasbeen mag writer Kathleen Phelan holds up well.

Top direction by Ramsey Burch makes a small mountain out of a potential molehill. He gets flawless performances, especially in supercharged, violent bits. Pringle's single relay set is tasteful and adroitly abets double-lighted scenes for flashbacks of the child star's better days.

The Bishop's Bonfire

Doublin, Feb. 28.

Cyril Cusack production of tragi-comedy in three acts, by Sean O'Casey. Features Cusack, Eddie Byrne, Seamus Kavanagh, Paul Farrell. Direction, Tyrone Guthrie; scenery, Michael O' Herlihy. At Gaiety, Dublin, Feb. 28, '55.

Dick Carranaun ..... Seamus Kavanagh
Councillor Reiligan ..... Eddie Byrne
Canon Burren ..... Paul Farrell
Manus Moanroe ..... Denis Brennan
Daniel Clooucoohy ..... Aldan Kerrigan
Keelin Reiligan ..... Maureen Cusack
Codger Sleehaun ..... Cyril Cusack
Father Boheroe ..... Patrick Layde
Foorawn Reiligan ..... Sheila Brennan
Lt. Reiligan ..... Godfrey Quigley
Railway Porter ..... Harry Hutchinson
Richard Rankin ..... Tony Quinn

Since Sean O'Casey shook the playgoing world with "The Plough and The Stars," "Juno and the Paycock" and the "Shadow of a Gunman" some 30 years ago, audiences have been awaiting for the hand of the master-craftsman to repeat; but after "The Bishop's Bonfire" they are still waiting.

The basic theme is a true O'Casey choice. A new Bishop is about to revisit his native town, and the prospect brings out all the hypocrisy that a small town contains, such as the town councillor angling for money and local power, and the Canon trusting that all will be tranquil, or at least that anything troublesome won't be apparent.

The play's title refers to the proposed burning of all the neighborhood's "irreligious books and pictures" as a beacon of welcome to the Bishop, and it is in the light of the flames that the final act of the tragedy is played—the murder of the councillor's daughter by her would-be lover. The girl has been twisted by a chastity vow, although she is not a nun, and the man by his failure to make the grade during studies for the priesthood.

For two of the three acts there is the O'Casey comic richness of the early Abbey Theatre plays, and even similarity to some of the familiar O'Casey characters, particularly the stonemason, who wouldn't drink if he didn't have to, the philosophising Codger and the flirtatious Keelin Reiligan with her spineless young man.

In the character of the Canon the playwright has put all his dislike of the clergy, while in the young Father Boheroe there is a "progressive" trend. Neither is quite plausible, but in the creation of the councillor as what is still known in Ireland as a "gombeen man"—a cheapskate who would grind the last cent out of a neighbor and then go to church to shout how much he loved him—the author is happy. But it's an inferior play by O'Casey standards.

The performance generally seems better than the play. Tyrone Guthrie has provided good casting and firm staging. Eddie Byrne's councillor is standout, with Paul Farrell matching as the type of churchman O'Casey dislikes. Another top performance comes from elderly Codger, observing and commenting, in a reasoned portrayal of a homespun philosopher.

The dramatist has not forgotten his Irish characters since he went to live in England, but distance has tended to make them considerably larger than life. This may not be vintage O'Casey, but it may be accepted as something at least reminiscent of his masterpieces.

Reviews on Tele

also carries opening night reviews, with Joseph T. Shipley, drama critic for the New Leader mag, giving his summation at 11:25 p.m. in a five-minute spot, tagged "First Nights." Several morning radio and tv shows also offer aisle-seater reactions.

Allen got lively dialer comment and reportedly drew enthusiastic reaction from NBC brass for his stunt of reading the Atkinson and Kerr notices on "Bus Stop," and he now plans to make the procedure regular practice. Late editions of the Times and Herald Trib carrying the reviews are available in the press rooms of the respective sheets at approximately 12:30, so he has ample time to have them delivered to the studio and read them almost in toto.

With the broadened public interest in Broadway legit in the last couple of years, there's evidently a wide and growing audience for such pre-morning-after ganders at the two key notices. Fact that the critics involved are of the stature of Atkinson and Kerr ensures that the opinions are more reliable and better-expressed than anything of the sort overwise available on the air.

The case of Allen's reading of the "Bus Stop" reviews indicated how dramatic such a situation could become. Miss Stanley, after repeating a scene from the William Inge play on the NBC-TV, had apparently left the studio before the papers containing the notices arrived.

Otherwise, an alert cameraman might have caught her face as she heard Allen read Kerr's rave for her performance in the show. It could hardly have missed being as dramatic as anything in "Bus Stop" itself. Conversely, in th case of a pan personal notice, the situation could be embarrassing, if equally dramatic.

this would travel via eight freight cars, and the company would settle down for five, six or eight-week visits in territory previously covered. This would include Greece, Israel, Egypt, North African coast, Spain and all Italy, France and Germany. Question is where to start.

Bookings for this unique show (only "This Is the Army" comes close, but that was on Army pay under full Government command) have been freakish. Big theatres have been afraid to book more than a single week, yet cry when the soldout show has to move on to other commitments. Now all want it back and geography is the only problem. Tent idea—and it could be heated—would resolve this.

Extra Curricular

Extra-curricular activities of the cast are amazing, top chirpers taking on invitations to sing classics or American pops at all spots, highbrow or low. Inevitable result is cheers, and audiences that won't go home.

Show itself stacks up fabulously well for a nearly three-year-old. Without any nominal stars, accent is strong on ensemble, director Breen being on hand weeks at a time checking and even changing. Biggest change lately has been a "new dimension" to Bess, whose mad scene now includes "Strawberry Cry," chilling effect suggesting Ophelia's similar scene.

La Scala bow for vet conductor Alexander Smallens was a great event for the longhair batoneer, who's conducted the musical over 2,000 times since he first led it nearly 20 years ago. Milanese critics all praised his quick mastery of the 85-piece opera orchestra. Here the strings are especially meaty and the hushed house holds itself back knowingly in the seconds of silence just before the curtains close. Then the rafters ring.

No friction is evident, though it must have burned for all concerned when Gloria Davy and Leslie Scott were chosen to sing La Scala opening night. Fredye Marshall and Martha Flowers, La Verne Hutcherson and Irving Barnes alternate in title roles, but opening night assignments from Paris to Barcelona have always been in turn, depending on health. Miss Davy and Scott drew the choice Milan opening. The crix raved, and went back later to do the same for others. Lorenzo Fuller, Joseph Attles and Earl Jackson alternate as Sportin' Life (Jackson opened and hit the jackpot) and John McCurry and Paul Harris are the Crowns, six-foot-four McCurry bowlin' 'em over.

Tickets & Ulcers

Another novelty was Mrs. Robert Breen's insistence that both music and drama crix be asked to the opening, which La Scala had agreed to but reluctantly. Result was double reviews in major papers, forthcoming mag articles that won't hurt during the Italian trek. Co-producer's wife is programmed as Producers' Representative, requests for seats from official or new acquaintances pushing her toward ulcers.

Backstage crew rates particular cheers, working in eight languages (so far) with translators whose technical verbiage is shady. Raked stages predominate in this part of the world. These must be evened off to handle Wolfgang Roth's admired sets. Sets have had rugged handling, in box planes, Greek freighters, Arabic docks, but are nursed with tireless care by a top American backstage crew. Met Opera's Larry Bland is chief technician and master carpenter, with Walter Riemer, doubling from role of sheriff as stage manager.

Crew includes Sam Kasakoff, Jean Hodgin, James Hagerman, Jerry Laws, Charles Rasmussen, Arthur Dignam, John D'Antuono, Harry J. Thompson Jr. and Joseph Andrew James. Dignam's job is especially tough, since the show carries heavy, vital lighting. In Athens, the show used the Parthenon's transmitter, thus blacking out the Acropolis—but there were no kicks. In Scala, balcony lights are hoisted, via long cables, over the quondam Royal Box.

The Jed Mace costumes' muted colors are holding up well, too, under wardrobe's Marilyn Putnam and Mary Hodgin.

Who Ate the Goi?

Goat Je Bob still gets audience gasps on entrance, a different animal being picked up at different spots and trained to get used to stages. Company horrified in Alexandria, Egypt, to find that on holiday its carefully trained goat had disappeared. It being a feast day, its owners had eaten Je Bob.

In Zagreb, company noticed a wistful little guy making notes backstage, learned he was looking over show for next theatre in Belgrade. Past experience had taught crew to expect nothing from a seemingly good idea, but they got a surprise in Belgrade, where the setup backstage was best they've encountered. Tito government gave Ereic Zlatomir permission to travel with company on Mediterranean tour, but the Yugoslav goes back soon to rejoin his wife and son.

Assorted PeenBeers

Highly assorted PeenBeers (night clubs, Ph. D.'s and Juilliard grads) have mastered 24-hour clock (curtain time 21 hours) and cope wonderingly with natives' negation of time values. F'rinstance, opening night was set weeks ahead for Feb. 21 until a few days before Scala management remembered it had scheduled a "Walkure" performance at hour set for setting up "Porgy," thus putting off opening a full day. However, if you're late to get to your La Scala seat, you don't get in. Doors are locked and you can't bribe your way in unless your a box-holding reguar. There's also an illuminated clock over the proscenium, not exactly over-conspicuous but you can't miss looking at it once in a while. I couldn't help smiling that, since it registers only five-minute time changes, the official La Scala time doesn't always agree with other clocks in Milan.

Cold water was tossed on the opening for the cast by Equity's ruling that if Ed Murrow's TV cameras were used, its members would have to get a full week's pay. All but two of 60-odd had signed a request that they take no coin for this major promotion deal and were mighty bitter at the home office which, they say, has been no real help to them most of the time. Irony was that New York Equity said the request would be "further discussed" at the next Council meeting set for same hour the show opened in Milan.

Shuberts' Booking

the same basic sharing terms, but with a cut-off limit at $30,000. Thus, the theatre's share is $8,500 maximum. Moreover, the show doesn't appear to be assuming an abnormal amount of the musician and stagehand bills. In this case, the Shuberts apparently shared the general trade expectation would have only a limited run, so they were willing to give liberal terms to retain the goodwill of producers Cy Feuer & Ernest H. Martin.

Straight Show Sluffs

Opposed to this theoretical liberalized attitude of the Shuberts in the booking field is the manner in which various straight plays have been forced out of Shubert theatres on Broadway as soon as they've gone under the stop limit, plus the manner other shows have been shuffled from house to house and, in the case of the quick-switch of the incoming "Three for Tonight" from the Music Box to the Plymouth, the traditional razzle-dazzle technique.

Despite these all-too-familiar booking manifestations, however, the impression persists that, when the Shuberts want a show badly enough, they're readier to make concessions than they used to be. The fact that in at least two instances they've agreed to more liberal terms than even the exceptional deals they've made in the past with Rodgers & Hammerstein, appears to bear out this feeling.

It's figured in the trade that under the supervision of J. J. Shubert, who assumed control of the partnership on his brother Lee's death, John Shubert (son) and Jack Small have somewhat more leeway in their respective handling of the road and New York booking situations. But, as always with the Shuberts, such matters remain in the realm of backstairs gossip, so the trade can merely speculate.

Ballets Espagnols Season's Riddle; Rave Reviews Everywhere, 125G Red

Ballets Espagnols wound up a 20-week tour of eastern U. S. last Friday (4) in Schenectady, N. Y., for the show biz mystery of the season. Despite rave reviews in N.Y. that would have insured a legit show a two-year run, and similar sock notices out of town, the troupe wound up in the red for about $90,000 to $100,000, with another estimate as high as $125,000. Troupe's weekly nut was around $19,000, with average receipts claimed to be $13,000.

Highly-touted Spanish dance troupe, headed by Teresa & Luisillo, after five seasons abroad under management of Jules Borkon, was presented in its first American tour by Michaux Moody, Richmond, Va., concert manager, with David Libidins of N. Y. as general manager and booker. Moody is sustaining the U. S. tour's losses.

Explanations for the meagre b.o.draw are various. Libidins started booking the outfit late (in April). He had few outright sales, and few of the profitable one-night Community or Civic guarantee dates. Troupe opened cold, was new to U. S. audiences and lacked advance buildup and national publicity. Stagehands and musicians costs were unusually high.

26G For Extra Tooters

Management estimates it paid out $26,000 for extra musicians. Extra stagehands cost it another $15,000. Troupe toured with two conductors and 11 musicians. In Cleveland, it had to take on 12 local players. The Chicago tooters union ordered a 3 to 1 setup, then agreed on 18 local musicians, nine of whom didn't even play during the engagement. In Boston, Detroit, Pittsburgh, etc., troupe had to add five local players which it didn't need or use.

Moody and Libidins aren't discouraged, and have already skedded a return tour of 20 to 22 weeks next season, starting Oct. 21, to capitalize on the reviews and word-of-mouth. This season's trek went to the Mississippi; next year's will stretch to the Coast. Management plans some cutting of costs. There will be fewer stagehands due to changes in the productions, with a different repertory. The 11 traveling musicians may be dropped altogether, with one of the two conductors going ahead regularly to rehearse local players instead.

Libidins has also started booking early. He has nine weeks of outright sales now, with many Community guarantee dates expected. There won't be as many full-week stands, advisedly. Troupe will be in better territory, such as Texas, the southwest and the Coast.

Troupe has gone to Venezuela, and will follow to South America. It will play there through the summer before going home to Madrid to ready its next U. S. visit.

Thomas Scherman and the Little Orchestra Society will present a concert performance of Mozart's "Der Schauspieldirektor" (The Impresario), in a new English translation by George and Phyllis Mead, at Town Hall, N. Y., next Monday (14).

Watkins Takes Over San Jose Concert Mgt.

San Jose, Cal., March 8.

Wendell Watkins, with the Denny-Watrous Mgt. for the last seven years, has taken over the concern, to be known now as the Wendell Watkins Mgt. He will handle concert attractions, as before, but in San Jose only, and in addition will book plays and other events suitable for the Civic Auditorium.

Denny-Watrous has handled concerts in San Jose for 19 years. Dene Denny and Hazel Watrous began biz in Carmel 30 years ago. Miss Watrous died last October. Miss Denny will continue handling events in the Monterey Peninsula.

Call of the O'Seas For N. Y. C. Ballet

The N. Y. City Ballet, winding up a N. Y. run at City Center Sunday (12), is set to roam the world off and on during the next two seasons. Troupe takes off soon for Europe for 11 weeks, opening April 9 in Paris for the State Dept.'s Salute to France, and playing half a dozen countries before returning June 25.

This summer it will play the Coast—L. A., Frisco, Seattle, Portland—returning to N. Y. for a stay in November. The State Dept. is paying N. Y.-Paris roundtrip fares on the spring junket, the troupe paying its own European way beyond. Leon Leonidoff is the European impresario.

In spring-summer, 1956, the troupe will make a Middle East tour for the State Dept., to Greece, Yugoslavia, Egypt, Israel and elsewhere, this time getting not only overseas passage from the State Dept., but fares for the hops beyond. Leonidoff will again present. Troupe will be back again around July, '56, for a Coast season, with tentative plans to go to the Far East in August, '56, for eight to 10 weeks—Honolulu, Tokyo, etc.

LOUIS HORST WINNER OF CAPEZIO AWARD FOR '55

Louis Horst, vet conductor-composer-editor, who helped to shape the modern dance, has been picked as winner of the Capezio Award for 1955. Award, which includes a $500 check, is given annually to an outstanding figure in the dance world. Previous winners were Zachary Solov, Lincoln Kirstein and Doris Humphrey.

Judges were John Martin, N. Y. Times dance critic; Walter Terry, N. Y. Herald Tribune terp reviewer; Anatole Chujoy, editor-publisher of Dance News, and Martha Hill, head of the Juilliard School's dance department. Formal award will be made at a luncheon at the St. Regis, N. Y., March 15.

Stoky Signs As Houston Symph Head for 3 Years

Houston, March 8.

Leopold Stokowski has been engaged to conduct the Houston Symphony Orchestra in 10 programs for part of the 1955-56 season. He's been made the orch's permanent music director for three years, and will supervise all activities.

Since Efrem Kurtz left a year ago, the Houston Symphony has been without a resident conductor.

Upped 90G Budget Set For '56 Opera Season In Miami; Special 'Cosi'

Miami, March 8.

Opera Guild of Greater Miami has set its productions for 1956. Group will offer "Cosi fan Tutte," in English, next January, with an all-star cast of Met Opera singers in Eleanor Steber, Blanche Thebom, Virginia MacWatters, Brian Sullivan, John Brownlees and Frank Guarrera. Brownlee will supervise the staging, too. "Boheme" will be presented in February, with Hilde Gueden and Jan Peerce. Three performances of one opera, and four of the other, will be given in all, in Miami, Miami Beach and Fort Lauderdale.

Arturo Di Filippi is artistic director of the company, and Emerson Buckley will be musical director and conductor for the seventh season. "Cosi" is getting an all-star cast because of the Mozart bicentennial. As result, budget estimate for the seven showings is $90,000, as against $85,000 this season.

Buckley will also conduct the "Barber of Seville," which the Junior Opera Guild is putting on, with local talent, April 22 in Miami. It is for the National Federation of Music Clubs convention.

Longhair Disk Reviews

Verdi: Masked Ball (RCA Victor). The memorable broadcasts of last year, Arturo Toscanini's last opera with the NBC Symph, now issued by Victor (with some rerecording by the maestro), for a vivid, exciting, distinguished album. Orch is a little heavy and overpowering sometimes under Tosey's pulsing drive, but overall the vocal and orchestral attack is precise and astonishing. Jan Peerce is an artistic delight as Riccardo; Robert Merrill a robust baritone; Claramae Turner a sturdy Ulrica; Herva Nelli and Virginia Haskins also good.

Verdi: Rigoletto (London). Rousing, lusty version of the melodious opera, with a fine cast. Hilde Gueden, lyric and tender, is a choice heroine; Mario Del Monaco a brilliant, ringing (though sometimes too strong) tenor. Aldo Protti is sympathetic and skilled in the title role, and Cesare Siepi is sonorous and impressive in the small role of Sparafucile. Fernando Corena's resonant Monterone also impresses. Maestro Alberto Erede paces soloists, and St. Cecilia chorus and orch ably.

Beethoven: Quartets (Angel). Second volume, with the so-called Middle Quartets, includes the three Rasoumovsky of Opus 59, the "Harp" (Op. 74), and "Serioso" (Op. 95, No. 11). The Hungarian Quartet plays them with sensitivity and skill, in well-balanced readings that carry meat as well as melody.

Ballet Theatre 45G, Chi

Chicago, March 8.

Ballet Theatre grossed an okay $45,000 during a one-week eight-performance stand which ended Saturday (5) at the Civic Opera House.

Ballet was scaled at a $4 top at the 3,600-seat house.

Busiest Show Biz Factory in U.S. Grows In Brooklyn; Over 700 Events a Year

By ARTHUR BRONSON

Quietly, without fanfare, in Manhattan's backyard, there flourishes the largest and busiest culture and entertainment factory in America. The site is the Brooklyn Academy of Music, where a $500,000 operation caters annually to over 500,000 people, in the biggest and most bewildering variety of events ever scheduled.

In one season, the Academy houses over 400 announced attractions, from legit, films and music to lectures and science demonstrations. In addition, there are about 300 unannounced events, of small calibre, such as meetings, benefits or ceremonies. There are also some outside rentals, the whole intended as all-round cultural, adult education for the community. At the same time, it's one of the most flourishing of show biz marts, and a fantastic operation. There's nothing like it anywhere in the world.

With over 220 lectures a year, in every field, the Academy is the largest gabfest centre in the country. In the last two years, because of improved facilities, it has emerged as the biggest dance centre of America, in variety of shows, volume and attendance. It's been a springboard, testing-ground or showcase for Broadway; many exclusive New York engagements are found only here.

Presenter, or "impresario," of this wholesale, kaleidoscopic array of events is the Brooklyn Institute of Arts & Sciences, which operates the Academy and the programs in the building. Building is city-owned, with the Institute paying a nominal $1 rental a year.

The quasi-public, non-profit Institute is 132 years old—oldest of its kind in America. Non-subsidized, its annual budget is $500,000. It takes in over $300,000 at the b.o. Because it has 10 non-boxoffice events for one b.o. date, it runs behind, raising funds by public drives to cover the deficits. Contributions keep it going.

Music-Dance Appeal

Where Manhattan's Carnegie Hall is just a booking setup, more than half of the Brooklyn Academy's events are under institutional auspices, carefully planned. Academy has an Opera House, or auditorium, seating 2,207; a Music Hall, or theatre, with 1,208 seats; a Chamber Hall, seating 385, and a Grand Ballroom.

Of its 400 announced events, about 25% are in music-dance, drawing an estimated 150,000 audience. Because of the unique combination of facilities, size of halls, etc., the Institute can and does handle any type of dance event, small or large, in ethnic and modern as well as classical. No other building anywhere in America has so much of the dance, or in such variety.

The Academy this year lists the exclusive N. Y. engagements of the Festival Ballet of London and the National Ballet of Canada. In two concert appearances on a recent Saturday, at a $3.25 top, the Jose Greco Co. grossed $9,000, and had to return for a soldout repeat 10 days later.

Because of the Broadway theatre shortage, or hesitance of some troupes to face the high costs of a Broadway run, or more favorable terms in Brooklyn, the Academy has drawn a host of terp attractions, while building up a dance following. It has a real audience for avant garde stuff. Its trade comes from New Jersey as well as Manhattan and Brooklyn, due to easy tunnel or subway access. It draws balletomanes who must com for the exclusives.

Academy also gets legit attractions before Broadway. Paul Gregory's "Three for Tonight," "John Brown's Body" and the First Drama Quartet played the Academy prior to Manhattan.

Sparkplug of the Institute and its guiding eye is Julius Bloom, in charge of both the Academy and its programming. With the Academy for 19 years, he's been its director for 16. Recent emergence of the Academy as a dance as well as concert centre is mainly attributed to him.

Paul Sacher, Swiss conductor, will make his U.S. bow leading th Collegiate Chorale at Carnegi Hall, N.Y., April 3.

N.Y. Symph Friends Set Record Drive With 156G

The Friends of the N. Y. Philharmonic raised $156,081 for the Gotham symph in the '54-'55 campaign just concluded. Most successful drive ever, this shows an increase of $34,898 over last year. Contributors totaled 3,431, a new high in donors, and 474 more than last time.

David M. Keiser, chairman of the Friends for four years, headed up the drive. He's retiring now, with Chester G. Burden as new chairman.

Escudero's 80G In 4-Wk. N.Y. Run

Vicente Escudero & Co. wound up a four-week engagement at the Playhouse, N. Y., Saturday (5), grossing close to $80,000 at a $4.60 top on the run. Troupe, with a single program, had been booked for two weeks, and didn't expect to stay longer. But biz warranted a week's extension, and then another. Operating profit was $12,000, so that the Spanish dance troupe, which opened its American tour in Montreal the week previous, recouped 12G of the 20G they were in for when they opened in N. Y.

Charles E. Green, general manager for the impresario, Maurice Attias, has booked a solid tour for the troupe. It plays this week in Boston, a week each in D. C. and Detroit, two stanzas in Chi, then two weeks of one-nighters in the midwest. It comes back for two shows in Brooklyn April 23.

In negotiation are two weeks each in Havana, Mexico City and San Juan, which would take the troupe into mid-June. There's also talk of a tour of smaller U. S. cities in the fall. Appeal of the sixtyish dancer and his troupe has not only surprised the trade, but the management itself. There were turnaways nightly of Spanish or Puerto Rican customers, because of lack of cheaper seats.

ANTONIO'S BALLET SOCK IN RETURN TO LONDON

London, March 1.

In its fourth postwar London session under Peter Daubeny's management, the impact of Antonio's Spanish Ballet, which opened last Monday (21) at the Palace Theatre, is as powerful as ever. Opening-night program, set for approximately two hours, ran an additional hour to meet audience demands.

Booked for a six-week season, the company is due to go to the U. S. in the fall for a tour sponsored by Sol Hurok, who was in London for the opening.

Unlike the Yugoslav Ballet Co., which tried its hand at classical dancing, Antonio's Spanish Ballet is entirely in the traditional idiom. Each of the 12 items on the program is in deliberate Spanish tempo, accompanied by the rhythm of expressive castanets. The troupe includes a brace of guitarists and a strong flamenco singer but the production is always dominated by the speed, grace and skill of the dancers.

Led by Antonio and including poilshed performers of the calibre of Carmen Rojas, Rosita Segovia, Victoria Eugenia and Antonio De Ronda, the repertoire is composed exclusively of traditional routines. A suite of Basque dancers add a charm of their own. Myro.

Can. Ballet 21G, Mont'l

Montreal, March 8.

National Ballet of Canada drew a fine $21,000 at her Majesty's last week. House was scaled to $3.75: Gross helped toward recovering $20,000 loss in Chicago and Detroit. Company played one-nighters in Ottawa and Kingston, Ont., Monday-Tuesday (7-8) of this week.

Tour closes for lack of funds till the Brooklyn two-nighter end of this month.

Literati

Jessel's Book Bally

Another instance of book publishing depending on radio-tv exploitation is Henry Holt & Co.'s decision to advance publication of George Jessel's "This Way Miss," his new book of personal reminiscences, from April 18 to April 8. This will tie in better with Jessel's speaking and other dates, permit him a crop of broadcast shots a week in advance, and then segue into his scheduled dates at the Casino, San Francisco, April 18-21, to give it a west Coast impetus, following the eastern kickoff.

Book has some 11,000 advance orders, an exceedingly strong pre-publication sale. William Saroyan did the foreword.

OK Travel Guide

David Dodge's updated (1955 revised edition) of his "The Poor Man's Guide to Europe" bids fair to become a standard tourist item year after year, especially if the info is kept up to snuff and projected as brightly as he's been doing 1953, the original publication.

Chenery's 'Free Press' Book

William L. Chenery, retired editor and publisher of Collier's, former editor of the N. Y. Globe and Rocky Mountain News (Denver), has authored "Freedom of the Press" for Harcourt, Brace, due in April.

When he retired in 1952, Chenery, whose background qualifies him for the exhaustive study of the longtime struggle for a free press in the U. S., published his autobiography, "So It Seemed."

Holt's Garden Mag Takeover

Edgar T. Rigg, prez of Henry Holt & Co., is strong for specialty publications like Field & Stream, which he added to his large book publishing business, and recently he took over the 5-year-old Popular Gardening. This, like the 40-year-old Flower Grower, is published in Albany. Publisher Charles Winchester and his staff are Flower alumni and, with the new Holt ownershop, Winchester will fulfill a sixmonth consultative commitment but the operating staff will continue. Flower Grower has 330,000 circulation after 40 years in business; Popular Gardening, in its five years' existence, has acquired 250,000 monthly circulation.

With the Holt takeover, the operation will move to New York, utilizing the F&S subscription fulfillment headquarters, away from the plush Holt hq on Madison Ave. Flower Grower, incidentally, stays in Albany where Williams Press, which owns it, is based.

Incidentally, F&S has shot a flock of footage for tv which is in process of being syndicated.

Aladdin to Dutton

American Book Co. this spring turns over Aladdin Books, its juve trade division, to E. P. Dutton & Co. for all sale and distribution. About 140 titles are involved in the transaction, including Aladdin's American Heritage series (novels for teenagers).

By fall of '55, it's expected that future Aladdin publications will be limited to the Heritage skein, with Emma Gelders continuing as editor. American Book will continue handling production and editorial matters on the juvenilia.

'Neutral Readers' Credo

Ted Bernstein, assistant managing ed of the N. Y. Times, in a 22-page "Behind the Headlines" tract for a teachers in-service course recently, wondered whether the time had not come to demand not only objective newspapers but "objective readers."

The "code for a neutral reader" according to Bernstein:

1. Read with the hope and expectation of getting both sides.

2. If information is brought out that is favorable to the "wrong" side, welcome it. You may find yourself on the "wrong" side of some other issue some time and that is your best guarantee of a fair hearing.

3. Keep in mind constantly the separation between the editorial columns and the news columns that every responsible paper enforces. Don't impute to the news columns the position taken by the editorial page.

4. If your pet point is omitted from a news story don't jump to the conclusion that it has been suppressed. Much more is omitted from the daily paper than is printed. Reporters are human and so are editors; therefore, they may make mistakes in judgment. On the other hand, so may you.

5. If the story you are interested in is not on Page 1, don't complain to the editor or others that it was "buried." There is Page 1, which is in a category by itself, and then there are all the other pages, which are in another category. Few readers think of Page 25 as being different from Page 4. Certainly the advertiser whose ad appears on Page 25 doesn't complain that his ad was "buried." He gets results just the same.

White Plains News' Circ.

White Plains News it is now, a controlled weekly newspaper of 60,000 circulation, the title replacing the Shopping News, founded six months ago. Co-publishers are William H. Marriott and Julius S. Bach Jr. Enterprise is reported doing business with 200 retail advertisers in the Westchester area.

Bach is formerly of Life, Today's Woman and True while Marriott was founder of the fifth of the Sunday supplemental newspaper magazines, Family Weekly, aimed at the intermediate markets not serviced by American Weekly, Metro, This Week and Parade. Before that Marriott was part of the highpowered sales team at Esquire just before the death of Dave Smart.

Hill's 'Adventure'

"Wild Adventure," by Howard Hill (Stackpole; $4.95), is the champion archer's account of several expeditions with camera and bow-and-arrows. Book has an introduction by Hill's pal, Errol Flynn, and some of the text and several of the illustrations date from the filming of Flynn's "Robin Hood," for which Hill was engaged as expert bowman.

Hill also relates experiences encountered in his African trek while shooting the picture, "Tembo." As might be expected, the tome is action-packed, narrative pace being interrupted only when the author makes low bows to his various cronies. Down.

Another Paris Book

Virginia Creed, editor of Duell, Sloan and Pearce-Little, Brown's series in the New Europe Guide Books, has authored "All About Paris and Its Environs" in collaboration with Henry Milo, longtime resident of the French capital. It's being published in advance of the tourist season.

The Carnegie Trust is to make a contribution of $66,000 towards the compiling of two Scot literary works, the Dictionary of the Older Scottish Tongue and the Scottish National Dictionary. Publication has been delayed through lack of coin.

CHATTER

"Heaven Wasn't Enough," for Lippincott. Latter intimately embraces such legit personalities as Frances Starr, Brock Pemberton, Antoinette Perry, et al.

SCULLY'S SCRAPBOOK

By Frank Scully

Palm Springs.

On Friday (11), which certainly makes it spot news, Ray Bolger will be celebrating the 20,000th projection of his prominent personality in a public performance. Between ABC, Metro, Warners, his agent and his 20,000 friends, they seem determined to make something out of it.

I can see I've lost him a few friends already by using the word "between" when I should have used "among." But these could only be Boston friends, and he has long since either won them over for life or lost them altogether.

I'm holding out for that "prominent," though. I'm sure that's the right use of the word. Franklin D. Matthews, when he was city editor of The Sun, used to insist that a peak or a beak was prominent but not a person. But when you have a beak like Ray's, I feel that makes you a prominent person.

It's to his credit that he has never capitalized on this prominence, like Cyrano de Bergerac or Jacobi De Durante, but confined his gay ad libbing to his feet. Orthnithologists have compared his antics to a whooping crane, but of course no whooping crane has ever been paid so well or liked so well, except around the Flamingo in Las Vegas.

To check on those 20,000 performances has not been easy. All accountants, certified or uncertified, public or private, have been busy either on Oscar tabulations to see that those Academy ballot boxes are not stuffed, or swamped with late income tax returns from all those who, realizing they had an extra month to file this year, naturally put the tabulation of the bite off till the last minute.

Everybody, that is, but Ray Bolger's Committee of 20,000, who feel he has lots more rights to these round numbers than a Disney production of a Jules Verne's fantasy that went that far under the surface of the sea.

Unfortunately for Clement C. (for Butch) Peterson, Hollywood CPA, and for Ray, too, I'm afraid, Butch dropped in to Scully's Bedside Manor for a Mary Garden cocktail while I was poring over these figures. Butch came down to the Village, as the realtors call Palm Springs, to get away from figures for a few days, only to find them kasekuchened around every one of the town's 897 pools. He thought he would be spared such distractions around Bedside Manor. He soon found himself saddled, however, with a labor of love that was all labor and no love. I gave him the cuffo assignment of checking on the Bolge's statistics.

According to Butch, and remember he is certified for Hollywood, not Palm Springs, so his returns are not even semi-official, Ray had shown up at an appointed time and place, for hire or for free, 16,486 times since he first went into a dance (and kept on dancing after the music stopped) in 1923.

This looked to me as if somebody had embezzled more than 3,500 of his performances. So I sent Butch back to the adding machine. He said there did not seem to be any figures dealing with cabarets, niteries or dairies, and surely in 30 years he must have done a fast buck-and-wing for a slow buck at some of these saloons for socialites.

No Figures Padded

I thought it possible, but I wasn't padding figures. I was checking them.

"Well, what about the personal appearances he made before and after he married Gwen Richards in L.A. in 1929?" Butch suggested. "Some of these must have been exceptional performances. Many of them must have been up to the highest pro standards, because you and I know you can't fool a woman for 30 years with mediocre performances. Not when you look like Bolger."

(You should see this Peterson, Bolger is Rock Hudson compared to this figger-fanatic.)

"There seems to be no accounting of benefits, or his appearances in films either. He was in 12. Good ones like 'Rosalie,' 'Sweethearts,' 'Wizard of Oz,' 'The Harvey Girls,' 'Silver Lining,' 'Where's Charley?' and 'The Great Ziegfeld.'" I saw most of those. He was great in 'Oz' and 'Charley.' My wife was crazy about him."

"Listen," I said, "I'm consulting you as a statistician, not as a picture critic."

"Well, would each 'take' be considered an appearance?" he wanted to know.

I said I doubted it.

"Do you want me to get this 16,486 up to 20,000, or don't you?" he replied slightly miffed.

"I want you to confine yourself to the facts, Sarge. Let's attack this thing from another angle. Let's average out these 20,000 performances over a period of years."

"How many years?"

"Well, 30 or at most 32 years."

"That would be between 625 and 650 performances a year." We both were silent for a moment. "That seems like a lot of hoofing, doesn't it?"

I pointed out that much of this was in vaude where kids did four and five shows a day.

"But I have already totalled all those performances, including 1,400 with Gus Edwards' kids and the sum total of this side of his fidgeting runs around 8,000."

The rest of the record he thought ran pretty straight. Especially his legit performances: "Heads Up," 320; "White's Scandals," 480; "Life Begins At 8:40," 480; "On Your Toes," 416; "Keep Off The Grass," 50 (they kept off apparently!); "By Jupiter," 480; "Three to Make Ready," 480; "Where's Charley?" 1,280.

Whirling Revue

"There's nothing in there about 'The Merry Whirl?' That was a Shubert revue. He was in that."

"How long did it run?" Butch wanted to know.

"It didn't run. It whirled."

"Here are some figures I didn't see before," Butch pointed out. "He did more than 1,500 shows in the Caribbean and the South Pacific during World War II. He was on tour seven months. He also costarred after the war in 'April in Paris' and that's not in the record. Where was that, on Broadway or in Hollywood?"

"It says 'Paris,' doesn't it? It also says April. Let's not worry about April till next month when the Big Bite comes."

"Golly!" cried Old Man Adding Machine, "April. Income tax returns. Deadline! I gotta get back to work. 'Bye!"

It was good to see him go. He could add but he could also distract. I was wondering if it wouldn't be more sensible to call Ray Bolger in New York or Hollywood—collect, of course—and ask him if he would settle for 16,486 performances instead of 20,000? After all, the difference represented a life's work for many eminent, I won't say prominent, troupers.

I couldn't get him so I tried Bob Ott, who now runs a service station at Dorchester, Mass. He said Ray's figures, as far as he was concerned, stood up. He performed 600 times in Ott shows around New England.

"I first spotted Ray at Russekopf's studio. He was dressed in trick pants and an outsized sweater that all but lost him in its folds. He was practicing a highly original dance routine. I signed him to take tickets at the door and do his dances between the acts. He never did the same dance twice."

This sounded like the Bolger I was tracking down. That clowning in costume and that allergy to a routine. To this day he has trouble staying within camera marks and orchestras ideas of time and space.

WILLIAM C. DE MILLE

William C. de Mille, 76, playwright, vet film producer-director, founder of the drama department of the U. of Southern California and older brother of film producer-director Cecil B. de Mille, died March 8 in Playa de Rey, Cal.

He wrote a number of plays, which he produced with David Belasco between 1902 and 1914, when he went to Hollywood at the request of his brother. Among his works were "Strongheart," "Warrens of Virginia," "Land of the Free" and "The Woman." From 1914-1941, he produced and directed numerous films. His picture credits included such productions as "Peg O' My Heart," "What Every Woman Knows," "Craig's Wife," "Doctor's Secret" and "The Fast Set."

De Mille was outspoken regarding several facets of film production. In 1924, he attacked censorship and a couple of years later commented that it was the public that influenced filmmaking and not vice versa. In 1929, when he was president of the Motion Picture Academy of Arts and Science, he advised Hollywood aspirants against heading for the Coast, claiming that a false impression had spread regarding the opportunities there.

De Mille moved to the U. of Southern California in 1941 where he founded the school's drama department. He retired as a professor in 1953. He also taught acting at the American of Academy of Dramatic Arts, N. Y.

Surviving, besides his brother, are his second wife, Clara Beranger de Mille, a film writer; his daughter, Agnes de Mille, choreographer; and a stepdaughter.

LEW WHITE

Lew White, 52, a theatre, radio and tv organist for 25 years, died March 3 in New York. A native of Philadelphia, he studied under his father, Herman White, a music teacher in that city, and at the Philadelphia Conservatory of Music.

White came to New York as accompanist for 'cellist Hans Kindler and subsequently became premier organist with the Stanley Co. of America, appearing as guest organist in a nationwide tour. He was staff organist for the Roxy Theatre, N. Y., when it opened and later was organist at the Radio City Music Hall in N. Y.

A Victor and MGM recording artist, White also provided background music for Columbia film shorts and had composed pop and semi-classical music. During recent years his mood music was the background for such radio-tv shows as "Inner Sanctum," "Grand Central Station," "Portia Faces Life" and "The Web."

Two daughters survive.

J. J. MILSTEIN

J. J. "Jake" Milstein, 58, veteran film industry exec, died of Bright's disease March 7 in Santa Monica, Cal., after a 17-month illness. He started as a film theatre operator in his native Denver in 1914.

After serving in the U.S. Coast Guard in World War I, Milstein entered the distribution field with Vitagraph in 1918. He became manager of the Metro exchange in Los Angeles in 1928 following one year as a salesman with the company in Washington, D.C.

Joining Republic Pictures in 1936 as sales v.p., Milstein helped prexy Herbert J. Yates in organizing the company. He later became Edward Small's New York rep and was engaged in special services on films for the War Dept. during World War II. Last year he was with Republic as liaison for indie producers.

His wife and daughter survive.

MARY JERROLD

Mary Jerrold, 77, veteran legit actress died March 3 in London. She had been ill only a few days. She made her stage debut in "Mary Pennington," at the St. James Theatre, London, in 1896 and went to New York in 1928 where she appeared at the Henry Miller Theatre in "The Sacred Flame." She first entered films in 1931, and in more recent years was a star in BBC-TV productions.

Her last stage appearance in London was in "A Day by the Sea" and subsequently she appeared in one of Douglas Fairbank's NBC telepix. Her list of credits fills more than three columns in the latest edition of Who's Who In The Theatre.

Survived by a son, Philip Harben, who is known as the tv chef.

P. HANS FLATH

P. Hans Flath, 70, veteran conductor and organist, died while playing an organ recital Feb. 27 at the Jenkins Music Co., Kansas City. He apparently suffered a heart attack while at the keyboard.

Flath was music director of station KMBC for 25 years until last August when new management at the station revised the department operation. For years he had a 30-minute evening program on the outlet.

Before his entry into radio, Flath was orchestra director for a number of road companies. He directed orchestras for Victor Herbert and the Shuberts and at one time he worked with Weber & Fields. His first jobs in Kansas City were as organist at the Midland Theatre and then the Uptown Theatre.

His wife survives.

IDA CRISPI

Ida Crispi, English burlesque artiste, died Feb. 14 at Nottingham, Eng. In show biz since the age of 15, she played leading musical comedy parts in George Edwardes' companies at 18, and was the original Princess in "A Country Girl."

Miss Crispi was seen in America in 1910 with the Golden Crook Extravaganza Co., as a burlesquer, after appearing on the Madison Square Garden roof in "Mam'selle Champagne." Later she was engaged by Charles B. Dillingham for "Dolly Dollars."

Returning to England, Miss Crispi danced with partner Freddy Farren for three years, and formed her own roadshow. In pioneer radio days she was active as a broadcaster.

FRED DOUGLAS

Fred Douglas, 69, died at his home at Wallington, Surrey, last Tuesday (1). From 1937 to 1953 he had been associated with Big Bill Campbell's stage and radio hillbilly show, in which he was known as Buck Douglas. Just after the first world war, he was one of Britain's most prolific recording artists —mostly on the old Regal-Zonophone label under his own and various pseudonyms.

He was the father of bandleader-singer Leslie Douglas, with whom at one time he toured in a stage act.

FRANKIE POPE

Frankie Pope, 65, known as Chicago's "Millionaire Newsboy" whose newstands at the corners of Randolph and Clark Sts. have been a Loop landmark for the past 53 years, died March 1 in Chicago. Dating back to the days when Randolph St. was the Windy City's show biz hub with the Woods Bldg. and the Garrick Bldg. headquartering the music publishers and the major vaude bookers, he had a big clientele from the entertainment world.

Survived by wife, two sisters and two brothers.

TOM DUGAN

Tom Dugan, 66, longtime vaude, screen, and nitery comic, was killed in an auto accident March 6 in Redlands, Cal. Entering pictures in 1927 after headlining on the Keith circuit, he also appeared in several Shubert shows and Earl Carroll's Vanities.

Dugan, who was seen in the first all-talkie, Warners' "Lights of New York," toured in vaude in an act known as Dugan & Raymond. His partner was Marie Raymond, his wife who survives. He recently appeared at Charley Foy's Supper Club in Los Angeles.

CLAUDE INGRAM

Claude Ingram, 66, resident director of Winter Gardens Theatre, Morecambe, Eng., died Feb. 19 in Morecambe. He was the only surviving member of a group of business men there who brought the Winter Gardens Theatre into prominence as a leading northern theatre.

Ingram joined the company as cashier in 1934, later became its secretary, and was made resident director for the company when the theatre was bought by Moss Empires' circuit in 1953.

EDITH RUTLAND

Edith Rutland (Mrs. J. R. C. Hamilton), longtime actress, died Feb. 12 at Douglas, Isle of Man, Eng. She was a favorite thesper with audiences at that vacation spot 25 to 30 years ago, particularly in such plays as "Camille," "Cigarette" and "Under Two Flags."

Daughter of the late Henry Rutland, repertory actor, she first appeared as leading lady at Douglas in 1922 with Alfred Denville's Repertory Co., for which her husband was manager and producer.

JAMES TITTER

James Titter, 58, actor and comedian, drowned Feb. 19 at St. Annes-on-Sea, Eng. For the past 30 years he had appeared in pierrot shows, revues and repertory in the north of England, mainly at Lytham and Blackpool.

Titter was set to start rehearsals for a summer revue, "Naughty But Nice." Until three weeks ago he played the Baron in "Red Riding Hood" at Blackpool, Warrington and Leigh.

STANLEY W. CONRAD

Stanley W. Conrad, 49, veteran North Carolina radio newsman, died Feb. 25 in Winston-Salem, N. C., after an illness of one week. He joined the staff of radio station WSJS in Winston-Salem in 1946.

A native of Indianapolis, Conrad began his radio career in 1932. He came to North Carolina in 1939 and subsequently worked at stations in High Point and Greensboro.

ARTHUR CLAYTON

Arthur Clayton, 53, musical director of the Royal Court Theatre, Liverpool, Eng., collapsed and died Feb. 19 at his home at New Brighton shortly before he was due to leave for a matinee performance.

Before being appointed to the Royal Court, Clayton was for years at the Tivoli Theatre, New Brighton.

JEAN BART

Mrs. Jean Bart, 75, playwright, died March 6 in New York. Two of her more successful works which were produced on Broadway were "The Squall" in 1926, with Blanche Yurka and Dorothy Stickney, and "The Man Who Reclaimed His Head" in 1931, with Richard Barrows, Claude Rains and Jean Arthur. She also wrote film scripts and musical sketches.

Surviving is a daughter.

CHARLES RIGBY

Charles Rigby, 59, sub-editor of the News Chronicle at Manchester, Eng., and author of books on musical personalities, died March 2 in Manchester.

Rigby had penned biographies of Sir Charles Halle and Sir John Barbirolli, conductor of the Halle Orch, and was engaged at time of death on a biog of the late Kathleen Ferrier, noted English singer.

John Taylor Roberts, 72, for years promoter and supported of music in Hartford, Conn., died March 6 in that city after a long illness. A collector of violins, he was president of the Hartford Philharmonic Society and organizer of the Roberts Foundation for String Music.

Theodore M. Toll, 77, longtime operator of Waukesha Amusement Park near Milwaukee, died of a heart ailment Feb. 27 in that city. Upon retiring in 1940 he sold the park. He acquired the outdoor spot in 1913. A sister survives.

A. W. Stanbury, 62, district representative of Monarch Films, died Feb. 24 in Manchester, Eng. He was in the cinema trade for nearly 50 years. His brother, F. A. W. Stanbury, is manager of Warner Bros.' Manchester branch.

Harry P. Vonderschmitt, 77, Indiana theatreowner, died Feb. 27 in Bloomington, after a long illness. He started as an exhibitor in 1918. His wife and a daughter survive.

Billy Adams, 72, onetime vocalist, died Feb. 25 in Toledo of a heart ailment. He was believed to be Toledo's first singing waiter, and had a long career as a nitery singer. His wife survives.

Florence Prosser, 84, former joint manageress of Royal Princes Parade Theatre, Bridlington, Eng., died Feb. 16 in that town. She was active in show biz at Bridlington, a spa resort, for 50 years.

William C. "Bill" Ellis, 50, chief engineer of WFAA, died March 4 in Dallas.

Rose Plumer, character actress on stage, screen and television, died March 3 in Hollywood.

wife Mary Healy, wowed them with his drunk routine and, with Miss Healy, in a disk jockey act. He also emceed effectively, pushing the show along as speedily as possible by injecting little of his own very able patter.

Jimmy McHugh, special ASCAP talent contribution to the two-hour bill, offered his version of the song writer's act, ". . . And then I wrote . . . ". What improves it is his gimmick of having two attractive girls—Judy Collins and Darla Hood—sing the songs and tell the audience how Jimmy wrote them. McHugh, incidentally bowed a new song, "Crusade for Freedom," which he wrote as the theme for the 1955 Crusade.

Duke Ellington also came on for a piano medley of his compositions, with Wendell Marshall, hot bass player, assisting.

Bill was rounded out by Tennessee Ernie Ford and the dance team of Chiquita and Johnson. The acro-dancers put on a dressy act, featuring some unusual balancing, for very good returns. Material of Tennessee Ernie was considerably bluer than anything he does on the air. While it was a stag dinner, it is notable that acts with smoker humor are never invited back to entertain the President. Eddie Pierce Orch played for the show, with Commander Charles Brendler and the Navy Band providing dinner music.

Show, which had been clocked for one hour and 15 minutes during the afternoon rehearsal, went almost two hours at the dinner. Same situation at the Radio-TV dinner in February indicates that the acts just won't get off, when they find themselves before a heavy brass audience.

from the set routines for selling a motion picture attraction," Schlanger declared.

Particular stress was placed by Stanley Warner zone chief on attracting the child audiences. "We are now in the era of what is known as the 'TV babies' — those born since the advent of television and who have been continually exposed to this competitive medium.

"These children have now reached school age and are available for motion picture theatre attendance, but they must be attracted to the theatre to see how much more the motion picture has to offer them. Many of these youngsters," Schlanger pointed out, "have never seen a motion picture except on a tv screen. The managers' task is to attract these children to the theatre, as they are the adult customers of the future."

The Spring Movie Festival will be held through the entire Stanley Warner circuit from April 3 to July 2.

option to operate off the M-G lot if he would so elect

Whether Kramer makes the switch or not—he hasn't communicated anything to UA about it—the bid is regarded as significant in that it reflects new policy at M-G. Long aloof to partnership deals with indies or participation arrangements of any kind, M-G now appears to be more and more yielding to the industry trend toward such tieups.

Lashinsky Bros., Junkmen-Bookers, Change Offices, Duds for Show Biz

Charleston, W. Va., March 15.

The Lashinsky brothers, Harry, Isadore and Frank, have bluejeans and will travel—anywhere to book and promote Broadway shows. The trio "double" between their junkyard and promoting shows on the southern and midwest circuits. Frank is now on tour with Manny Davis' "Guys and Dolls," with bookings in Raleigh and Charlotte, N. C.; Columbia, S. C.; Savannah, Augusta, Macon, Nashville, Birmingham, Montgomery, and Miami, Tampa and Daytona Beach.

Most recent big-name Lashinsky bookings were "Seven Year Itch," with Eddie Bracken, in Birmingham and Montgomery. For the last 10 years they have brought "Holiday On Ice" to the 3,500-seat Charleston Municipal auditorium, also booking it into Huntington, W. Va., and Canton, O. In the 1956 season the Lashinskys are bringing the show for first time to Charlotte, at the new Colosseum.

In the 1954-1955 season they handled "South Pacific" and "Oklahoma" in some southern cities. Harry, the oldest of the trio, says, "Last season big-name bookings have been mighty spare, but we're looking forward to a big 1955-1956 season. We're set up so we can give a continuous southern route to Broadway shows."

Show Biz 'Automatically' SRO on Formosa; Queue Up for '300% Scalp' Pix

By DOROTHY FULDHEIM

Taipei, Formosa, March 8.

Formosa may be a statesman's nightmare but it's a showman's dream.

Everything — films, legit, opera and concerts — is automatically SRO.

Taipei used to have about 500,000 people. Now refugees from the Communists have doubled that figure—and for all these people there are only four picture houses. Each one has lines all the way around the block from early morning to late at night. If a family wants to go to the movies Sunday night it sends one of the kids down to the

TV's Hypo for Stage 'Pan'

Last week's television performance of "Peter Pan" may have stimulated, rather than minimized, public interest in seeing the production on stage. That's indicated by the unprecedented volume of phone inquiries that came through the VARIETY switchboard the day after the telecast.

Among the "hundreds" of callers, many if not most wanted to know at what theatre the Mary Martin musical revival was playing. Show closed week before.

LEGIT 'WAR AND PEACE' AHEAD OF PIX AND TV

Legit is beating out films and tv in the "War and Peace" sweepstakes. While the latter two mediums are trumpeting a rash of proposed productions of the Tolstoy marathon, a stage adaptation by Alfred Newmann, Erwin Piscator and Dr. Gunther Pruefer, is scheduled to open Friday (18) at the Schiller Theatre, Berlin.

Competitive theatrical film versions of "War" have been slated by Mike Todd, David O. Selznick, Italian producer Dino de Laurentiis and Soviet Russia. On the video end, CBS-TV is planning a telefilm version, while that same net's General Electric Theatre has scheduled a takeoff on the Russian classic, to be tagged, "War and Peace on the Range," with Ronald Reagan starring.

Intellectuals Replace Acts

Minneapolis, March 15.

During the past few previous seasons the annual Builders Show at the Auditorium here has featured such big name stage attractions as Phil Spitalny's "Hour of Charm," Spike Jones City Slickers and the Andrews Sisters as adjuncts to its exhibits and other offerings.

But, currently, promoter H. H. Cory is presenting on the stage, in lieu of leading performers and a revue, three top speakers who are lecturing on current topics of vital interest—one a night.

Cory thinks people nowadays are much interested in foreign affairs and other matters affecting their futures. Besides which he believes the public is getting a load of

Blame TV as Families Cut Down on Their Newspaper Reading

Washington, March 15.

Television has substantially reduced the time the average family devotes to its newspaper, Oliver Treyz, prexy of the Television Bureau of Advertising, told a seminar conducted for retailers here last week by the Ad Club of Washington.

Treyz cited a new survey by the New York Times showing that families in tv cities devote 55 minutes to newspaper reading compared to one hour and 58 minutes in non-tv cities. In contrast, he pointed to Nielsen figures showing that the

SOLE WAY TO STARS' RICHES

By GENE ARNEEL

While trends and cycles have been the history of the picture industry, rarely has any new movement taken on such dimensions in such limited time as the swing toward the formation of independent companies by name players.

United Artists, taking the key role in this activity, has other companies doing a double-take with the way performers are incorporating —setting up their own private units to produce pix for UA release and with UA financing.

Explanation is offered by Kirk Douglas: "We're doing it to make money."

Within the past few weeks, corporate entities have been established by Douglas, to make six pix; Frank Sinatra, five; Cornel Wilde, one; Robert Mitchum, five; Joan Crawford, six; Rita Hayworth-Dick Haymes, two, and Henry Fonda, six. They're all aligned with UA and chances are that numerous others will make the plunge shortly.

Douglas, in N. Y. over the past weekend, stated frankly that the tax angle is the big motivating factor. "You hear of actors getting tremendous salaries for their personal services," he states. "But we're also great customers of Uncle Sam. Because of the present

Sarnoff's 'Iron Curtain' Plan Intrigues Ike

Washington, March 15.

RCA board chairman David Sarnoff dropped into the White House for a scheduled 15-minute visit today (Tues.) and stayed for nearly two hours getting President Eisenhower interested in his views on how America can get its story across the Iron Curtain and how the U. S. psychological warfare program can be stepped up. The visit ran a half-hour over into the President's lunch hour, and then he asked Gen. Sarnoff to return for an afternoon meeting of an hour to expound his views before top intelligence and propaganda experts.

Presidential press secretary James C. Hagerty later said that the President was highly interested in Gen. Sarnoff's views, which were described as "substantive and technical," that he thought Gen. Sarnoff had some "excellent suggestions" and that he would have studies made on those suggestions. Gen. Sarnoff will be invited back for more talks on the matter, Hagerty said. Experts attending the afternoon session were Nelson A. Rockefeller, special assistant to

Solon Calls for 'Justice' to Cleffers; Cites H'wood, Jukes 'Exploitation'

Washington, March 15.

Justice for America's songwriters, from exploitation by jukebox operators and those who control the music business, was called for in Congress last week by Rep. Philip J. Philbin (D., Mass.).

Philbin told the House of Representatives that large financial interests, mainly in Hollywood, have taken control of the "production, marketing and use of popular music" and are forcing assembly line production.

Unless the jukebox operators are willing to negotiate payment to composers for the use of records, the legislator continued, it is the duty of Congress to pass a law putting the jukes under the copyright statute. Philbin was a guest at the recent luncheon of the National Press Club at which ASCAP entertained. He paid tribute to the composers who played their songs at the afafir.

"In times past," he told th House, "as well as in the present, composers, writers and artists of all kinds have been exploited. There is probably less exploitation of this class than ever before, but nevertheless the composers of popular songs are not free from ruthless human selfishness and greed, which sometimes most de-

PIANO-PLAYING PADRE BOFF WITH GERSHWIN

Cincinnati, March 15.

A piano-playing padre at Xavier U. has arranged for a larger auditorium in which to stage his third "Gershwin's Life in Music" concert. The first two were sellouts.

He is the Rev. John H. Reinke, instructor of psychology. He plays examples of Gershwin variations and comments on the composer and his contribution to American music. Selections include several preludes, "Rhapsody in Blue" and the score from "Of Thee I Sing."

Earlier concerts, in which Father Reinke was assisted by a double quartet, were March 2 and 9 in a conference room at the university. Next one, March 22, will be in the huge ROTC Armory on the campus.

WB's ABC Deal A La 'Disneyland'

Warner Bros. will make its television bow in the fall with a one-hour show comprising newly-shot footage in a format similar to "Disneyland" via ABC-TV. Deal for the show has already been agreed upon, with details currently being ironed out preparatory to putting the package on the sponsor block.

ABC-TV is planning to slot the show on Tuesday nights at 8, opposite the Milton Berle-Bob Hope-Martha Raye powerhouse on NBC, thus taking its greatest calculated risk to date in its effort to challenge the supremacy of NBC and CBS. When the network made its deal with Walt Disney, it played it

4,690,000 New York TV Sets Cues Hike In WRCA Program Rates

How's the station rate card stacking up with the increase in telesets in the New York market? As of Feb. 1, the Gotham count stood at 4,690,000 units, up about 13% from a year ago. As result, WRCA-TV, the NBC key, is upping its price on certain participations about $100 on the average starting this week and effective in six months. Package prices are eliminated on the local cut-ins of the web's "Today" and what will apply is the rate card for time plus $100 for the program, in an effort to make the outlay competitive after discounts.

Upped to $425 are Herb Sheldon-Josie McCarthy, Norman Bro-

Nympho and Peeping Tom Shocks Lancaster's Mayor, Nixes 'Violent Saturday'

Lancaster, Pa., chased 20th-Fox out of town last week and if the film company was unhappy about its rejection it hid its feeling very well indeed.

Plan originally called for 20th to run a press junket to Lancaster for the world preem of "Violent Saturday" which is backgrounded in the Amish country. Last week, Lancaster's mayor, Kendig Bare, up to then the honorary chairman of the preem committee, suddenly changed his mind. Film, he said, was too sexy and too violent for his town.

Bare, who has read the story but hasn't seen the film, wouldn't even allow 20th to put up banners in Lancaster.

Bearing up well in the light of some invaluable wire breaks and assorted front page yarns, 20th regretfully called off its press junket,

TV's N.Y.-to-L.A. Tag

VARIETY'S N.Y.-L.A. column of show biz personalities coast-to-coasting is the jumping off place for next Monday's (21) "Robert Montgomery Presents" NBC-TV hour dramatic offering concerning pix-legit characters, scripted by Robert Shaw.

Show is called, appropriately enough, "N.Y.-to-L.A."

Prison-Break Film Cycle Current, Schoolboy Bums Next Big Theme

Again and again, film producers become intrigued with the same story themes at the same time. Resultantly numerous "cycles" develop year after year. Sometimes the cycle is started by a topical event and everybody rushes to register a title dealing with the subject. In other cases, the click of a particular picture brings imitation.

The advent of the widescreen, and the industry's desire to make use of it via spectacle, started a cycle of biblical and knights-in-shining-armor films.

Stories of prison outbreaks and riots have introduced a new cycle of prison pictures. Examples are "Unchained," "Women's Prison," "Women's Reformatory," "Crashout," "Big House, U. S. A." and "Cell 2455, Death Row."

With juvenile delinquency now a major newspaper subject, there are indications that the public will soon see a number of pictures dealing with young hoodlums. As a starter, there's "The Blackboard Jungle" and "Mad at the World," both of which will be released about the same time.

More Daylight Saving Bothers New York Legit, Exhibs Hardly at All

Decision of the New York City Council to extend daylight saving time for an extra month aroused hardly a peep from film theatre operators. Unlike legit and tv interests, exhibitors did not feel it necessary to make a cause celebre out of the city's plan.

Since the majority of theatres in the city run continuous performances and there are less than a handful of drive-ins, theatremen in the area felt that the extension of the daylight time until October would not affect the boxoffice materially. On the other hand, legit producers contend that the extension would be detrimental to the "welfare of the theatres." As explained by producer Alexander H. Cohen, business in the legit theatre is generally bad during daylight saving time and improves with the advent of Eastern standard time. "During the longer daylight days," he said, "people prefer to putter around in the garden,

CANADA'S STRATFORD MAY SHOOT A FILM

Possibility of lensing a full-length color film version of a Shakespearean play is being mulled by the organizing committee of the Stratford Shakespearean Festival Foundation of Canada.

According to Tom Patterson, director of planning for the Stratford season, which this year runs from June 27 through Aug. 27, there have been discussions on the pros and cons of making a film. If the project materializes, Patterson said it would likely be done "after hours" and with an outside director. However, the Stratford cast, settings and costumes would be utilized.

National Film Board of Canada lensed a short about Stratford in 1953. It's called "Stratford Adventure" and is handled in the U.S. by Continental Distributing.

CYNDA GLENN'S BAD CONN. AUTO ACCIDENT

Hadlyme, Conn., March 15.

Cynda Glenn, Franco-American comedienne, who recently bought a large estate here for her mother, is recovering at her home following a fall into a Connecticut River ravine while driving in a blinding rainstorm two weeks ago. She suffered broken ribs, break to her right hand and arm, loss of two front teeth. There was a possible loss of one eye also, but that's no longer a hazard. She went off the road, when lost in the storm. She is still relatively new in this territory, and has been supervising improvements on her property before her mother moves in.

Miss Glenn had to postpone a vidpix commitment with Brian Desmond-Hurst, British producer-director, but will fly to London in a month or so, after she recovers. Desmond-Hurst's cousin, American director John Ford, had a spot for her in a film being shot in Ireland but the comedienne wants to bear down on a telepix pilot having to do with an American actress in Paris, more or less a real-life transmutation. She starred in the "Folies Bergere," Paris revue, some years ago.

Odets' 'Big Knife' for UA; Not Necessarily a Sock At Hollywood Colony

Producer-director Robert Aldrich, whose deal to turn out Clifford Odets' "The Big Knife" for United Artists release was disclosed last week, held film rights to the play for the last three and a half years but delayed moving the property before the cameras due to casting difficulties. UA arrangement, in which the distrib is providing the financing, also solved the thesping problem for Jack Palance, Ida Lupino, Shelly Winters, Everett Sloane, Rod Steiger and Wendell Corey have been set for top roles.

While the play was regarded as anti-Hollywood when it opened on Broadway in 1949, Aldrich holds to the belief that it's not necessarily a poke at the film colony for there are similar characters in almost any industry. Moreover, he added, "the film will be as close to the play as we can possibly make it. We will use Odets' words, phrases and construction, in fact everything not censorable."

"Knife," which will be presented

Big Biz Exhibs: 'Give 'Em a Show And Win Clients'

"Show for Shows" was the tag given an industrial exhibition in N.Y. last week. The title of this "exhibition for exhibitors" was apt. Its participants frequently borrowed on established entertainment formulae to capture the ear and the eye. Show was staged for three days (Tues.-Thurs.) at 165th Regiment Armory.

There were 36 display designers, builders, exhibit service organizations, show managers and firms in the twilight zone between show biz and industry—at least a noticeable minority of which attempted to prove themselves the opposite number to scenic designers, video directors, et al. Hopalong George Brown

Palm Spring, March 15.

"Just call me the old rancher," says George Brown, ex-Paramount Studios pub-ad chief, since he bought the Slash Bar K Ranch from the Don Kerrs in Wickemburg (near Phoenix), Ariz. This will be his new hotel operation, having recently sold the local La Serano Hotel, with its 13 bungalow units.

Brown and his wife, Grace, wanted a bigger operation, took a local capital gain when they sold La Serena and acquired the 150-acre Arizona ranch with its 26 guest lodges. He plans bulding 25 more.

Barber's Once-Over-Lightly

Sportscaster Travels 3,000 Miles, Winds Up With 74-Second Show

Red Barber traveled about 3,000 miles in a roundtripper from St. Petersburg, Fla., to New York for what may well have been the longest distance traversed for the shortest interview on record in either radio or tv. The sportscaster's CBS-TV show, "Red Barber's Corner," follows the Pabst fights on Wednesday and starts anywhere from 10:45 on, depending on length of the bout. Last week (9) the bantamweight title fray between Songkitrat and Macias went the full 12-round route. Barber went on the air at 10:57-plus with ex-Yankee pitcher Allie Reynolds as guest and had just about enough time to the 11 o'clock anchor to ask the hurler how he felt.

Judson Bailey, producer of the show, stopwatch-clocked the quickie interview at about 74 seconds. Barber planed back to St. Pete at 12:45 a.m. and was on hand for the play-by-play of the Yankees-Cardinals game that afternoon.

You've Got to Be An Actor Today

Lyric by HOWARD DIETZ
Music by ARTHUR SCHWARTZ

Politicians nowadays
Have adopted thespian ways
For they have to be performers on TV.
Their oratory mingles
With all the commercial jingles
On CBS and also NBC.
In Washington the Republicans
Have appointed Bob Montgomery
To organize the Bureau of Mummery
The Democrats are working on a plan
To have their candidates directed by Kazan.

You've got to be an actor today
Your manner must be affable
Your features photographable
You gotta be good in an audio-video way,
Max Factor is a factor today.
Powder and paint, can make you look like you ain't.
Years ago any candidate could be the People's Choice
Even though he never took a Course in Voice
From Stella Adler.
Vocal education will pay,
And down in sunny Florida they say
That the Mayor of Tallahassee
Was coached by Raymond Massey
You've got to be an actor today.

You've got to be an actor today
The people who examine you

Friars Dinner for M&L Turns Into Giant 12-Comic 'Audition'

By ABEL GREEN

The Friars' Golden Jubilee dinner, with Dean Martin & Jerry Lewis as the honor guests, at the Waldorf-Astoria, N. Y., last Friday night (11) was a hit. Perhaps too much so.

With Milton Berle, the abbott emeritus, toastmastering and doing a fine job all the way the dais was distinguished by New York's Gov. Averell Harrisan, Gotham's Mayor Robert F. Wagner Jr. and N. Y. State Secretary Carmine E. De Sapio. And also a dozen or more assorted comics. That was the trouble, if trouble is the word for it.

Perhaps the Peruvian philosopher's observation that "the mind can consume only what the seat of learning can endure" was the basis for any captiousness. In short, an embarrassment of riches. A scheduled 7:30 p. m. formal dinner that wound up at 1:15 in the a. m. made it a little fulsome. You don't need all the celery and olives and even the rich desserts to enjoy a good banquet.

Put 12 or so comedians on the dais so wha' hoppens? It did. It was an audition all the way. Maybe some of the kiddies weren't kidding that with RCA prexy Frank M. Folsom, NBC prez and exec veepee Pat Weaver and Bobby Sarnoff, ABC-TV's Bob Weitman, Paramount prexy Barney Balaban, along with the other brass on the dais, "this is the dinner we gotta

FREAK AS SWEETHEART

Kirk Douglas Would Film Offbeat Romance

Kirk Douglas' Bryna Productions will make "Freak Show" if it can be fashioned into suitable screen material, Douglas reports. He has rights to the book, authored by Jacquin Sanders.

The actor said the story is a "very provocative" one dealing with the love of a normal man with a freak girl. That there might be problems involved in getting this on celluloid is conceded by Douglas.

Napoleonic Gala, From President Down, Marks Paris Guitry Pic Preem

By TOM CURTISS

Paris, March 15.

Were Napoleon himself to have suddenly returned to Paris last Thursday night (10), he could hardly have been welcomed with more military and social fanfare than attended the gala premiere of Sacha Guitry's screen biography of him, "Napoleon," which bowed with a special performance at the Opera.

Occasion was benefit for orphans of the Indochina war and tickets,

More on L.A. Versus N.Y.

A veteran writer-producer with film, vidpix and tv live experience on both coasts scoffs at last week's "study" citing the East's production edge.

"Leave it to chemical engineers and time-study experts to work out a scientific picture of conditions which has no relation to actual experience," he says.

"The efficiency boys have made no mention of the East's union day of seven hours, vs. the Hollywood eight-hour day. Also the eastern five-day week, vs. the West's six-day. And you start your day at any hour out West. New York's day begins at 8:30 and anything after 5:30 is overtime.

"But the greatest difference, East-West, is the spirit of the crews. Here it is in a nutshell:

In Hollywood, a prop man is a fellow with a huge magic box, out of which he can pull anything you can dream of on request. In fact, it is his pride that he is so prepared that he challenges you to think of something you need which he cannot produce, make, or fake, almost instantly.

"In New York, it has been my experience that a prop man is a guy who puts $10 on the expense account for taxi fare when he goes to the corner drug store to get you a quarter-pound of absorbent cotton."

METRO TOPPERS' SELF-PROBE

OLD ORDER CHANGETH

Nick Schenck and the Metro echelon acquiescing to "outside" pictures, production deals and distribution percentages may be likened to a trade revolution. These, and other, changes at 1540 Broadway (N. Y.) and Culver City are perhaps the biggest infusion of new thinking since the heyday of the Irving Thalberg-Louis B. Mayer team.

This charge of new blood, new ideas and, above all, new merchandising must add up to a big plus all around. It is a firm token of firm leadership.

Loew's Inc. is still the Wall St. bellwether among amusement stocks, and this blue chip plainly aims to stay that way with the acquisition of such "outside" product as Rodgers & Hammerstein's "Oklahoma!"; the two David O. Selznick pictures; Samuel Goldwyn's "Guys and Dolls"; the Desilu (Desi Arnaz-Lucille Ball) Productions deals; the special deals cooking with Sol C. Siegel and Stanley Kramer for their indie packages.

A recent VARIETY editorial, "Have Film Package, Will Travel," pointed up the trend. Despite talk of curbing "capital gains," that is the shape of American industry and of individual fortune-seeking as it is now, and will be. Schenck & Co. are wise to make sure that some of these payoff packages travel in direction of Culver City. New blood can only mean fresh values at the boxoffice. Abel.

Loew to Commute Between Coasts

Metro Studio Top Command Overloaded Due To Illness—Founder's Son Long Quietly Influential

In undertaking his new duties as troubleshooter of the Metro studio operation, Arthur M. Loew, prexy of Loew's International Corp., will commute weekly between New York and the Coast. He left for the Coast Sunday (13) for his first o.o. of the studio.

Loew, before leaving for the Coast, said the new assignment came suddenly. "I honestly can't say what my duties will be until I get out to the studio and look around," he said. "I haven't had time to formulate any procedure."

Loew, son of the founder of Loew's Theatres and Metro Pictures (later M-G-M), Marcus Loew, has been a longtime key executive in the Loew's operation although, for the most part, operating quietly in the background under the Loew's International banner. His position as chief of the overseas operation has been unique in that he has enjoyed an almost autonomous relationship with the parent company. He is consulted on all top policy matters although not a director of Loew's Inc.

Example of Loew's freedom was his single-handed introduction of Perspecta Sound and his part in Public Domain?

Looks like indie producer W. Lee Wilder is moving in on the George Gobel act.

Wilder has filed claim to the titles, "And Here I Am" and "And Here's the Show," which lines have become Gobel's trademark phraseology. Paramount has a deal on to do a film with Gobel.

ANTA Album Feels Need For Familiar Film Faces To Bolster Stage Folk

The American National Theatre & Academy, jointly sponsoring the March 28 closed-circuit ANTA Album in cooperation with CARE, is on the prowl for film names to bolster the b.o. appeal of the event. Although ANTA has succeeded in lining up a solid array of legit names, it feels it needs some nationally-known personalities to draw audiences to theatres throughout the country.

Marilyn Monroe, currently residing in New York, is one of the film personalities that ANTA is seeking. It's doubtful that Miss Monroe would actually perform since the ANTA Album offers excerpts of memorable stage bits. However, it's felt that she can provide excellent window dressing as part of the entourage of celebrities that would be televised during the pre-performance hoopla.

Another film name that ANTA is eyeing is Greer Garson. Miss Garson, who arrived in N.Y. over the weekend to prepare for a tv show and also to publicize "Strange Lady in Town" for Warner Bros., is being sought to act as overall femcee.

As of now, ANTA and CARE

'No Cheapies' For Desilu Features

Hollywood, March 15.

Executive producer Sam Marx, fronting for Desilu Productions (Lucille Ball-Desi Arnaz), has been dickering with Herb Golden of Bankers Trust on financing for theatre-aimed features starring the television pair. Idea is to turn out top-quality stuff, no cheapies. To that end Desilu will scout the Broadway legit and literary best-seller sources for properties.

At least one feature is expected to roll in 1955 and two more in 1956. Facilitating fast getaway, Marx points out, is fact that Desilu owns its own studio here and has a regular year-round crew.

"Desilu takes less chances entering theatre film production than the major studios are running in invading television film producing," declares Marx.

Bruce Odlum Party Hits Spain to Reconnoiter Sites for 'The Snob'

Bruce Odlum, son of tycoon Floyd Odlum, whose money has long been in Independent Artists Corp. (Frederick Brisson) will handle a film package, via IA, for the first time on his own. It will be shot in Spain and on the Continent. He, along with scripter Ken Englund and production manager Gene Bryant, flew to Madrid over the weekend for four weeks to scout locales and get the feel of the country for "The Snob," which is the working title. Cinematurgical theme is along the lines of "an American in Spain."

Paramount will distribute, as is the case with "The Girl Rush," the just completed IA film, produced by Brisson and starring his wife, Rosalind Russell, and of course, with Odlum financing. Heretofore

ARTHUR LOEW AS DIAGNOSTICIAN

Trade deduction has it that Arthur M. Loew's new role at the Metro studio stems from Nicholas M. Schenck's growing concern about the position of the company vis-a-vis its rivals in the film industry. It's no secret that Loew's-M-G, while doing well enough, hasn't kept pace, for example, with the upbeat experienced by both 20th-Fox and Paramount.

The activity at M-G is being given billing as "Operation Self Probe" in some trade quarters. Schenck wants to know where the main problems lie, whether in production or distribution, and the Arthur Loew assignment is part of an overall plan designed to figure out the answers.

One aspect of the job being undertaken by the Loew's International prexy (he's retaining this post, incidentally) is the appraisal of screen properties before production. Loew in east will size up each script before the cameras roll in Hollywood—this to weigh the world market potential. Loew, too, will have an authoritative voice in deciding, with production chief Dore Schary, which films are given a go-ahead signal and which stories are scrapped.

Also part of Schenck's masterminding are the recent deals with David O. Selznick and Samuel Goldwyn. Regardless of how Selz-

Loew Just More Proof of Foreign Sales Importance

Film companies' rising concern with the foreign market and the revenue it delivers is being reflected in the various executive realignment. Accent isn't only on doing a punchier selling job abroad, but also on widening the scope of production thinking. As reported this issue, latest instance of a company redeploying its exec force partly to solidify its b.o. po-

Another Television Click ('Patterns') Set to Become Screen Feature; Scripter, Director Repeating

But New Title—

"Patterns" will undergo a title change when it's filmed by co-producers Jed Harris and Michael Myerberg.

Harris, vet legit producer but a newcomer to pix, and Myerberg have suggested a substitute name for the picture, but it's doubtful that United Artists, the distributor, will even submit it to the industry's title registration bureau. They've proposed calling the property "The Bitch Goddess."

"Patterns," hour-long (less commercials) tv drama aired on Kraft Theatre via NBC, is to be picturized by Jed Harris and Michael Myerberg in a fashion similar to the way Hecht-Lancaster brought "Marty," also a tv original, to the screen. Rod Serling, writer of "Patterns," and Fielder Cook, of J. Walter Thompson, who directed, have been signed to shape the property for a film.

In the case of "Marty," Paddy Chayefsky and Delbert Mann, author and director, respectively, of the original, also took on the same jobs for the filmization. Further, like "Marty," "Patterns" will be lensed in N. Y.

Harris and Myerberg, partners in both film and legit enterprises, closed the deal this week for the "Patterns" project. Also party to the pact is United Artists, which will provide partial financing and distribute the pic. Cook and Serling are in on a participation.

"Marty" is being looked upon

Dig Again Into Fox Bankruptcy

Two trustees of the old Fox Theatres Corp., and Robert Aronstein, attorney for the largest Fox creditors, filed a petition in N.Y. Federal Court last week calling for a hearing May 6 before Judge John C. Knox to probe disposition of assets of the company following its bankruptcy in the early 1930s.

Trustees Kenneth Steinhardt and Leopold Porrino along with Aronstein seek to have a 1933 order of the late Federal Judge Martin T. Manton directing sale of certain Fox properties and assets be declared void. Aronstein, in previous investigations, recovered more than $3,000,000 for Fox creditors.

Among those who'll appear at the hearing as respondents include the Chase National Bank, Chase Securities Corp., General Theatre Corp., General Precision Equipment Corp., Skouras Theatres, Randforce Theatres, Harvey B. Newins, D. O. Hastings and A. C. Blumenthal. Petitioners want them to show cause why title deliveries and all proceedings in connection with Manton's 1933 order should not be nullified.

Deny Jury Trial For Budd Schulberg Angle In 'Waterfront' Action

Monticello Film Co., which seeks a judgment in N.Y. Supreme Court declaring it to be the owner of exclusive rights to the film, "On the Waterfront," last week lost its move to win a jury trial on certain questions of fact arising from the case. Justice Morris Eder held that "the issues as framed . . do not suggest any sound reason for ordering a separate jury trial in lieu of proceeding to trial in the usual fashion."

Questions of fact which Monticello asked to have aired before a jury, Justice Eder noted, dealt with writer Budd Schulberg's al-

Biz Still Uneven; 'Girl' Again Paces Field, 'Battle' Cops 2d, 'Line' 3, 'Deck' 4th, 'Untamed' 5th

Milder weather and usual Lenten downbeat are taking a b.o. toll at firstrun houses over the country this session. However, some new, strong product, which is getting additional playdates currently, is helping to keep trade somewhere near normal in a majority of key cities covered by VARIETY.

"Country Girl" (Par), which was edged out of first place last week, is back in No. 1 spot this round. It is mostly smash to terrific in some 17 keys where now current. "Battle Cry" (WB), champ last stanza, is finishing a strong second although not being launched in many additional keys this frame.

"Long Gray Line" (Col) again is finishing third, presently playing in 19 key cities. "Hit the Deck" (M-G) again is capturing fourth place, same as a week ago. "Untamed" (20th), a newcomer, is winding in fifth position although just getting started currently.

"Bridges at Toko-ri" (Par), with several fresh dates, is landing sixth money. "N. Y. Confidential" (WB), starting out, will finish seventh. "Cinerama" (Indie) is taking eighth spot, with "Far Country" (U) in ninth.

Jupiter's Darling" (M-G) rounds out the top 10 list. "Capt. Ligthfoot" (U), "Gate of Hell" (Indie), "Underwater!" (RKO) and "Americano" (RKO) are runner-up pix in that order.

"East of Eden" (WB) is the biggest newcomer. It looms terrific on preem weeks in Detroit and N. Y. "Big House U.S.A." (UA), good in second round in Detroit, is lofty in N. Y. "Chief Crazy Horse" (U), also new is rated fancy in Detroit.

Republic appears to have a winner in "Doctor in House." It is socko in Denver and still great in fourth N. Y. stanza. "They Were So Young" (Lip) is okay in Denver. "Carmen Jones" (20th), sock in Montreal, is torrid in Cincy. "Tonight's the Night" (AA) looms big in Pitt.

"Romeo and Juliet" (UA) is showing nicely in some four keys currently. "Many Rivers To Cross" (M-G) is rated sturdy in Balto. "Leagues Under Sea" (BV) shapes nice in L. A. "Racers" looms nifty in Buffalo. "6 Bridges To Cross" (U) is brisk in Omaha.

"Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) continues with smash success. It's solid in Detroit, Pitt, St. Louis, N. Y. and great in Philly. "White Feather" (20th) looks okay in Louisville.

"Camille" (M-G) (reissue), still big in N. Y., is smash in Pitt and Balto. "Women's Prison" shapes fair in Louisville and okay in Cleveland.

French Exhibs Fight 16m Rivals, Escaping Tax on 'Culture' Tag; Also Eager for More Yank Films

By FRED HIFT

French exhibs are on the warpath against their nontheatrical 16m competitors, many of whom are exempt from taxes due to their "cultural" tag, Lucien Nachbaur and Jean Thevenot, French theatre execs, reported in N. Y. last week.

Thevenot, who is commercial director of Pathe Cinema in France, estimated that there were around 4,000 16m installations in the country, a goodly number of them being run by cinema clubs, church groups, etc.

Representing real competition, many of these "cultural" situations actually play regular attractions in 16m, and charge as much as regular houses, the Pathe Cinema reps indicated. Adolf Trichet, exhib assn. prez, is fighting the tax exemption for the 16m entrepreneurs and, in Thevenot's view, is making some progress.

Nachbaur and Thevenot were emphatic in stating that French exhibs wanted more American films. "We're in favor of complete liberty in imports," said Nachbaur who books for the Pathe houses. He added that this view obviously wasn't being taken by the producers. However, he observed, "French films will always have a place in our theatres. A liberalized import quota wouldn't hurt them." Nachbaur is managing director of the Pathe Theatres.

Because they can draw on films from so many nations—notably Italy with which the French coproduce—French exhibs haven't felt anything like a product shortage,

It's Spring

Minneapolis, March 15.

Complaints about disorderliness, mischief and vandalism at the showhouses have started pouring into the police again.

In St. Paul municipal court a 17-year-old youth pleaded guilty to turning on a firehose at the Paramount Theatre there, doing considerable property damage.

Another 18-year-old youth was arrested for punching a St. Paul RKO Orpheum usher in the eye after being prevented from crashing the theatre.

In Minneapolis youngsters are suspected of having broken into the Lyceum Theatre and rifled the boxoffice of $140 petty cash.

Eyebrows Up On Scant Publicity For 'Oklahoma'

Lack of preselling for Magna Theatre Corp.'s "Oklahoma," first release in the Todd-AO widescreen process, has industryites wondering about the policy being pursued in bringing the $6,000,000 production to the attention of the public.

Publicity, or the lack of it, for the Rodgers & Hammerstein musical has been the subject of considerable comment and speculation, with most hands agreeing that the job done so far on the film hasn't exactly been outstanding.

"Oklahoma" is set to preem at the Rivoli Theatre, N.Y., sometime in May. Todd-AO and the film got a big spread in Life Magazine two weeks ago, but the story was primarily concerned with Mike Todd's own showbiz career.

Ad-pub fraternity agrees that the "Oklahoma" campaign to date has singularly lacked in punch or penetration. However, it's pointed out that Nick Matsoukas, national ad-pub director for Magna, may be deliberately holding his horses so as not to sell his attraction too early.

Matsoukas last week mailed out a folder describing various "Oklahoma" feature yarns available through his office. This was described as a somewhat unusual practice in present-day promotion. Question being asked was why Magna wouldn't make up a kit of story and picture material and make it available without putting interested papers to the trouble of having to write for it.

EXTEND BEN KALMENSON

Contract Terms Static at $1,750 Salary, $250 Expenses

Ben Kalmenson, Warner Bros. domestic distribution v.p., has been inked to a three-and-a-half-year contract extension. Employment deal, which was entered July 1, 1951 and was set to terminate June 30, 1956, has been extended to Dec. 31, 1959.

Kalmenson's remuneration continues unchanged at $1,750 weekly in salary and $250 per week for entertainment and expenses.

'Action' Called Fault In American Films; Culture Gets Pat in Germany

Hollywood, March 15.

Cultural American films and those dealing with the logical solution of human problems will be recommended for tax reduction in Germany by that country's Film Evaluating Committee, according to Dr. Konrad Poepelt, a member of that group currently visiting Hollywood. Outstanding pictures in this class, he said, are Hollywood's "The Best Years of Our Lives," "Gone With the Wind," "Joan of Arc" and "For Whom the Bell Tolls;" Japan's "Rashomon" and England's "The Last Bridge."

Standard tax on American films in the German states is 40%. Film Evaluating Committee can reduce the tax as much as 10%, which may make the difference between success or failure of the picture in that territory. Most Hollywood films, the doctor added, are too engrossed in "action," with too little regard for "human problems."

TRANSCONA (GARLAND) AND WARNERS UNTIED

Hollywood, March 15.

Warners and Transcona Enterprises, which recently produced "A Star Is Born," have agreed to call off the remainder of their three-picture deal. Transcona is headed by Judy Garland, Sid Luft and Edward L. Alperson.

In addition to "Star," the original agreement called for Transcona to produce an outdoor drama, "The Snow Covered Wagons," and a horse picture, "Man o' War," for release by Warners.

HELEN HAYES UNAVAILABLE

Not to Co-Star with Cagney In 'Tomorrows'

Hollywood, March 15.

Because of a conflicting commitment, Helen Hayes has withdrawn from an agreement to co-star with James Cagney in Metro's "All Our Tomorrows." Actress has signed to appear on the stage in "The Skin of Our Teeth" at the time the picture will be made.

Cagney has a definite commitment to star in "Tomorrows," based on an original by Ralph Wheelwright, with Jules Schermer producing.

CHECKING THE OIL

20th-Fox Back Lot Has Four Wells, Plumbs 13 More

Hollywood, March 15.

Petroleum under 20th-Fox's back lot is the current topic of discussion between studio brass and officials of the Universal-Consolidated Oil Co. this week. Studio is represented by secretary-treasurer Donald A. Henderson and chief counsel Otto E. Koegel. Oil company has brought in four wells thus far and is drilling 13 more.

While in town, Henderson and Koegel will take a look at 20th's old studio on Western avenue, now being revamped for tv production by the company's subsidiary, TCF Television Productions, Inc., managed by Sid Rogell.

German Crews Must Be Set Months Ahead

By WHITNEY WILLIAMS

Hollywood, March 15.

"West Germany, which has been enjoying a tremendous upsurge in employment during the past year, is a lush market for anyone with services to sell and the demand in every business, profession and industry far exceeds the supply," reported director John Brahm, just returned from two years of film-making there.

"American producers planning to make films in West German studios must bid for both skilled and unskilled labor at least six months in advance of a film's starting date. Otherwise, they will risk an indefinite production bottleneck."

Megger's last picture abroad was "Special Delivery" for the N. Peter Rathvon organization. Produced by Stuart Schulberg, film co-stars Joseph Cotten and Eva Bartok for Columbia release. Brahm explained that the picture was enabled to get before the cameras on schedule only because Schulberg had reserved his technical and unskilled labor crew six months prior to the starting date.

"This is not an exceptional case," he said, "but the rule in West German film circles today and it will remain so for some years to come.

"In the first place, the pre-Hitler film workers have either retired, because of age, been liquidated or were killed or maimed in the war. This has forced Germany, since the resumption of film-making in the West, to develop an entire new pool of technical help and to draw upon unskilled labor from other industries."

The West German film industry's program of 530 features annually keeps these workers employed 52 weeks a year, according to the director.

"We were fortunate to have the facilities of the big studio at Weisbaden for the production of 'Special Delivery,'" Brahm pointed out. "That plant engages a large segment of film extras, technical and unskilled workers on a yearly contract basis."

He also stressed that the hiring of native supporting players and extras has also loomed as a problem. "In Weisbaden," he reported, "and West Berlin most tradesmen, their wives and children now have two occupations. They step out of their regular duties to work as extras several times a week to help personnel shortages in this field."

Brahm and Schulberg, however, ran into no serious difficulty filling supporting roles in their picture, due to their proximity to London.

"You just make a call to a London film agent," he said, "and you have your actors on a plane and in your studio within two hours."

Monk as Forebear—No Damages!

A French aristocrat, who claimed he was ridiculed in Metro's "Ivanhoe" because one of his ancestors was portrayed unpleasantly in the film, lost a legal action against the company in Paris recently because he couldn't be considered a legal descendant of a monk.

Count Roger de Boisguilbert asked for $150,000 in damages from Metro, charging he was ridiculed because one of the characters in the pic, a soldier-monk, was called Boisguilbert. Boisguilbert said he was a direct descendant of the 12th century character. The court said there was no proof and, anyway, he couldn't be a legitimate descendant of the monk.

New York Sound Track

Now that the smoke has settled and Samuel Goldwyn has joined the Metro camp, the word being passed around is that Allied Artists offered to distribute "Guys and Dolls" for free. That is, until Goldwyn recouped on his negative costs, then AA would cut itself in for 10% . . . Dorothy Lamour had been angling to buy up her old pictures from Paramount but evidently has given up. She had a participation in about 10 early pix . . . United Artists mapping a junket to Venice for "Summertime."

Hal Wallis putting off his filmization of "The Rainmaker"—he paid $350,000 for the screen rights—to concentrate on "Route 66" with Shirley Booth . . . "Lost" has been added to the slate of pix to be lensed in N.Y. Lester Cooper will produce from the original New Yorker article by Berton Roueche . . . Eastman Kodak employees are being cut in on the outfit's biggest wage dividend, amounting to $28.75 for each $1,000 earned over the past five years . . . Columbia will be red-faced if Marlon Brando doesn't show at the Acad Awards presentations, after all the publicity saying he'll be there.

If Cecil B. DeMille has his way, all other producers on the Paramount studio will be forced to move elsewhere or suspend operations. DeMille has passed along word to Par execs that he'll require virtually all facilities on the lot for a month's time, beginning shortly, when he resumes "Ten Commandments" shooting.

Hollywood agent Irving Paul Lazar, back from a Paris quickie where he with his client, Peter Viertel, awaited Leland Hayward for whom Viertel will script "Old Man of the Sea," from the Ernest Hemingway bestseller. He also set up Max Catto's British novel, "Fire Down Below," which Cubby Broccoli & Irving Allen will shoot in Paris for Columbia release.

Marlon Brando ("On the Waterfront") and Grace Kelly ("Country Girl") rated tops in their class in the annual voting of the film critics' circle of the foreign language press in N.Y. Crix also picked "Waterfront" as the best picture and the British "Genevieve" as the top import . . . William Shelton, Times Film v.p., is in Europe working on a coproduction deal for his boss, Jean Goldwurm . . . Gregory Ratoff back from Cairo with a print of his film on former Egyptian King Farouk. Ratoff himself plays the lead part . . . Virginia Zanuck, wife of the 20th-Fox production topper, joining her husband in Paris. He's due back in about two weeks . . . Kirk Douglas knocking himself out doing p.r.s for Universal's "Man Without a Star," which world-preemed in Philadelphia yesterday (Tues.). Douglas has a cut of the pic . . . Arthur Mayer, leaving for a lengthy European trip next Monday (21), says he's going mostly for pleasure, but admits that with him "business is pleasure and pleasure is business." He's going to Israel and will take in the Cannes film festival . . . Also due for a Cannes o.o. is Walter Reade Jr. . . . Latest crop of German pix glorifying good Nazis who at the last minute turned against Hitler, has indies wondering whether the critics and the art house crowd will swallow that line . . . Universal anxious to let it be known it set no precedents when it bought the indie "I Love a Stranger" (formerly "The Bandit"), from producer Joseph Schaftel for a reported $350,000. Arthur Kennedy stars in the tinter.

Barney Balaban and Russell Holman on the Coast to catch up on the latest in VistaVision. And George Weltner, back from a quickie to Europe, will complete the personnel shifts at Par any day now.

"Animal Farm" and "Carmen Jones" each received 31 votes in best-pic balloting by the London Film Critics but "Farm" was the winner. The official explanation was this: "The critics decided that though both films were equal, one was more equal than the other; and by a show of hands they selected 'Animal Farm' as their first choice."

Elmer O. Wilschke, executive veepee of Perspecta Sound, to the Coast to confer with recording directors of the studios which use the sound system . . . Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, at its meeting Wednesday (23) at the Hotel Picadilly, will present a facsimile of Metro's Ticket Selling Workshop. Mike Simons is bringing all the scenery and props from the out-of-town meetings . . . Greer Garson in from the Coast to begin rehearsals for NBC-TV's "Reunion in Vienna" and for bally work on Warners "Strange Lady in Town" . . . Inez Joan, daughter of Melvin H. Heymann, Metro pub-ad department office manager, engaged to Harris Robert Levice, a medical student . . . Metro studio exec Eddie Mannix, arrived from the Coast Monday (14).

Metro studio publicity chief Howard Strickling in for homeoffice huddles . . . With Fabian Enterprises shifting from the Paramount building to Stanley Warner headquarters, S. H. MAJORS BURROW DEEP IN TV

Home-Toll's Marciano Argument

Proponents of toll-tv were far from unhappy this week over the news that the Rocky Marciano-Don Cockell heavyweight bout in San Francisco May 16 had been snapped up as a theatre-tv exclusive. It's their feeling that this may actually help their case before the Federal Communications Commission.

They figure it this way: One of the big arguments of exhibs in opposing fee-tv has been that it would deprive the public of "free" tv shows. Now along come the theatres and sew up, for their own exclusive use, the type of event to which—in the exhibs' own words—setowners have a right.

"How can the theatres argue against us," asked a spokesman for one of the coinbox systems, "when they themselves are the ones who are taking good shows away from the homeviewers?" It's the position of the coinbox advocates that the exhibs aren't "sincerely" concerned with the rights of home tv viewers, but rather with the final location of the paybox and its possible shift from the theatre into the home.

Protect In-Person Attendance May 16

California Blacked Out of Closed-Circuit Coverage Of Marciano-Cockell Bout

Theatre Network Television, which will handle the closed-circuit May 16 Rocky Marciano-Don Cockell heavyweight championship bout from San Francisco, opposed the blackout of the entire state of California but had to accept this stipulation on the insistence of the International Boxing Club, which is promoting the fight in conjunction with Jimmy Murray. Since this is the first Coast-originated heavyweight championship bout in years, the IBC is aiming for a hefty in-person gate. A large influx from the film colony is expected.

The match, originating from Kezar Stadium in Frisco, will hit eastern theatres at 10:30 or 11 p.m. EST, meaning a 7:30 or 8 p.m. start on the Coast. Nate Halpern is currently conferring with exhibitors to determine the best starting time.

Despite efforts of sponsors to get the fight for home-tv, the IBC appears to favor the closed-circuit medium. For the past three years, almost all of the heavyweight title contests have been seen via television in theatres only. Should there be a postponement because of rain, the fight will be staged Tuesday, May 17, or Thursday, May 19. The Wednesday date has been skipped because of the IBC's regular weekly fight program on home tv sponsored by Pabst beer.

As has been the custom in the recent closed-circuit outings of the fights, the radio rights will be peddled separately to a sponsor. It's believed that Halpern paid between $100,000 and $125,000 for the closed-circuit rights.

ED GRAINGER BUDGET DOUBLED FOR 1956

Hollywood, March 15.

Edmund Grainger Productions, Inc., is lining up a program of six features, budgeted at more than $12,000,000, for production in 1956.

This is double Grainger's 1955 schedule which consists of three films budgeted at $6,000,000. Two of these, "The Treasure of Pancho Villa" and "Great Day In the Morning," will be distributed by RKO. Release deal for "Oh, Promised Land" is still to be set.

Harry Novak in N.Y. to O.O. Prod. Rep Deals in Europe

Harry Novak has arrived in New York for two or three weeks on producers' representation deals in Europe. While the former Universal sales topper in Paris, where he supervised the entire Continent and North Africa, says he's "just looking around," he is known to have the ear of several U.S. indies who want to produce-distrib abroad.

Novak is houseguest of the Joseph H. Seidelmans—Mrs. Seidelman is his sister—but will probably work independently of his host, Seidelman, too, is a U alumnus, having been worldwide sales veepee. Novak returns to his Paris base the end of this month.

'THE CAMP FOLLOWER'

Shoved Aside for C'Scope—Now Going Into Production

Hollywood, March 15.

Twentieth-Fox's "The Camp Follower," shelved when the studio adopted CinemaScope, has been taken out of limbo and turned over to Buddy Adler for production, with Frank Tashlin directing and Tom Ewell as star.

Originally the yarn called for the late Leonard Goldstein as producer, Henry Levin as director and Clifton Webb as top actor.

90 Pix in 3 Years As UA's Minimum; More Tieups Due

Independent production units already corralled by United Artists will turn out a minimum of 90 pictures within the next three years, at the rate of 30 a year, UA president Arthur B. Krim stated in N. Y. yesterday (Tues.). He added he'll be "surprised" if the total falls below that level.

Flanked by management partners Robert S. Benjamin, William Heineman, Max Youngstein and Arnold Picker, Krim discussed the product situation at a press confab in his N. Y. office.

The present release rate will be continued for the balance of 1955, amounting to a total of 48 features for the calendar year. Trade conditions in subsequent years will determine possible changes in the sked, and concerning this Krim said he'd prefer not to make any predictions.

The press was provided with a complete list of filmmakers now aligned with UA, along with a breakdown on many of the properties to be delivered. The producers include Hecht-Lancaster, Norman Krasna, Joseph L. Mankiewicz, Robert Aldrich, Robert Rossen, Gregory-Laughton, Stanley Kramer, Anatole Litvak, David Miller, Robert Parrish-Tom Lea, Otto Preminger, Victor Saville and the Frank Seltzer-Victor Orsatti-Joe Newman combo. These are in addition to the flock of stars who've formed indie companies via UA tieups' (separate story). The player and prodution talent lineup rivals some major studio rosters and actually exceeds others.

Company has a complete hands-off policy so far as actual production is concerned, despite the fact that UA provides the financing almost 100%. The distrib has approval rights on budget, cast, etc., but once the final okay is given on rolling a property the UA execs remain aloof from the production until it's completed.

The unusually high number of new deals set over a recent period simply reflects long-range plan-

U SHIFTS POLICY, PAR WOOS ADS

Whatever weight exhibitor antagonism against television may have carried with distributors in the past, it now apparently no longer figures as a decisive factor.

Point was socked across last week at Universal's annual stockholder meet in N. Y. when prexy Milton R. Rackmil made it plain that not only did the company plan to eventually hop on the tv-film bandwagon, but also that it would unload its oldies to tv "when the climate is proper and the atmosphere is right." He stressed that neither was the case at the moment.

This is a far cry from prior occasions when U execs would flatly reject even the idea of dealing with tv. Similar change in attitude is quite evident at other companies, too. None of them is any longer making a secret of the fact that, if there's coin in tv, they intend to latch on to it.

Paramount, already well entrenched in television via its operation of KTLA, L. A., partial ownership of DuMont and controlling interest in International Telemeter, is digging in deeper. Company is now prepared to produce telepix on its own. Par will do either this or rent out studio space to outside tv filmmakers, or, perhaps, both.

Company about a year ago took over the old Warner lot on Sunset Blvd. for the purpose of tv expansion. Property is now nearly set to swing into operation. First, it will house a film museum to be fostered by the Motion Picture Relief Fund. Second, KTLA will be moved to this location. Third, facilities for the tv production will be established shortly. Par is awaiting actual completion of the property development before deciding to lens the films for video or simply take on the landlord status.

As for the possibility of peddling library films to tv, Par insiders insist the for-sale sign is not up on anything. However, outsiders have some participation in the ownership of certain vintage pix. Bill Pine and Bill Thomas are in this category. If Pine and Thomas can come up with a good deal for a tv

U Studio Hits 40

Hollywood, March 15.

Universal, studio, oldest in the Hollywood area, was 40 years old yesterday. It was officially opened by the late Carl Laemmle on March 14, 1915.

Today it covers about 400 acres and contains 17 sound stages, 11 standing outdoor sets, three lakes, a waterfall and 15 miles of roads.

Filmakers Releasing Scheme; Rental Flat Against Escalator; Target Is 16-30 Age Audience

By HY HOLLINGER

Filmakers Releasing Organization plans to release four pictures between now and Sept. 1 under its exhibitor guarantee program. Attempting to fill a void created by the major companies' concentration on fewer and bigger pictures, Filmakers is gearing its films for the action market and is concentrating the appeal on audiences ranging from 16 to 30 years of age.

In a frank disclosure of the company's plans, FRO prexy Irving Levin said that each of the company's pictures represents a cash outlay of only $300,000. The cost, Levin noted, would be greater if the company did not enter participation arrangements with players and/or directors. Levin, in N. Y. last week with FRO veepee and general sales manager Harry Mandell, said the company was following a policy of low-budget, low-overhead product which can be sold to exhibitors at minimum terms and yet provide a profit both for theatres and for the releasing company.

FRO terms, at 25% minimum with a graduated scale, give the distributing company an opportunity to earn as high as 60% "if the picture performs," according to Levin. "If the picture earns more, we get it," Levin said. He said the low terms enabled exhibitors to cooperate more fully with FRO in the pub-ad campaign and the extra bally efforts paid off in b.o. results. Topper read from an authorized testimonial of E. M.

COMMENT ON MEXICANS

Technicians Fine If Sharpies Do Not Con 'Em — Nassour

Hollywood, March 15.

Mexican film technicians are efficient and cooperative if they are treated as human beings, according to producer-director Edward Nassour after filming "The Beast of Hollow Mountain" on location 50 miles from Mexico City. Guy Madison-Patricia Medina costarrer was completed without any unnecessary delay.

"American producers who complain of inefficiency below the border find the same problem in Hollywood, he said. "Often it is a question of wanting to get something for nothing. The Mexicans feel the same way we do about this practice, and when they don't fall for it, the report circulates about the difficulty of production down there."

Federal Limit Looms at Last Re Antitrust

Washington, March 15.

Prospects for a uniform statute of limitations on private treble damage anti-trust suits, appear better than at any time since a considerable segment of the motion picture industry began urging such a law. Talk on Capitol Hill is that this Congress will follow through and pass a bill. Such legislation was started through the congressional mill several times since the end of World War II, but bogged down in each instance.

Mori Krushen to Midwest

Mori Krushen, migratory exploitation chief of United Artists, is off again, this time to several midwest spots plus Chicago where "The Purple Plain" will have its first American showing at the Chicago Theatre March 25.

Present for a personal appearance on that date will be the Burmese actress Win Min Than. In Burmese that stands for "Brilliant-A-Millionfold," which is about as far as even an exploitation chief would go.

Schwartz Finds Producing's Full-Time Chore, Quits Circuit for DCA

Fred J. Schwartz has relinquished the presidency of Century Theatres, N. Y. chain, to devote full time as chief helmsman of Distributors Corp. of America. His brother, Leslie Schwartz, has taken over the Century spot.

Schwartz found that doubling as chief exec of the two outfits was just too much. Added to this are the problems DCA, which he originated, has been having in getting top product into release. The pic financing-distributing outfit, owned by a group of exhibitors, hit its latest snag with the budget of "Finian's Rainbow," cartoon adaption of the legiter.

"Finian's" is being produced for DCA by John Hubley. It started out with a blueprinted cost of around $700,000 but indications now are this will climb another $200,000. Sound work has been completed and Hubley will resume with the animation phase shortly.

DCA last week picked up distribution rights to "Animal Farm." British production based on the George Orwell novel. But so far this has been an art house entry, thus not entirely measuring up to the type of film which DCA's owners had hoped to provide. They're backing the company (1), as an investment and (2), as a means of placing more pix on the market.

Only major-scale feature which DCA has handled is "Long John Silver," which actually was completed before the corporation fully came into being. Company is holding back on the release of this Joseph Kaufman production in some area until Easter week.

Other product on the current lineup is "The Stranger's Hand" and "Hunters of the Deep." These, too, are starting off at the art outlets.

CUTS, MORE CUTS, FOR 'LOVERS, HAPPY LOVERS'

"Lovers, Happy Lovers," an English-language pic made by French producer Paul Graetz, is headed for the 20th-Fox release sked for the U.S. and Canada if difficulties with the Code and the National Legion of Decency can be straightened out.

Agreement in principle has been reached between 20th and Graetz. Latter is flying a negative to N. Y. for 20th execs to o.o. Latter will then decide what cuts are necessary to satisfy both the Code and the Catholic review group. The Legion has rated "Lovers" (formerly "M. Ripois") in the "C" (Condemned) category.

It's stressed at 20th that the film wouldn't be taken on unless it was acceptable to both Code and Legion. Last experience 20th has had with a "condemned" pic was with "Forever Amber." Company found it more trouble than it was worth.

"Lovers" has had a curious history. Production Code Administrator Geoffrey Shurlock originally nixed it for a seal. It later opened at the Little Carnegie, N. Y., for a generally disappointing run. Following extended conversations between Graetz and Shurlock, latter decided that the seal would be granted provided very minor revisions were made in the film.

Legion originally tagged "Lovers" as a "B" film, i.e. objectionable in part. Later Graetz was informed that the rating was due to a clerical error and that it should have read "C" (Condemned). Even though the Code then changed its mind, the "C" rating stuck.

"Lovers" tells the story of a charming scoundrel who, while married, seduces a number of girls including his wife's best friend. In the end he's crippled but still has an eye for the gals. Shurlock felt that the ending should make it quite clear that the principal character, played by Gerard Philipe, was permanently disabled as a fitting punishment to his escapades.

Film also features Joan Greenwood, Valerie Hobson, Natasha Parry and Germaine Montero. Rene Clement directed.

Revenge of the Creature
(3-D)

Mildly exciting chiller-diller with 3-D as an added exploitation gimmick.

Universal release of a William Alland production. Stars John Agar, Lori Nelson, John Bromfield; features Robert B. Williams, Nestor Paiva, Grandon Rhodes, Dave Willock, Charles Cane. Directed by Jack Arnold. Screenplay by Martin Berkeley from a story by Alland; camera, Charles S. Welbourne; editor, Paul Weatherwax; music, Joseph Gershenson; make-up, Bud Westmore. Previewed in N.Y., March 10, '55. Running time 82 MINS.

Clete Ferguson	John Agar
Helen Dobson	Lori Nelson
Joe Hayes	John Bromfield
George Johnson	Robert B. Williams
Lucas	Nestor Paiva
Foster	Grandon Rhodes
Gibson	Dave Willock
Captain of Police	Charles Cane

(Aspect ratio: 2-1)

Considering that this is the first 3-D picture to reach the public in over a year, it's unfortunate that it's not a better one. "Revenge of the Creature," sequel to U's "Creature From the Black Lagoon," is a routine shocker with obvious appeal for the crowd that goes for the horror pix. It doesn't get much of a boost from the 3-D treatment, nor does the picture itself bring out the more spectacular aspects of the deep-dimension medium.

If credits were to be given in order of performance values, the fellow who plays the scaly monster in the film certainly would rate top billing. Expertly made up, he's the only one who looks and acts believable. Fact that he only roars and has no speaking lines helps since the script cooked up by Martin Berkeley is hardly on the expert side. There's an unusual volume of dialog that serves mostly to bridge the gaps between the action sequences that audiences presumably came to see.

There are too few of those, but some of them are staged with sock effect, with or without 3-D. Underwater scenes involving the gill-man, and particularly his escape from the aquarium, have been directed by Jack Arnold for shock value and they build up tension nicely. Charles S. Welbourne's lensing in many spots is distinctive and unusual even though he makes surprisingly little use of possible 3-D effects.

In much of footage, the 3-D effects are barely noticeable. There are a couple of spots where the depth effect is remarkable, however, and it makes one wonder why the production crew didn't bother to aim for more of the same.

Cast performs its routine chores in routine fashion. John Agar plays a young scientist and Lori Nelson his romantically inclined helpmate who almost dies in the clutches of the monster but is saved at the bell. Miss Nelson is easy on the eyes and looks good in a bathing suit. John Bromfield and Robert B. Williams are okay in smaller parts. Paul Weatherwax's editing is okay. Hift.

Canyon Crossroads

Fair meller for the outdoor action market.

United Artists release of William Joyce (Thomas Whitesell) production. Stars Richard Basehart, Phyllis Kirk; features Stephen Elliott, Russell Collins. Directed by Al Werker. Screenplay and original story, Emmett Murphy and Leonard Heideman; camera, Gordon Avile; editor, Chester Schaeffer; music, George Bassman. Tradeshown N.Y., March 1, '55. Running time, 83 MINS.

Larry Kandall	Richard Basehart
Katherine Rand	Phyllis Kirk
Larson	Stephen Elliott
Dr. Rand	Russell Collins
Pete Barnwell	Charles Waggenheim
Joe Rivers	Richard Reis
Charlie Rivers	Alan Wells
Mickey Rivers	Tommy Cook
A.E.C. Clerk	William Pullen

Apparently due to take its place with high button shoes and grandfather's moustache cup is the cliche, "thars gold in them thar hills." For now with the atomic age well underway time honored expressions of yesteryear have been displaced. At least that's the impression gained from "Canyon Crossroads," a United Artists release about a uranium hunt.

But despite the modernity afforded through use of terms as geiger counters, radioactivity and such, this William Joyce production shapes up as average fare for the outdoor action market. For the story which Emmett Murphy and Leonard Heideman screenplayed from their own original follows an obvious pattern, replete with stock characterizations and situations.

Richard Basehart's a veteran prospector down on his luck and suspicious of even those who would aid him. Stephen Elliott's a crooked mine owner who nurses a resentment of Basehart since the latter turned down a partnership deal. Along come geology prof Russell Collins and daughter Phyllis Kirk who grubstake Basehart on condition she can accompany the searchers. Of course, Elliott makes things tough for them but they ultimately wind up with a uranium lode and romance.

In keeping with things contemporary, the chases aren't confined to hard ridin' hombres who dash about canyon and mesa exclusively on hossback. For the baddies now track down honest prospectors via helicopter. At any rate there's a fair passel of suspense when Basehart whips out his six-shooter to plug away at an airborne adversary.

While the script doesn't afford the principals much opportu ity performancewise, nevertheless Basehart is relatively good as the prospector who strikes it rich. Miss Kirk makes a good try but hardly seems the kind of girl who'd brave the wild terrain of mountainous Utah in company with two males. Elliott is an okay menace as Larson, the unscrupulous mine owner, and Collins is adequate as the aging prof. Routine support is provided by Charles Waggenheim, Richard Hale and Alan Wells, among others.

Direction of Al Werker makes the most of the action sequences. Production values reflect a modest budget. It's unfortunate that producer Joyce didn't see fit to invest in color lensing since the Utah canyon country obviously would have looked much better in tint than in the existing black-and-white print. On the whole, however, cameraman Gordon Avile did a competent job on the tintless stock. Other technical credits are standard. Gilb.

Three Cases of Murder
(BRITISH)

Three separate murder yarns. Okay entry for art houses or for second half of dual bills. One story by Somerset Maugham starring Orson Welles should help in selling.

Associated Artists Productions release of Ian Dalrymple-Hugh Perceval-Alexander Paal production. Stars Orson Welles, John Gregson, and Leueen MacGrath. Features Alan Badel, Elizabeth Sellars, Emrys Jones. Directed by Wendy Toye, David Eady, and George More O'Ferrall. Screenplay by Dalrymple, Donald Wilson, and Sidney Carroll, based on stories by Roderick Wilkinson, Brett Halliday, and Somerset Maugham. Camera, Georges Perinal; editor, G. Turney-Smith; music, Doreen Carwithen. Previewed in N.Y. March 10, '55. Running time, 99 MINS.

Lady Connemara	Evelyn Hall

Three short stories dealing with murder have been put together as an omnibus film under the title of "Three Cases of Murder." With one of the yarns from the pen of Somerset Maugham, and starring Orson Welles, these names help, the entire British package shapes as acceptable art house fare this side. It's not strong enough for top billing, but should fit neatly in the second half slot.

The stories fit into three different categories—supernatural, whodunit, and psychological. "In the Picture," the opener, is a macabre piece that leaves a spine-tingling effect. Based on a story by Roderick Wilkinson, it opens in a museum, then moves into an eerie house that's in one of the paintings. A weird stranger, who turns out to be the long-dead painter of the picture, escorts the museum guide into the house where there are some odd inhabitants, including a woman and a taxidermist. Latter would just as well stuff a human as a bird. Alan Badel, Leueen MacGrath, Hugh Pryse, and Eddie Byrne, the characters involved, know how to provide a scary touch.

"You Killed Elizabeth," from a story by Brett Halliday, concerns two friends, George and Edgar, childhood chums who go through school together and eventually wind up as partners in the advertising business. One is a plodder and the other a charmer. The plodder falls in love, but the girl is charmed away by the charmer. One morning she's found dead. One of the guys did it, and a last-minute O. Henry touch uncovers the murderer. Emrys Jones, John Gregson, and Elizabeth Sellars give convincing performances in this entry.

The clincher and piece de resistance is Maugham's "Lord Mountdrago" with Welles as the title character. As Foreign Secretary, Mountdrago, in a witty and devastating speech before Parliament, brings political ruin to a member of the opposition. The member vows revenge and the threat plagues Mountdrago to the point of madness. He constantly has nightmares, dreaming that his rival had placed him in awkward and ridiculous positions. The efforts of a psychiatrist fail, and Mountdrago determines to rid himself of his rival by dreaming him to death. Owen, the rival, fails to show up in Parliament. He was killed as Mountdrago dreamt, but Owen gets his revenge nevertheless.

Welles is excellent as Mountdrago as is Alan Badel as Owen. Helen Cherry registers effectively as Mountdrago's understanding wife. Wendy Toye, David Eady, and George More O'Ferrall, the directors, present each of their murders in an interesting manner. The film should please readers of mystery fiction. Holl.

Treasure of Ruby Hills

Complicated western suitable only for less discriminating bookings.

Hollywood, March 11.

Allied Artists release of William F. Broidy production. Stars Zachary Scott, Carole Mathews; features Barton MacLane, Dick Foran, Lola Albright, Gordon Jones, Raymond Hatton. Directed by Frank McDonald. Screenplay, Tom Hubbard, Fred Eggers; story, Louis L'Amour; camera, John Martin; editor, Ace Herman; music, Edward J. Kaye. Previewed March 11, '55. Running time, 72 MINS.

Haney	Zachary Scott
Sherry	Carole Mathews
Reynolds	Barton MacLane
Doreen	Dick Foran
May	Lola Albright
Voyle	Gordon Jones
Scotty	Raymond Hatton
Emmett	Lee Van Cleef
Hull	Steve Darrell
Payne	Charles Fredericks
Garvey	Stanley Andrews
Burt	James Alexander
Vernon	Rick Vallen

(Aspect ratio: 1.85-1)

A complicated story line brought on by over-plottage reduces this Zachary Scott western to the also-ran category, a waste of good talent.

Scott, son of a dead outlaw, is intent on settling in the Arizona town of Soledad, battle zone for two warring factions each out to wrest control of the region. As the first step, he acquires the vital water rights to the valley. After the leaders of the two warring factions are killed and their men join up with the scheming foreman of another ranch, Scott in a showdown over his water rights kills the foreman and brings peace to the area.

Scott is never believable in an artificial role, and director Frank McDonald can do little with the confused script which is long on stilted dialog and many characters. Carole Mathews and Lola Albright are in for distaff interest, former romantically paired with Scott, and Raymond Hatton and Charles Fredericks are able to make some sense with their roles, beyond the reach of most of the other casters. Technical credits are standard. Whit.

Sombra Verde
(Green Shadow)
(MEXICAN)

Mexico City, March 8.

Peliculas Nacionales release of a Producciones Calderon production. Stars Ricardo Montalban. Features Ariadna Welter, Victor Parra. Jorge Martinez De Hayas. Directed by Roberto Gavaldon. Camera, Alex Phillips; screenplay, Ramiro Torres Septien; music, A. Carreon. At Cine Palacio Chino, Mexico City. Running time, 90 MINS.

Rating the locale, photography, some acting and the direction of this pic is easy: it's all excellent. But the story is a real puzzle. It's neither good nor very bad. The best that can be said of it is that it does hold you, if only mildly.

"Green Shadow" unquestionably is nearly top merchandise. It is Ricardo Montalban's first since his return to Mexican pix. He does very well. He fits the role of the eager young chemist who impetuously crashes the deep jungle of deep tropical Vera Cruz state seeking a medicinal bush. "Shadow" shapes as a boxoffice champ here.

Roberto Gavaldon makes the utmost of wild scenery as director and adds poignant dialog as special writer for the film. There's a raging rapids, big snakes (one kills Jorge Martinez de Hayas, guide to Montalban) and other tragic moments for the hero. Montalban and Victor Parra, the tough medic hiding out after a scrape, mix it in a fisticuffs sequence over Parra's daughter, Ariadna Welter (Linda Christian's sister).

Miss Welter is just good as the wench secluded in the jungle who goes nearly haywire at the sight of a man. Her garb could be much more effective. And she overstresses her bare legs, even though they are nice gams.

Peccato Che Sia Una Canaglia
(Too Bad She's Bad)
(ITALIAN)

Rome, March 8.

CEI-INCOM release of a Documento Film Production. Stars Vittorio DeSica, Sophia Loren, Marcello Mastroianni. Directed by Alessandro Blasetti. Screenplay, Blasetti, Sandro Continenza, Susi Checchi D'Amico, Ennio Flaiano from a story by Alberto Moravia; camera, Aldo Giordani; music, Alessandro Cicognini. Previewed in Rome, Running time, 100 MINS.

Lina	Sophia Loren
Stoppani	Vittorio DeSica
Paolo	Marcello Mastroianni
Brunetto	Walter Bartoletti
Inspector	Mario Passante
Luigi	Giacomo Furia
Watchi	Giulio Cali

Pic combines the new boxoffice team of Sophia Loren and Vittorio DeSica with a lightweight, fast-paced comedy based on a story by top novelist Alberto Moravia. It has excellent home-market prospects. Many of the pic's local-colorful facets will fail to project abroad, but the film should do proportionately well there. A top-quality dubbing job, however, is required for foreign success.

Story entangles cabbie Marcello Mastroianni with a sometime adventuress-thief, Sophia Loren, whose father (Vittorio DeSica) is a gentleman purse-snatcher. Close to retirement age, DeSica only occasionally indulges in the profession which has filled his home with accumulated fruit of his purloinings while lending a benevolent eye to his daughter's sometimes gauche early efforts in the trade.

The cabbie's efforts to elude entanglement with the gal meet with little success, and soon he is over his neck in her troubles with the police—and falling for her personally. All is handled in featherweight manner by director Alessandro Blasetti, with a rapid-fire rhythm and a fine laugh average. Involved also are some amusing Roman vignettes.

Acting is fine in all sectors, with Miss Loren coming through with her best thesping to date, an expert—and eye-filling—portrayal of the petty thief with a mind of her own. Mastroianni is fine as the harried hack driver who continually suppresses common sense for another round with the gal in question. DeSica is extremely droll as Sophia's father. A group of colorful actors fills out the cast list.

Heading the top-drawer credit list is a neatly comic scoring by Alessandro Cicognini, with the music highlighting pic's laughable aspects. Location camerawork by Aldo Giordani is expert. Hawk.

Lux Film release of Lux-Ponti-Le Laurentiis-Lux C C. De France co-production. Stars Anthony Quinn, Sophia Loren, Henri Vidal. Directed by Pietro Fransisci. Story and screenplay, Ennio DeConcini, Primo Zeglio; camera (Technicolor), Aldo Tonti, Karl Struss; special effects, Ivor Beddoes, Stephen Grimes; dances, Gusa Geertz; music, Enzo Masetti; editor, Leo Catozzo. Previewed in Rome. Running time, 87 MINS.

Attila	Anthony Quinn
Onoria	Sophia Loren
Ezio	Henri Vidal
Grune	Irene Papas
Galla Placida	Colette Regis
Bleda	Ettore Manni
Hun Leader	Christian Marquand
Valentiniano	Claude Laydu
Onegesio	Eduardo Ciannelli

Elaborately staged actioner looks a moderate grosser on the local market, with aid from title and cast names. For the U.S. market, where "Attila" perforce follows the Universal Jack Palance starrer (also on the Hun leader), will need strong pre-selling for like results, although the pic is styled for the general market.

Film chronicles Attila's rise to power via murder and bloodshed, which includes his own, more reasonable-minded brother, a romantic envolvement with the ambitious sister of the foppish Roman emperor, and Attila's first successful campaign to conquer Rome. At the doors of city, after defeating the Roman army and killing its leader, Attila's hordes are stopped and turned back by a miraculous intervention of Pope Leo. Pic ends on this religioso note.

Anthony Quinn makes a strong and forceful Attila while Ettore Manni is effective as the brother he murders. Sophia Loren is not done justice by either the camera or wardrobe, projects in too matronly the temptress with ambitions. Henri Vidal, Irene Papas, Claude Laydu and the large cast of French and Italo thespers go through their paces without much enthusiasm. Eduardo Ciannelli seems miscast as Onegesio.

Script is weak and talky, with pace livened somewhat by a rousing battle scene near the end. Pic has been given full-scale technical outfitting, from costuming to sets to elaborate use of extras for the battle, plus the Technicoloring. Music by Enzo Masetti is only standard. Hawk.

Le Avventure Di Giacomo Casanova
(The Adventures of Giacomo Casanova)
(FRANCO—ITALIAN)
(Color)

Rome, March 1.

Cei-Incom release of an Orso Film-Iris-C.F.P.C. Production. Stars Gabriele Ferzetti, Corinne Calvet, Nadia Gray, Mara Lane, Marina Vlady, Irene Galter, Carlo Campanini, Aroldo Tieri. Directed by Steno. Screenplay, Steno, Ennio Bistolfi, S. Continenza, L. Fulci, Carlo Romano, Marco Guerra; camera, (Eastmancolor), Mario Bava; editor, Giuliana Attenni. Previewed in Rome, Running time, 105 MINS.

Giacomo Casanova	Gabriele Ferzetti
Dolores	Irene Galter
Teresa of Reichbur	Nadia Gray
Barbara	Mara Lane
Venetian beauty	Corinne Calvet
Fulvia	Marina Vlady
Le Duc	Carlo Campanini
Jose Ramirez	Aroldo Tieri
Geltrude	Anna Amendola
Lucrezia	Lia di Leo
Bettina	Fulvia Franco
Angelica	Florence Arnaud
Bragadin	Nico Pepe
Inquisitor	Nerio Bernardi
Members of the Rome Opera Ballet

This elegant, tasteful co-production has elements of appeal for both exploitation and class audiences in its tongue-in-cheek rendition of the great lover's adventures. Besides the title lure, a femme-weighted credit list topped by Corinne Calvet, provides marquee bait for most markets. With some trimming for pace, and a good lingual version, pic rates U.S. bids. Consistently tasteful handling of the nevertheless frankly unashamed content poses the censorship question. Cutting is no solution—either it gets by in toto or is nixed. Tough Italo censors have raised no objections to date, limiting action to placing pic i the "above 16" category.

Pic recalls some of the lover's adventures via the flashback route, while Casanova (Gabriele Ferzetti) languishes in a Spanish jail. Predatory quality of the female is stressed as woman after woman urges him on to the inevitable, while trickery helps him win the only beauty (Corinne Calvet) to resist his attentions.

Parade of pulchritude includes items from all stations in life, from heiresses to barmaids, from country gals to boudoir beauties. One thing is in common with them all—uncommon beauty, abundantly displayed. Rarely have so many lookers been assembled for one pic, nor so enticingly photographed, with all types represented. Marina Vlady, as the country girl who catches Casanova's eye on her wedding day, outshines them all with her fresh, piquant young beauty. Ferzetti is good as Casanova.

Director Steno and his fellow-scripters have fashioned Casanova's exploits into an adultly diverting boudoir gambol. The dialogue is often sparkling while the situations, even though familiar, produce chuckles. Some slow spots can be overcome by pruning. Outfittings are elegantly designed by Italy's top specialists in the field. Mario Bava's camerawork is in keeping with the taste displayed. Location lensing in Venice, Tivoli and Rome enhance the pic's eye-appeal. Hawk.

Five From Barska Street
(POLISH—COLOR)

Artkino release of Film Polski production. Stars Alexandra Slaska, Tadeusz Janczar. Directed by Aleksander Ford. Screenplay, Kazimierz Kozniewski from his own novel; camera, Jaroslav Tuzar, Karol Chodura; editors, W. Otocka, H. Kubik. At Stanley, N.Y., starting March 12, '55. Running time, 109 MINS.

Hanka	Aleksandra Slaska
Kazek	Tadeusz Janczar
Jacek	Kazimierz Kozniewski
Lutek	Tadeusz Lomnicki
Zbych	Marian Rufka
Franek	Wlozzimierz Skoczylas
Marek	Mieczyslaw Stoor

(In Polish; English Titles)

"Five From Barska Street" is credited with being a grand prize winner at the Cannes Film Festival, which gives some idea to what extent the awarding of prizes at this fete has degenerated. It probably is the best effort at Polish production in some time. But this picture still remains just a meller about juvenile delinquents stemming from the last world war. Aleksander Ford, the director, won a special prize, and neither awards are comprehensible because this compares unfavorably with any number of American "B" melodramas.

Plot concerns five boys from Barska Street, who are paroled by the gendarme after being nabbed for juvenile crimes. The film blames the unsettled conditions of postwar Warsaw and the harrowing experiences the lads have had during the war for their arrest. Entire story, in a muddled sort of way, implies that the youths are afraid of the police and still feel obligated to carry out orders of an underworld gangster chief. Perhaps in Polish it becomes understandable but this comes out on the screen as a highly skeptical

KID FILM LIBRARY EVAPORATES

Italians Zig-Zag on Color Issue; U.S. Distribs Will Print Locally

Reversing themselves twice in a single week, Italian authorities have lifted the ban on the importation of color pictures and the situation now remains as before, i.e. each U. S. distrib is to make his own arrangement with the Italian labs.

Having originally agreed to release the color prints they were holding up, the Italians last week notified the American companies that the ban was back on agai . Motion Picture Export Assn. in turn made it known that it wouldn't negotiate until and unless the tint prints were freed.

At a meet in N. Y., the companies reached general agreement that there would be no individual negotiations with Rome pending a lifting of the ban for all companies. Griffith Johnson, MPEA v.p., who had negotiated the first understanding with the Italians, returned to Rome from Paris when the snag developed and presumably informed the Italo authorities of the American attitude. Soon after, the news came through that the ban was off.

Trouble with Italy started when, as a result of Italian lab pressure, Italo Customs refused to pass through any further Hollywood tint prints. Italo position was that the Americans should do at least part of their color printing in local plants. U. S. outfits agreed to negotiate and there's now a general understanding that the companies will do a certain percentage of their color work in Italy.

Impression in N. Y. is that the Ferrania Color outfit in Italy may have had something to do with last week's diffieulties. Under the original agreement to print in Italy the companies understood that Eastman color positive world be available to the local labs. Quality of prints mad on the local Ferrania color stock (from an Eastman negative) hasn't been so hot and the impression persists that the two aren't compatible at the moment.

According to Wolfe Cohen, Warner Bros. foreign sales topper, who returned recently from Italy, the companies are getting good results from the Belgian Geva color positive which is available to the Italian studios. Cohen said he knew nothing of an agreement on the part of Italo authorities to allow increased imports of Eastman color stock.

THAT ELUSIVE DATE

Nothing Is Pinned Down on All-Industry Roundtable

Efforts to set a date for the proposed industry roundtable session again ran into complieations. Wilbur Snaper, Allied States Assn.'s representative on COMPO's governing triumverate was set to bring up the subject at the group's meeting last week. However, 20th-Fox sales chief Al Liehtman, the distribution rep, and Sam Pinanski, Theatre Owners of America's spokesman, were both absent because of illness, preventing the holding of a regular session of the triumverate.

Because of the many delays and the numerous obstacles, no one in any branch of the industry involved with the projeet would hazard a guess as to whoin, or if, the all-industry meeting will be held. The more skeptieal industryites chalked off the proposed confab as a lost cause.

'Exposition' Sells 5% Debentures

Hollywood, March 15.

The $1,000,000 permanent Motion Picture Exposition, expected to open by year's-end at Warners old Sunset Studios, now owned by Paramount, will be financed by sale of 5% debentures in $100 units. No funds will be expended until total of $850,000 is sold, according to E. L. Depatie, MPE prexy.

All proceeeds from Exposition go to Motion Picture Relief Fund after payment of debentures and operating costs. Par is making site available for ten years on straight percentage basis.

CHAIN AT DRIVE-IN KILLS MGR.'S CHILD

Houston, March 15.

A forgotten chain, stretched across the Hi-Nabor Drive-In Theatre, sheared Ernest Elmo Ward, manager, and his two daughters off a motor scooter Thursday (10). The younger child, Shari Lynn, was fatally injured.

The chain was stretched across the ozoner entrance to prevent vandals from damaging the car speakers.

C'Scope Trailers in 2-D Draw 'Midget Doing Giant Job' Crack from 20th

Exhibs in many instances are using 2-D trailers to advertise coming CinemaScope attraetions, and 20th-Fox would like to see the practice stopped.

It's like "using a midget to sell an entertainment giant," said Al Lichtman, 20th director of distribution, in a letter to 20th division and branch managers. "In reducing the magnitude of the medium by using 2-D trailers the impaet of CinemaScope cannot help but be vitiated," he stated, adding that C'Scope trailers were available on each film.

Theatres have been using 2-D trailers when playing 2-D programs since projectionists are hesitant to switch to C'Scope for the short reel.

Theatre a Dead Loss

Milwaukee, Mareh 15.

A voluntary bankruptcy aetion has been filed in U.S. Distriet Court here by Atlantic Theatre Corp. The bankruptcy lists liabilities of $49,009.18 and no assets or exemptions. Loss of lease was indicated. The property is to be razed.

Corporation officers listed were John R. Freuler, prs., and director of Glencoe, Ill.; Jessie Walker, secretary and director and Gertrude F. Hammeiman, treasurer.

SUMMER NEEDS EXPOSE SCARCITY

Unless the film companies come through to replenish the supply of prints and add some new titles, the Motion Picture Assn. of Americe's Children's Film Library may have to close shop.

Exhibitors who have been contaeting the Film Library with a view to building summer series of children's shows consisting of features and shorts are finding that the number of films available through the Library has dwindled to the point where it's become difficult to build programs.

They have voiced their disappointment in no uncertain terms, pointing out that the library, established in 1946, has been an important factor in helping to attract the juvenile audience and to get it into the film-going habit. Matter was broaehed recently by Walter Reade at the COMPO meet in N.Y. when ways and means of expanding the present audience were discussed.

According to Marjorie Dawson, direetor of the library, the situation has been of serious eoncern for some considerable time and has been the subject of discussion within the MPAA. Mrs. Dawson acknowledged that the future of the library was entirely in the hands of the sales managers of the companies who must direct the printing up of the necessary film copies.

Main reason for the drying up of the children's library's film supply are the following:

(1) Many of the pix originally slotted for the library have had to be withdrawn since the prints became completely worn out. While some of the companies have replaced copies, others have not.

(2) With nitrate prints being withdrawn from circulation, the

Snaper's Point

A survey of members of Allied Theatre Owners of New Jersey discloses a serious drop in attendance, especially among children, according to prexy Wilbur Snaper.

Snaper told the tradepress yesterday (Tues.) that there is a tremendous lack of pictures suitable for children. He said that Jersey Allied, by guaranteeing bookings for kiddie matinees, would be willing to pay the cost of the prints. He said the film companies had suitable pictures in their vaults, but did not have the prints available.

Unions Sneak Weekend 'Overtime' Bill; Hits Films, Legit, Not Air; Showbiz, Belatedly Alert, Fights

Annapolis, March 15.

Motion picture exhibitors will be in the forefront of the fight before the Maryland State Senate to block the House-passed wage and hour bill in its present form. Bill is slated for a public hearing before the Senate labor group on Wednesday (16).

Measure, already approved by the House of Delegates, would hit a staggering blow to motion picture, legit and strawhat operators. It provides a 40-hour week and minimum wage of 75c an hour in the state, with a limited number of exceptions. Measure calls for time and one-half for overtime and time and one-half for work on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays, even though no overtime is involved.

This hits motion picture theatres especially hard sihee most of them do 75% of their boxoffice weekends. Projection booth men, now receiving $3.50 per hour under union contracts, would be increased to $5.25 per hour for working Saturdays, Sundays and holidays. Tab would be upped for all other employees including ushers, cashiers, etc. Legit will be affected by wages for Saturdays and holidays. Broadcasting is exempt from the bill because it is covered by the Federal Wage-Hour Law.

Oddly enough, the bill specifically exempts employees of amusement parks, swimming pools and bathing beaches. Bill was quietly pushed through the House without a public hearing, via strong backing from the labor unions. Entertainment business people were caught completely off balanee by its passage. Now they are prepared to fight at Wednesday's hearing.

Julian Brylawski, of Washington, TOA, and the Stanley-Warner interests, will speak for the exhibitors at the hearing, pointing out the crippling effect the measure can have on neighborhood and small town theatres. While the film people oppose the entire bill, the weekend-holiday time and one-half section, is especially dangerous to them.

UA EXECS TO COAST

Heineman, Youngstein Kranze, Winikus at Sales Rally

United Artists distribution v.p. William J. Heineman disclosed the company will tee off on its 1955 sales conventions with a three-day session at the Ambassador Hotel, L.A., beginning Friday (18). Heineman and administration v.p. Max E. Youngstein will preside and other homeoffice execs partieipating will include sales manager Bernie Kranze and ad-pub director Franeis Winikus.

Second such confab is set for Chicago, beginning April 1. Meets are to be attended by all division, district and braneh managers.

New Jersey Sounds Sour B.O. Note

Many New Jersey theatreowners find boxoffiee receipts declining despite the recent tax alleviation, according to Wilbur Snaper, prexy of Allied Theatre Owners of New Jersey. Reporting on the unit's legislative meeting in Trenton, N.J., Snaper deelared yesterday (Tues.) that exhibs in the territory receeived "no benefits at all from the tax relief" because of the high eost of film.

The current situation, he said, is creating "more fringe theatres with the attendance off and film prices up." The only way the attendance ean be helped, Snaper said, would be "if distributors made it possible for every theatre to play every worthwhile picture." He said the actual playoff of many top grossing pictures is a lot less than believed, with whole territories, in some instanees, passing up eertain pictures because of the high rental demand.

The unit, aeeording to Snaper, voted a "substantial amount" to help the exhibitors' fight against toll-tv. The sum was advanced from the group's treasury which will be reimbursed by contributions from members. Org also urged Snaper, as a member of National Allied's Emergency Defense Committee, to press for aetion on the industry roundtable session.

Business palaver was preceded by a luncheon meeting with members of the New Jersey state legislature.

Hopes New German Pix Have What It Takes To Crack U.S. Theatres

Emile Lustig, prominent German film industry figure for a number of years, now also linked with Eliot Hyman's Associated Films of N. Y., claims he's bent on rebuilding the stature of German pictures in the U. S. He adds he has three properties with which he hopes to crash the Yank market.

Lustig, exee producer for Fama Films, Hamburg, has a different approaeh mapped for eaeh of the three. First, already completed, is "Canaris," which foeuses on Nazi ehief of counter-intelligence who twice tried to have Adolph Hitler assassinated. (It was reviewed in VARIETY March 1, 1955.) Lustig stated in N. Y. this week that the pie was brought in at a negative cost of $320,000 d this was earned back in only the first two months of its distribution in the German market. He says he's had talks with three American companies about taking the Western Hemisphere rights.

Second film, also completed, "Die Mueeke" (Mademoiselle Mosquito), which was scripted and directed by Walter Reisch. It's a spy yarn. Rather than placing this in U. S. release, Lustig is aiming to have the property remade in English.

Third has the king-sized title, "The Song of the Love and Death of Cavalry Officer Christopher Rilke." Reisch is now in Hollywood working on the script and, reports Lustig, a co-produetion deal is in process of negotiation. If his plans work out, it will be done in English and German versions and exteriors would be shot this upcoming summer in Austria.

Goldenson: Give More Heed To Kids

Suceess which Ameriean Broadcasting has had in slanting its programming for the younger element might well be duplicated in the film business. At any rate, Leonard H. Goldenson, president of AB-Paramount Theatres, appears convinced that the theatre attendance problems being experienced in the pie industry would be substantially corrected with a pitch to woo the moppet and "dating" trade.

Goldenson, addressing 70 film and theatre execs at a meeting sponsored by the Council of Motion Picture Organizations last week, noted three angles in the problem of bringing attendance figures up where they should be. He outlined them this way: (1), prices, which might be too steep for the 15-to-30 age group, and certainly too abruptly increased when the customer advances from kiddie to adult ticket (at age 12, but many get away with it until they're 15); (2), the need for pictures whose appeal is aimed at this most important age bracket; (3), the necessity of having new stars "with whom the young people in the audience ean grow up."

Goldenson told the COMPO conclave, which took place in N. Y. last Thursday (10), that various studios have assured him they'd make shorts of one and two reels for the sole purpose of introducing newcomers to pix. He added that when these come through the exhibitors should feel called upon to play and heavily promote the briefies.

The AB-PT chief exec, when asked by COMPO special counsel Robert W. Coyne, said he would serve on a committee to further explore the possibilities of making theatres more attractive to youngsters.

Plan for an audience best-pix, best-players poll was revived at the COMPO session and was given an unanimous okay. This calls for ballotting from Thanksgiving Day to Dec. 7 with the public, at theatre lobby booths, to vote on entries for the year up to the previous Oct. 31. "Responsible" members of each community would supervise the operation, as it's proposed, and exhibitors would wire in the vote results to a N. Y. accounting firm. Winners would be announced at a dinner, perhaps to be televised, for a charity such as the Will Rogers Memorial Hospital.

Followup work on this is to be assigned an as-yet unnamed committee co-chairmanned by one rep each from exhibition and distribution.

Also endorsed was the further work of a market research and development committee which is seeking out new devices to draw the public to theatres plus a "filmorama" project suggested by Elmer Rhoden, president of National Theatres. As outlined in broad terms by Coyne, this provides for a touring industry exhibit which shows how films are produced.

The COMPO governing board, comprising Sam Pinanski, Wilbur Snaper and Al Lichtman, is to meet shortly, presumably the matter of financing for the audience-building plans authorized at the Thursday confab.

L.A. 1st-Runs Mild But Drive-Ins Lively; 'Toko-ri' Sharp $65,000 In 7 Spots, 'Lightfoot' Big 59G in 10

Los Angeles, March 15.

Failure of any new pix to open strongly is keeping conventional theatre biz on medium side currently. But some day-dating ozoners are doing a nice boxoffice pick-up with action product and better weather.

"Untamed" is only fair $16,000 opening week at the Chinese while a slow $16,500 is seen for "Jupiter's Darling" in two theatres. Fair $17,000 or near is shaping for "Bridges at Toko-ri," for two hardtops, but sharp $48,000 looms for one nabe and four drive-ins.

Combo of "Capt. Lightfoot" and "Smoke Signal" shapes moderate $22,000 in three firstruns plus nearly $37,000 at one nabe house, six ozoners.

Generally medium trend is reflected in holdover and extended-run takes although several arty bills are holding steady.

Estimates for This Week

Chinese (FWC) (1,905; $1-$1.75) —"Untamed" (20th). Fair $16,000. Last week, "Racers" (20th) (3d wk), $10,000.

Downtown Paramount, Egyptian (ABPT-UATC) (3,200; 1,536; $1-$1.50)—"Battle Cry" (WB) (6th-final wk). Neat $19,000. Last week, $21,800.

Fine Arts (FWC) (631; $1-$1.50) —"Hulot's Holiday" (GBD) (7th wk). Sturdy $5,000. Last week, $5,200.

Fox Wilshire (FWC) (2,296; $1-$1.50) — "20,000 Leagues" (BV) (12th wk). Smooth $8,500. Last week, $9,000.

Warner Beverly (SW) (1,612; 90-$1.50)—"Country Girl" (Par) (12th wk). Good $9,000. Last week, $8,600.

Warner Hollywood (SW) (1,364; $1.20-$2.65) —"Cinerama" (Indie) (98th wk). Into current session Sunday (13th) after fancy $23,700 last week.

Vagabond (Rosener) (390; $1.50) —"Gate of Hell" (Indie) (12th wk). Stout $3,500. Last week, same.

'GIRL' BOFFO $35,000, FRISCO; 'UNTAMED' 18G

San Francisco, March 15.

Some new, strong product is helping the overall film gross total here this session, with "Country Girl" setting the pace with a mighty total at Paramount. "Americano" looms fast at United Artists while "Untamed" is fairly good at the Fox. "Hit Deck" is fine in second Warfield round. "Long Gray Line" looms good in fourth St. Francis stanza.

Estimates for This Week

Golden Gate (RKO) (2,859; 80-$1)—"Destry" (U) and "Ricochet Romance" (U). Fair $10,000. Last week, "Underwater" (RKO) and "Atomic Kid" (Rep) (2d wk), $11,000.

Fox (FWC) (4,651; $1.25-$1.50)—"Untamed" (20th). Good $18,000

'Deck' Smooth 13G, Indpls; 'Girl' 9G, 3d

Indianapolis, March 15.

Biz is healthy at first runs here this stanza, with three houses, two of them with holdovers, showing nice figures. "Hit the Deck" at Loew's opened strongly and may get extra time. "Battle Cry" is stout in second week at Indiana. "Country Girl" still is big in third round at Circle.

Estimates for This Week

Circle (Cockrill-Dolle) (2,800; 60-95) — "Country Girl" (Par) (3d wk). Nice $9,000 and over $40,000 for run. Last week, $13,000.

Indiana (C-D) (3,200; 60-95)—"Battle Cry" (WB) (2d wk). Big $12,000 on top of $20,000 opener.

Keith's (C-D) (1,600; 50-85)—"Prince of Players" (20th). Sluggish $3,500. Last week, subsequent-runs.

Lyric (C-D) (1,600; 35-70)—"Tarzan's Hidden Jungle" (RKO) and "Cariboo Trail" (Indie). Nice $5,000 without usual Sunday stage-show. Last week, "Shield For Murder" (UA) and "Fast and Furious" (ARC), $5,500, with All-Star Jamboree onstage replacing second feature Sunday only at $1.25.

'Country' OK $14,000 In Hub; 'Confidential' 16½G, 'Battle' 23G, 'Girl' 15½G

Boston, March 15.

It's quiet along the mainstem this week. Newcomers are not big. "New York Confidential" at the Paramount and Fenway is fairly good. "Far Country" at the Memorial looms okay. Some of the holdovers are beginning to fade. "Battle Cry," now in fourth week at the Met still was big in third round. "Country Girl" in fifth frame at the Astor shapes fine. "Long Gray Line" in fourth week at Orpheum looks neat.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (B&Q) (1,500; 75-$1.25)—"Country Girl" (Par) (5th wk). Fine $15,500 following $17,300 in fourth.

'Line' Sturdy 18G, St. L., 'Holiday' 22G

St. Louis, March 15.

With holdovers predominating the local scene, best take is going to some new entrants. "Long Gray Line" looms solid at the St. Louis while "Bread, Love and Dreams" shapes fine at small-seater Richmond. Elsewhere, it's mainly h.o. Still city's topper is "Cinerama Holiday," with a smash fourth session at Ambassador. "Jupiter's Darling" is rated fine in second Loew's week.

Estimates for This Week

Ambassador (Indie) (1,400; $1.20-$2.40) — "Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) (4th wk). Smash $22,000 after $23,300 for third frame.

Fox (F&M) (5,000; 75)—"Six Bridges to Cross" (U) and "Smoke Signal" (U) opened today (Tues.). Last week, "Battle Cry" (WB) (3d wk), big $14,500.

Loew's (Loew's) (3,172; 60-85)—"Jupiter's Darling" (M-G) and "They Rode West" (Col) (2d wk). Fine $9,000 after $15,000 for preem stanza.

Orpheum (Loew's) (1,400; 60-85) "Black Night" (Col) and "Black Dakotas" (Col) (2d wk). Good $6,000 following $9,500 for opener.

Pageant (St. L. Amus.) (1,000; 82)—"Prince of Players" (20th) (2d wk). Nice $2,500 after $3,000 initial session.

Richmond (St. L. Amus.) (400; 82)—"Bread, Love, Dreams" (IFE. Fine $3,000. Last week, "Beauties of Night" (UA) (2d wk), $2,500.

S. Louis (St. L. Amus.) (4,000; 90)—"Long Gray Line" (Col). Solid $18,000 or near. Last week, "The Racers" (20th) (2d wk), $8,500.

Shady Oak (St. L. Amus) (800; 82) — "Ugetsu" Indie). Okay $3,000. Last week, "Hamlet" (U), $2,500.

Mpls. Better; 'Line' Sharp $12,500, 'Circus' Noisy 12G, 'Girl' 6½G, 4th

Minneapolis, March 15.

Better weather is helping biz here to some extent. However, with holdovers continuing to predominate and important arrivals limited to two, "Long Gray Line" and "3-Ring Circus," traffic at wickets still falls short of boom proportions. Both "Gray Line" and "Circus" are winning approval. It's 48th week for "Cinerama" while "Battle Cry" has a smash fifth stanza to its credit. "Country Girl" and "Bridges at Toko-ri," in fourth and third cantos, respectively, still are fancy.

Estimates for This Week

Century (S-W) (1,140; $1.75-$2.65) —"Cinerama" (Indie) (48th wk). Only a month to go before a full year is racked up here. Fat $15,000. Last week, $15,500.

Gopher (Berger) (1,000; 65-85)—"Many Rivers to Cross" (M-G) (2d wk). Moderate $3,500. Last week, $5,000.

Lyric (Par) (1,000; 85-$1)—"Battle Cry" (WB) (5th wk). Hefty $6,000, remarkable for this stage of run. Last week, $7,000.

Radio City (Par) (4,100; 85-$1)—"3 Ring Circus" (Par). Robust $12,000. Last week, "Jupiter's Darling" (M-G), $8,500.

RKO-Orpheum (RKO) (2,800; 85-$1)—"Long Gray Line" (Col). Praise for this one and it is responding very nicely. Sharp $12,500. Last week, "Capt. Lightfoot" (U), $6,500.

RKO-Pan (RKO) (1,600; 65-85)—"The Outcast" (Rep) and "Hell's Outpost" (Rep). Okay $4,500. Last week, "Far Country" (U) (2d wk), $5,000.

State (Par) (2,300; 85-$1)—"Bridges at Toko-ri" (Par) (3d wk). Virile $7,000. Last week, $11,000.

World (Mann) (400; 65-$1.20)—"Country Girl" (Par (4th wk). Little diminishment of b.o. pull as run continues. Powerful $6,500. Last week, $7,000.

'Untamed' Hefty $15,000 Tops K. C.

Kansas City, March 15.

Town is short on newcomers as holdovers prevail in most situations. "Untamed" in four Fox Midwest theatres looks strong as best new bill, while "Battle Taxi" is slow at the Missouri. "Battle Cry" goes a fifth week at the Paramount to put it among the all-time greats at that house. "Long Gray Line" in second week at Midland holding a lively pace. Weather turned unusually warm for this season of year, and no help at boxoffice.

Estimates for This Week

Glen (Dickinson) (750; 85-$1)—"One Summer Happiness" (Indie) (4th wk). Cheerful $1,800. Holds. Last week, $2,000.

Kimo (Dickinson) (504; 85-$1)—"Little Kidnappers" (UA) (4th wk). Oke $1,400. Last week, $1,500.

Midland (Loew's) (3,500; 70-90)—"Long Gray Line" (Col) (2d wk). Lively $8,000, and may go a third. Last week, $12,000.

Missouri (RKO) (2,650; 50-80)—"Battle Taxi" (UA) and "Golden Mistress" (UA). Slow $6,000. Last week, "Underwater!" (RKO) and "Utopi " (Indie) (2d wk), $8,000 in 8 days.

Orpheum (Fox Midwest) (1,913; 75-$1)—Dark in current week. Last week, "Racers" (20th) (2d wk), mild $5,000.

Paramount (United Par) (1,900; 75-$1)—"Battle Cry" (WB) (5th wk). This week puts it among biggest grossers at this house. $7,000, pleasant. Last week, $9,000.

Roxy (Durwood) (879; 70-90) — "Many Rivers To Cross" (M-G) (3d wk). Satisfactory $4,000. Last week, $4,500.

Tower, Uptown, Fairway, Granada (Fox Midwest) (2,100; 2,043; 700; 1,217; 65-85) — "Untamed" (20th) plus "Murder Is My Beat" (AA) at Tower and Granada. Hefty $15,000. Last week, "White Feather" (U) and "Bob Mathias Story" (AA), $13,000.

Vogue (Golden) (550; 75-$1) — "Captain's Paradise" (U) and "Breaking Sound Barrier" (U) (reissues). Fairish $1,200. Last week, "Faust and Devil" (Col), $1,400.

'Feather' Oke at $11,000, L'ville; 'Prison' Fair 9G, 'Girl' Rousing 12G, 2d

Louisville, March 15.

With the Ohio River dropping rapidly from its crest, and threat of more flooding in this area having passed patrons can again find their way to film houses. During the period of swollen streams hereabouts, thousands took the family groups in cars to gander the flooded sections, particularly weekends. "White Feather" at the Rialto is okay but "Women's Prison" and "10 Wanted Men" at the State shapes only fair. Second week of "Country Girl" at the Kentucky is smash. "Battle Cry" in fifth stanza at the Mary Ann is looking for big take.

Estimates for This Week

Kentucky (Switow) (1,000; 75-$1) —"Country Girl" (Par) (2d wk). Continuing sock pace at $12,000. First week was $14,000.

Mary Anderson (People's) (1,000; 75-$1)—"Battle Cry" (WB) (5th wk). Big $6,000. Last week, $7,000.

Rialto (Fourth Avenue) (3,000; 50-75)—"White Feather" (20th). Looks okay $11,000. Last week, "6 Bridges To Cross" (U) and "Sleeping Tiger" (Indie), same.

State (United Artists) (3,000; 50-75)—"Women's Prison" (Col) and "10 Wanted Men" (Col). Fair $9,000. Last week, "Long Gray Line" (Col), $15,000.

Cincinnati, March 15.

"Carmen Jones," this week's only new bill, shapes hotsy at the Palace. Wholesome holdovers, with "Country Girl" easily retaining the town lead, are supporting an above-par overall count. "Battle Cry" and "Bridges at Toko-ri," both in fourth frames, are still at the Grand and Keith's. "Cinerama" is upsurging in its 39th week.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (3,100; 75-$1.25)—"Country Girl" (Par) (2d wk). Holding to whopping $16,000 after $23,000 bow.

Capitol (Ohio Cinema Corp.) (1,376; $1.20-$2.65) — "Cinerama" (Indie). (39th wk). Upping to $19,000, plenty hefty, with lift from an excursion group from Louisville, and extra juve matinee. Last week, $17,700.

Grand (RKO) (1,400; 75-$1.25)—"Battle Cry" (WB) (m.o.) (2d wk). Solid $9,000 after $10,500 in third frontline stanza.

Keith's (Shor) (1,500; 75-$1.25)—"Bridges at Toko-ri" (Par) (4th wk). Finaling at fast $6,000 clip or better following $7,200 in third.

Palace (RKO) (2,600; 75-90) — "Carmen Jones" (20th). Hotsy $12,000. Last week, "New York Confidential" (WB), $9,000 at 55-84c scale.

'Eden' Whopping $35,000, Det.; 'Horse' Robust 17G, 'House' Happy 19G, 2d

Detroit, March 15.

Biz at downtowners is a bit spotty this stanza. "East of Eden" at the Michigan and "Cinerama Holiday" at the Music Hall both look wow, latter in 5th week. "Chief Crazy Horse" shapes sturdy at Broadway-Capitol. "Capt. Lightfoot" is light at the Palms. "Battle Cry" is big in fourth week at the Madison. "Big House U.S.A." looms nice in second Fox round.

Estimates for This Week

Fox (Fox-Detroit) (5,000; $1-$1.25)—"Big House U.S.A." (UA) and "They Were So Young" (Lip) (2d wk) Nice $19,000. Last week, good $26,000.

Michigan (United Detroit) (4,000; $1-$1.25)—"East of Eden" (WB). Terrific $35,000. Last week, "Far Country" (U) and "West of Zanzibar" (U), $15,000.

Palms (UD) (2,961; 80-$1)—"Capt. Lightfoot" (U) and "Land of Fury" (U). Mild $10,000. Last week, "Underwater!" (RKO) and "Tarzan's Hidden Jungle" (RKO) (2d wk), $12,000.

Madison (UD) (1,900; 95-$1.25)—"Battle Cry" (WB) (4th wk). Big $12,000. Last week, $16,000.

Broadway-Capitol (UD) (3,500; 80-$1)—"Chief Crazy Horse" (U) and "Explosive Kid" (AA). Fancy $17,000. Last week, "Women's Prison" (Col) and "Pirates of Tripoli" (Lip), $12,000.

United Artists (UA) (1,938; $1-$1.25)—"Hit Deck" (M-G) (2d wk). Good $10,000. Last week, $14,500.

Adams (Balaban) (1,700; 95-$1.25) —"Long Gray Line" (Col) (2d wk). Fine $11,000. Last week, $17,000.

Music Hall (Cinerama Productions) (1,194; $1.40-$2.65)—"Cinerama Holiday" (5th wk). Mighty $34,000. Last week, $33,000.

'Bridges' Brisk $7,000, Omaha; 'Country' 11G

Omaha, March 15.

Three new openers are fairly formidable this week while "Battle Cry" still is robust in its third session at the Brandeis. First-run biz generally is okay currently. "Six Bridges to Cross" is brisk at the Omaha while "Far Country" is rated nifty at the Orpheum. "West of Zanzibar" is medium at the State.

Estimates for This Week

Brandeis (RKO) (1,100; 75-$1)—"Battle Cry" (WB) (3d wk). Hefty $6,500. Last week, $11,500.

Omaha (Tristates) (2,000; 65-85) —"6 Bridges To Cross" (U) and "Other Woman" (20th). Brisk $7,000. Last week, "White Feather" (20th) and "Black 13" (20th), $8,000 in 9 days.

Orpheum (Tristates) (2,890; 70-90)—"Far Country" (U). Nifty $11,000. Last week, "Jupiter's Darling" (M-G), $8,000.

State (Goldberg) (875; 50-75)—"West of Zanzibar" (U) and "Trouble in Store" (Rep). Modest $4,500. Last week, "Bad Day Black Rock" (M-G) and "Young Wives' Tale" (Indie) (2d wk), $3,000.

Chi Slows Up; 'Confidential'-Damone Solid $50,000, 'Darling' Fancy 21G, 'Americano' 11G, Stewart Big 22G, 3d

Chicago, March 15.

Biz shapes dullish here this round with too many holdovers and first spring weather slowing pace. "New York Confidential" at the Chicago, with Vic Damone topping vaude, looms very nice $50,000 in opener.

"Jupiter's Darling" looks neat $21,000 in first session at McVickers, while "The Americano" and "Tarzan's Hidden Jungle" combo at Grand should net a good $11,000 on preem week. "Ten Wanted Men" and "Unchained" at the Roosevelt shapes nice $18,000 in first stanza.

"Long Gray Line" is holding fairly well at Oriental in second week. "Gate of Hell" stays strong at the Loop in the same frame.

"Battle Cry" is still terrific in third week at State-Lake. "Far Country" at Woods is holding nicely in same session. At United Artists, "Country Girl" is powerful in fourth stanza. "Cinerama" at Palace stays staunch in 85th week.

Estimates for This Week

Carnegie (Telem't) (480; 95)—"Belles St. Trinian's" (Indie) (2d wk). Nifty $3,700. Last week, $4,600.

Chicago (B&K) (3,900; 98-$1.50)—"N.Y. Confidential" (WB) with Vic Damone heading stage bill. Fine $50,000. Last week, "Many Rivers to Cross" (M-G) (2d wk) with Joyce Bryant topping vaude, $32,000.

Grand (Nomikos) (1,200; 98-$1)—"Americano" (RKO) and "Tarzan's Hidden Jungle" (RKO). Nice $11,000. Last week "Abbott-Costello Meet Keystone Kops" (U) and "Ricochet Romance" (U) (2d wk), $7,500.

Loop (Telem't) (606; 90-$1.25)—"Gate of Hell" (Indie) (2d wk). Swell $11,000. Last week, $14,500.

McVickers (JL&S) (2,200; 65-$1.25)—"Jupiter's Darling" (M-G). Good $21,000. Last week, "Capt. Lightfoot" (U) (3d wk), $15,000.

Oriental (Indie) (3,400; 98-$1.25)—"Long Gray Line" (Col) (2d wk). Nice $22,000. Last week, $33,000.

Palace (Eitel) (1,484; $1.25-$3.40)—"Cinerama" (Indie) (85th wk). Sturdy $25,000. Last week, $26,500.

Roosevelt (B&K) (1,400; 65-98)—"10 Wanted Men" (Col) and "Unchained" (WB). Tall $18,000. Last week, "Black Tuesday" (UA) and "Lone Gun" (UA) (2d wk), $14,500.

State-Lake (B&K) (2,400; 65-98)—"Battle Cry" (WB) (3d wk). Loud $27,000. Last week, $38,000.

Surf (H&E Balaban) (685; 95)—"Little Kidnappers" (Indie) (4th wk), Lofty $4,700. Last week, $5,500.

United Artists (B&K) (1,700; 98-$1.25)—"Country Girl" (Par) (4th wk). Hotsy $26,000. Last week, $28,000.

Woods (Essaness) (1,206; 98-$1.25)—"Far Country" (U) (3d wk). Staunch $22,000 for Stewart starrer. Last week, $25,000.

World (Indie) (697; 98)—"Illicit Interlude" (Indie) (2d wk). Lusty $4,500. Last week, $5,000.

'GIRL' TERRIF $21,000, BALTO; 'UNTAMED' 12G

Baltimore, March 15.

Pleasant weather plus some strong product is producing some nice grosses here this round. "Country Girl" is way out front at the Hipp with a great session. "Many Rivers To Cross" is surprisingly nice at the Century. "Bridges At Toko-ri" is holding solidly in second week at Keith's. "Untamed" looks smash at the New. Second session of "Long Gray Line" is tall at the Town.

Estimates for This Week

Century (Loew's-UA) (3,000; 25-65-95)—"Many Rivers To Cross" (M-G). Sturdy $11,000. Last week, "Bad Day Black Rock" (M-G), $9,500.

Cinema (Schwaber) (466; 50-$1)—"Big Day" (Indie). Fairish $3,000. Last week, "Heart Of Matter" (Indie) (2d wk), $2,500.

Film Centre (Rappaport) (960; 50-$1)—"Romeo And Juliet" (UA). Fine $5,000. Last week, "Tonight's Night" (AA) (5th wk), $2,200.

Hippodrome (Rappaport) (2,100; 50-$1) — "Country Girl" (Par). Smash $21,000 or close. Last week, "Sign Of Pagan" (U) (3d wk), $5,500.

Keith's (Fruchtman) (2,400; 25-$1)—"Bridges At Toko-ri" (Par)

Estimates Are Net

Film gross estimates as reported herewith from the various key cities, are net; i.e., without usual tax. Distributors share on net take, when playing percentage, hence the estimated figures are net income.

The parenthetic admission prices, however, as indicated, include the U. S. amusement tax.

'Gray Line' Bright $22,000 in Prov.

Providence, March 15.

"Long Gray Line" is smash at Loew's State this week. Only other newcomer "Far Country" at Albee where nice. Fourth wk of Majestic's "Battle Cry" is big. Strand's "Country Girl" is good in third round.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (2,200; 50-75) — "Far Country" (U) and "Ricochet Romance" (U). Fast $9,000. Last week, "Leagues Under Sea" (BV) (3rd wk), $8,800.

Majestic (Fay) (2,200; 70-$1) — "Battle Cry" (WB) (4th wk). Still big at $11,000. Last week, $13,500.

State (Loew's) (3,200; 70-95) — "Long Gray Line" (Col). Sock $22,000 or near. Last week, "Bad Day Black Rock" (M-G) and "Southwest Passage" (UA), $13,000.

Strand (Silverman) (2,200; 70-$1) — "Country Girl" (Par) and "Assignment Children" (Par) (3d wk). Good $7,000. Second week, $12,500.

'Line' Just Okay $13,000, Pitt; 'Camille' Wow 5G, 'Battle' Great 20G, 3d

Pittsburgh, March 15.

Holdover of "Battle Cry" in third week at Stanley, and reissue of "Camille" at little Guild Theatre, are the big guns here this session. Elsewhere, the disappointments are numerous. Both "Long Gray Line" at Harris and "Bad Day at Black Rock" at Penn are far below hopes and "Long John Silver" is doing little at the Fulton. "Tonight's the Night" picking Squirrel Hill up a bit and "Cinerama Holiday" is staying strong at Warner.

Estimates for This Week

Fulton (Shea) (1,700; 65-$1)—"Long John Silver" (DCA). Won't hit $5,500 mark. Holding three extra days because house wants to bring in "Man Without a Star" (U) Saturday (19) when Kirk Douglas comes here to make p.a. Last week, "White Feather" (20th) (2d wk-5 days), $5,000.

Guild (Green) (500; 65-$1)—"Camille" (M-G) (reissue). Biggest thing at this house since it switched to an arty policy three months ago. Headed for $5,000, terrific for an oldie. Last week, "Ugetsu" (Indie) (2d wk), $1,700.

Harris (Harris) (2,165; 65-$1)—"Long Gray Line" (Col). Okay $13,000, but rated disappointing. Holds over. Last week, "On Waterfront" (Col) and "Caine Mutiny" (Col) (reissue), $8,000.

Penn (UA) (3,300; 65-$1)—"Bad Day Black Rock" (M-G). Fine notices but simply aren't buying this Spencer Tracy starrer. NSG $13,000 or near for such a warmly-received pic. Last week, "Jupiter's Darling" (M-G), $12,000.

Squirrel Hill (SW) (900; 65-$1)—"Tonight's the Night" (AA). Ahead of recent grosses at nabe arty house, and may get another stanza. Looks like $3,500. Last week, "Bread, Love, Dreams" (IFE), $2,000.

Stanley (SW) (3,800; 75-$1.25)—"Battle Cry" (WB) (3d wk). Still blockbusting biz around $20,000, great for this stage of a run. Last week, $26,000.

Warner (SW) (1,365; $1.60-$2.40)—"Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) (4th wk). Off a bit on bad weather but still solid at $18,500. Last week, $19,000.

'Toko-ri' Wham $30,000, Mont'l; 'Carmen' Hot 31G

Montreal, March 15.

New entries in most houses are bringing biz back to life after a session of holdovers. "Carmen Jones" at the Palace looks hottest of newcomers. Paramount's "Bridges at Toko-ri" at Loew's shapes equally sock. "Modern Times" is average in second at Orpheum. "Cinerama" looks big at Imperial in 11th week.

Estimates for This Week

Palace (C.T.) (2,625; 60-$1)—"Carmen Jones" (20th). Sock $31,000. Last week, "20,000 Leagues" (BV) (3d wk) fair $16,000.

Capitol (C.T.) (2,421; 45-75)—"Violent Men" (Col). Fair $16,000. Last week, "Far Country" (UI) okay $15,000.

Princess (C.T.) (2,131; 40-65)—"Keystone Kops" (U). Fair $9,000. Last week, "Black Knight" (Col) poor $7,000.

Loew's (C.T.) (2,847; 60-$1)—"Bridges Toko-ri" (Par). Wow $30,000. Last week, "Deep in Heart" (M-G) (3d wk) good $17,000.

Orpheum (C.T.) (1,048; 40-65)—"Modern Times" (UA) (reissues) (2d wk). Average $7,000 following a solid second of $11,000.

Imperial (Cinerama Prod) (1,063; $1.20-$2.40) "This Is Cinerama" (Indie) (11th wk). Big $15,000. Last week, same.

'Untamed' Hot 28G, Philly; 'Deck' 20G

Philadelphia, March 15.

Sunny skies plus springlike weather are credited with brightening firstruns over the weekend. Some fresh fare is helping. "Untamed" got a runaway start and will be sturdy at the Fox. "Capt. Lightfoot" is comparatively almost as good at the smaller Goldman. "Hit the Deck" is rated smash at the Viking. "Davy Crockett" on reissue clicked with the kids. Of the holdovers, "Battle Cry" "Country Girl" and "Cinerama Holiday" are holding their great paces.

Estimates for This Week

Arcadia (S&S) (625; 99-$1.35)—"Jupiter's Darling" (M-G) (3d wk). Fair $8,000. Last week, $9,700.

Boyd (SW) (1,430; $1.25-$2.60)—"Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) (4th wk). Sock $28,000. Last week, $29,000.

Fox (20th) (2,250; 90-$1.40) — "Untamed" (20th). Fast $28,000 or near. Last week, "White Feather" (20th) (2d wk), $15,000.

Goldman (Goldman) (1,200; 65-$1.30)—"Capt. Lightfoot" (U). Fair $12,000. Last week, "Many Rivers to Cross" (M-G). $15,000.

Mastbaum (SW) (4,370; 75-$1.30)—"Vera Cruz" (UA) (5th wk). So-so $11,000. Last week, $12,000.

Midtown (Goldman) (1,200; 65-$1.30)—"Country Girl" (Par) (6th wk). Potent $17,000. Last week, $20,000.

Randolph (Goldman) (2,500; 75-$1.40)—"Battle Cry" (WB) (3d wk). Loud $20,000. Last week, $26,000.

Stanley (SW) (2,900; 74-$1.40)—"Long Gray Line" (Col) (3d wk). Off to mild $13,000. Last week, $18,000.

Stanton (SW) (1,473; 50-99) — "Davy Crockett" (EPI) (reissue). Fine $10,000. Last week, "Unchained" (WB) and "They Were So Young" (Lip) $6,500.

Trans-Lux (T-L) (500; 99-$1.50)—"Animal Farm" (Indie). Okay $6,000. Last week, "Camille" (M-G) (reissue) (5th wk), $1,800 in 3 days.

Viking (Sley) (1,000; 74-$1.50)—"Hit Deck" (M-G). Socko $20,000. Last week, "Tonight's the Night" (AA) (3d wk), $7,800.

Trans-Lux World (T-L) (604; 99-$1.50)—"Green Fire" (M-G) (5th wk). Dim $3,000. Last week, $3,200.

'Rivers' Passable 10G, Denver; 'Girl' Fat 17G

Denver, March 15.

"Country Girl" still is leading the city currently, with a smash total at the Denham, and is holding a third. "Doctor in House" is making the best showing of any newcomer on comparative basis, with a smash session at the tiny Vogue. It stays on. "Many Rivers to Cross" is rated okay at Orpheum. Many ozoners opening big over weekend is causing a drop at local firstruns.

Estimates for This Week

Centre (Fox) (1,247; 60-$1)—"Battle Cry" (WB) (5th wk). Good $11,000. Last week, $12,000.

Denham (Cockrill) (1,750; 60-$1)—"Country Girl" (Par) (2d wk). Fancy $17,000. Stays on. Last week, $22,500.

Denver (Fox) (2,525; 60-$1)—"Long Gray Line" (Col) (2d wk).

New Pix Cheer B'way; 'Eden' Terrif 48G, 'Untamed' Big 52G, 'House' Hep $23,000, 'Deck'-Stageshow 110G, 2d

Although hurt Sunday (13) by springlike weather, which drew thousands outdoors and away from the film theatres, five new bills are providing a much-needed hypo to Broadway firstrun houses this session. Business Saturday was the nearest thing to normalcy the deluxers had experienced in nearly two weeks.

"East of Eden" is the ace newcomer, soaring towards a mighty $48,000 at the Astor in initial stanza ending today (Wed.). Excellent crix appraisal and strong word-of-mouth are helping even though the picture got away to a rousing start last Thursday. "Big House, U.S.A." paired with vaudeville is heading for a fancy $23,000 at the Palace.

"Untamed" is giving the Roxy its best opening round in many weeks, with a big $52,000 probable in first week ending tomorrow (Thurs.). Reissue combo of "Gilda" and "Deeds Goes To Town" is doing fairly well at the Globe, with about $7,000 in sight opening frame. "Timberjack" is not getting far with a slight $9,000 or close for first round at the State. Pic gets three extra days to enable the house to open "Blackboard Jungle" Saturday (19).

Biggest coin total is going to the Music Hall, where the second week of "Hit the Deck" and stageshow winds up today (Wed.). A fair $110,000 is probable, with a third week set. This means the Hall will bring in its Easter stageshow and "Glass Slipper" on March 24. "Battle Cry" still is big with $47,000 in sixth week at Paramount.

"Cinerama Holiday" continues its astonishing pace, with a terrific $53,700 for fifth session at the Warner. It's now in the sixth week. "N. Y. Confidential" looks to get a nice $12,000 in the fourth round at the Victoria, with "Man Without a Star" replacing it March 23.

"Country Girl" is holding with a fancy $25,000 in current (13th) stanza at the Criterion. "Long Gray Line" is off to a fine $24,000 or close in fifth week ending today (Wed.) at the Capitol.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (City Inv.) (1,300; 75-$1.75)—"East of Eden" (WB). Soaring to giant $48,000 in first week ending today (Wed.). Holds, natch! In ahead, "Leagues Under Sea" (BV) (11th wk-6 days), $13,000 but winding great extended-run engagement here.

Little Carnegie (L. Carnegie) (550; $1.25-$2.20) — "Aida" (IFE) (18th wk). Present stanza finishing up today (Wed.) looks to reach fair $4,100 after $4,000 for 17th week. Ends run on March 20.

Baronet (Reade) (430; 90-$1.55)—"Game of Love" (Indie) (14th wk). The 13th round ended yesterday (Tues.) was okay $3,800 or close after $4,300 for 12th week. "Trouble in Glen" (Rep) comes in April 1.

Capitol (Loew's) (4,820; 85-$2.20) — "Long Gray Line" (Col) (5th wk). Likely will hit sturdy $24,000 or near in week ending today (Wed.) after $32,000, over hopes, in fourth week. Stays on. "Purple Plain" (UA) opens here next but no date set so far.

Criterion (Moss) (1,700; 75-$2.20)—"Country Girl" (Par) (13th wk). This stanza winding today (Wed.) probably will hit sock $25,000 after $27,000 in 12th week. Stays on.

Fine Arts (Davis) (468; 90-$1.80)—"Holiday For Henrietta" (Arde) (8th wk). The seventh week ended Sunday (13) was big $6,400 after $6,500 in sixth round. Stays until "To Paris With Love" (Indie) opens March 28.

Globe (Brandt) (1,500; 70-$1.50)—"Gilda" (Col) and "Deeds Goes To Town" (Col). First session ending tomorrow (Thurs.) is heading for good $7,000 or less. In ahead, "Far Country" (U) (4th wk-6 days), $6,000 but an okay run.

Guild (Guild) 450; $1-$1.75) — —"Gate of Hell" (Indie)) (14th wk). The 13th frame finished Monday (14) was smash $12,000 after $11,500 for 12th week.

Mayfair (Brandt) (1,736; 79-$1.80)—"Underwater!" (RKO) (6th wk). Fifth week ended yesterday (Tues.) was fair $10,000 after $11,000 for fourth.

Normandie (Trans-Lux) (592; $1.15-$1.65) — "Camilie" (M-G) (reissue) (7th wk). Sixth stanza ended Monday (14) held with big $8,000 after $9,000 in sixth week.

Palace (RKO) (1,700; 50-$1.60)—"Big House, U.S.A." (WB) (7th wk). Session winding tomorrow (Thurs.) is heading for lofty $23,000. In ahead, "Innocents in Paris" (Indie) and vaude, $19,000.

Paramount (ABC-Par) (3,664; 85-$1.75)—"Battle Cry" (WB) (7th wk). Sixth stanza ended last night (Tues.) held with loud $47,000, after $51,000 for fifth week. Continues on. "Strategic Air Command" (Par) comes in next on huge VistaVision screen, now being installed at this house.

Paris (Pathe Cinema) (568; 90-$1.80)—"Wages of Fear" (Indie) (5th wk). Fourth round ended last night (Tues.) was good $11,300 after $11,000 for third.

Radio City Music Hall (Rockefellers) (6,200; 95-$2.75)—"Hit the Deck" (M-G) and stageshow (2d wk). Holding with nice $110,000 about same pace as opening week which was $125,000. Holds a third session. "Glass Slipper" (M-G) and Easter stageshow due in next, on March 24.

Rivoli (UAT) (2,092; 85-$2)—"Bad Day at Black Rock" (M-G) (6th-final wk). Wound up run here Monday (14) with light $8,000, and house is now closed to make changes necessary for Todd-AO's first film. The fifth week was $8,500.

Roxy (Nat'l. Th.) (5,717; 65-$2.40)—"Untamed" (20th). Initial session ending tomorrow (Thurs.) looks to land big $52,000. Holds. In ahead, "Three For Show" (Col) (2d wk-8 days), $24,000.

State (Loew's) (3,450; 78-$1.75)—"Timberjack" (Rep) (2d wk). First round ended last night (Tues.) was slow $9,000 or near. Will stay only three more days to open "Blackboard Jungle" (M-G) Saturday (19). In ahead, "Sign of Pagan" (U) (3d wk-11 days), $18,000.

Sutton (R&B) (561; $1-$1.80) — "Romeo and Juliet" (UA). (13th wk). The 12th stanza ended yesterday (Tues.) was stout $5,700 after $6,100 in 11th week. "Marty" (UA) announced as opening April 11.

Trans-Lux 52nd St. (T-L) (540; $1-$1.50) — "Doctor in House" (Rep) (4th wk). This stanza finishing up today (Wed.) looks to hold with great $11,500 after $13,000 for third. Stays on indef at this gait.

Victoria (City Inv.) (1,060; 50-$1.75)—"N. Y. Confidential" (WB) (4th wk). Current session ending tomorrow (Thurs.) likely will land nice $12,000 after $16,000, over expectancy, in third week. Stays until "Man Without a Star" (U) opens March 23.

Warner (Cinerama Prod.) 1,600; $1.20-$3.30)—"Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) (6th wk). Fifth week completed Saturday (12) held with might $53,700. Fourth week was $56,300. Current week, taking in St. Patrick's Day (17), will include an extra show.

'Line' Leading Cleve. at $23,000; 'Untamed' Hotsy 22G, 'Girl' Hep 9G, 5th

Cleveland, March 15.

Now they are blaming steady rainstorms for slight dip in biz here although "Long Gray Line" is marching briskly at the Allen. Against it, "Untamed" looks solid at Hipp, making a Tyrone Power battle for laurels in two major houses here. "New York Confidential" shapes up just routine at the Palace. Second lap of "Hit Deck" at State stacks up stoutly while Stillman's "Country Girl" on fifth round packs big wallop.

Estimates for This Week

Allen (S-W) (3,000; 70-$1) — "Long Gray Line" (Col). Smart $23,000. Last week, "Battle Cry" (WB) (4th wk), $16,500.

Hipp (Telem't) (3,700; 70-$1) — "Untamed" (20th). Solid $22,000. Last week, "Smoke Signal" (U) and "Jesse James" Women" (UA), $9,500.

State (Loew's) (3,500; 60-$1) — "Hit the Deck" (M-G) (2d wk). Fair $9,000. Last week, $13,000.

Stillman (Loew's) (2,700; 60-90) —"Country Girl" (Par) (5th wk). Big $9,000 following $11,000 last lap.

THE GREATEST MERCHAND
HISTORY IS PRE-SELLING

Hollywood
By HEDDA HOPPER

Hollywood, Feb. 27—Remember the good old days when pictures used to touch the heart as well as the head, and we could all have an old-fashioned cry? We used to call those pictures three-handkerchief films. I saw one the other day that I call a six-handkerchief picture—"A Man Called Peter," which will reach your theatres around Easter time.

It's the story of a remarkable man, Dr. Peter Marshall, who was chaplain of the U.S. Senate for five years. He was a Scottish emigrant boy who gave his life to God without losing his ambition, his humaneness, and his sense of humor. He was pastor of the New York Ave. Presbyterian Church in Washington, D.C., where Abraham Lincoln used to worship.

Peter Marshall found there a congregation of some rock-ribbed people who wanted no innovations. They didn't care whether the church was half-filled or not. But Dr. Marshall didn't like talking to empty benches, and the place was soon jammed with young people who liked his fresh, healthy approach to religion. He spoke the name of Jesus Christ with authority and reverence, as though talking about a good friend. Marshall died in 1949 at the age of 46.

We've had some fine religious pictures—"Song of Bernadette," "Bells of St. Mary's," "Going My Way,"—all dealing with the Catholic religion. After each film my readers would ask if there wasn't a Protestant story that could be put on the screen. Not that they disliked the others, but the great Protestant majority wanted a picture of their own. "A Man Called Peter" answers that longing.

The country generally didn't know too much about Marshall until after his death. His wife, Catherine, had never written anything but schoolgirl compositions; but she wanted the world to know what a great man her husband was. She wrote his story, which became a best seller and still is.

The first writer that 20th Century-Fox assigned to the screenplay gave up after six months. Then Eleanore Griffin who got an Oscar for writing "Boys' Town," spent a year on the story. She not only retained the religious fervor of

SING CAMPAIGN IN 20th's "A Man Called Peter"

Marshall in her treatment, but she also captured the side of the man who loved to tell funny stories and who was reading "The Case of the Perfumed Mouse" just before his death.

Producer Sam Engel wouldn't make the film until he found the perfect actor to play Peter Marshall, and if he had searched the world he couldn't have found a finer one than Richard Todd. You never think of him as acting; he is Peter. Catherine Marshall is played by Jean Peters and never has Jean given such a performance.

Marshall was a dynamic man who drove his car at top speed; never walked when he could run.

He Spoke from the Heart

He had an almost psychic power which is shown dramatically in a sequence which gives us the sermon he delivered to the midshipmen at Annapolis. This is a scene I don't believe you will ever forget. The U.S. Navy turned over the chapel at Annapolis for the scene, and the event is faithfully recreated on the screen.

When Marshall faced that roomful of youthful faces he couldn't give the sermon he had prepared. He spoke from the heart and told of a simple incident out of his own personal knowledge about death. It was the story of a mother whose young son had a fatal illness.

The boy looked into his mother's face and asked the question: "Mother, what is it like to die? Does it hurt?"

She fled from the room and asked for guidance. On her return she answered: "When you were a tiny boy you used to play so hard all day that when night came you'd be too tired to undress. So you'd tumble into your mother's bed and fall asleep. But in the morning, much to your surprise, you woke up to find yourself in your own bed in your own room.

"You were there because someone loved you and had taken care of you. Your father had come with his big strong arms and carried you away. Death is like that. We wake up one morning to find ourselves in the other room—our own room where we belong because the Lord Jesus loved us."

2d Int'l Dramatic Arts Fete Opens In Paris May 15 With 30 Entries

Paris, March 8.

A. M. Julien has set the dates and lineup of the Second International Festival of Dramatic Arts which will play here May 15-July 15, with the Theatre Sarah Bernhardt the main headquarters for more than 30 foreign entries already set. The many countries sending shows forced the dates to be moved up this year. The fete will be backed by the city of Paris. Last year's festival was a success in quality and diversity of fare.

The festival heads are thinking of giving a prize this year, to heighten aud interest. The variety of fare, in all languages, however, promises to draw all types of tourists. The problem of languages annoyed crix last year and fest reps will try for a better synopsis this year. However, they do not envisage using translation gimmicks which have been inaugurated in some theatres here.

Countries which already have accepted are the U. S., repped by Robinson Jeffer's "Medea," with Judith Anderson, and Thornton Wilder's "Skin of Our Teeth," to be directed by Elia Kazan; East Germany, Berliner Ensemble presenting Klabanud's "Circle of Chalk," with Helen Weigel; West Germany, Theatre Stuttgart production of Schiller's "Marie Stuart"; Holland de Meester doing Crommelynck's "Golden Guts"; Uruguay, "Macbeth" played by Aztecs; Spain, "Le Cid" by Guilhem De Castro; Greece, National Theatre playing a Greek tragedy, and Japan.

Others which have accepted, but have not specified their entries, are Roumania, Poland, Canada, Yugoslavia, Belgium, Ireland (the Abbey Theatre), Sweden (Dramatiks Theatre in a play by Strindberg), Switzerland (Theatre De Zurich in a play by Schiller), Finland, Austria, Egypt (Theatre National Arabe) and Portugal. Talks are still on with such countries as Mexico, Argentina, Italy, Czechoslavakia, USSR and others.

BFPA Agrees With Pix Censors in 'X' Tag Row But Clarifies Prod. Setup

London, March 15.

Although concerned over the fact that a producer embarking on a new project which will qualify for a "X" censor's rating, has difficulty in raising finance, the British Film Producers Assn. agreed with the British Board of Film Censors that the certificate should be maintained. The "X" tag precludes the admission of under 16 years of age.

It was introduced a few years back to encourage the presentation of adult pix and has mainly been applied to Continental imports. Originally the impression gained ground that the rating indicated a strong sex film but actually the certificate more frequently applies to pix which portray brutality.

A deputation from the BFPA, which met with the BBFC last week, was given assurance that the censorship board would always do its best to advise British producers, particularly at the script stage, as to the certificate the film would likely receive. Also that what revisions required to permit an "X" tag to be converted to an "A" (adults and accompanied juveniles), or an "A" certificate to "U" (universal exhibition).

The producer delegation stressed the fact that many cinemas declined to show an "X" film. Since this reduced the earning capacity, it frequently became impossible to raise coin for production. It was also agreed that this restricted exhibition was responsible for a good deal of the misunderstanding which exists as to the reasons for the "X" label. Current controversy was brought to the fore recently when David Lean was compelled to abandon a new British pic after he had been warned by the censor that it would likely get an "X" certificate.

Conductor-composer Igor Markevitch will make his American concert debut as a guest maestro Friday (18), with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

No German Distrib But 'War' Signed for U.S.

Frankfurt, March 8.

"The Last War," Harold Kreutzberg production made for the Institute for Scientific Films in Erlangen, has been signed by the U.S. firm of Kinesis in San Francisco to show at the upcoming Golden Reel Film Festival of the U.S. Film Council.

Despite having been awarded a rating of "especially outstanding" by the German Evaluation Board, this film has been unable to find a distributor to release it in Germany. Although it was made in Germany for German viewers, the film may be screened in the U.S. and never in its own country.

There's Gravy Train In Aussie for Yanks But Mystery How It Works

Sydney, March 8.

There's no doubt about it—there's a gravy train down here for American talent. But a real mystery has developed over just how much the visitors are getting paid. Many wonder what the big name stars are getting out of the country in view of the country's currency restrictions. The visitor can earn any amount in Australia, but the Commonwealth government limits what he can take out of the country to $10,000. If there's anything still due him, he can invest the surplus here. Alternatively, there may be some angle to the business of payment, but it is difficult to see how, and no one's talking here.

Now learned that before an Australian entrepreneur enters into a contract to import a dollar-earning artist he must obtain the consent of Exchange Control to the deal. There's no question of refusing consent, but Australia is watching the outflow of coin in all fields because there is a hefty dollar deficit.

The regulations specify that no Australian may buy, sell, borrow or lend any foreign currency without the Commonwealth Bank's consent. If the Australian owns foreign currency abroad, he may not dispose of it nor deal in it without the bank's consent.

Previously it had been supposed that some deals provided for paying a visitor part of his earnings from funds held in the U. S. Obviously artists of the calibre of Frank Sinatra and Johnnie Ray got more than the $10,000 they are allowed to take home.

Also revealed that the $10,000 take-away limit applies generally to a "single entertainment unit." For example, the four Ink Spots were classed as one entertainment unit, meaning they shared $10,000 take-home money among them.

It is believed that Spike Jones' whole troupe of 20 will be treated as one single unit. And surely Jones knew, from the contract consented to by Exchange Control, that he would be limited to $10,000 to take back to the U. S. It is natural that Aussie show biz should wonder just how U. S. stars are able to get more than the $10,000 maximum back to America.

Rafferty, Robinson in Aussie Prod. Combo

Sydney, March 8.

Aussie producer and actor, Chips Rafferty, and director Lee Robinson, have formed a pix unit called Southern International Ltd., for production and distribution. Rafferty and Robinson paid their backers a nice profit when they turned out "The Phantom Stockman" in central Australia in 23 days at a cost of $22,250.

The pair also lensed "King Of The Coral Sea" on Thursday Island and the Great Barrier Reef with Rafferty starring. "Coral Sea" took 13 weeks to shoot and cost about $56,000.

Southern International plans a story in color about a patrol officer's adventures in New Guinea, to be shot in Port Moresby and along the Sepik River. Rafferty did a Hollywood acting chore in "The Desert Rats" (20th).

Laborite Named News Chief of New Brit. TV

London, March 8.

Aidan Crawley, former junior minister in the Labor government, has been named in charge of the commercial tele news service by the four program contractors. The appointment has received the approval of the Independent Television Authority.

The four contractors are forming a non-profit making company to operate the news service. Crawley has been active in BBC-TV and is best known for his Viewfinder program, a commentary on current affairs.

Would Sponsor Italian Legit

Rome, March 8.

A project which would bring partial or total commercial sponsorship, like radio, to Italian Theatre groups, thus helping to resolve the crisis which the local stage continues to face, is reported being considered by the Confederation of Italian Industries. The plan, conceived by impresario Guglielmo Cortese, is based on the premise that if companies are willing to sponsor radio programs (Italo radio setup, though a fee-paying proposition, includes sponsored improve their position.

The Italian stage would benefit from a more stable financial backbone, and solve a crisis which has recently become more acute.

According to Cortese, with an initial sum of about $25,000 to $30,000, a local industrialist could back a company, drawing from this backing the obvious benefits derived from advertising his company or product name on billboards, programs, press previews, etc. His investment, meanwhile, if well administered, would merely supplement the initial expenditure with a yearly, minor, quota. If the Confederation of Industries expresses a favorable verdict, labeling it feasible, it would be applied immediately, starting with the next 1955-'56 theatre season.

Colleagues of French Producer Helping Turn Out New Sketch Film

Paris, March 8.

Sacha Gordine, who has made many top films here since the war, but who has been in bankruptcy the last couple of years, is to do "Desirs" (Desires). Gordine, on the black list of the Centre National De La Cinematographic, has been unable to produce pix since the CNC holds him an unlikely risk for benefits of the Film Aid Law. A group of directors, writers and actors, from the many Gordine pix, decided they would do anything he asked gratis, hence, the new pic which will start in May. It will be made for nothing with all divisions of production being offered Gordine gratis.

Film will be composed of a series of sketches based on the theme of desire. First to start will be Marcello Pagliero. Among the other directors are Noel Noel, Jacques Becker, Marcel Carne, Max Ophuls, George Lamin, Henri Calef, Yves Allegret, Leonide Moguy, Rene Clement and Jacques Tati. Writers are Jean Aurenche, Pierre Bost, Annette Wademant, Charles Spaak, Jacques Prevert, Marcel Achard, Carlo Rim. Among the actors likely for the pic are Gerard Philipe, Simone Signoret and Jean Gabin.

Gordine had many top pix in recent years but some of them were costly art failures. All the industry is watching the outcome of this co-operative enterprise.

Wilcox Won't Produce 'Rhapsody' in Yugoslavia

London, March 8.

Because of technical production problems, Herbert Wilcox has dropped his original plan to film "King's Rhapsody" location work in Yugoslavia. The locale has now been changed to a Spanish setting, and the unit has gone to Spain.

Wilcox hopes that the technical problems will be resolved in good time to enable his next Errol Flynn starrer to be made in Yugoslavia.

Slump in Mex Film Production Seen Temporary by Govt. Pix Supervisor

Mexico City, March 15.

Slump in Mexican film production, which Hector Fernandez, manager of the Mexico Producers and Distributors Assn., declared is a hardship for 10,000 players as well as technical and manual workers, is merely transitory, according to Angel Cravajal, Secretary of the Interior, top government department supervising the film industry, and Eduardo Garduno, chief of the trade's Banco Nacional Cinematografico. Current production decline stems from the producers' inability to get the necessary financing.

The secretary and the banker are confident that the depression will have vanished by the end of this month. That will come largely from the present bank providing more coin. The bank and the producers have agreed to make wider use of official financing, via the production of only those pix having decent boxoffice prospects at home and abroad. The idea is to make films that will be more red-blooded than blue-moral and artistic as well as entertaining.

Fernandez cited the need for saturation of foreign markets for Mexican pix as a prime factor in a trade pickup. Slow payment of anticipatory fees to producers is hitting the filmmakers as hard as difficulty in getting regular financing, the manager revealed.

Secretary Cravajal promised that the anticipatory payment snarl will be unraveled pronto with big help on this coming from Cinex, the company to which 80% of producers belong. It handles distribution of Mexican pix abroad.

Garduno, showing that his bank is doing well by the trade, pointed to $3,116,875 in loans, discounts and credits reported in the latest balance sheet.

Cinex sources say prospects are brightening for more Mexican pix to be played in Europe, particularly France and Italy, and to a lesser extent in Spain.

Cantinflas' Lone 1954 Pic Tops Mex Grossers

Mexico City, March 8.

"Cantinflas" (Mario Moreno), top moneymaking Mexican film comic, and his lone film of the year, "Tailor-Made Gentleman," again was Mexico's boxoffice champ in 1954 here. Pic grossed $111,965 in 44 days. Extremely close runner-up was "The Robe" (20th) which copped $103,891 in 70 days. Third spot was captured by the Mexican-made, "When I'm Gone." Not far behind was "Glenn Miller Story (U) with $72,350 in 63 days.

Others in the champ bracket were "Naked Jungle" (Par), $60,125 in 42 days; "Rhapsody" (M-G), $46,085 in 28 days, and the Italian pic, "Rome at 11 O'Clock," $32,000 in 28 days.

BBC-TV Program Chief Pleads for More Co-op With Brit. Film Biz

London, March 8.

A plea for closer cooperation with the film industry was made at a Savoy luncheon last week (in the presence of the Duke of Edinburgh) by Cecil McGivern, program controller of BBC-TV. The occasion was a Variety Club luncheon, the Duke being a life member of the London tent.

McGivern appealed for an imaginative plan, not based on the principle of having a few feet of film one night and a film star the next. He looked forward to the day when they could envisage a year's operation together. He was convinced that this would not do the picture industry any harm.

McGivern also directed his appeal to the legitimate theatre. He pointed out that legiters currently were allowed to show 45-minute excerpts from 24 productions a year. That was very useful but they had to regard it as a beginning. Great Britain, he stressed, was a land of the theatre and past experience had shown that co-operation with tv had proved to be a tremendous b.o. booster.

In a glimpse to the future, the BBC-TV program boss said he dreamed of the time when programs from Moscow, New York and London could be screened on the same night, and he was convinced that this would prove to be an instrument for good. They were planning now within the framework of three circles. The first would encompass Europe, the second would reach out to the Dominions and the third would embrace the remainder of the world.

NEW EXHIB COMPLAINT

England's Theatre Ops Claim Unable Book Top Local Pix

London, March 15.

A new complaint by exhibitors that, while they have to subsidize British production via the voluntary Eady levy, they are denied the chance to book top British pictures, was voiced at the last meeting of the general council of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Assn.

Issue was spotlighted by Tom Foster Massicks, supervisor of the Essoldo group, who moved a resolution on behalf of the northern branch of the association, requesting the right to book a proportion of all British films produced. He explained that his group was paying over $280,000 annually into the Eady Fund, yet in more than 40 cities it was in opposition to the three circuits, and that there were no worthwhile films left to play. It was getting nothing in return for payments to the fund.

He suggested that representations should be made to the Board of Trade. But if nothing was done, his group would go all out against having the levy renewed again.

Theo H. Figelstone, a past prexy of the association and a prominent indie operator, thought it definitely wrong that so many should contribute to the making of worthwhile British films and yet not have the opportunity of playing them. He urged Massicks to come forward with a concrete scheme.

Show Biz Helps Aussie Flood Victims; Circuits, Patrons Send Contribs

Sydney, March 8.

With hinterland of the nation's most populous area, the state of New South Wales, ravaged by probably the worst floods in history, show biz is rallying to aid victims of the devastation. American star Johnnie Ray due here this week for the second time within a year under the Lee Gordon-Benn Reyes aegis, hit the headlines with a cabled contribution to one of the numerous relief funds.

English crooner Donald Peers, who has been here for some months doing radio and nitery work, will make a special appeal over radio station 2UW, while his countryman, bandleader Ted Heath, has arranged to make available 500 tickets for his first show in Sydney, to be sold for flood relief purposes. Radio stations are devoting entire programs to appeals, and 2GB and 2UE in conjunction with daily newspapers have to date raised in the vicinity of $275,000.

Hoyts circuit has weighed i with a contribution, and additionally has organized a public appeal in its 180 odd houses.

Metro loop installed collection boxes in its theatre lobbies, and Greater Union circuit is expected to organize help.

Graphic newsreel pictures turned in by Box-Movietone and Cinesound of the flood damage and loss of lives, are proving one of the most effective means of bringing home to non-affected citizens in cities and other parts of the nation, the true tragedy of the situation. Motion Picture Distributors Assn. is among the contributors to relief funds.

New Policy for Big Dublin House

Dublin, March 8.

Theatre Royal, 3,500 - seater owned by J. Arthur Rank interests here, will switch to twice nightly vaude shows commencing shortly. Policy in recent years has been vaudfilm which brings a return of 30% of the entertainment tax. Topping the bill for the first week is warbler Dickie Valentine and Bonar Colleano.

Italo 1st-Run Biz To $2,700,000 For January; U. S. Slice Off 13% From '54

Rome, March 8.

The Italian boxoffice took a healthy jump during January, with a strong total take in key city first runs of about $2,700,000. However, for the same period, the Yank slice of the local take, though still predominating, dropped from last year's January figure of 63% to 50% this year. At the same time, Italo receipts rose percentage-wise from 28% for 1954 to a healthy 40% for corresponding period this year.

Key to the big Italo showing are the top figures racked up during and after the holidays by such Italo heavyweights as "Bread, Love, and Jealousy" and "The Gold of Naples," both starring Vittorio De-Sica. Still on a key-city firstrun basis, "Jealousy" (Titanus) now leads the pack with a $486,000 seasonal figure. It is followed by "From Here to Eternity" (Col), with $429,000.

Season's top 20 includes eight C'Scopers and six Italo-mades, the others all being American. Following "Eternity," other toppers in order of biz are "Ulysses," Italo pic Par release; "Gold of Naples," ditto; "Knights of Round Table" (M-G), "Caine Mutiny" (Col), "Demetrius" (20th), "Waterfront" (Col), "Mogambo" (M-G) and "Hell and High Water" (20th).

Although eight C'Scopers are among the leaders, seven normal-screen black-white pix also made the grade, including the top two winners. Also notably paying off is Paramount's option-release deal with Ponti-DeLaurentiis, which netted the Yank distrib three winners.

Top seasonal successes so far show big companies out in front, both in Yank and Italo listings. Italy, incidentally, racked up a strange statistic during the past year; its 150-odd features were made by a total of 110 different pic companies. Only one Italo outfit last year made nine features. It was Titanus.

Brit. Indie Producers Seek Less Coin From Govt. on New Projects

London, March 8.

There is less demand by independent film makers for financial aid from the National Film Finance Corp. and, according to David Kingsley, the managing director, this is a healthy sign. Speaking at the 22nd annual meeting of the Assn. of Cine Technicians, he commented that the total volume of production had not decreased; but producers were in a position to find their own end money in many instances.

In 1951 and 1952, he said, the NFFC had given financial aid to approximately 70% of British pictures which were shown as first features on the three major theatre circuits. By 1953, the proportion had dropped to 56% and last year it was down to 47%.

Kingsley commented that while there was so often a crisis in the film industry, he was not aware of one at the moment. He felt that the main problem of the production industry would soon arise when the demand for films would outstrip its productive resources. The production of films for tv would eliminate any danger of unemployment, and this presented a great opportunity for recruitment of new men with new ideas.

He outlined the NFFC's own efforts to encourage new talent via Group 3 but it had abandoned the original idea of a continuous program and will only produce when suitable projects are available. He pointed out, however, that all the films made under Group 3 auspices (excluding "The Conquest of Everest") had failed to recover production costs.

New Savoy Orch Head

London, March 8.

Jimmy Miller, who took over the Savoy Hotel orchestra on the sudden death of Carroll Gibbons last year, is leaving and will be succeeded by pianist Ian Stewart.

Stewart has been leader of the band at the Berkeley Hotel (one of the Savoy Hotels group) for nine years.

Jap Studios Set Up Honolulu Distrib Co.

Honolulu, March 8.

Muneo Kimura, Honolulu distributor and exhibitor, has been named president and general manager of Pacific Motion Picture Co., set up by Daiei, Toho and Shintoho studios of Japan, and Nichibei Cinema Co.

New firm will distribute films made by the three studios while Nichibei will handle distribution on the U. S. mainland. Kimura, who owns Honolulu Theatre, says Pacific has leased the modern International Theatre for five years. After facelifting, it will reopen with "Hotaru no Hikari," a Daiei color release.

Six of 12 Paris Top 1st-Runs H'wood-Made; 'Desert,' 'Waterfront' Up

Paris, March 15.

Out of the big dozen pix which are finishing up long firstruns, going into continued firstruns or entering the nabes here, six are U. S. pix. Big films currently are staying longer, and with hiked admissions are raking in big takes. The offbeaters and unusual theme vehicles are nosing out the usual customers. The real money is going to soundly-made films except in such special cases as the Eddie Constantine cops-and-robbers series and one color swashbuckler.

First coin is going to the H. G. Clouzot shocker. "Les Diabolliques," which has taken a terrific $366,000 in its first four weeks at three houses. Next is the Claude-Autant color rendition of Stendhal's "Le Rouge Et Le Noir" (The Red and the Black) which, after a four-month run at one house, is now in the nabes. It hit a boff $363,000.

Walt Disney's "Living Desert," after a prolonged firstrun, landed a great $318,000. Gallic family comedy, "Papa, Maman, La Bonne Et Moi," did a phenomenal $267,000 for a small-budgeted pic.

Winding up the top six is the Constantine pic, "Votre Devoue Blake," in which the U. S. singer battered his way to a solid $264,000 and, "On The Waterfront" (Col). Latter has registered $258,000 and is still going strong.

Of the others, the Fernandel starrer, "Ali Baba" (which did $231,000), "Modern Times" (UA) (reissue) ($228,000, "Escalier De Service" (Service Entrance) (with $217,000?, "Knights of Round Table" (M-G) (at $204,000) and Sabrina" (Par) (rousing $203,000 in three weeks) and Danny Kaye's "Knock On Wood" (Par), which did $192,000. "Sabrina" is just getting started, and appears to be building.

Query U.S. Aid for Brit. Theatres Going C'Scope

London, March 8.

Charges that American film interests were providing financial aid to independent theatre owners who equipped with CinemaScope, including a guarantee against loss over a two-year period, made in the House of Commons by Harold Wilson were upheld by the Board of Trade prez Peter Thorneycroft.

At question time last Thursday (3), Wilson, himself a former BOT president, asked whether the minister was aware that U. S. film groups were providing financial aid to independent cinema undertakings in order to equip their cinemas with CinemaScope and to guarantee them against loss for a period of two years. This is in return for undertakings to show American-made anamorphic and other pix. He also wanted to know what effect this would have on the government's quota policy, and what steps he was taking in the matter.

In a written reply, Thorneycroft declared he was aware of the situation contained in the first part of the question. After consultations with the Films Council, however, exhibitors had been advised that the terms of agreement referred to would not absolve them from their statutory obligations. They still have to meet the prescribed quota of British films.

Finns, Greeks Set For May Fest in Wiesbaden

Weisbaden, March 8.

With booking of the National Theatre of Athens for May 14-15 and the Finnish National Opera of Helsinki for May 18-19, plans have been completed for the 1955 International May Festival in Wiesbaden.

The Weisbaden State Theatre will present "The City Behind the River" on May 3; "L'Impromptu in Versailles," May 5; "Ah Wilderness," May 25, and "Elektra" May 27; the Berlin State Theatre, Strindberg's "Dream Play" May 21-22. On May 26, the Weisbaden Symphony Orchestra will give a gala performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

CEA Sees Need For Tax Relief

London, March 8.

A grim outlook for the exhibiting industry, unless admission tax relief is forthcoming in next month's budget, is forecast by Walter R. Fuller, general secretary of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Assn., in his annual report to members. This will be submitted for adoption at the CEA annual general meeting here this week.

Last year's remission of $9,800,000, comments Fuller, although only half of what was asked for, was acceptable, but the association hoped that this year's campaign, with a request for $17,000,000 relief, would be even more successful.

On the labor front, the CEA secretary observes that greater acrimony could have been expected because the impression seems to grow that employers have a bottomless well in which to dip. He notes with great approval, however, the statesmanlike attitude by Tom O'Brien, MP, when president of the Trades Union Congress, who supported a policy which kept wages within the bounds of reality.

The CEA report, in commenting on the withdrawal of the two J. Arthur Rank circuits from membership, details the revised constitution designed to meet the reduced income. In this regard Fuller pays tribute to the role played by Sir Phillip Warter, the Associated British topper, in assisting in the solution of controversial issues which might have led to greater disunity within the industry.

EUROPEAN FILM POOL TALKS SET FOR PARIS

Rome, March 8.

Topic of a European Film Pool will reportedly be aired once again during current Italo-French meetings in Paris. Nicola DePirro, Eitel Monaco, and Goffredo Lombardo are in Paris to meet with French reps to set details and possible changes, following extension of the Italo Film Law until Dec. 31, in the Franco-Italian pic collab agreements. These talks, originally skedded for late December, '54, were postponed until final extension of the Italo law, on which these deals inter-depend, was approved by the Italian government bodies.

Re the European pool, a committee set up at preceding November meeting to study the possibilities of such an organization will report on result of its work. The Italian reps have emphasized that Italy has been in the forefront of European pic unity, and has already embarked on collaboratory deals with France, Germany and Spain.

8 Top Mex Indie Prods. To Make 20 Pix in '55

Mexico City, March 8.

A syndicate of top eight Mexican indie film producers will make 20 pix this year. Distribution will be by Cinex, the semi-official supervisor of Mexican pix distributed abroad, and Peliculas Mexicanas and Peliculas Nacionales, for home-export distribution.

Syndicate comprises Samuel Granat, Antonio del Castillo, Ollallo Rubio, Jr., Ramon Armengod, Francisco Cabrera, Jorge Garcia Bezne, Eduardo Quevedo and Gustavo de Leon.

Rank Chief Claims British Pix Earn As Much as Yank Films in Aussie; Far East Trip Gratifying to Davis

London, March 15.

John Davis, deputy chairman and managing director of the J. Arthur Rank Organization, who recently returned from an extensive Empire tour embracing Australia, New Zealand, Indonesia, Singapore and Ceylon, came back with a success report. British films, he says, are doing better than ever and the market has trebled in value since he last visited Australasia three years back.

In Australia, the best British films are now earning as much as the top Hollywood productions, he said. In New Zealand the Rank pic, "Genevieve," likewise, grossed more for the organization than any film ever distributed in that country, including "Gone With the Wind," he indicated.

The Rank Australian activities, said Davis, were in association with Greater Union Theatres with which it has a 50-50 partnership deal. Latter has 133 theatres in that territory. In the past three years, he asserted, GUT had chalked up nine b.o. records with British films and was on the point of establishing a new house record in Melbourne with the release of "Doctor in the House."

Also Into Television

As part of the expansion program in Australia, Greater Union is partnered in a syndicate to run a sponsored tv station in Melbourne. In association with local interests, it also closed a deal for opening of factories in Melbourne and Sydney for the manufacture of Bush tv receivers. In the meantime, the sets would be imported from Britain.

As an indication of the continued progress of GUT, Davis reported that the results for the current year would reveal the highest take and profit in the history of the company. The new drive-in theatre which opened at Geelong during his visit would be the forerunner of several others.

The New Zealand territory, added the Rank exec, had become vitally important to its organization. Top British pix could reckon on a remittance to Great Britain of between $55,000 and $70,000 each. "Genevieve" would top that figure. Via the Odeon-Kerridge circuit, the Rank group had control in 121 theatres.

On his way out to Australia Davis had a short stopover at Singapore and reports favorable progress in that territory. Its theatre holdings in Malaya is about to be increased from its present level of 17 to 27. Exhibition interests in that territory are in partnership with Wan Tho Loke.

The Rank exec also noted that the company was making important strides in the equipment field. There was increasing demand for its 16m equipment, as well as for lenses and screens to meet the new development of improved exhibition standards.

20th-Fox Won't Renew Lease on London Spot

London, March 15.

20th-Fox is not renewing its lease of the Odeon, Marble Arch. It took over the theatre from the J. Arthur Rank Organization last April for a period of one year, with options on its side permitting only renewals for the two following years.

John Davis, managing director of the J. Arthur Rank Organization, told VARIETY last week that 20th-Fox had not exercised its options and the theatre would revert to its control next month. It would resume as a firstrun West End film house.

20th-Fox used the Odeon as a C'Scope showcase. It still has two other firstruns, the Carlton in Haymarket and the Rialto.

Titanus Chief to U.S. To Sign 2 Yank Stars, Set Distrib for 'Goya'

Rome, March 8.

Goffredo Lombardo, boss of Titanus Studios, and director Alberto Lattuada ("Anna") leave for the U. S. next week to find two Yank stars as well as set productional details for their next production, "The Life of Goya." Titanus co-produces this with Spanish group this summer. Choice of U. S. actors is dictated, according to Lombardo, by the fact that with this item, his studio will begin to slant certain pix for the international trade, "which principally means the U. S. market."

On this trip, the producer-director team will set release for "Goya" (except Italy) with one of the five U.S. majors and find a Yank scripter for the English-shot version. They also will secure a color consultant to supervise the VistaVision lensing of the pic, which they plan to shoot in Eastmancolor with prints by Technicolor. The two-week visit will include a jaunt to the Coast. Both also plan to attend the opening of the Retrospective Italian Film Week at the Museum of Modern Art March 22.

"Goya," which is budgeted at $2,250.000, will start shooting in and near Madrid late in July, with a three-month schedule planned. Only a few interiors will be shot in Rome, to satisfy Italo nationality requirements. Film will sketch life of the Spanish painter from the age of 40 until his French exile.

Historical authenticity will be carefully considered so as not to offend the Spanish, and the touchy episodes involving the Duchess of Alba, who is said to have posed for Goya in the nude, will be given kid-glove handling. Regarding the famed "Maya Desunda" portrait of the Duchess of Alba, director Lattuada says recent research indicates that Goya actually used his favorite model for the body, then superimposed the Duchess' image for the face.

Better Pix for Juves In Britain Sop to Crix

London, March 15.

That the practical steps taken by the motion picture industry to improve the quality of films shown to children eliminated much of the criticism about the effect of the cinema on juveniles, was stated by the Home Secretary, Major Gwilym Lloyd-George, speaking as guest of honor at the annual banquet of the Cinematograph Exhibs Assn. at Grosvenor House last week.

He said they could be very proud of what was being done in this country to produce films specially for children, and he thought the trade deserved a great deal of credit for making funds available to the Childrens Film Foundation.

Asserting that this was a field in which Britain could give a lead to the world, the Minister was sure that the right way to tackle the problem of the child and the cinema was by positive action in improving the quality of screen vehicles.

WANT BOT TO CLARIFY

Smaller Exhibs See 607-Cinema Policy As Unfair

London, March 15.

Representations are to be made to the Board of Trade to seek clarification of its policy which allows the major exhibition groups to extend their theatre interests up to a maximum of 607. Action was agreed as a sequel to a debate by the general council of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Assn. on a resolution which suggested the ruling was " a threat to annihilate 800 or 900 small cinemas."

The resolution came as a sequel to the recent House of Commons' announcement by the BOT prez, who intimated that the ceiling of 607 theatres per group had been agreed by his predecessor, Harold Wilson. At the CEA confabs the general secretary, Walter R. Fuller, agreed there was a great deal of confusion, as the terms of the voluntary undertaking given by the major circuits some years back had never been published.

Under the BOT ruling, the two J. Arthur Rank circuits, Odeon and Gaumont-British, both of which are operated by Circuits Management Assn., count as one group.

The Long, Long Tale Grows

Along with the industry's policy to make fewer and bigger pictures, the trend toward longer pictures continues to grow unabated. Despite exhibitor protests, the number of films running over 100 minutes is growing.

Recent examples: "Battle Cry," 148 minutes; "The Caine Mutiny" (125), "Deep In My Heart" (132), "East of Eden" (115), "Hit the Deck'" (112), "Last Time I Saw Paris" (116), "Long Gray Line" (138), "The Racers" (112), "Romeo and Juliet" (140), "Silver Chalice" (137), "Star Is Born" (154), and "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" (128).

Yank Distribs Increasingly Handle Foreign Pix Outside U. S. Market; Warners Takes Two From France

It's becoming common practice for the major distribution companies, via their international organizations, to pick up foreign films for distribution in other parts of the world. Rarely do these companies undertake the release of such films in the United States, feeling that their releasing orgs are not geared for the handling of product which generally falls into the art house slot. If practical, attempts are made to turn over the pictures to indie distribs experienced in the ways of foreign language films. In many cases, the pix are never exhibited in the U.S.

Warner Bros. is the most recent company to pick up a pair of French films for distribution in the western hemisphere. Pics are "La Castiglione," starring Yvonne De Carlo, and "Rasputin," both made by Radius Films of France, the former in cooperation with Taurus Films of Italy. At the moment, WB plans no distribution of the pix in the domestic market, but is making plans for their selling in Latin America, excluding, under terms of the deal, British and French colonies. Pictures are being sub-titled in Paris and will be shipped directly to Latin American outlets.

Loew's International recently took on two French pictures for distribution in Latin America and the Near East. 20th-Fox is handling about 15 foreign-made pictures in different parts of the world. Universal, Columbia, RKO, and Paramount also have lingualers going through their worldwide distribution systems.

Employers Contrib To Welfare Fund Under New Cartoonists Pact

Under an agreement reached between the eastern Screen Cartoonists, Local 841, IATSE and animating studios in New York, the employers must contribute 80c to the union's welfare fund for each day or part of a day a cartoonist works on a freelance basis.

Members are not permitted to accept freelance work from a non-contract studio. All jobs must be cleared through the union and payments for freelance work must be cleared through the union. Members are prohibited from accepting payment for freelance work directly from the studios which are required to forward the check to the union.

Israeli Nod to Kirsch

Chicago, March 15.

Jack Kirsch, president of Allied Theatres of Illinois and Chief Barker of local Variety Tent 26, will be honored for his activity in community welfare campaigns and in support of Israeli Government bond drives by the Greater Chicago Committee for State of Israel bonds at a testimonial banquet at the Covenant Club April 19.

At the same dinner, Jack Benny will receive the first Eliezer Kaplan award, an "Oscar" type statuette, in recognition of his services in behalf of Israeli bond drives. The award is named for Isreal's first finance minister and is symbolized by a small statue of Kaplan. The dinner will be limited to purchasers of a minimum of $1,000 in Israeli Government bonds. It is hoped 650 people will attend the dinner, representing a purchase of at least $650,000 worth of bonds, a substantial part of the $3,000,000 set as Chicago's bond sale goal for 1955.

TOUGH TO 'ADAPT'

Vizzard Comments on 'Bad Seed' and 'Sympathy' Scripts

Milwaukee, March 15.

Film adaptations of both "Bad Seed" and "Tea and Sympathy" will be a problem for the producers in that it will be tough to revise the legiters sufficiently to satisfy the Production Code Administration, John A. Vizzard, assistant director of the Code, told the Catholic Action Committee meeting here last week. (Metro has the option on "Tea" and Warners holds the screen rights to "Seed.")

Cleanup jobs can be done on properties which were objectionable in original form, he added, pointing to the PCA okay given "From Here to Eternity" and "My Three Angels."

Vizzard also commented: "The Code has been firmly entrenched in the hearts of the company presidents since written 23 years ago as means of guarding moral values in films. Decency is good business."

Metro's 2 Each In May, June

Metro plans to release four pictures during May and June. Pictures will hit the market at the rate of two a month and will give the company a total of 12 for the first six months of 1955.

Added to the slate were "The Prodigal" and "The Marauders" for May and "Love Me and Leave Me" and "Moonfleet" for June. All are in Eastman color, with all but "The Marauders" in CinemaScope.

George Schaefer Rearing Own Distrib Organization

George J. Schaefer, former RKO president who, in recent years, has been acting as eastern business rep for indie producers, such as Stanley Kramer, is building his own distribution organization. So far, he's handling offbeat and so-called exploitation pictures with two veteran sales execs in his employ.

Jack Schlaifer has resigned as United Artists homeoffice exec to join Schaefer. Schlaifer, who had been UA's liaison with its domestic exchanges and assigned to pushing sales on certain films, has taken on direct field selling of "Gangbusters" for Schaefer.

Neil Agnew, who's had a number of important distribution posts in the industry, is repping Schaefer in the peddling of the religioso film, "Day of Triumph."

Schaefer also has Harold Cohen working full-time as exploitation director and has built up his N. Y. office staff.

Hollywood, March 15.

Charles R. Rogers and Charles Weintraub, Quality Films prexy, are making pitch for Tennessee Williams to direct their upcoming indie, "Hunters Of The Angry Sea," to roll in July.

Also are after Ava Gardner to enact femme star role.

John Casavetes, N. Y. actor, already set for male lead. Jack Dewitt signed to script the Ed McSorley-Sam Shaw novel.

JAPANESE PERMITS, AND WHO GETS 'EM?, PROMISE BRAWL AMONG U.S. DISTRIBS

With no agreed formula on the division of foreign import licenses and with some of the smaller companies chafing at the bit, the question of Japanese permits for 1955-56 shapes up as a dilly of an issue.

Big problem is a recurring one: The contention of what once used to be called the "Little Three"—Universal, Columbia and United Artists—that they're coming up in the world and are entitled to more substantial consideration.

The new Japanese film year starts April 1. Somewhere around that time, the Japanese are expected to reveal their license allocations for each country. Motion Picture Export Assn. is reasonably certain that its share this year again will be 101.254 licenses. In addition, Tokyo authorities, as in 1954, are expected to hand out another 19.274 permits to indie Japanese distribs who can apply them to the purchase of U. S., Russian, Mexican, Danish and Austrian films.

Whether or not the Japanese, as they did last year, take on the divvying up of the U. S. licenses among the various companies, or whether it's done by the American industry itself, depends to a very large extent on the ability of the companies to get together on a satisfactory formula for making the split.

Dislike Japanese Formula

A single vote on the part of any one of the 10 MPEA member companies can scuttle a move to have the industry do its own slicing up of the permit melon. That would naturally put the division up to the Japanese, whose formula for arriving at individual company allocations is known and works to the disadvantage of those companies who have come up within recent years.

Informed guess, therefore, is that such a veto will be forthcoming from one of the major outfits now getting one of the large allocations. At the same time, at least two of the smaller outfits are at work behind the scenes in Tokyo, trying to convince the government of the righteousness of their position in protesting the basis of last year's permit split.

The Japanese figure the allocations 50% on the basis of past permits received and 50% on the basis of billings. Thus they automatically favor distribs who got into Japan early, such as Metro, it's charged. Furthermore, the Japanese don't hand out permits in round numbers but figure them down to fractions. Last year the companies were given a deadline for making deals for these fractional licenses which amounted to five full pix in toto.

U and UA Unhappy

Two companies that have already definitely indicated they aren't happy with last year's allotment, and would be even unhappier if it were to be repeated this year, are Universal and UA. Latter last year got 5.270 permits. Arnold Picker, UA foreign topper, commented in N. Y. last week that, with a 38% rise in Japanese billings, UA this year should get eight or nine licenses. U last year got 9.910 permits, same as RKO (9.904) but substantially behind 20th-Fox (12.324).

Rest of the companies lined up as follows: Metro, 16.323; Paramount, 15.912; Warner Bros., 13.407. Columbia rated behind U with 8.488 licenses. Republic got 6.419 (ahead of UA) and Allied Artists drew 3.297.

While there has been an attempt on the part of the companies to get together and hammer out a "master" formula for the divvying up of permits and foreign remittances, progress to date hasn't been encouraging. Japanese situation is cited for a good reason why it's so difficult to come up with a firm solution acceptable to all since concessions to some of the smaller outfits automatically would involve sacrifices to the rest.

Lots of Davy Crockett

Chicago, March 15.

Davy Crockett, storied Indian scout of early America, has leapt from the musty pages of history to prominence in four modern media of communication in the Windy City recently. Balaban & Katz chain, has booked "Davy Crockett, Indian Scout," a United Artists re-issue locally distributed by Teitel Films, into the nabes. Pic is currently showing at the Belmont, Congress and Howard theatres.
